The meaning of scope or extent appeared in 1666, and that of an extensive area over which animals range for food, in 1626. —v. 1375 rangen to place in a row, arrange; borrowed from Old French rangier, rengier to place in a row. The meaning of move over a large area, roam, appeared about 1477. —ranger n. 1388, gamekeeper; formed from range, v. + *-er*¹. The group of armed men to police an area appeared in 1670, and such a group acting as soldiers, in 1742. —rangy adj. 1868, adapted for ranging; later, having a long slender form (1876); formed from range, n. and v. + *-y*¹.

rank¹ n. row or line. Before 1325, row, line, series; borrowed from Old French ranc, rang, reng, from Frankish (compare Old High German hring circle, RING). The meaning of a social division or group, (as in people of rank) is first recorded probably about 1430, and that of relative position (as in the first rank) in 1605. —v. 1573, arrange in lines, from the noun. The sense of put in order, classify, is first recorded in 1592. —rank and file 1598, in reference to soldiers in marching formation; later, common soldiers (1796), and common people (1860).

rank² adj. large and coarse. Probably about 1200 ranc proud, determined; about 1250, strong, violent; also, growing thickly and coarsely; found in Old English (about 1000) ranc proud, overbearing, showy; cognate with Middle Dutch ranc slender, slim (modern Dutch rank), Middle Low German and modern German rank long and thin, and Old Icelandic rakkr erect, bold, from Proto-Germanic rankaz*. The meaning of strongly marked, extreme perhaps also in the sense of excessive, about 1303, and that of having a strong, bad smell, before 1529.

rankle v. Probably about 1300 ranclen to fester; borrowed from Old French rancler, raoncler, from draoncle festering sore, from Latin dracunculus little snake, diminutive of dracō (genitive dracōnis) serpent, dragon.

ransack v. About 1250 ransaken search thoroughly, plunder; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic raunnsaka search the house; rann house, cognate with Old English cern, ern place or house, Old Frisian -ern, and Gothic razn house, from Proto-Germanic rasnan*; + -saka to search, related to Old Icelandic sækja seek).

ransom n. Probably before 1200 rancun payment made for an offense, fine; later raunson price paid for release of a captive (about 1300), and in the spelling ransome (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French rançon; earlier, raençon ransom, redemption, from Latin redēptionem (nominative redēptiō) a redeeming; from redimere to redeem. —v. Before 1325 ransunen make amends for a wrong; also, redeem; later raunsonen pay for release of a captive (about 1378), and in the spelling ransomen (before 1387); borrowed from Old French rançonner; earlier raençonner redeem, from the noun.

The shift of the terminal consonant from n to m is also found in such English forms as random and seldom.

rant v. 1598, borrowed from obsolete Dutch randten, ranten, randen talk foolishly, rave; of uncertain origin. —n. 1649, from the verb.

rap¹ n. quick, light blow. About 1300 rappe, possibly of imitative origin, but similar in form and meaning to Swedish rapp a rap, tap, smart blow, also to Norwegian rapp and Danish rap which suggests a Scandinavian source. The transferred meaning of a rebuke or criticism is first recorded in 1777, and possibly from this developed the sense of a criminal charge (1903), and that of a prison sentence (as in take or beat the rap) in 1927. —v. Probably before 1350 rappen to strike, hit; later, to knock at a door (1440), possibly from the noun or of independent imitative origin.

rap² v. to talk or converse informally, chat. 1929; later popularized (about 1965), possibly by way of Caribbean English, from the British slang sense of say or utter (1879), originally with the specific meaning of let off (an oath, etc.) sharply or suddenly (1541), an expressive use of RAP¹ knock sharply. —n. 1898, from contemporary use of the verb.

rap³ n. the least bit. 1724, counterfeit coin used in the 1700's in Ireland for a halfpenny; of uncertain origin. The figurative sense of the least bit (as in not to care a rap, 1834) is from the extended meaning of a coin of little or no value.

rapacious adj. 1651, formed in English probably from rapacity with substitution of -ious or -ous, perhaps further influenced by French rapace, from Latin rapāx (genitive rapācis) grasping, plundering, from rapere seize. —rapacity n. 1543, borrowed from Middle French rapacité, from Latin rapācītatē (nominative rapācītās) greediness, from rapāx grasping, rapacious; for suffix see -ITY.

rape¹ v. assault sexually. Probably 1387 rapen seize prey, take by force; developed from the noun in Middle English, and a borrowing, perhaps through Anglo-French rape, of the learned (legal) Old French rapere to seize, abduct, and directly from Latin rapere seize, carry off, ravish. The sense of abduct (a woman) is recorded in Middle English probably before 1425. —n. Before 1325, booty or prey; later, act of seizing, raid, robbery (probably about 1350); borrowed through Anglo-French rap, rape, and directly from Latin rapere seize. The sense of abduction or assault is recorded in Middle English, probably about 1400. —rapist n. (1883) rape² n. kind of small plant. Before 1398 rape rape, turnip, borrowed from Old French rape, and directly from Latin rāpa, rāpum turnip. Germanic cognates include Middle Low German rōve turnip, Middle Dutch roeve, and Old High German rāba, rūba (modern German Rübe).

rapid adj. 1634, moving at great speed, swift, very quick; borrowed from French rapide, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin rapidus hasty, snatching, from rapere hurry away, carry off, seize, plunder. —n. rapids pl. 1765, formed from English rapid, adj. + -s, by influence of French rapides, and borrowed from the French. —rapidity n. 1654, borrowed from French rapidité, and directly from Latin rapiditās swiftness, from rapidus rapid; for suffix see -ITY.

rapier n. 1553, borrowed from Middle French rapière from Old French espee rapiere rapier sword, of uncertain origin; perhaps earlier referred to as a raspiere a poker or scraper in a derisive sense.

rapine n. About 1412, borrowed from Middle French rapine, learned borrowing from Latin rapīna robbery, plunder, from rapere seize, carry off, rob.

rappe n. 1931, descent from a cliff or rock face, reborrowing of French rappel, literally, recall, from Old French rapel, from rapeler to recall, summon; see REPEAL. An earlier borrowing of a drum roll to summon soldiers is first recorded in English in 1848. —v. 1957, from the noun.

rapport n. 1661, reference, relationship; borrowing of French rapport, from rapporter bring back; formed in Old French from re- again + apporter to bring, from Latin adportāre (ad- to + portāre carry). The meaning of harmonious accord or full communication, is found in 1915.

rapprochement n. 1809, borrowing of French rapprochement reunion, reconciliation, from rapprocher bring near (Old French re- back, again + aprochier to APPROACH) + French -ment.

rapscallion n. 1699, alteration of rascallion (1649), a fanciful derivative of RASCAL, and probably a parallel term of ram-pallion (1593), possibly formed on ramp, n., ill-behaved woman (before 1450), and ramp, v., to behave in a loose, immodest way (1530).

rapt adj. About 1390, carried away in an ecstatic trance; borrowed from Latin raptus, past participle of rapere seize, carry off. The sense of engrossed appeared in 1509.

raptorial adj. 1825, formed from Latin raptor robber + English -ial. Latin raptor is formed from rapt-, past participle stem of rapere seize + -or or -or².

rapture n. 1600, act of carrying off; borrowed from Middle French rapture, formed from rapt rape, kidnapping, from Latin raptus (genitive raptūs) a carrying off, from rapere to seize; for suffix see -URE. The sense of spiritual ecstasy is first recorded in 1629. —rapturous adj. 1678, formed from English rapture + -ous.

rare¹ adj. unusual. 1392 rere thin, airy, porous; also rare (before 1400); borrowed from Old French rere, rer, rare sparse, and directly from Latin rārus thin, airy, porous, unusual. The meaning of unusual, exceptional, is recorded in English in 1447. —rarity n. Probably before 1425 rarite thinness; later, fewness (1560–61); borrowed from Middle French rarité, and directly from Latin rāritās thinness, fewness, from rārus rare; for suffix see -ITY.

rare² adj. undercooked. 1655 (of eggs) soft-cooked, variant of dialectal rear, in Middle English rere (1392); developed from Old English (about 1000) hrēr lightly cooked; probably related to hrēran to stir, move, cognate with Old Frisian hrēra to stir or move, Old Saxon hrōrian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch roeren, Old High German hruoren (modern German rühren), and Old Icelandic hræra; in modern English not recorded in reference to cooking meat before 1784.

rare³ v. to rise up, rear. 1833, in rare up (of an animal); dialectal variant of REAR². The sense of eager to start, in raring to go, is first recorded in 1909.

rarefy v. Before 1398 rarefien, borrowed from Old French rarefier, and directly from Medieval Latin rarificare, and from Latin rārefacere make rare (rārus RARE¹ + facere make); for suffix see -FY. The sense of refine or purify is first recorded in 1599. —rarefaction n. 1603, borrowed from French raréfaction, and directly from Medieval Latin raréfactionem (nominative raréfactio), from Latin rārefact-, past participle stem of rārefacere RAR-EFY; for suffix see -TION.

rascal n. Before 1338 rascaile persons of the lowest class, rabble, mob; borrowed from Old French rascaille, perhaps from rasque mud, filth, from Vulgar Latin rāscāre* to scrape; see RASH².

The form rascal and the singular sense of a person belonging to the rabble are first recorded about 1475, but the extended sense of a low, dishonest person, rogue, is recorded before 1338.

rash¹ adj. reckless. About 1380 rasch active, impetuous, unrestrained; earlier as a surname Rasshe (1316); perhaps developed from Old English -ræsc (as in līgræsc flash of lightning, before 1050); and possibly borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch rasch fast, active; cognates with Old High German rasc fast, strong (modern German rasch fast, hasty), Old Icelandic rasker brave, vigorous (Swedish and Danish rask quick, nimble), from Proto-Germanic raskuz*, earlier rathskuz*.

The meaning of too hasty, careless, reckless, is first recorded in 1509.

rash² n. small red spots on the skin. 1709, borrowed from obsolete French rache a sore, Old French rache ringworm, from Vulgar Latin rāscāre* to scrape, from Latin rāsus scraped, past participle of rādere to scrape. The sense of a sudden outbreak or proliferation is first recorded in 1820.

rasp v. About 1250 rospen to scrape, scratch, or score, especially with a rough instrument; later raspen (probably about 1380); borrowed from Middle Dutch raspen and from Old French rasper to grate, rasp, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German raspōn scrape together, related to hrespan to pluck, Old Frisian hrespa to tear, Old English gehrespan). The sense of utter with a grating sound is first recorded in 1843. —n. 1541, coarse file; borrowed from Middle French raspe, from Old French rasper to rasp. The sense of a grating sound is first recorded in English before 1851.

raspberry n. 1623, formed in English from earlier raspis berry (before 1548); also raspis raspberry (about 1532); possibly related to, if not developed from raspise a sweet, rose-colored wine (before 1475), earlier rospeys (1440), from Anglo-Latin vinum raspeys (compare Old French raspe and Medieval Latin raspecia, raspeium raspberry), of uncertain origin.

Rastafari n. 1955, Jamaican cult that worships Haile Selassie, former Emperor of Ethiopia, as God; formed in English from Ras Tafari, the title of Haile Selassie (Ras, borrowed from Amharic rās chief head, from Arabic rās; and Tafari, borrowed from Amharic tāfāri to be feared). —Rastafarian n. 1955, formed in English from Ras Tafari + -an.

raster n. 1934, pattern of parallel scanning lines, as in a cathode-ray tube; borrowed from German Raster screen; from Latin rāstrum rake, from rādere to scrape or scratch.

rat n. 1378 rat; earlier in a place name Rat (1185); found in Old English (about 1000) ræt. The relationship to each other of the Germanic, Romance, and Celtic words for rat is uncertain. Germanic cognates are considered to include Old Saxon ratta rat, Middle Low German rotte, Middle Dutch ratte (modern Dutch rat), Old High German rato (feminine ratta), also ratza (modern German Ratte, dialectal Ratz), Old Icelandic rottur, an element in proper names (Swedish råtta, Danish and Norwegian rotte, and Icelandic rottá).

Old French raton (augmentative of rat) is also found in Middle English ratoun (about 1350); earlier raton (before 1325), and as a surname Ratun (1275); however, this form fell out of use in the 1500's. —v. 1812, to desert one's party or associates, from the noun sense of one who deserts his party (1792); so called from the popular belief that rats leave a house about to fall or a ship about to sink. The sense of turn traitor, act as an informer (1934) is from the earlier noun sense of police informer or spy (1902). —ratty adj. 1865, full of rats, formed from English rat, n. + -y¹. The sense of poor in quality, shabby, is first recorded in 1867.

ratchet n. 1659 rochet, borrowing of French rochet bobbin or spindle, from Italian rochetto spool, ratchet, diminutive of rocca distaff (stick for holding wool or flax during spinning); for suffix see -ET. The form ratchet (1721) was influenced by synonymous ratch, perhaps borrowed from German Rätsche, Ratsche ratchet.

rate n. 1425, estimated worth or quantity, amount or degree in proportion to something else; borrowed from Middle French rate price or value, and directly from Medieval Latin rata (pars) fixed (amount), from Latin rata fixed, settled, feminine past participle of rēri to reckon, think; see REASON. The degree of speed is first recorded in 1652. —v. 1457–58 raten to allot, settle the amount or value of, from rate, n. The sense of consider (as in rated as best of the lot) is first recorded in 1565.

rather adv. Probably about 1175 rather more readily, properly, or quickly, sooner (comparative form of now archaic rathe); later, instead of (probably before 1200); developed from Old English hrathor (about 725, in Beowulf) a comparative form of hrathe, hræthe quickly (before 725), related to hræth quick; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch rat quick, Old High German hrad, rad, and Old Icelandic hradhr, from Proto-Germanic Hrathaz*.

ratify v. About 1357 ratifien, borrowed from Old French ratifier, from Medieval Latin ratificare confirm, approve, from a lost adjective ratificus* making valid (from Latin ratus fixed, valid, past participle of rēri to reckon, think; + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY. —ratification n. About 1435, borrowed through Middle French ratification, and directly from Medieval Latin ratificationem (nominative ratificatio), from ratificare RATIFY; for suffix see -ATION.

ratio n. 1636, reason or cause; later, relation between two numbers or quantities (1660); borrowed from Latin ratio (genitive rationis) reckoning, calculation, reason, from rat-, past participle stem of rēri to reckon, calculate, think.

ration n. 1550, reasoning; later, relation of one number or quantity to another, ratio (1666); and fixed allowance of food, often rations (1702–11); borrowed from French ration (in the sense of fixed allowance), and (in earlier senses) as a learned borrowing directly from Latin rationem (nominative ratio) reckoning, calculation, proportion; for suffix see -TION. —v. 1859, from the noun. The sense of apportion in fixed amounts is first recorded in 1870.

rational adj. Before 1398 racional able to reason; borrowed from Old French racional, and directly from Latin rationalis of or belonging to reason, reasonable, from ratio (genitive rationis) reckoning, calculation, reason, from rat-, past participle stem of rēri to reckon, calculate, think; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

The meaning of sensible, reasonable, is first recorded in English about 1450 and that of a positive or negative whole number in 1570. —rationalism n. 1800, use of medical treatments based on reason; formed from English rational + -ism, and in the philosophical principle that reason is the basis of knowledge and truth, (1827), influenced by French rationalisme. —rationalist n. Before 1626, formed from English rational + -ist, by influence of French rationaliste a physician whose treatment is based on reason; applied to philosophical doctrine, rationalist is first recorded in English in 1647. —rationality n. 1628, formed from English rational + -ity, after Latin rationalitās reasonableness. —rationalize v. 1817, explain on a rational basis, formed from English rational + -ize.

rationale n. 1657, statement of reasons or principles; borrowed from Late Latin rationāle, noun use of neuter of Latin rationālis of reason, RATIONAL. The sense of rational basis, is first recorded in English in 1688.

ratline or ratlin n. 1481–90 ratling, radelyng thin line or rope, of uncertain origin. The spelling ratlin is not recorded before 1711, and ratline not before 1773 (both influenced by *line*¹, n.).

rattan n. 1660 rattoon switch or stick made from the stem of a rattan; borrowed from Malay rōtan.

rattle v. Probably before 1300 ratelen; possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch ratelen to rattle; cognate with Middle Low German rettelen, and Middle High German razzeln, razzen (modern German rasseln); probably of imitative origin. The sense of agitate, fluster is first recorded in 1869. —n. 1500–20, from the verb. —rattler n. About 1449, one who talks at great length; earlier as a surname Rateler (1309); formed from Middle English ratelen, v. + *-er*¹. The meaning of a rattlesnake is first recorded in 1827. —rattlesnake n. (1630) —rattletrap n. (1766).

raucous adj. 1769, borrowed from Latin raucus hoarse, related to ravus hoarse; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of hoarse was known earlier in Middle English rauc (probably before 1425).

raunchy adj. 1939, clumsy, careless, sloppy (in Air Force slang); of unknown origin. The sense of coarse, vulgar, smutty, appeared in the 1960's.

ravage v. 1611, borrowed from French ravager lay waste, devastate, from Old French ravage destruction, especially by violent rush of water, rain and snowfall, from ravir to take away hastily, RAVISH; for suffix see -AGE. —n. 1611, borrowed from French ravage havoc, destruction, from Old French ravage destruction especially by storm.

rave v. Before 1325 reven; also raven talk wildly (probably about 1325); borrowed from Old French raver, rever, variants of resver to dream, wander, rave; of uncertain origin; see REVERIE. The sense of talk with great enthusiasm is first recorded before 1704. —n. 1598, from the verb. —raving adj. About 1475, delirious, frenzied, raging; formed from English rave, v. + *-ing*². The meaning of remarkable, as in a raving beauty, is first recorded in 1841.

ravel v. 1582, to untangle, unwind; also, to become tangled or confused (before 1585); borrowed from Dutch ravelen (now rafelen) to tangle, fray, unweave, from rafel frayed thread; cognate with Old Icelandic refill piece of cloth. Both ravel and unravel have long been synonyms in the sense of disentangle, unwind, and antonyms, in that ravel has also carried the meaning of entangle, confuse. The reason is that as threads become unwoven, their ends tangle. —n. 1634, a tangle, complication, from the verb. The meaning of frayed thread is first recorded in 1832.

raven n. Probably before 1200 reaven, reven; also raven (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (Mercian) hræfn (before 800) and hrefn (before 830), hræfn (Northumbrian and West Saxon); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch rāven raven (modern Dutch raaf), Old High German hraban (from Proto-Germanic Hrabanās*) and Old Icelandic hrafn (Danish ravn, Norwegian ramn). Old English also had the forms hræmn, hrem, hremm, found in Old High German hram, ram, Middle High German ram, ramm, and Old Swedish ramn. —adj. 1634, from the noun.

ravenous adj. Probably before 1387 ravenes devouring eagerly, rapacious; borrowed from Old French ravinos, ravineus rapacious, violent, from raviner to seize, fall impetuously, from ravine violent rush, robbery; see RAVINE; for suffix see -OUS.

ravine n. 1779 ravine deep narrow gorge, especially one eroded by water; earlier ravin (1760–72); borrowed from French ravin a gully, from Old French raviner to hollow out; also borrowed from French ravine a gully, a violent rush of water; from Old French ravine violent rush, robbery, rapine, from Latin rapina RAPINE.

An earlier word ravine booty, plunder (about 1350), later robbery (about 1380), borrowed from Old French ravine a violent rush, is not found in English after 1500 which makes the appearance of English ravine in the 1700's a reborrowing from French.

ravioli n. pl. 1611 raviol small meatballs baked in a crust; borrowed from Italian raviolo; in Middle English raffyolys (probably about 1425), and rafyols (before 1399), borrowed from Old French raviolle and directly from Italian rafioli. It appears that each occurrence may be a separate borrowing, including that in 1841, which is a direct borrowing of Italian ravioli, raviuoli, from plural of dialectal raviolo, raviuolo, diminutive of some noun now unknown.

ravish v. About 1303 ravyshen to carry off by force, rape; also ravissen to plunder (about 1300), and transport with emotion (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French raviss-, stem of ravir to seize, take away hastily, from Vulgar Latin rapire*, from Latin rapere to seize, hurry away; for suffix see -ISH². —ravishing adj. About 1340, seizing upon prey, ravenous; later, enchanting (about 1380); from Middle English present participle of ravishen.

raw adj. Before 1325 rau uncooked, unfinished, crude; developed from Old English (about 1000) hrēaw uncooked, raw; cognate with Old Saxon hrāo raw, Middle Low German rō, rōer, Middle Dutch rau (modern Dutch rau), Old High German hrao, hrawēr (modern German roh), and Old Icelandic hrār (Norwegian and Swedish rå, Danish raa); from Proto-Germanic Hrawaz*.

The sense of tender, sore, is first recorded about 1390, and that of inexperienced probably before 1590. The meaning of damp and chilly is found in 1546. —n. 1823, from the adjective. —rawhide n. (1658) —raw material (1796) ray¹ n. beam of light. Probably about 1380, borrowed from Old French rai ray, spoke, from Latin radius ray, spoke, staff, rod.

ray² n. variety of fish, related to the sharks. 1323–24, borrowed from Old French raie, and directly from Latin raia.

rayon n. 1924, probably borrowed from French rayon beam of light, ray, derived from rai RAY¹; so called from its shiny appearance. This fiber was patented in 1884 under the name of artificial silk.

raze v. Before 1547, alteration of racen to pull or knock down (before 1375); earlier rasen to scratch, slash, scrape, erase (before 1349); borrowed from Old French raser to scrape, shave, and directly from Medieval Latin rasare, frequentative form of Latin rādere to scrape, shave.

razor n. Probably before 1300 rasoure sharp-edged tool, especially for shaving; later razur (1392); borrowed from Old French rasor, rasour a razor, from raser to scrape, shave; see RAZE; for suffix see -OR².

razz n. Before 1919, shortened form and altered spelling of raspberry (derisive sound, 1890). —v. 1921, from the noun.

razzle-dazzle n. 1889, varied reduplication of DAZZLE.

razzmatazz n. 1899, perhaps a varied reduplication of jazz from the word's early association with that form of music.

re¹ n. second note of the musical scale. About 1325, borrowed from Medieval Latin re, from the initial syllable of Latin resonāre to resound, the word sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day; see GAMUT.

re² prep. with reference to. 1707, borrowed from Latin rē in the matter of, ablative case of rēs matter, thing.

re- a prefix in modern English with the meaning again, anew, once more, as in reappear, rebuild, reheat, reopen, or back, as in repay, recall, react, that can be added to any English verb, adjective, or noun or to derivatives whether found either as a part of an original borrowing (reform = to make better) or as a new emphatic (re-form = to form again, take a new shape). Borrowed through Old French, and directly from Latin re-, red- again, back. In many borrowings from Latin or Old French, the precise sense of re- is not clear, and often secondary meanings develop that further obscure the original sense. In general, appearance of Latin and Old French re- can be analyzed into senses that denote: 1) movement back or in reverse, as in recede, repel; 2) withdrawal, reversal of an earlier process, as in retract, reveal; 3) restoration or renewal, as in restitution, relegate; 4) response or opposition, as in reluctant, repugnant; 5) repeated or intensified action, as in revise, resume. These are not fixed meanings and for the most part re- can be glossed only in terms of its function in a particular word as "intensive," "opposite," etc.

In some words any sense of re- has been so weakened as to seem artificial in English; examples include receive, recommend, reduce, rejoice, religion, remain, repair, report, require.

reach v. Probably before 1200 reachen; developed from Old English ræcan to extend, hold forth (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian rēka, rētsa to reach, Middle Low German rēken, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch reiken, Old High German and modern German reichen (from Proto-Germanic raikjanau*). —n. 1536, part of a river between bends; earlier, a bay (1526); from the verb. The meaning of extent or distance of reaching is first recorded before 1548.

react v. 1611, implied in reacting; formed from English re- again, anew + act, v.; probably by influence of French réagir react, from Middle French; and directly from Late Latin reagere (past participle reāctus), formed from Latin re- back + agere to do, act. —reactant n. (1928) —reaction n. 1611, formed in English from re- again, anew + action, n., by influence of obsolete Italian reazione and French réaction; from Medieval Latin reactionem (nominative reactio), from Late Latin reāct-, past participle stem of reagere react; for suffix see -TION.

reactionary adj. 1840, formed from English reaction + -ary, on the model of French réactionnaire, from réaction reaction, from Medieval Latin reactionem (nominative reactio) REACTION. —n. 1858, from the adjective.

reactor n. 1890 reacter person or animal that reacts; formed from English react + *-er*¹, *-or*². The meaning in the term nuclear reactor appeared in 1945.

read v. Probably about 1175 reden consider, discern, read (writing); developed from Old English (West Saxon) rædan to explain, read, rule, advise (before 899), and (Anglian) rēdan (compare Mercian berēdan to advise falsely, betray, about 700); related to ræd, rēd advice. The sense of advise, counsel, consider or explain is common to various Germanic languages as found in the cognates Old Frisian rēda to advise, Old Saxon rādan, Middle Low German raden, Middle Dutch rāden (modern Dutch raden), Old High German rātan (modern German raden), Old Icelandic rādha, and Gothic garēdan to consider, from Proto-Germanic raedanān*. But transfer of this sense to apprehending the meaning of written symbols is apparently unique to English and Old Icelandic rādha. —n. 1825, from the verb. —adj. 1586, as in a well-read man; originally past participle of the verb, now considered a separate form in most general dictionaries. —readable adj. (1570) —reader n. Probably about 1200 redere, developed from Old English (about 961) rēdere person who reads aloud to others. —reading n. Probably before 1200 redunge act of reading, skill in reading, about 1300 reding; developed from Old English rēding, from read, v. The meaning of interpretation (as in one's reading of a situation) is first recorded in reference to the interpretation of dreams probably before 1350. —adj. used in reading, as in a reading book (before 1333).

ready adj. Probably before 1200 rædi, also redi; formed from Old English ræde, geræde ready (before 899) + Middle English -i, shortened from Old English -ig *-y*¹. Old English ræde, geræde is cognate with Old Frisian rēde ready, Middle Low German rēde, Middle Dutch gereit, gereet (modern Dutch gerede), Old High German reiti (modern German bereit), Old Icelandic greidhr, Gothic garaiθs ordered (from Proto-Germanic garaidijaz*). —v. Before 1338 redyen prepare; earlier, to direct or guide (before 1225); from redi, adj. —n. 1688, (slang) cash, from the adjective. The sense of a being ready (as in at the ready), is first recorded in 1837. —readily adv. Before 1300 redily willingly; later, quickly (as in answer readily, before 1375), and easily (as in readily accessible, about 1380). —ready-made adj. (probably before 1425) reagent n. 1797, formed from English re- + agent substance that produces a chemical reaction (1756), perhaps influenced by French réagir react.

real¹ adj. actual, true. Probably before 1325 real having physical existence, actual; later, genuine or authentic (1440); in law, pertaining to property (1444); borrowed from Old French rēal, rēal, from Late Latin reālis actual, from Latin rēs matter or thing. —adv. 1658, from the adjective. —real estate (1666) —realism n. 1817, formed from English *real*¹, adj. + -ism, perhaps after French réalisme. —realist n. 1605, one concerned with things rather than words; formed from English *real*¹ + -ist, after French réaliste. —realistic adj. (1856) —reality n. 1550, quality of being real; reborrowed from Middle French réalité, and directly from Medieval Latin realitas, from Late Latin reālis real; for suffix see -ITY.

real² n. Spanish silver coin. 1611, borrowing of Spanish real, noun use of real regal, from Latin rēgālis REGAL; also known in Middle and early modern English as an adjective meaning royal or fit for a king, lavish, beautiful, etc. (probably about 1300) and in Middle English as a noun especially with the meaning of a noble (before 1400) and a gold coin (1471), a real of eight or a piece of eight (1420). The term was borrowed immediately, however, from Old French rēal, rial, not from Spanish.

realize v. 1611, bring into real existence; borrowed from French réaliser make real, from Middle French real actual, from Old French *REAL*¹ + -iser -ize. The sense of understand clearly is first found in 1775. —realization n. 1611, action of becoming real; borrowed from French réalisation a making real, from réaliser realize; for suffix see -ATION.

really adv. Before 1400, in reality, with reference to the presence of Christ in the Eucharist; later, actually (before 1425); formed from *real*¹ + *-ly*¹.

realm n. Probably before 1300 rem kingdom; borrowed as a reduced form of Old French rēaume; also about 1300 reaume, borrowed directly from Old French rēaume; and later realme (about 1380), borrowed from Old French rēalme. Old French rēaume is probably formed from roiaume, reiemme kingdom, from Gallo-Romance, while rēalme is an alteration (by influence of Old French real regal, from Latin rēgālis REGAL) of a possible Gallo-Romance regiminem*, formed as an accusative on Latin regimen government, rule, REGIMEN.

The sense of any sphere or area of influence is first recorded about 1380.

Realtor n. 1916 realtor real-estate agent; formed from realty(y) + *-or*². The service mark Realtor was patented in 1948.

realty n. 1670, real estate; earlier, a right, real possession (1618); formed from English *real*¹, adj. + *-ty*².

ream¹ n. quantity of paper. 1356 rem; borrowed from Old French rame, reyme, from Spanish resma, from Arabic rizmah bundle. The word was introduced into Europe through Spanish by the Moors, who brought manufacture of cotton paper to Spain. A later spelling in English rym (1473–74) shows probable Dutch influence from riem, borrowed into Dutch from Spanish, probably during the time the Spanish Hapsburgs controlled Holland.

ream² v. enlarge a hole. 1815 (implied in reaming), found in Middle English remen (probably before 1300), dialectal variant of rimen make room, clear (probably about 1150); developed from Old English rȳman widen, extend, enlarge (before 725); cognate with Old Frisian rēma make room, Old Saxon rūmian, Middle Dutch rūmen (modern Dutch ruimen), Old High German rūmen (modern German räumen), and Old Icelandic rýma, from Proto-Germanic rūmijanan*, from rūmaz* spacious. —reamer n. (1825) reap v. Probably about 1175 repen to cut grain, gather, obtain; developed from Old English (before 830) reopan, Mercian form of ripan to reap; cognate with Middle Low German repen remove seeds from flax, Middle Dutch reipen to tear, comb flax, and Norwegian ripe to score, scratch, and related to Old English ripe RIPE. —reaper n. Before 1382; earlier as a surname Reper (1327); developed from Old English riper (about 950 in the compound hripemann).

rear¹ n. back part. Before 1338 rere back part of an army, abstracted from rereward rear guard (probably before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French rereward, Old French nieregarde (rere, riere behind, from Latin retrō back, behind, + garde GUARD). The spelling rear appears about 1557. —adj.

About 1303 rere late, last; later, hindmost (probably before 1325); borrowed from Old French rere, riere behind. —rearward adv., adj. 1598, from the noun rearward hindmost part (before 1450), misconstrued as rear, n. + ward.

rear² v. to raise. Probably about 1150 veren to bring into being, bring about, cause; later, bring up (as in rear a child, probably before 1200); also in Middle English, rise on the hind legs (1375); developed from Old English (before 725) ræran to raise; cognate with Old High German rēren cause to fall, Old Icelandic reisa to raise, and Gothic urraisjan lift up, from Proto-Germanic raizijanau* to raise (causative of rīsanau* to rise).

reason n. Probably before 1200 reison cause or motive for an action, explanation, ability to think; also resoun (about 1200); later reason (probably before 1400); borrowed through Anglo-French resoun, raisun, Old French reson, raison, from Latin rationem (nominative ratio) reckoning, understanding, motive, cause; related to rēri to reckon, think. —v. Before 1325 resumen to question, argue, discuss; borrowed from Old French resoner, raisoner, from raison, n.; also probably in part a development from earlier reason, n., parallel to development found in Old French and in Latin. —reasonable adj. Before 1325 resonabil; earlier resonable (1303); borrowed from Old French raisonable, and directly from Latin rationābilis, from ratio reason; for suffix see -ABLE. —reasonably adv. (about 1378) —reasoning n. (about 1380) rebate v. Before 1398 rebaten to reduce or diminish; later, to subtract or deduct (1425); borrowed from Old French rabatre, rebatte beat down, drive back; also, deduct (re- repeatedly + abatre beat down). —n. 1656, probably from the verb in English, and also borrowed from French rabat a discount, from Middle French rabatre, rebatte beat down.

rebel adj. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French rebelle, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin rebellis insurgent, rebellious, from rebellāre to rebel, wage war against (re- opposite, against + bellāre wage war, from bellum war). —n. About 1350, from the adjective, and probably borrowed from Old French rebelle, n. —v. 1340 rebelen, borrowed from Old French rebeller, and directly from Latin rebellāre to rebel. —rebellion n. About 1340, borrowed from Old French rebellion, and directly from Latin rebelliōnem (nominative rebelliō) rebellion, renewal of a war, from rebellis rebellious; for suffix see -ION. —rebellious adj. Probably before 1425 rebellous; formed in English from Latin rebellis rebel + English -ous, perhaps by influence of Old French rebelleux.

rebound v. About 1380, to spring, leap; also, return to afflict (before 1382); borrowed from Old French rebondir, rebundir leap back, resound (re- back + bondir leap, bound, or bundir resound).

rebuff v. Before 1586, borrowed from obsolete French rebuffe to check, snub, from Italian ribuffare, rabbuffare to check, chide, snub, from ribuffo, rabbuffo a snub (ri- back, from Latin re- + buffo a puff, of imitative origin). —n. 1611, borrowed from obsolete French rebuffe, from Italian ribuffo, rabbuffo a snub.

rebuken v. About 1330 rebouken chide severely, scold; later rebuken (probably before 1350); borrowed from Anglo-French rebuker, Old French rebuchier (re- back + buschier to strike, chop wood, from bûche, busche wood). —n. Before 1420, shame, disgrace; also, scolding (about 1433); from the verb.

rebus n. 1605, borrowed through French rēbus, and directly from Latin rēbus by means of objects, ablative case plural of rēs thing, object. Perhaps first used in de rebus quae geruntur of things which are going on, in reference to satirical pieces composed at carnivals, referring to current topics in pictures suggesting words, phrases, or syllables of names.

rebut v. Probably before 1300 rebuten rebuke, assail; later rebuten repel (before 1325); borrowed from Old French rebuter, rebouter, reboter (re- back + boter to thrust, hit). The sense of try to disprove, refute, is first recorded in 1817. —rebuttal n. 1830, act of rebutting; formed from English rebut + -al².

recalcitrant adj. 1843, borrowed from French récalcitrant, or directly from Latin recalcitrāns, present participle of recalcitrāre to kick back (re- back + calcitrāre to kick, from a lost noun calcitrus* a kick, from calx, genitive calcis heel); for suffix see -ANT. It is also possible that recalcitrant was formed in English from the earlier verb recalcitrate (1623, to kick out, and resist obstinately, 1759). —n. 1865, from the adjective. —recalcitrance n. 1856, perhaps borrowed from French récalcitrance, or formed in English as a noun to recalcitrant; for suffix see -ANCE.

recall v. 1582, call back; formed from English re- + call, v.; perhaps in some instances, a loan translation of Middle French rappeler, see REPEAL; and in the political or legal sense a loan translation of Latin revocāre; see REVOKE. —n. 1611, a calling back; from the noun.

recant v. 1535, borrowed from Latin recantāre recall, revoke (re- back + cantāre to chant), loan translation of Greek palinōideîn recant, (pálin back + aideîn, alideîn to sing).

recap¹ v. put a strip of rubber on the tread of a tire. 1856, to cap again, formed from English re- again + cap, v. The sense relating to an automobile tire appeared before 1927.

recap² v. recapitulate. 1920's, shortened form of recapitulate. —n. 1930's, shortened form of recapitulation.

recapitulate v. 1570, back formation from recapitulation, and borrowed from Late Latin recapitulātus, past participle of recapitulāre recapitulate; for suffix see -ATE¹. —recapitulation n. Before 1387 recapitulacion a summarizing; brief restatement (1392); borrowed through Old French recapitulacion and directly from Late Latin recapitulātiōnem (nominative recapitulātiō), from recapitulāre go over the main points of a thing again; literally, restate by heads or chapters (re- again + capitulum main part, CHAPTER); for suffix see -ATION.

recede v. Probably before 1425 receden to move backward, retreat, depart; borrowed from Middle French receder, and directly from Latin recēdere (re- back + cēdere to go; see CEDE).

receipt n. Before 1349 resseite the act of receiving; later reseit a sum of money received (1390), and receit a medicinal recipe (1392); borrowed from Anglo-French or Old North French receite receipt, recipe, alteration (by influence of receit he receives, from Vulgar Latin recipit*) of Old French recete, from Latin recepta received, feminine past participle of recipere to RECEIVE.

The English spelling with p (in imitation of the Latin form) is first recorded in the late 1300's, but did not become the established form until the 1700's. —v. 1787, from the noun.

receive v. Probably before 1300 resceiven take something offered or sent; later receiven (before 1325); borrowed from Old French receivre, from Latin recipere (re- back + -cipere, combining form of capere to take). —receiver n. Before 1338, person who buys and sells stolen goods; also, a tax collector or rental agent; earlier as a surname (1251); borrowed from Anglo-French receivour, receptor, Old French receveor, from receptor; for suffix see -ER¹. Later meanings in English, such as a person appointed to administer property (1793), and the part of a telephone held to the ear (1877), etc., were formed from English receive + -ER¹.

recent adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin recentem (nominative recēns) lately done or made, new, fresh.

receptacle n. 1392, borrowed from Old French receptacle, and directly from Latin receptāculum place to receive and store things in, a receptacle, from receptāre, frequentative form of recipere to hold, contain RECEIVE.

reception n. Before 1393 reception the effect of two planets on each other; later, act of receiving, (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French reception, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin receptionem (nominative receptiō) a receiving, from recipere RECEIVE; for suffix see -TION. —receptionist n. (1867) —receptive adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Medieval Latin receptivus able to receive, from Latin receptus, past participle of recipere RECEIVE; for suffix see -IVE. —receptor n. Before 1450, borrowed through Anglo-French receptour, Old French recepteur, and directly from Latin receptor, from receptus, past participle of recipere RECEIVE; for suffix see -OR².

recess n. 1531, act of receding; borrowed from Middle French reces, recez, and directly from Latin recessus (genitive recessūs) a going back, a retreat, a retired place, from recessum, past participle of recedere to RECEDE. The meaning of a hidden or remote part is first recorded in English in 1616, and that of a period of stopping from usual work, in 1620. —v. 1809, put in a recess, from the noun. The meaning of take a recess from work is first recorded in 1893. —recession n. 1646; borrowed from Latin recessionem (nominative recessiō) a going back, receding, from recedere to RECEDE; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of a decline in business activity is first recorded in 1929. —recessional n. (1867) —recessive adj. 1672–73, tending to recede; formed from English recess + -ive on the model of Latin recessivus, from recess-, past participle stem of recedere to recede; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning in genetics is first recorded in English in 1900, after German recessiv.

recharge v. Probably before 1430, formed from English re- again + charge load, modeled on Middle French recharger, recharger.

recidivist n. 1880, borrowed from French récidiviste, from récidiver to fall back or relapse, from Medieval Latin recidivare to relapse into sin, from Latin recidivus falling back, from recidere fall back (re- back + -cidere, combining form of cadere to fall); for suffix see -IST. Recidivist replaced earlier recidive, n. (1854), as a complement to recidivation relapse into sin, crime, etc. (before 1415). —recidivism n. 1886, from recidivist, on the analogy of baptist, baptism, etc.; for suffix see -ISM.

recipe n. 1584, medical prescription, borrowed from Middle French recipé, and directly from Latin recipe! take!, imperative of recipere to take, RECEIVE. The sense of instructions for preparing food is found in 1743, and that of a directive in medical prescriptions, now, only the abbreviation R or Rx.

recipient n. 1558, borrowed from Middle French recipient, and directly from Latin recipientem (nominative recipiēns), present participle of recipere to RECEIVE; for suffix see -ENT. —adj. 1610, from the noun.

reciprocal adj. 1570, inversely related; formed from Latin reciprocus returning the same way, alternating + English -al¹. Latin reciprocus is reconstructed from a pre-Latin form reco-proco-* back and forth, from recus* (re- back + -cus adjective formative) and procus* (pro- forward + -cus adjective formative).

The sense of existing on both sides, mutual, is first recorded in 1579, and that of done (or felt, given, etc.) in return, in 1596. —n. 1570, from the adjective.

reciprocate v. 1611, probably a back formation from reciprocation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —reciprocation n. 1561, act of reciprocating; earlier, reflexive mode of expression (1530); borrowed from Latin reciprocationem (nominative reciprocātiō) retrogression, alternation, ebb, from reciprocāre move back and forth, alternate, from reciprocus alternating, RECIPROCAL; for suffix see -ATION. —reciprocity n. 1766, borrowed from French réciprocité, from réproque reciprocal, from Latin reciprocus + -itē -ity.

recite v. 1430 reciten to repeat aloud, relate in detail; borrowed through Middle French reciter, and directly from Latin recitāre read aloud, repeat from memory (re- back, again + citāre to summon). —recital n. 1512, formal statement of relevant facts in a legal document, formed from English recite + -al². The sense of an act of reciting is first recorded in 1612, and that of musical entertainment, is found in 1811. —recitation n. 1484, act of detailing; later, act of repeating aloud (1611); borrowed through Middle French recitation, and directly from Latin recitationem (nominative recitātiō) a reading aloud, from recitāre read aloud, recite; for suffix see -ATION. —recitative n. 1656, borrowed from Italian recitativo, from recitare recite, from Latin recitāre; for suffix see -IVE.

reckless adj. Probably about 1200 reckelaes without care or heed, variant of recheles (probably before 1200); developed from Old English reclēas careless, thoughtless, heedless (before 899); earlier recilēas (before 800); formed from reccē*, reccē care, heed (related to, if not developed from reccan to care, heed) + -lēas -less, possibly on the model of a parallel compound, as suggested by later Middle Dutch and modern Dutch roekeloos, Middle Low German rōkelōs, and Middle High German ruochelōs (modern German nuchlos) careless, untroubled, wicked. —reck v. Probably about 1200 rekken, variant of rechen (1123); developed from Old English rēcan to care, heed (before 900); earlier reccan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon rōkjan to care, heed, Middle Dutch roeken, Old High German ruohen, ruohhen, and Old Icelandic rækja, from Proto-Germanic rōkijanan*.

reckon v. Probably before 1200 rikenin to list, count up, consider, answer for; variant of recenen (probably about 1200), and rekenen (about 1280); developed from Old English (before 1000) gerecenian to recount, relate; cognate with Old Frisian rekenia to reckon, Middle Low German rekenen, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rekenen, Old High German rehhanōn (modern German rechnen), from Proto-Germanic (ga-)rekenōjanan*, built on the adjective rekenaz* ready, rapid. —reckoning n. Before 1325 reckining narrative account, also rechning; later rekening an accounting, settling of an account (1340), and calculation (about 1380); formed from English reckon + *-ing*¹.

reclaim v. Before 1325 reclaymen call or bring back, exclaim, also reclamen (before 1393); borrowed from Old French reclamer, reclamer to invoke or appeal, and directly from Latin reclāmāre cry out against, appeal (re- opposite, against + clāmāre cry out).

The meaning of bring (waste or submerged land) to a state fit for use is first recorded in 1764. —reclamation n. Before 1475 reclamacion; borrowed from Middle French reclamation, and directly from Latin reclāmātiōnem (nominative reclāmātiō) a cry of opposition, from reclāmāre see RECLAIM; for suffix see -ATION.

recline v. Probably before 1425 reclynen lie or lay down; borrowed through Middle French recliner, and directly from Latin reclināre (re- back or against + clināre to bend, LEAN¹).

recluse n. Probably before 1200, person who lives withdrawn from the world; borrowed from Old French reclus (feminine recluse), noun use of reclus, adj., shut up, from Late Latin reclūsus, past participle of recludere to shut up, enclose (Latin re- intensive + cludere to shut, CLOSE¹). —adj. Probably before 1200 reclus, reclused living in seclusion, cloistered; originally past participle of reclusen to shut up, confine; borrowed from Old French reclus, past participle of reclure, from Late Latin recludere to shut up. —reclusive adj. 1599, formed from English recluse, v., seclude, borrowed from Late Latin reclūsus, past participle + -ive.

recognition n. About 1450 recognycon knowledge of an event; recognition acknowledgment of someone's right to property (about 1460); borrowed from Middle French recognition, and directly from Latin recognitiōnem (nominative recognitiō) act of recognizing, from recognit-, past participle stem of recognoscere to acknowledge, know again, examine; see RECOGNIZE; for suffix see -TION.

recognizance n. 1414 recognisanze, borrowed from Old French recognissance, recognissance, and eventually displacing earlier Middle English reconnaissance (recorded before 1325; borrowed from Old French reconnaissance, reconnaissance acknowledgment, recognition, from reconnoiss-, stem of reconoistre RECOGNIZE; for suffix see -ANCE. Compare RECONNAISSANCE.

recognize v. 1414 recognisen resume possession of land; borrowed from Middle French reconnoiss-, stem of reconoistre to know again, identify, recognize, from Old French, from Latin recognoscere acknowledge, recall to mind, know again, examine, certify (re- again + cognoscere know); for suffix see -IZE. Early forms, such as recunyse and racunnisen were direct borrowing from French, but fell away by influence of Medieval Latin recognizare. The meaning of perceive (someone or something) as already known, recognize, is first recorded in 1533 in the obsolete form recognos (recognosce, borrowed from Latin recognoscere).

recoil v. Probably before 1200 reculen force back, retreat; later recoilen (before 1250); borrowed from Old French reculer, from Vulgar Latin reculāre* (from Latin re- back + cūlus backside). The meaning of shrink back is first recorded in 1513, and that of spring back, in reference to firearms, in 1530. —n. Probably before 1300; from the verb in Middle English, and borrowed from Old French recul recoil, from the verb in Old French.

recommend v. About 1375 recomenden commit, dedicate; borrowed from Medieval Latin recommendare (from Latin re- intensive + commendare commit, COMMEND). The meaning of praise or present as worthy is first recorded about 1378. The forms recommend and the now obsolete recommand were identical in Middle and early modern English, paralleling use of commend, command in Middle English and the mixed use in Medieval Latin. Later, however, the original sense of commend in Latin was reborrowed from Latin commendāre, and English command in the sense of convey, entrust, fell out of use. —recommendation n. 1408, a greeting dedication; borrowed from Old French recommandation, and directly from Medieval Latin recommēdatiōnem (nominative recommēdatiō), from recommēdare; for suffix see -ATION.

recompense v. Before 1400 recompensen to redress or remedy; later, to reward, repay, compensate (1422); borrowed from Middle French recompenser, and directly from Late Latin recompēnsāre (Latin re- again + compēnsāre balance out). —n. About 1420, payment, reward, amends; borrowed from Middle French recompense, from recompenser to recompense.

reconcile v. Probably about 1350 reconcylen; borrowed through Old French reconcilier, and directly from Latin reconciliāre (re- again + conciliāre make friendly). The meaning of make consistent, harmonize, is first recorded before 1398. —reconciliation n. About 1350 reconsiliacioun; borrowed through Old French reconciliation, and directly from Latin reconciliātiōnem (nominative reconciliātiō), from reconciliāre RECONCILE; for suffix see -ATION.

recondite adj. 1649, hidden from view, kept out of sight; borrowed from Latin reconditus, past participle of recondere store away (re- away + condere to store). The meaning of profound, abstruse, is first recorded in English before 1652.

reconnaissance n. 1810, borrowing of French reconnaissance act of surveying; literally, recognition, from Old French. The word was borrowed earlier as found in reconisaunce a legal inquiry (about 1460), and a bond acknowledging a debt (before 1325); from Old French reconnaissance RECOGNIZANCE.

reconnoiter v. 1707 reconnoitre, borrowing of obsolete French reconnoître (now reconnaitre), from Middle French reconoistre to identify, RECOGNIZE.

record v. Probably before 1200 recorden to repeat, recite; later, to set down in writing (1340); borrowed from Old French recorder repeat, recite, report, and directly from Latin recordārī remember, call to mind (re- restore + cor, genitive cordis heart, as the seat of memory). The meaning of put (sounds or images) into a permanent form on disks, cylinders, or tape, is first attested in 1892, probably from the noun. —n. Probably before 1300 rekord testimony; later record state or fact of being recorded (before 1325), and an official written account (1399); borrowed from Old French record, from recorder to record; also probably from the verb in Middle English. The disk on which sounds or images have been recorded, is first attested in 1878, and the best achievement in a sport or other endeavor, in 1883.

recorder n. 1 person who is in charge of record keeping, chief legal officer of a city. 1415 recordour, borrowed through Anglo-French recordour, Old French recordēor person who records, a witness, judge, from Medieval Latin recordator, from Latin recordārī remember. 2 wooden musical wind instrument. Probably before 1425 recorde, formed from English record, v. + -er and borrowed from Old French recordēor. It became very rare by the mid-1800's, as it lost popularity to the much-improved design of the flute, but revived interest in ancient instruments popularized the easily-played recorder, after 1911.

recount v. 1456 recounten; borrowed from Middle French recontier, from Old French (re- again + conter to relate, reckon, count).

recoup v. 1628, (in law) to deduct; borrowed from French recouper to cut back, from Old French (re- back + couper to cut, from coup a blow). The sense of recompense for loss or outlay is first recorded in 1664.

recourse n. About 1380 recours course or movement; also, act of relying on for help or protection (about 1385); borrowed from Old French recours, recors, and directly from Latin recursus (genitive recursūs) return or retreat, from recurs-, stem of the past participle of currere run back, return RECUR.

recover v. Probably before 1300 rekeveren, recoveren get back something lost, etc.; also, to regain strength or health, recuperate; borrowed through Anglo-French rekeverer, recoverer, Old French recouper, from Latin recuperāre to recover. —recovery n. Possibly about 1303 recouere help; later, a coming back to health or normal condition (before 1338), and recoveree a gaining possession by legal action (1424); borrowed through Anglo-French recoverie, recovery, rekevere, Old French recouree, from past participle of recouper RECOVER.

recreant adj. Probably before 1300 recreaunt defeated; later, recreant surrender, subdued (before 1338), cowardly (probably about 1390); borrowed from Old French recreant, adj. and n., yielding or giving, present participle of recoire to yield in a trial by combat, surrender allegiance (re- again + croire entrust, believe, from Latin crēdere); for suffix see -ANT. —n. Probably before 1400, coward, from the adjective; later traitor, apostate, (1570).

recreation n. Before 1393 recreacioun refreshment or curing of a person, refreshment by eating; borrowed from Old French recreación, and directly from Latin recreātiōnem (nominative recreātiō) recovery from illness, from recreāre to refresh, restore (re- again + creāre to CREATE); for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of refreshing oneself by some amusement (as in to read for recreation) is found about 1400, and that of a means of refreshing oneself (as in reading is her recreation) in 1410. —recreate v. About 1425 recreaten refresh (oneself); probably borrowed from Latin recreātus, past participle of recreāre refresh; and a later back formation from recreation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —recreational adj. (1656).

recriminate v. 1603, borrowed, by influence of Middle French récriminer, from Medieval Latin recriminatus, past participle of recriminari (from Latin re- again or back + crīmīnārī to accuse, from crimen, genitive crīmīnis a charge, CRIME); for suffix see -ATE¹. —recrimination n. 1611, borrowed from French recrimination the making of a counter-accusation, from Medieval Latin recriminationem (nominative recriminatio), from recriminari recriminate; for suffix see -ATION.

recrudescence n. 1721, formed from Latin recrūdescere (of wounds) reopen + English -ence. —recrudescence adj. 1727, formed in English after Latin recrūdescens (nominative recrūdescēns), present participle of recrūdescere reopen; for suffix see -ENT.

recruit n. Before 1643, recovery or renewal; borrowed from obsolete French recrute, variant of recrue, literally, new growth, from Old French recrēū, past participle of recrēistre grow or increase again (re- again + creistre to grow, from Latin crēscere grow). The form recruit is a replacement of recrue a body of military reinforcements (1619). —v. 1655, to enlist new soldiers; borrowed from French recruter, from recrute, variant of recrue recruit, n.

rectangle n. 1571, borrowed from Middle French rectangle (rect-, combining form from Latin rectus RIGHT + Old French angle ANGLE¹). The form rectangle was also known from Medieval Latin rectangulum a triangle having a right angle, from rectangulus having a right angle (altered from Late Latin rectiāngulus, from Latin rectus right + angulus an angle). The Medieval Latin rectangulus was the source for the now obsolete rectangle, rectangled, adj., having a right angle (1570). —rectangular adj. 1624, shaped like a rectangle; borrowed from Middle French rectangulaire (rect- right + angulaire angular, from Latin angulāris ANGULAR); for suffix see -AR.

rectify v. 1392 rectifier; borrowed from Old French rectifier, Medieval Latin rectificare make right, from a lost adjective rectificus* (from Latin rectus straight, RIGHT + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. —rectification n. Before 1400, borrowed through Middle or Old French rectificacion, and directly from Medieval Latin rectificationem (nominative rectificatio) the act or fact of making right or remedying, from rectificare to RECTIFY; for suffix see -FICATION.

rectitude n. Probably before 1425, straightness; borrowed from Middle French rectitude, and directly from Late Latin rectitudo straightness, uprightness, from Latin rectus straight, RIGHT; for suffix see -TUDE. The sense of upright conduct or character, appeared in English before 1533.

rector n. Before 1387 rector ruler, head of a school, clergyman in charge of a parish; borrowed from Old French rector, rectour and directly from Latin rector ruler, governor, guide, from rect-, past participle stem of regere to rule, guide; see RIGHT; for suffix see -OR². —rectory n. 1448, house of a rector (implied in rectory-bok account book of a parish); borrowed from Middle French rectorie, and directly from Medieval Latin rectoria the office of a rector, house of a rector, from Latin rector ruler; for suffix see -Y³.

rectum n. Probably before 1425, borrowing of Latin rectum in intestinum rectum straight intestine, with rectum, n. from neuter past participle of regere to straighten, rule; see RIGHT. —rectal adj. 1872, formed from English rectum + -al¹.

recumbent adj. 1705, borrowed from Latin recumbentem (nominative recumbens), present participle of recumbere to recline (re- back + -cumbere to lie down, related to cubare be lying); for suffix see -ENT.

recuperate v. 1542, get back, regain, recover; borrowed from Latin recuperatus, past participle of recuperare to recover, related to recipere to RECEIVE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —recuperation n. 1481, recovery or regaining of things; borrowed from Middle French recupération, and directly from Latin recuperationem (nominative recuperatio), from recuperare recover; for suffix see -ATION.

recur v. 1529, have recourse, resort; later, go back or return (1620); borrowed from Latin recurere to return, come back (*re-*back, again + curre to run). The meaning of happen again, is first recorded in 1673. —recurrence n. 1646, renewed, frequent, or periodical occurrence, formed from English recur + -ence; as a noun to recurrent. —recurrent adj. 1611, borrowed from Latin recurrentem (nominative recurrens), present participle of recurere to RECUR; for suffix see -ENT.

recycle v. 1926, implied in recycling; formed from English *re-*again + cycle, v.

red adj. Probably before 1200 red, developed from Old English (about 700) rēad red; cognate with Old Frisian rād red, Old Saxon rōd, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rood, Old High German rōt (modern German rot), Old Icelandic raudhr (Swedish röd, Danish and Norwegian rod), and Gothic rauths, from Proto-Germanic raudaz*.

The original long vowel of Old and Middle English remains in the surnames Read, Reade, but was supplanted by a short vowel in the adjective which is phonetically parallel with the development of lead, bread, etc., that also had a long vowel in Middle and Old English. —n. About 1250 rede, from the adjective. The sense of red as a noun and adjective referring to the revolutionary political movements in Europe, developed from the meaning of marked by blood or violence, found as early as 1297, and from reference to the red flag carried as a sign of defiance in battle (1602). First specific political reference in English is recorded in 1848 in news reports about the Second French Republic, styled the Red Republic by the British press. —redbird n. (1260) —redbreast n. (before 1425) —red cent a form of copper penny no longer circulated. 1839 (found in not worth a red cent). —redde v. Before 1393 reden, developed from Old English (about 950) rēadian. —reddish adj. 1392, redisch; formed from Middle English rēd, adj. + -ish. —red-faced adj. (1948; earlier, red in the face, about 1475). —red-handed adj. (1819) —redhead n. (1256) —red herring 1884, something used to draw attention away from the real issue, referring to a herring (reddened by the smoking process, before 1333) supposedly used by fugitives to put bloodhounds off their trail (1686). —red-hot adj. (probably before 1425) —red lead (1295) —red-letter adj. 1704 red-letter day memorable; originally, a saint's day, indicated on church calendars by red letters (about 1385). —red tape 1736, excessive bureaucratic routine; so called in allusion to the red-colored tape formerly used in Great Britain for tying up legal and official documents. —red wine (about 1150) —redwood n. 1832; earlier, wood yielding red dye (1634).

red- a variant of the prefix re- before vowels in some words, such as redaction, redeem, redolent, redundant.

redeem v. About 1415 redemen buy back, pay off, free, deliver; possibly a back formation from redemption, and borrowed with alteration from Middle French redimer buy back, from Latin redimere (red-, back + -imere, combining form of emere to take, buy, gain, procure). —redeemer n. (probably before 1425) —redemption n. About 1340 redempcioun, borrowed from Old French redemption, and directly from Latin redemptionem (nominative redemptio) a buying back, releasing, ransoming, from redempt-, past participle stem of redimere to redeem; for suffix see -TION.

redingote n. 1793, borrowed from French redingote (1725), alteration of English riding coat long overcoat worn to protect a horseback rider from rain, mud, etc. Riding coat is first recorded in English as riding cote (1507).

redolent adj. Probably about 1400, borrowed from Middle or Old French redolent emitting an odor, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin redolentem (nominative redolens), present participle of redolere emit a scent (red- intensive form + olere give off a smell); for suffix see -ENT. —redolence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French redolence, from redolent, and probably directly from Medieval Latin redolentia, from Latin redolere; for suffix see -ENCE; also formed in Middle English as a noun to the earlier adjective redolent.

redouble v. About 1443 redoublen; borrowed from Middle French redoubler, redobler, from Old French (re- again + doubler to DOUBLE).

redoubt n. Before 1608, borrowed from French redoute, from Italian ridotto, from Medieval Latin reductus (genitive reductus) refuge, retreat, from Latin reduct-, stem of the past participle of Latin redūcere to lead or bring back. The b in redoubt and in the verb redoubten to dread, fear (1417), is an alteration influenced by English doubt.

redoubtable adj. About 1380 redoutable venerable; borrowed from Old French redoutable, from redouter to dread (re- intensive + douter be afraid of, DOUBT) + -able -able.

The spelling with b is probably by association with doubt.

redound v. 1382 redounden to overflow, flow back, come back as a result; borrowed from Old French redonder overflow, abound, from Latin redundāre to overflow; see REDUNDANT. The sense of contribute, in redound to, is first recorded probably before 1425.

redox n. 1928, chemical reaction, acronym formed from red(uction) + ox(idation).

redress v. Probably before 1350 redressen, borrowed from Old French redrecier, redresser (re- again + drecier, dresser to straighten, arrange).

The sense of restore, correct, remedy, is first recorded in 1375, and that of set right by compensation, in 1395. —n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French redrece, redresse, from redresser to REDRESS.

reduce v. About 1375 redusen bring or lead back, bring down; also, to trace to a source (probably about 1378); borrowed from Old French reducer, reducier, and Latin redūcere (re- back + dūcere bring, lead). The meaning of diminish, lower, lessen, is first recorded in Middle English about 1380. —reduction n. Probably before 1425 reduccioun action of bringing back; borrowed from Middle French réduction, and directly from Latin reductiōnem (nominative reductiō) a leading back, restoration, from reduct-, past participle stem of redūcere to lead or bring back, drawback; for suffix see -TION.

redundant adj. 1594, excessive, superfluous; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French redondant, from Latin redundantem (nominative redundāns), present participle of redundāre to overflow, come back, contribute (red- again + undāre rise in waves, from unda a wave); for suffix see -ANT. —redundancy n. 1601–02, state or quality of being redundant; borrowed from Latin redundantia an overflow, excess, from redundantem (nominative redundāns), present participle of redundāre, see REDUNDANT; for suffix see -ANCY.

reed n. Before 1250 red; developed from Old English (about 700) hrēod reed; cognate with Old Frisian hriād reed, Old Saxon hriod, Middle Low German rēt, Middle Dutch ried (modern Dutch riet), and Old High German hriot, riot (modern German Ried), from Proto-Germanic Hreudān*. —reedy adj. (before 1382).

reef¹ n. narrow ridge near the surface of the water. 1584 riffe, riff, probably borrowed from earlier Dutch riffe, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rif ridge, rib; probably related to *reef*²).

reef² n. section of a sail. Before 1336–37 riff (in the compound rifrope) from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rif reef (of a sail), probably a transferred use of rif ridge, rib and thereby probably related to *reef*¹). The spelling reef (1667) was reshaped perhaps under influence of Middle English ref garment). —v. 1667, from the noun.

reefer¹ n. 1818, one who reefs, especially a midshipman; formed from English *reef*², v. + *-er*¹. The short coat of thick cloth, worn originally by sailors and fishermen, is first recorded in 1878.

reefer² n. a marijuana cigarette. 1931, of uncertain origin (perhaps an alteration of Mexican Spanish grifo marijuana, drug addict + *-er*¹, or from *reef*² a section of rolled sail + *-er*¹ in reference to rolling such a cigarette).

reek n. About 1250 reke, smoke, vapor, mist; developed from Old English (before 725) rēc (Anglian) and rie*c (possibly West Saxon); probably borrowed as a loan word from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic reykr), from Proto-Germanic raukiz*. The Old English and Old Icelandic forms are cognate with Old Frisian rēk smoke, Old Saxon and Middle Low German rōk, Middle Dutch rooc (modern Dutch rook), and Old High German rouh (modern German Rauch). —v. About 1300 reken send out vapor or smoke; earlier (of smoke or stench) to rise (about 1250); developed from Old English, (before 725) Anglian rēcan, (about 1000) West Saxon rēcān; cognates with Old Frisian rēka to smoke, Middle Low German rēken to smell, rōken to smoke, Middle Dutch rūken, rieken to smell (modern Dutch ruiken, rieken), Old High German rouhhan, riohhan to smoke, smell (modern German rauchen to smoke, riechen to smell), and Old Icelandic rjúka to smoke (Norwegian ryke, øyke, Swedish ryka, Danish ryge), from Proto-Germanic reukanan*.

reel¹ n. frame turning on an axis. Before 1325 reel; developed from Old English (about 1050) hrēol reel for winding thread (from Proto-Germanic HreHulaz*); probably related to hrægel, hrægl garment, clothing, which are cognate with Old Icelandic hræll spindle, Old High German hregil garment, and Old Frisian hreil. —v. Probably before 1387 reelen, from the noun in Middle English.

reel² v. to sway, swing, or rock. 1375 relen to whirl, rush about, sway; probably from *reel*¹, n., suggested by the spinning action of a reel. —n. 1572, from the verb.

reel³ n. lively dance of the Scottish Highlanders. Before 1585, probably special use of REEL².

reentry n. 1443 reentre, formed from Middle English re- + entre, n., entry, probably on the model of Middle French rentree. —reenter v. 1439 reentren, formed from Middle English re- + entren, probably on the model of Middle French rentrer.

refectory n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin refectōrium, from Latin refect-, past participle stem of reficere to refresh (re- again + the root of facere make); for suffix see -ORY.

refer v. About 1380 referren trace back, assign, or attribute (something) to a person or thing; borrowed from Old French referer, or directly from Latin referre (re- back + ferre carry). —reference n. 1589, formed from English refer + -ence.

—referent n. 1844, formed from English refer + -ent.
 —referral n. 1920's, formed from refer + *-al*².

referee n. 1621, person who examines patent applications; formed from English refer + -ee. A person to whom a dispute is referred is first recorded in 1670, and the judge of play in games and sports, in 1840. —v. 1889, from the noun.

referendum n. 1847, borrowed through French référéndum and German Referendum, from Latin referendum that which must be referred; literally, thing to be brought back, from neuter gerundive of referre to bring or take back, REFER.

refine v. 1582, but possibly implied earlier in refined as a past tense taking on past participial use, formed from English re-intensive + fine, v., make fine. —refined adj. 1574, subtle; either as a past tense of refine or as a past participle formed from English refine + *-ed*². The sense of cultivated, elegant, is first recorded in 1588. —refinement n. 1611, state of being refined; formed from English refine + -ment. —refinery n. 1727, formed from English refine + -ery.

reflect v. 1392 reflecten to turn or bend back; later, to deflect, divert (before 1420); borrowed from Old French reflecer, and directly from Latin reflectere bend back (re- back + flectere to bend). The meaning of turn back or throw back (light, etc.) is first recorded in 1429, probably from earlier use of this sense in reflection. —reflection n. About 1380 reflexion something that reflects a person's temperament; later, reflecting from a surface (1395); borrowed from Old French reflexion, and directly from Late Latin reflexiōnem (nominative reflexiō), from Latin reflex-, past participle stem of reflectere reflect; for suffix see -ION. The spelling with t (recorded before 1398) became the established form by the 1700's, influenced by the verb. —reflector n. (1665) reflex n. 1508, reflected light, reflection of light; from the verb in English, and probably borrowed from Middle French réflexe, from Latin reflexus, from past participle of reflectere to reflect. The meaning of involuntary nerve stimulation is first recorded in 1877. —adj. 1649, directed back upon the mind; from the noun, and borrowed from Latin reflexus, past participle of reflectere. The meaning of involuntary is first recorded in 1833. —v. Before 1425 reflexen reflect or deflect; borrowed from Latin reflexus a bending back, from past participle of reflectere to REFLECT. —reflexive adj. 1588, capable of bending back; borrowed from Medieval Latin reflexivus, from Latin reflexus, past participle; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning in grammar is first recorded in 1837.

reform v. 1340 reformen make again, improve; borrowed from Old French reformer, from Latin reformāre (re- again + formāre to FORM). —n. 1663, improvement, removal of some abuse or wrong; from the verb. —reformation n. Before 1398 reformacioun restoration; later, improvement (about 1440); borrowed from Old French reformation, from Latin reformātiōnem (nominative reformātiō) a reforming, amending, transformation, from reformāre to REFORM; for suffix see -ATION. The Reformation, referring to the European religious movement is first recorded in English reformation, perhaps before 1548. —reformatory n. 1837, formed as if from Latin reform-* mātōrium, from reformāt-, past participle stem of reformāre to REFORM; for suffix see -ORY.

refract v. 1612, back formation from refraction, and borrowed from Latin refractus, past participle of refringere break up (re- back + -fringere, combining form of frangere to BREAK). —refraction n. 1578, action of breaking up; later, process of bending a ray (1603); borrowed from Late Latin refrāctiōnem (nominative refrāctiō) a breaking up, from Latin refract-, past participle stem of refringere break up; for suffix see -TION. —refractory adj. 1606, alteration of refractarie, refractory (1604, and as a noun, 1599); borrowed, perhaps by influence of French réfractaire, from Latin refrāctārius obstinate, from refract-, past participle stem of refringere; for suffix see -ORY, -ARY.

refrain¹ v. hold back. Probably about 1350 refreynen to restrain; borrowed from Old French refreiner, refreiner, refraigner restrain, repress, from Late Latin refrēnāre bridle, hold in with a bit (re- back + frēnāre to restrain, furnish with a bridle, from frēnum a bridle).

refrain² n. verse repeated in a song or poem. About 1385 refrein, borrowed from Old French refrain, alteration of refrait, from past participle of refraindre repeat; also, break off, from Vulgar Latin refrangere* break off, alteration of Latin refringere; see REFRACT.

refrangible adj. 1673, formed as if from Latin refrangere* (alteration of refringere break up) + English -ible.

refresh v. About 1380 refresshen, refresschen make fresh, restore, strengthen; borrowed from Old French refrescher (re- again + fresche fresh, from a Germanic source; compare Old High German frisc FRESH). —refresher n. (before 1449) —refreshment n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French refreschement, from refrescher to refresh; for suffix see -MENT. Use of refreshments, pl., food or drink, is first recorded in 1665.

refrigerate v. 1534, to cool, make cold, freeze; back formation from refrigeration and from refrigerate, adj. (probably about 1440); borrowed from Latin refrigerātus, past participle of refrigerāre (re- again + frigerāre make cool, from the lost stem friger-* of the noun frigus, genitive frigoris, cold); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —refrigeration n. 1471 refrygeracion act of cooling or freezing; borrowed from Latin refrigerātiōnem (nominative refrigerātiō) mitigation of heat, especially in a diseased condition, from refrigerāre to REFRIGERATE; for suffix see -ATION. —refrigerator n. 1611, something that cools; formed from English refrigerate + *-or*². The cabinet for keeping food cool is first recorded in 1824.

refuge n. About 1385, borrowed from Old French refuge, from Latin refugium a taking refuge, place to flee back to (re- back + fugere to flee + -ium place for). —refugee n. 1685 refugie; (1687) refugee; borrowed from French refugié, past participle of refugier to take shelter, protect, either from the noun in Old French or from Latin refugium refuge.

refulgent adj. Before 1500, brilliant; borrowed from Middle French refulgent, or directly from Latin refulgens (nominative refulgens), present participle of refulgere flash back, shine brilliantly (re- back + fulgere to shine); for suffix see -ENT.

—refulgence n. 1634, borrowed from Latin refulgentia reflected luster, splendor, from refulgēns, present participle of refulgere; for suffix see -ENCE.

refund¹ v. pay back. Probably before 1425 refunden to transmit influence, restore; borrowed from Old French refunder restore, and directly as a learned borrowing from Latin refundere pour back, give back, restore (re- back + fundere to pour). —n. return of money paid. 1866, from the verb (but the sense of restoration of money paid is found in refundment, 1826).

refund² v. change debt into new form. 1860, formed from re- again + fund, v.

refurbish v. 1611, formed from English from re- again + furbish, on the model of French refourbir.

refuse¹ v. decline to accept. Probably before 1300 refusen reject, decline; borrowed from Old French refuser, from Vulgar Latin refūsare*, frequentative form with past participle stem refūs- of Latin refundere pour back, give back; see REFUND¹. It is also possible that Old French refuser was an alteration confused with refute in borrowing of Latin refutāre drive back, repress; see REFUTE. —refusal n. 1474, formed from English *refuse*¹ + *-al*².

refuse² n. waste. Before 1338 refous an outcast; later, waste or trash (about 1390); borrowed from Old French refus waste product, rubbish, from refuser to REFUSE¹. —adj. About 1385 refus despised, rejected; possibly borrowed from Old French refuse, past participle of refuser to refuse; also perhaps confused with Old French refus refugee, refus refuge; also possibly the adjective use developed from the noun.

refute v. 1513, to refuse or reject; borrowed from Middle French réfuter, and directly from Latin refutāre drive back, repress, repel, rebut (re- back + -fūtāre to beat). The meaning of prove to be incorrect is first recorded in 1545. —refutation n. Before 1548, borrowed from Middle French réfutation, and directly from Latin refutātiōnem (nominative refutātiō) disproof of a claim or argument, from refutāre to refute; for suffix see -ATION.

regal adj. About 1380, possibly, developed from the now obsolete noun in the sense of sovereignty, royal person, borrowed from Old French regal, regale; also borrowed from Latin regālis royal, kingly, from rēx (genitive rēgis) king; for suffix see -AL¹.

regale v. 1656, to feast or entertain sumptuously; borrowed from French régaler to entertain or feast, from Old French regale, rigale feast, from gale merriment, from galer make merry, of uncertain origin. Old French rigale was influenced by se rigoler amuse oneself, rejoice, also of uncertain origin.

regalia n. pl. Before 1540, royal powers or privileges; later, emblems of royalty (1626); reborrowed from Latin regālia royal things, from neuter plural of regālis REGAL, and replacing earlier Middle English regalie royal powers or status (before 1393), emblems of royalty (before 1420); borrowed from Latin regālia, possibly by influence of Old French regale royal powers, also from Latin regālia.

regard n. 1348, consideration; later, appearance (about 1380); borrowed from Old French regard, from regarder, reguarder take notice of (re- intensive + garder, guarder look, heed). The meaning of esteem, kindly feeling, is first found probably before 1396. —v. About 1348 regarden to consider; later, take notice of (about 1430); borrowed from Old French regarder, reguarder. —regardless adj. 1591, indifferent. —adv. 1872, in spite of all, anyway.

regatta n. 1652, name of a boat race among gondoliers held on the Grand Canal in Venice; borrowing of Italian (Venetian dialect) regatta literally, a contention for mastery, from regattare to compete, haggle, sell at retail, possibly from recatare, recattare*. The general meaning of a boat or yacht race, is first recorded in English in 1775.

regenerate v. 1541, form or grow again; probably a back formation from regeneration, and developed from adjective and past participle regenerate; replacing earlier regeneren to cause to grow again (before 1400; borrowed from Old French regenerer, and directly from Latin regenerāre); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adj. 1433, reborn, formed anew, borrowed from Latin regenerātus, past participle of regenerāre to REGENERATE. —regeneration n. About 1350 regeneraciun spiritual rebirth; later, act of forming or growing again (probably before 1425); borrowed through Old French regeneration and directly from Late Latin regene-rātiōnem (nominative regenerātiō) a being born again, the act or fact of forming anew, from Latin regenerāre make over, generate again (re- again + generāre to produce, GENERATE); for suffix see -ATION. —regenerative adj. 1392, borrowed through Old French regeneratif (feminine regenerative), and directly from Medieval Latin regenerativus, from Latin regenerāre to REGENERATE.

regent n. About 1400, one who rules or governs; earlier, member of a university faculty (before 1397); borrowed through Old French regent, and directly from Medieval Latin regentem (nominative regens), from Latin regēs ruler, governor; also present participle of regere to rule, direct; for suffix see -ENT. The person appointed to rule in place of the actual king, is first recorded in before 1420. —adj. Before 1387, acting as a university regent; borrowed through Old French regent, and directly from Medieval Latin regentem (nominative regens) from Latin regēs, present participle of regere to rule; for suffix see -ENT. —regency n. Probably before 1430 regencie; borrowed from Medieval Latin regentia; from regens regent; for suffix see -CY.

reggae n. 1968, Jamaican English, of uncertain origin (compare rege-rege a quarrel, protest; literally, ragged clothes, variant form of raga-raga, alteration and reduplication of English rag).

regicide¹ n. crime of killing a king. 1602, formed from Latin rēx (genitive rēgis) king + English suffix *-icide*².

regicide² n. person who kills a king. Before 1548; formed from Latin rēx (genitive rēgis) king + English suffix *-icide*¹.

regime or régime n. About 1475, course of diet, exercise, etc., prescribed for health, borrowed from Middle French regime, from Latin regimen; later, system of government or rule regimen n. Before 1400, course of diet, exercise, etc., prescribed for health; borrowed from Latin regimen rule, guidance, government, from regere to rule.

(1792), borrowed from French régime, from Latin regimen rule, guidance, government.

regiment n. Before 1393, government, rule, control; borrowed from Old French regiment government, rule, from Late Latin regimentum rule, direction, from Latin regere to rule; for suffix see -MENT. The meaning of a unit of an army is first recorded in English in 1579, from French. —v. 1617, from the noun. The meaning of organize systematically is first recorded in 1698. —regimental adj. 1702, formed from English regiment, n. + -AL. —regimentation n. 1877, the act or process of regimenting; formed from English regiment, v. + -ation.

region n. Probably before 1300 regioun large tract of land, country, territory, kingdom; later region (before 1338); borrowed through Anglo-French regioun, Old French region, from Latin regiōnem (nominative regiō) direction, boundary, district, country, from regere to direct, rule; for suffix see -ION. —regional adj. Probably before 1425 regionale, borrowed from Latin regiōnālis of or belonging to a region, from regiō region; for suffix see -AL.

register n. About 1378 registre, borrowed from Old French registre, and directly from Medieval Latin registrum, alteration of Late Latin regesta list, matters recorded, from Latin regesta, neuter plural of regestus, past participle of regerere to record (re- back + gerere carry, bear).

The device by which data is automatically recorded, is first attested in 1830, and was later extended to cash register in 1875; from the verb. —v. Before 1393 registren, borrowed from Old French registren, registrer, and directly from Medieval Latin registrare, from registrum register, n. —registration n. Apparently 1566, act of registering; borrowed through Middle French registration, and directly from Medieval Latin registrationem (nominative registratio), from registrare to register; for suffix see -ATION. —registry n. 1483, formed from English register, v. + -ry.

registrar n. 1675, shortened form of registrary registrar (about 1541), and replacing registerer (about 1475), and register, registre (before 1443), both from the noun in Middle English. The form in modern English was borrowed from Medieval Latin registrarius one who keeps a record.

regnant adj. 1600, perhaps from noun in the sense of sovereign (before 1500), borrowed from Latin regnātem (nominative regnāns) reigning, present participle of regnāre to REIGN; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of predominant is first recorded in 1621, and that of widespread in 1625.

regress n. About 1375 regresse a going back, return; borrowed from Latin regressus (genitive regressūs) a return, from regress-, stem of the past participle of regredi to go back (re- back + gradi to step, walk). —v. 1552, to return to a former state; borrowed from Latin regressus, past participle of regredi to go back. —regression n. Probably before 1425, repetition; borrowed from Latin regressiōnem (nominative regressiō) a going back, return, from regress-, past participle stem of regredi go back; for suffix see -SION. The meaning of reversion or relapse, is first recorded in 1646. —regressive adj. 1634, formed from English regress, v. + -ive.

regret v. Probably about 1380 regretten feel sorry for or about, lament; borrowed from Old French regreter long after, bewail, lament, regrater (re- intensive + -greter, -grater, possibly from a Frankish form cognate with Gothic grētan weep, Old English grāetan, and Old Icelandic grāta to weep, groan).

The sense of feel distress (as in to regret causing trouble) is first recorded in 1553. —n. 1533, complaint, lament; borrowed from Middle French regret, from Old French, from regreter to regret. The meaning of sorrow, disappointment, is first recorded in 1590.

regular adj. Before 1387 reguler belonging to a religious order bound by certain rules; borrowed from Old French reguler, and directly as a learned borrowing from Late Latin rēgularis containing rules for guidance, from Latin rēgula RULE; for suffix see -AR.

The meaning of following some rule or principle, symmetrical, is first recorded in 1571, and that of marked by steadiness or uniformity, habitual, constant, is implied in regularly in order, systematically, 1392. —n. About 1400, member of a religious order bound by certain rules, from the adjective. —regularity n. 1603, formed from English regular + -ity, perhaps on the model of French régularité.

regulate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin rēgulātus, past participle of rēgulāre to control by rule, direct, from Latin rēgula rule; for suffix see -ATE. —regulation n. 1672, act of regulating; later, rule, law (before 1715); formed from English regulate + -ation. —regulator n. 1655, formed from English regulate + -or.

regurgitate v. Before 1640, to surge or flow back; possibly a back formation from regurgitation, and borrowed from Medieval Latin regurgitatus, past participle of regurgitare to overflow (Late Latin re- back + gurgitāre engulf, flood, found in Latin ingurgitāre to pour in, gorge; gurgitāre, from gurgēs whirlpool, abyss); for suffix see -ATE.

The meaning of throw up, vomit, is first recorded in English in 1753. —regurgitation n. 1601, act of regurgitating; probably in part borrowed from Middle French rēgurgitation, and directly from Medieval Latin regurgitationem (nominative regurgitatio), from regurgitare to overflow; for suffix see -ATION. It is also possible that regurgitation is a formation in English on gurgitation (1542), or that it was formed as a complement to ingurgitation 1530.

rehabilitate v. 1580–81, restore to a former rank, privilege, or reputation; possibly a back formation from rehabilitation, and borrowed from Medieval Latin rehabilitatus, past participle of rehabilitare (re- again + habilitare make fit, from Latin habilis easily managed, fit); for suffix see -ATE. The meaning of restore to a good condition is first recorded in English in 1845. —rehabilitation n. 1533–34, act of rehabilitating; borrowed from Middle French rēhabilitation, and directly from Medieval rehearse v. Probably before 1300 rehercen utter, express; also, repeat, reiterate (before 1325); borrowed through Anglo-French rehearser, Old French rehercier, reherser to rake over (re- again + hercier to rake, harrow, from herce harrow). The meaning of practice a play, part, etc., is first recorded in 1579–80, from the sense of go over or through some subject matter (before 1376). —rehearsal n. About 1395, act of recounting, recital; formed from rehearse + *-al*².

Latin rehabilitationem (nominative rehabilitatio) restoration, from rehabilitare; for suffix see -ATION.

reify v. 1854, back formation from reification, as found in deify, deification. —reification n. 1846, formed from Latin rē- (stem of rēs thing, matter) + English connective -i- + English suffix -fication, as found in deification.

reign n. Probably about 1225 rengne kingdom; later reyn (before 1300), regne (about 1300); borrowed from Old French reigne, from Latin rēgnū dominion, rule, realm. The Old French spelling with i began to appear before 1387 but did not prevail until the 1600's. The period of a sovereign's rule is first recorded before 1338. —v. Probably about 1280 regner, borrowed from Old French regner, from Latin rēgnāre, from rēgnū reign, n.

reimburse v. 1611, formed from English re- back + obsolete imburse to pay, enrich, put in a purse (about 1530), borrowed from Middle French embourser (Old French em- in + borser to get money, from borse purse, from Medieval Latin bursa PURSE). The form reimburse was probably influenced by French rembourser reimburse. —reimbursement n. 1611, formed from English re- back + (obsolete) imburse + -ment.

rein n. Probably before 1300 rein strap fastened to a bridle; borrowed from Old French reine, rene, resne, probably from Vulgar Latin retina* a bond, check, from Latin retinēre hold back, RETAIN.

The meaning of control, a check or restraint, is first recorded about 1325. —v. Probably about 1300 reinen tether; from the noun. The meaning of put a check or restraint on is first recorded in 1588.

reindeer n. Before 1400 rayne-dere; also reyndere (probably about 1408); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hreindýri reindeer, formed of hreinn the usual name for the reindeer + dýr animal; see DEER). Old Icelandic hreinn is cognate with Old English hrān reindeer, from Proto-Germanic Hrainaz*.

reinforce v. 1600, strengthen (a military force) with additional men; formed from English re- again + inforce, enforce. —reinforcement n. 1607, renewal of force; later, act of reinforcing (1617); formed from English reinforce + -ment.

reiterate v. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin reiterātus, past participle of reiterāre to repeat (Latin re- again + iterāre to repeat); for suffix see -ATE¹, and replacing reiteren (1392), borrowed from Old French reiterer. —reiteration n. Probably before 1425, act of reiterating; borrowed through Middle French réitération, and directly from Medieval Latin

reiterationem (nominative reiteratio) repetition, from Late Latin reiterāre repeat; for suffix see -ATION.

reject v. About 1415 reecten cast out, dismiss; later, refuse to recognize, submit to, etc. (1426); borrowed from Latin reiectus, past participle of reicere to throw back (re- back + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw). —n. 1464, refusal; from the verb. —rejection n. Before 1464, borrowed from Latin rejectionem (nominative rejectionis), from re- back, past participle stem of reicere to throw back; for suffix see -TION.

rejoice v. About 1303 reioshen to own, possess; later rejoysen to gladden (about 1370), to be glad about (about 1380); borrowed from Old French rejoiss-, stem of rejoissant, present participle of rejoir gladden, rejoice (re- intensive + joir be glad, from Latin gaudēre rejoice).

rejoin¹ v. join again. 1526, formed from English re- again + join, perhaps influenced by Middle French rejoin-, stem of rejoindre; see REJOIN².

rejoin² v. answer. 1447 rejoinden (in law) to answer the plaintiff's reply to the defendant's plea; borrowed from Middle French rejoin-, stem of rejoindre (Old French re- back + joindre to JOIN). The general meaning of say in answer is first recorded in 1637. —rejoinder n. 1447 rejoinder (in law) the defendant's answer; borrowed from Middle French rejoindre, infinitive used as a noun; for suffix see -ER³.

rejuvenate v. 1807, formed in English from re- again + Latin juvenis YOUNG + English *-ate*¹. —rejuvenation n. 1834, restoration to youth; formed from English rejuvenate + -ation.

relapse v. Before 1415 relapsen to renounce; later, to fall back into a former state, as of illness, etc. (1568); borrowed from Latin relapsus, past participle of relābī slip back (re- back + lābī to slip). —n. 1459, from the verb in English, and possibly from Medieval Latin relapsus, n., from Latin relāpsus, past participle of relābī.

relate v. 1530, to tell; borrowed from Middle French relater refer, report, from Latin relātus, a form serving as the past participle of referre to tell of, to refer; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of have reference to is first recorded in 1606. —relation n. About 1378 relacion connection, correspondence; borrowed through Anglo-French relacioun, Old French relacion, from Latin relātiōnem (nominative relātiō) a bringing back, restoring, a report, association, from relāt-, serving as the past participle stem of referre refer; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a person related to one by blood or marriage, relative, is first recorded in 1502. —relationship n. (before 1744) relative n. 1387 relative word that refers to an antecedent; later, person or thing that stands in a relation to another (probably before 1430); borrowed through Old French relatif (feminine relative), and directly from Late Latin relātīvus having reference or relation, from Latin relātus, a form serving as the past participle of referre to refer; for suffix see -IVE. The person who belongs to the same family is first recorded in 1657. —adj. Probably before 1425, having reference; borrowed through Middle French relatif (feminine relative), and directly from Late Latin relātīvus, adj. and n. The sense of related or compared to each other is first recorded in 1594. —relativity n. Before 1834, condition of being relative, probably borrowed from French relativité, from relatif (feminine relative) relative, adj.; for suffix see -ITY.

relax v. Before 1398 relaxen loosen, ease; borrowed from Old French relaxer, and directly from Latin relaxāre relax, loosen, open (re- back + laxāre loosen, from laxus loose). The sense of decrease tension is first recorded probably before 1425, and that of make less strict or severe, in 1662. —relaxation n. 1392 relaxacioun a rupture of some bodily part; borrowed through Old French relaxacion, and directly from Latin relaxātiōnem (nominative relaxātiō), from relaxāre RELAX; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of relief from work, recreation, is first recorded in 1548.

relay n. 1369 relay hounds placed along a line of chase; borrowed from Middle French relai reserve pack of hounds or other animals, from Old French relaier to exchange tired animals for fresh, leave behind (re- back + laier to leave). The meaning of an electromagnetic device which acts as a switch is first recorded in 1860. —v. Probably before 1400 relayen change horses; borrowed from Middle French relaier to relay, leave behind. The meaning of retransmit by electrical relays is found in 1878.

release v. About 1300 relesen revoke, relieve, surrender, discharge; borrowed from Old French relaissier relinquish, quit, let go, variant of relacher release, relax, from Latin relaxāre to RELAX. The meaning of set free, let go, is first recorded in Middle English about 1350, from earlier free from pain (about 1300). —n. Before 1325 reles relief, surrender, discharge; borrowed from Old French reles, relais, n., from relaissier to release.

relegate v. Before 1420 relegat, past participle of relegaten to banish, send into exile; borrowed from Latin relēgātus, past participle of relēgāre remove, dismiss, banish (re- back + lēgāre send with a commission); for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of send away or consign to another, is first recorded in 1790.

relent v. 1392 relenten to melt, soften, dissolve; perhaps formed in English from re- intensive + Latin lentus slow, supple. The meaning of become less harsh or cruel, is first recorded in 1526. —relentless adj. (1592).

relevant adj. 1560, bearing upon, pertaining to (the matter at hand); borrowed from Medieval Latin relevantem (nominative relevans), from present participle of Latin relevāre to lessen, lighten, RELIEVE; for suffix see -ANT. Relevant and its related words did not come into general English use until after 1800, but did have earlier currency as Scottish legal terms. —relevance n. 1733, formed from English relevant + -ance, or as a back formation from relevancy. —relevancy n. 1561, formed as if from Latin relevantia* + English suffix -cy.

reliable adj. 1569 (Scottish) raliabil; later reliable trustworthy, safe, sure (1624); formed from English rely + -able. Before 1850 reliable was not in common use and thereafter was for some time considered a barbarism of American invention.

reliance n. 1607, formed from English rely + -ance. —reliant adj. 1856, formed from English rely + -ant.

relic n. Probably before 1200 relik object, especially body part of holy person, kept as a sacred memorial; borrowed from Old French relique, from Late Latin reliquiae, pl., remains of a martyr, from Latin, remains or remnants, from reliquus remaining (re- back + root of linquere to leave). The plural relics remains, ruins (about 1340), is found in its religious reference in Old English reliquias, as a direct borrowing from Latin.

relict n. 1 widow. About 1460 relicte, borrowed from Medieval Latin relicta widow, noun use of feminine past participle of Latin relinquere to leave behind. 2 Usually relics pl. a surviving specimen or artifact. 1905, developed from the sense of remains (1598); borrowed from Middle French relict, from Latin relictus that left behind, from masculine past participle of relinquere to leave behind.

relief¹ n. ease or alleviation. Before 1338 releve payment made on taking possession of an estate; borrowed from Anglo-French relif, from Old French relief, relief assistance, from relever to RELIEVE; or borrowed from Medieval Latin relevium, from past participle of Latin relevāre raise, lighten, RELIEVE. The English spelling relief appeared about 1390. The meaning of alleviation by lessening a burden, pain, etc., is first recorded about 1375, and that of charity before 1200.

relief² n. projection of a figure or design from a surface. 1606 relieve; later relief (1662); borrowed through French relief, or directly from Italian rilievo, from rilevare to raise, from Latin relevāre to raise, lighten, RELIEVE.

relieve v. About 1370 releeven to ease, assist; borrowed from Old French relever, from Latin relevāre to raise, alleviate (re- intensive + levāre to lift up, lighten, from levis not heavy). The spelling relieve appeared before 1393. The meaning of release from duty is first recorded in 1416.

religion n. Probably before 1200 religiun a religious order or community; borrowed from Old French religion religious community, and borrowed directly from Latin religiōnem (nominative religiō) respect for what is sacred; for suffix see -ION. Derivation of the Latin may be from relegere go through, or read again (re- again + legere read) with comparison of religēns revering the gods, pious, to negligēns negligent. There is also in popular etymology (by way of religiō nominative to religiōnem) a connection with religāre to bind fast, in the sense of place an obligation on. —religious adj. Probably before 1200, devout, pious; borrowed from Old French religiosus, religieus, and directly from Latin religiōsus, from religiō religion; for suffix see -OUS. —n. Probably before 1200, person bound by a religious vow; borrowed from Old French religiosus, religieus, and directly from Latin religiōsus religious, adj.

relinquish v. 1454 relinquishen to desert, abandon; borrowed from Middle French relinquiss-, extended stem of relinquir, from Latin relinquere leave behind, forsake, abandon, give up (re- back + linquere to leave); for suffix see -ISH². The sense of give up, desist from, is first recorded in 1497 reliquary n. 1656, borrowed from French reliquaire, from Old French relique RELIC; for suffix see -ARY.

relish n. 1530, taste, flavor, alteration of reles scent, taste, aftertaste (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French reles something remaining, RELEASE. The meaning of something that adds flavor condiment, is recorded in 1798. —v. 1586, give flavor to; from the noun. The meaning of be pleased with, like, is first recorded in 1594.

reluctance n. 1641, the act of struggling, resistance, opposition; probably formed from obsolete English reluct to struggle or rebel against (1526), from Latin reluctārī to struggle against (re- against luctārī to struggle) + English -ance; also possibly a back formation from reluctancy (1621, probably formed from English reluct + -ancy). The meaning of unwillingness or disinclination is first recorded in 1667. —reluctant adj. 1667, struggling, probably formed in English as an adjective to reluctance or reluctancy, on the model of, if not borrowed from, Latin reluctantem (nominative reluctāns), present participle of reluctārī to struggle against; for suffix see -ANT.

rely v. Before 1338 relien to gather, assemble, rally; borrowed from Old French relier fasten, attach, rally, oblige, from Latin religare fasten, bind fast (re- intensive + ligāre to bind). The meaning of depend, trust, is first recorded in 1574.

rem n. 1947, unit for measuring radiation; acronym formed from the initial letters of r(oentgen) e(quivalent) m(an).

REM n. 1957, acronym formed from the initial letters of r(apid) e(ye) m(ovement).

remain v. Before 1425 remanen to be left; borrowed from Old French reman-, stressed stem (as in remanent they remain) of remanoir, remanier, from Latin remanēre remain (re- back + manēre to stay, remain). —n. remains pl. 1456, remaining members of a group; possibly from the verb in English + -s, probably influenced by Middle French reman, from Old French remanier to remain; also probably influenced by remainder. The meaning of what is left, remaining parts, is first recorded in 1500–20, and that of a dead body, in 1700. —remainder n. 1394, (in law) future estate to take effect after another has ended; borrowed from Anglo-French remainder, noun use of Old French remanindre to remain; for suffix see -ER³. The meaning of the part left over is first recorded before 1547.

remand v. 1439 remaunden to send back, return; borrowed from Middle French remaner, from Late Latin remanāre to send back word, repeat a command (Latin re- back + mandāre to consign, order, MANDATE). The meaning of send (a prisoner) back into custody is first recorded in 1643. —n. 1771, from the verb.

remark v. 1633, to mark out or distinguish; re-formed in English from re- + mark, v. after borrowing of French remarquer to mark, note, heed, from Middle French (re- intensive + marquer to mark, probably from a Germanic source; compare Old High German markōn, markōn to delimit, MARK¹). The meaning of notice, observe, is first recorded in 1675, and that of make a comment, before 1704. —n. 1654 remarque noteworthy; later, a remark (1663); re-formed like the verb from English re- + mark, n. after a borrowing of French remarque, from remarquer to remark. —remarkable adj. 1604, re-formed in English from re- + mark + -able after borrowing of French remarquable, from remarquer to remark + -able -able.

remedy n. Probably before 1200 remedie way of avoiding temptation; later, cure, relief (about 1340); borrowed through Anglo-French remedie, Old French remede, and directly from Latin remedium a cure, remedy (re- intensive + medērī to heal); for suffix see -Y³. —v. Probably about 1400 remedien; borrowed from Middle French remedier, from Latin remediāre to cure, remedy, from remedium remedy, n. —remedial adj. 1651, curing or relieving; borrowed from Late Latin remediālis healing, curing, from Latin remedium remedy; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of intended to improve skills is first recorded in 1924.

remember v. Before 1338 remembren, borrowed from Old French remembrer, from Latin rememorārī recall to mind, remember (re- again + memorārī be mindful of, from memor mindful). —remembrance n. Probably before 1300 remembraunce, borrowed from Old French remembraunce, from remembrer REMEMBER; for suffix see -ANCE.

remind v. 1645, to recall to mind, remember; formed from English re- again + mind, v. —reminder n. (1653) reminiscence n. 1589, act of remembering; borrowed through Middle French reminiscence, and directly from Latin reminiscentia remembrance, from reminiscentem (nominative reminiscēns), present participle of reminiscī remember, recall to mind (re- again + -miniscī, from the root of mēns MIND); for suffix see -ENCE. —reminiscent adj. 1705, relating to reminiscence; probably formed in English as an adjective to reminiscence, after Latin reminiscentem, present participle of reminiscī remember; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of suggestive, is first recorded in 1880. —reminisce v. 1829, to remember; back formation from reminiscence.

remiss adj. Probably before 1425 remisse weak, loose; borrowed from Latin remissus, past participle of remittere slacken, let go; see REMIT. The meaning of careless, negligent, is first recorded about 1450.

remission n. Probably before 1200 remissiun forgiveness; later, a decrease of intensity, force, etc. (before 1398); borrowed from Old French remission, from Latin remissionem (nominative remissio) relaxation, from remiss-, past participle stem of remittere slacken, let go; see REMIT; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a temporary abatement of disease is first recorded probably before 1425.

remit v. 1393–94 remitten forgive, give up; later, refer (probably before 1400), and to send, send back (1414); borrowed from Latin remittere send back, slacken, let go (re- back + mittere to send). The meaning of send money to a person is first recorded in 1640. —remittance n. 1705, formed from English remit + -ance.

remnant n. Before 1375 remnant, contraction of remanant (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French remanant, present participle of remanoir, remanindre to REMAIN; for suffix see -ANT.

remonstrate v. 1599, demonstrate, show; probably a back formation from remonstratō; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of say in protest, object, is first recorded in 1695. —remonstrance n. About 1477, an appeal, request; borrowed from Middle French remonstrance to show, from Medieval Latin remonstrantia, from remonstrans, present participle of remonstrare point out, show (from Latin re- intensive + mōnstrāre to show, from mōnstrum evil omen, MONSTER); for suffix see -ANCE. —remonstratō n. About 1489, borrowed through Middle French remonstratō, from Medieval Latin remonstratōnem (nominative remonstratō), from remonstrare point out, show; for suffix see -ATION.

remorse n. About 1385 remors feeling of deep regret; borrowed from Old French remors, from Medieval Latin remorsum, from neuter past participle of Latin remordēre to vex, disturb (re- again + mordēre to bite). —remorseful adj. (1591) remote adj. About 1440, distant; borrowed from Middle French remot (feminine remote), or directly from Latin remōtus, past participle of removēre move back or away, REMOVE.

remove v. Probably before 1325 removen to move, take away, dismiss; borrowed from Old French remouvoir, from Latin removēre move back or away (re- back, away + movēre to MOVE). —removal n. (1597).

remunerate v. 1523, back formation from remuneration, perhaps influenced by Latin remunerātus, past participle of remunerāre to reward (re- back + mūnerāre to give from mūnus, genitive mūneris, gift, office, duty); for suffix see -ATE¹. —remuneration n. About 1400 remuneration reward, recompense, payment; borrowed through Middle French remunération, and directly from Latin remunerātiōnem (nominative remunerātiō), from remunerāre to reward; for suffix see -ATION.

renaissance n. 1872, a new birth or revival; earlier, in reference to the great revival of art and learning in Europe beginning in the 1300's (1840), and in the spelling Renaissance (1845); borrowing of French renaissance, from Old French renaissance rebirth, from renātre be born again, from Vulgar Latin renāscere*, from Latin renāscī be born again; for suffix see -ANCE.

renal adj. 1656, borrowed through French rénal, and directly from Late Latin renālis of or belonging to the kidneys, from Latin rēnēs kidneys; for suffix see -AL¹.

renascent adj. 1727, borrowed from Latin renāscētem (nominative renāscēs), present participle of renāscī be born again (re- again + nāscī be born); for suffix see -ENT. —renascence n. 1727, probably formed from English renascent with substitution of -ence. The term was used in reference to, and as a variant of Renaissance, as early as 1869.

rend v. Probably before 1200 renden, developed from Old English (about 950) rendon (from Proto-Germanic randi-janan*); cognate with Old Frisian renda to tear, Middle Low German rende broken things, and Old High German rinda, rinta, bark (modern German Rinde bark, crust). Related to RIND.

render v. Before 1376 rendren say over, recite; later, hand over, deliver (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French rendre give back, present, yield, from Vulgar Latin rendere*, alteration of Latin reddere give back, return, restore (red- back + -dere, combining form of dare to give).

rendezvous n. 1591 rendevous place for assembling, appointed meeting place; borrowed from Middle French rendez-vous, noun use of rendez vous present yourselves (rendez, imperative of rendre present + vous you). —v. About 1645, from the noun.

rendition n. 1601, surrender of a place, possession, etc.; borrowed from obsolete French rendition, from Old French rendre to deliver or yield; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a rendering in another language, translation, is first recorded in 1659.

renegade n. 1583, probably borrowed from Spanish renegado, and replacing Middle English renegat (about 1390), renegate (about 1400); both the Middle English and Spanish forms borrowed from Medieval Latin renegatus, past participle of renegare to deny; see RENEGE; for suffix see -ADE.

renege v. 1548, deny, renounce, abandon; borrowed from Medieval Latin renegare (Latin re- intensive form + negāre deny, NEGATE). The sense of change one's mind, back out, is found in 1784.

renew v. Before 1382 renewen make like new, revive, restore; formed from Middle English re- again + newen resume, revive, renew. —renewal n. 1681–86, formed from renew + -AL².

rennet n. About 1450 rennet; developed probably from Old English rynet*. Middle English rennet is related to rennen* to coagulate or curdle, found in Old English gerennan cause to run together, because rennet makes milk run or curdle; cognate with Old Frisian renna coagulate, Old Saxon rennian, Old High German rennen, Old Icelandic renna, and Gothic urrannjan coagulate, from Proto-Germanic rannijanan*, causative to renwanan* RUN, v.

rennin n. 1897, formed from English rennet + -in².

renounce v. About 1380 renouncen give up, resign; borrowed from Old French renoncer, from Latin renūntiāre proclaim, protest against, renounce (re- against + nūntiāre to report, announce, from nūntius messenger).

renovate v. 1535, to renew, resume, either a back formation from renovation, and developed from renovare, adj. renewed (probably 1440); borrowed from Latin renovātus, past participle of renovāre renew, restore (re- again + novāre make new, from novus NEW); for suffix see -ATE¹. —renovation n. Before 1400 renovacyoun spiritual rebirth, regeneration; borrowed through Middle French renovation, or directly from Latin renovātiōnem (nominative renovātiō), from renovāre RENOVA; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of rebuilding, reconstruction, appeared in Middle English probably before 1425.

renown n. Probably before 1300 renoun fame; borrowed through Anglo-French renoun, Old French renon, renom, from renommer make famous (re- repeatedly + nommer to name, from Latin nōmināre to name). —renowned adj. Probably before 1400 renowned celebrated, famous; formed from renoun renown + *-ed*².

rent¹ n. payment for the use of property. 1137 rente source of income, revenue; borrowed from Old French rente, from Vulgar Latin rendita*, from feminine past participle of rendere to RENDER. The payment made by a tenant to a landlord, rent, is first recorded in Middle English about 1330. —v. Before 1376 renten provide with revenues; from the noun. —rental n. Before 1376, record of the rents due; borrowed from Anglo-French rental register of income (1279) and Medieval Latin rentale rent book, both from Old French and Middle English rente, n.; for suffix see *-AL*². The meaning of something rented (as in few rentals are available) is first found in 1952.

rent² n. torn place. 1535, noun use of renten to tear, rend (before 1325), variant of renden to REND.

renunciation n. 1399, borrowed from Latin renūntiātiōnem (nominative renūntiātiō), from renūntiāre RENOUNCE; for suffix see -ATION.

reovirus n. 1959, acronym formed from r(espiratory) e(nteric) o(rphan) *v*irus; called “orphan virus” because it is not known to cause any of the diseases it is associated with. Compare ECHO-VIRUS.

rep n. 1925, shortened form of repertory or repertoire (company or theater).

repair¹ v. put in good condition. Probably before 1350 reparen to restore; later reparen (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French reparer, from Latin reparāre repair, restore, renew (re- again + parāre make ready, prepare). —n. Probably before 1400, from the verb. —repairable adj. 1489, formed from Middle English reparen repair + -able.

repair² v. go to a place. Probably before 1300 reparen; borrowed from Old French reparer, earlier reparier to frequent, return, from Late Latin repatriāre return to one's own country.

reparable adj. 1570, borrowed from Middle French reparable, from Latin reparābilis able to be restored, from reparāre restore, REPAIR¹; for suffix see -ABLE.

reparation n. About 1380 reparacion compensation, amends, recompense; borrowed from Old French reparacion, and directly from Late Latin reparātiōnem (nominative reparātiō) act of repairing, restoration, from Latin reparāre restore, REPAIR¹; for suffix see -ATION.

repatee n. About 1645, borrowed from French repartie, noun use of the feminine past participle of Old French repartir to reply promptly, start out again (re- back + partir to PART).

repast n. Before 1382, rest or repose; also, a meal (probably before 1387); borrowed from Old French repast a meal, from Late Latin repāstus, n., meal, from past participle stem of repāscere feed in turn (Latin re- repeatedly + pāscere to graze).

repatriate v. 1611, borrowed from Late Latin repatriātus, past participle of repatriāre return to one's own country (Latin re- back + patria native land); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —repatriation n. 1592, borrowed from Medieval Latin repatriationem (nominative repatriatio), from Late Latin repatriāre REPATRIATE; for suffix see -ATION.

repeal v. About 1385 repealen to do away with, revoke, recall; but generally found in the spelling repelen; borrowed from Anglo-French repeler, alteration of Old French rapeler call back, revoke, repeal (re- back + apeler to call). —n. 1483, a recall, summoning; borrowed from Anglo-French repel, from the verb in Anglo-French and Old French.

repeat v. Before 1382 repeten return, turn again; later, say again, reiterate (1427); borrowed from Old French repeter say or do again, get back, demand the return of, from Latin repetere do or say again, attack again (re- again + petere go toward, seek, demand, attack). —n. About 1450, repeated words, refrain; from the verb.

repel v. Probably about 1421 repellen drive away, repulse; borrowed through Old French repeller, or directly from Latin repellere to drive back (re- back + pellere to drive, strike). —repellent adj. 1643, (of medicine) serving to reduce tumors; borrowed from Latin repellentem (nominative repellēns), present participle of repellere repel. The meaning of distasteful, disagreeable, is first recorded in English in 1797. —n. 1661, medicine that reduces tumors; from the adjective. The meaning of a substance that repels insects, appeared 1908.

repent v. Probably before 1300, to regret, be sorry; also, feel regret for sin (about 1300); borrowed from Old French repentir (re- intensive + Vulgar Latin paenitire* to regret, from Latin paenitēre make sorry). —repentance n. About 1300 repentance act of repenting, contrition; probably formed in English as a noun to repentant on the model of (and in some instances probably borrowed directly from) Old French repentance, from repentant; see REPENT; for suffix see -ANCE. —repentant adj. About 1230, borrowed from Old French repentant, past participle of repentir REPENT; for suffix see -ANT.

repercussion n. Probably before 1425, act of driving back; borrowed from Middle French répercussion, from Latin repercussiónem (nominative repercussió), from repercuss-, past participle stem of repercutere to strike or beat back (re- back + percutere to strike or thrust through); for suffix see -ION. The meaning of reverberation, echo, is first recorded in 1595, and that of an influence or reaction from an event, in the early 1600's.

repertoire n. 1847, borrowing of French répertoire, from Late Latin repertōrium inventory.

repertory n. 1552, index or list, catalogue; borrowed from Late Latin repertōrium inventory, list, from Latin repertus, past participle of reperire to find, get, invent (re- intensive form + parere produce, bring forth); for suffix see -ORY. The meaning of a list of performances an actor, musician, etc., is prepared to make, is first recorded in 1845.

repetition n. Probably before 1425 repeticioun, borrowed from Middle French répétition, and directly from Latin repetitiōnem (nominative repetitiō), from repetere do or say again, REPEAT; for suffix see -TION. —repetitious adj. 1675; borrowed from repine v. 1449, to grieve; probably formed from English re- intensive + *pine*², v., yearn. The sense of long for something is first recorded in 1742.

Latin repetitus, past participle of repetere repeat. —repetitive adj. 1839, formed from English repetition + -ive.

replenish v. About 1380 replenishen to fill or supply; borrowed from Old French repleniss-, extended stem of replenir (re- intensive + -plenir, from Latin plēnus full); for suffix see *-ISH*². The meaning of provide a new supply for is first recorded in 1612. —replenishment n. (1526).

replete adj. 1384 repleet; replete (before 1398); borrowed from Old French replet, replete filled up, from Latin replētus, past participle of replēre to fill (re- intensive + plēre to fill). —repletion n. About 1390 replecioun condition of being filled up; borrowed from Old French repletion, from Late Latin replētiōnem (nominative replētiō) a filling up, from Latin replēre to fill; for suffix see -TION.

replica n. 1824, borrowed from Italian replica copy, repetition, reply, from replicare to repeat or reply, from Latin replicāre to repeat; see REPLY. —replicate v. Probably before 1425 replecate to repeat; borrowed from Latin replicātus, past participle of replicāre to repeat, REPLY; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. Later use developed as a back formation from replication. The meaning of copy or reproduce is first recorded in 1882. —replication n. About 1380 replicacioun legal reply, rejoinder, answer; borrowed probably through Anglo-French replicacioun, Old French replication, from Latin replicātiōnem (nominative replicātiō) a reply, repetition, a folding back, from replicāre to repeat, reply, fold back; see REPLY; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of a copy or reproduction is first recorded in 1692. The specific sense in biology of duplicating genetic material is first recorded in 1948.

reply v. Before 1382 replien to repeat; also, to answer (about 1386); borrowed from Old French replier to reply, turn back, fold again, from Latin replicāre to reply, repeat, fold back (re- back + plicāre to fold). —n. 1560, answer; from the verb.

report n. About 1385, rumor, gossip, common talk; borrowed from Old French report, n., from reporter to tell, relate from Latin reportāre carry back (re- back + portāre to carry).

The sense of an account of some matter is first recorded about 1410. The extended sense of a resounding noise, is not recorded before 1590. —v. About 1385 reporten to relate, repeat, give an account of; borrowed from Old French reporter to report. —reporter n. 1450, developed by alteration (in association with *-er*¹) of reportour (about 1387–95); borrowed from Old French reportour, from reporter to report.

repose¹ v. lie at rest. About 1450 reposen; borrowed from Middle French reposer, from Late Latin repausāre cause to rest (Latin re- intensive + Late Latin pausāre to stop). —n. 1509; either borrowed from Middle French repos, from reposer to repose; or developed from the verb in English.

repose² v. put, place. Probably 1440 reposen replace, put back; borrowed from Latin repos-, perfect stem of repōnere put back, put away (re- back, away + pōnere to put, place), on the pattern of other English verbs such as dispose and depose. The meaning of place (confidence, trust, etc.) is first recorded in 1560.

repository n. 1485, container where things are stored; borrowed from Middle French repositoire, and directly from Late Latin repositōrium store, from Latin, a stand on which food is placed, from reposit-, past participle stem of repōnere put away, store; for suffix see -ORY.

reprehend v. Before 1340 reprehenden reprove; borrowed from Latin reprehendere, originally, pull back (re- back + prehendere to grasp, seize). —reprehensible adj. About 1384, borrowed perhaps through Old French reprehensible, or directly from Late Latin reprehensibilis, from Latin reprehēnsus, past participle of reprehendere to reprove; for suffix see -IBLE. —reprehension n. About 1385 reprehencioun, borrowed perhaps through Old French reprehension, or directly from Latin reprehēnsiōnem (nominative reprehēnsiō), from reprehendere to reprove; for suffix see -SION.

represent v. 1375 representen to present, bring before the mind; borrowed from Old French repraesenter, from Latin repraesentāre (re- intensive form + praesentāre place before; *PRESENT*²). The meaning of portray, depict, is first recorded in 1392 and that of act in place of, stand for, in 1389. —representation n. Probably before 1400 representacioun; borrowed from Old French representation, and directly from Latin repraesentātiōnem (nominative repraesentātiō) a showing, exhibiting, from repraesentāre represent; for suffix see -ATION. —representative adj. About 1385 representative serving to portray or represent; borrowed from Old French representatif (feminine representative), from Medieval Latin repraesentativus, from Latin repraesentāre represent; for suffix see -ATIVE. The meaning of having its citizens represented by chosen persons is first recorded in 1628. —n. 1647, example, type, from the adjective. The meaning of a person appointed or elected to represent others is first recorded in 1635, and that of a legislative body, as found in Representatives, in 1694.

repress v. About 1385 repressen to check, restrain, weaken, keep down; borrowed from Latin repressus, past participle of reprimere hold back, check (re- back + primere to push, *PRESS*¹).

—repression n. About 1385 repression ability to repress; borrowed from Medieval Latin repressionem (nominative repressio) act of repressing, from Latin repress-, past participle stem of reprimere; for suffix see -ION. —repressive adj. About 1425, borrowed from Middle French répressif (feminine répressive), from Latin repress-, past participle stem of Latin reprimere repress; for suffix see -IVE.

reprieve v. 1571 reprive take back to prison, remand; alteration (perhaps influenced by Middle English repreven refute, disprove, variant of reproven REPROVE) of Middle English repyren to remand, detain (1494); probably borrowed from Middle French repris, past participle of repandre take back; see REPRISE.

The spelling reprieve first appeared in 1647, formed on analogy with achieve (acheve), and probably chief (chef). —n. 1598, from the verb.

reprimand n. 1636, borrowed from French réprimande, from Middle French reprimende reproof, from Latin reprimenda that is to be repressed, feminine singular of reprimendus, gerundive form of reprimere reprove; see REPRESS. —v. 1681, either borrowed from French réprimander, from réprimande, n.; or from the noun in English.

reprisal n. 1419 reprisail seizing in retaliation for injury or loss; borrowed from Middle French reprisaille, from Italian ripresaglia (now rappresaglia), from ripreso, past participle of riprendere take back, from Latin reprehendere, earlier reprehendere REPREHEND.

reprise n. Before 1393, loss, expense; later, act of taking back (before 1475); borrowed from Old French reprise act of taking back, from feminine of repris, past participle of reprenre take back, from Latin reprehendere, earlier reprehendere recover.

The meaning of a renewal or resumption of an action is first recorded in 1685, and the sense in music of repetition or return to the first theme, subject or passage, in 1879. —v. About 1410 reprisesen, borrowed from Middle and Old French repris, past participle of reprenre.

reproach n. About 1350 reproce a rebuke, insult, object of scorn; later reproche a rebuking (about 1390); borrowed from Old French reproche, from reprocher to blame, bring up against, bring near to, from Vulgar Latin repropiare* (Latin re- opposite + prope near). —v. About 1350 reprocen to rebuke; later reprochen (about 1400); borrowed from Old French reprocher.

reprobate v. Probably before 1425 reprobaten, a back formation from reprobation, and borrowed from Late Latin reprobātus, past participle of reprobāre disapprove, reject, condemn (Latin re- opposite + probāre prove to be worthy); for suffix see -ATE¹. The verb also probably developed from the adjective as a past participle in English. —adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Late Latin reprobātus, past participle of reprobāre. The meaning of unprincipled is first recorded in 1660. —n. 1545, person beyond salvation; from the adjective, or possibly a noun use of Late Latin reprobātus, past participle of reprobāre. The meaning of a scoundrel is first recorded in 1592. —reprobation n. Before 1400 reprobacyoun rejection; borrowed from Late Latin reprobatiōnem (nominative reprobātiō) blame, censure, rejection, from Latin reprobāre reject, condemn; for suffix see -ATION.

reproduce v. 1611, produce again, create anew; formed from English re- again + produce, v. The meaning of make a copy of is first recorded in 1850, and that of produce (offspring), multiply by generation, in 1894. —reproduction n. 1659, formed in English from reproduce + -tion, on the pattern of produce, production.

reproof n. Before 1338, reprof, reprove, repreve; borrowed from Old French reprove, reprouve, from reprover to blame, REPROVE.

reprove v. About 1303 reproven to accuse; later, to rebuke, scold (about 1350); borrowed from Old French reprover, from Late Latin reprobāre disapprove, reject, condemn; see REPROBATE.

reptile n. Before 1393 reptil creeping or crawling animal; borrowed through Old French reptile, and directly from Late Latin reptile, from neuter of reptilis, adj., creeping, crawling, from Latin rept-, past participle stem of reperere to crawl, creep. —adj. 1607, borrowed from Late Latin reptilis, and from the noun. —reptilian adj. 1846, formed from New Latin Reptilia the class name of reptiles (from Late Latin reptilia, plural of reptile reptile) + English -an.

republic n. 1604, nation governed by elected representatives, commonwealth; borrowed from French république, from Latin rēs publica public interest, the state (rēs affair, matter, thing, and publica, feminine of publicus public); for suffix see -IC. —republican adj. 1712, like that of a republic; formed from English republic + -an, probably on the model of French républicain. —n. 1697, one who favors a republic; from the adjective. The meaning in U.S. politics of a member of a Republican party is first recorded in 1782.

repudiate v. 1545, to cast off by divorce, from repudiate, adj. divorced, rejected, condemned (1464); borrowed from Latin repudiātus, past participle of repudiāre to divorce or reject, from repudium divorce, rejection (re- back or away + -pudium, probably related to ped-, pēs FOOT, and having originally the sense of push away with the foot, but associated in popular etymology with pudēre cause shame to); for suffix see -ATE¹.

—repudiation n. 1545, divorce; borrowed from Middle French repudiatiōn, from Latin repudiatiōnem (nominative repudiātiō), from repudiāre repudiate; for suffix see -ATION.

repugnant adj. About 1385 repugnaunt contradictory, opposing; borrowed through Old French repugnant, or directly from Latin repugnantem (nominative repugnāns), present participle of repugnāre to resist (re- back + pugnāre to fight); for suffix see -ANT. —repugnance n. 1385 repugnaunce contradiction, opposition; borrowed through Old French repugnance, or directly from Latin repugnantia resistance, opposition, contradiction, from repugnantem; for suffix see -ANCE. The meaning of a strong dislike or aversion, is first recorded in 1643.

repulse v. Probably before 1425 repulsen, borrowed from Latin repulsus, past participle of repellere REPEL. —n. 1533, refusal, rejection, denial; from the verb in English. —repulsion n. Before 1420, repudiation, divorce, borrowed from Late Latin repulsiōnem (nominative repulsiō) act of repelling, from Latin repuls-, past participle stem of repellere repel; for suffix see -ION. The meaning of a strong dislike or aversion is first found in 1751. —repulsive adj. Probably before 1425, able to repel, repelling; borrowed through Middle French répulsif (feminine répulsive), and directly from Medieval Latin repulsivus, from Latin repuls-, past participle stem of repellere repel; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of causing disgust, strong dislike, is first recorded in 1816.

repute v. About 1399 reputen to believe; to attribute borrowed from Middle French reputer, from Latin reputāre reflect upon, reckon (re- repeatedly + putāre to reckon, consider). The meaning of consider, is first recorded in 1442. —n. 1551, opinion, estimate; from the verb. —reputable adj. 1611, formed from English repute, v. + -able. —reputation n. Probably about 1350 reputacioun credit, good reputation, borrowed from Latin reputātiōnem (nominative reputātiō) consideration, from reputāre; for suffix see -ATION. —reputed adj. 1549, held in repute; later, supposed to be such (1576); replacing earlier repute, past participle (about 1375); from repute, v.

request n. Before 1338 requeste act of asking; borrowed from Old French requeste a request, from Vulgar Latin requaesita*, replacing Latin requisita a thing asked for, feminine of requisitus requested, demanded, REQUISITE. —v. 1533, from the noun in English, probably influenced by Middle French requester, from Old French requeste, n.

requiem n. About 1303, borrowing of Latin requiem, accusative of requies rest, repose (re- intensive + quies quiet). Requiem is the first word of the beginning of the Mass for the dead in the Latin liturgy: “Requiem aeternam dona eis, Domine. . . (Eternal rest give to them, O Lord. . .).”

require v. About 1381 requeren; later requiren (before 1400); borrowed from Old French requerre, from Vulgar Latin requaerere*, alteration (influenced by Latin quaerere ask) of Latin requirere seek to know, ask (re- repeatedly + quaerere ask, seek). —requirement n. 1530, request; formed from English require + -ment. A thing required is first recorded in 1662.

requisite adj. 1442, borrowed from Latin requisitus, from past participle of requirere REQUIRE. —requisition n. Probably before 1402, borrowed through Middle French réquisition, and directly from Medieval Latin requisitionem (nominative requisitio), from Latin, a searching, investigation, from requisit-, past participle stem of requirere REQUIRE. —v. 1837, from the noun.

requite v. Probably before 1400 requiten; formed from Middle English re- back + quite to clear, pay up; QUIT, v. —requital n. 1579, formed from English requite + *-al*².

reredos n. 1372–73, borrowing of Anglo-French reredos, variant of areredos, from Old French arere, arrere, ariere behind, backward + dos back, from Latin dossum, dorsum; see DORSAL.

rescind v. 1637–50, borrowed through French rescinder, and directly from Latin rescindere (re- back + scindere to cut, split). —rescission n. 1611, borrowed from Late Latin rescissionem (nominative rescissio), from Latin resciss-, past participle stem of rescindere rescind.

rescue v. Probably about 1300 rescouen, rescuwen to save from some evil, or harm; borrowed from Old French rescou-, stem of rescourre (re- intensive + escourre to cast off, discharge, from Latin excutere, from ex- out + -cutere, combining form of quater to shake). —n. Probably about 1380 rescoghe act of rescuing; also rescoue (about 1390); later rescu (about 1425); from the verb.

research n. 1577, careful search; borrowed from Middle French recherche, from Old French rechercher seek out, search closely (re- intensive + cercher to seek for). The meaning of a careful hunting for facts is first recorded in English before 1639. —v. 1593, borrowed from Middle French rechercher, from Old French.

resemble v. 1340 resemblen be like or similar to; borrowed from Old French resembler (re- intensive + sembler to appear, from Latin simulāre to copy). —resemblance n. Before 1393, likeness, similarity; borrowed from Anglo-French resemblance, from Old French resembler to resemble; for suffix see -ANCE.

resent v. 1605, to feel pain or distress; borrowed from French ressentir feel pain, regret, from Old French resentir (re- intensive + sentir to feel, from Latin sentire). The meaning of feel angry at (some wrong, insult, etc.) is first recorded in 1628–29. —resentful adj. (1654) —resentment n. 1619, borrowed from French ressentiment, from ressentir to resent.

reserve v. 1357 reserven to retain; later, keep back, store up, set apart (before 1382); borrowed from Old French reserver, and directly from Latin reservāre keep back, save back (re- back + servāre to keep). —n. 1612, stock, store; borrowed from French réserve a reserve, from Old French reserver to reserve. The meaning of self-restraint, is first recorded in 1655. —adj. 1719, from the noun. —reservation n. 1377 reservacioun; borrowed from Old French reservation, and directly from Late Latin reservātiōnem (nominative reservātiō), from Latin reservāre to reserve; for suffix see -ATION.

reservoir n. 1690, borrowing of French réservoir storehouse, from Old French reserver to RESERVE + suffix -oir (see -ORY).

reside v. Before 1475 residen to remain or settle in some place; borrowed through Middle French resider, and directly from Latin residēre remain behind (re- back + sedēre to SIT). It is also probable that in some instances reside is a back formation from resident. —residence n. Probably about 1378, act or fact of residing; also, a dwelling place; borrowed from Old French residence, and directly from Medieval Latin residentia, from Latin residentem (nominative residēns) residing or dwelling, present participle of residēre reside; for suffix see -ENCE. —residency n. 1579, act or fact of residing; formed from English resident + -cy. —resident adj. About 1384; borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French resident, from Latin residentem; see RESIDENCE; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1464, from the adjective, probably influenced by Middle French résident, n. —residential adj. formed from English resident + -ial.

residue n. Probably before 1350, borrowed from Old French residu, from Latin residuum a remainder, neuter of residuus remaining, left over, from residēre remain behind. —residual adj. 1570, left after subtraction; formed from Latin residuum remainder + English *-al*¹. —n. 1570, a residual quantity, probably from the adjective. The fee or royalty paid a taped or filmed performance, is first recorded about 1960.

resign v. About 1370 resignen give up, surrender, abandon, submit; borrowed from Old French resigner, from Latin resignāre to check off, cancel, give up (re- opposite + signāre to make an entry in an account book, SIGN). In this use, resignāre denoted making an entry (by a mark, signum) opposite (on the credit side), balancing the former mark and thus canceling the claim for which it stood. The meaning of give up or relinquish a position is first recorded before 1387. —resignation n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French resignation, and directly from Medieval Latin resignationem (nominative resignatio), from Latin resignare; for suffix see -ATION.

resilient adj. 1644, formed in English as an adjective to resilience on the model of Latin resilientem (nominative resiliens), present participle of resilire to rebound, recoil (re- back + salire to jump, leap); for suffix see -ENT. —resilience n. 1626, formed in English from Latin resilire to rebound + English -ence.

resin n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French resine, and directly from Latin rēsina resin. —resinous adj. 1646, borrowed, perhaps by influence of French résineux, from Latin rēsinosus, from rēsina resin; for suffix see -OUS.

resist v. About 1380 resisten stop or hinder, stand against; borrowed from Old French resister, and directly from Latin resistere stand back or still, withstand (re- against + sistere take a stand, stand firm). —resistance n. Probably about 1350, act of resisting; borrowed from Old French resistance, from Late Latin resistentia, from Latin resistentem (nominative resistens), present participle of resistere to RESIST; for suffix see -ANCE. —resistant adj. 1410, resisting, opposed; borrowed from Middle French résistant, present participle of résister, from Old French resister to resist; for suffix see -ANT. —resistor n. 1905, formed from English resist + -or².

resolute adj. Probably before 1425, dissolved, softened; also, dissolute; later, the sense of breaking into parts, final, absolute (1501) developed into the meaning of resolved, firmly determined, first recorded in 1533; borrowed from Latin resolūtus unrestrained, from past participle of resolvere to loosen, undo, settle, RESOLVE. —resolution n. Before 1397 resolucion a breaking up into parts, a resolving; borrowed through Old French resolution, or directly from Latin resolūtiōnem (nominative resolūtiō), from resolūt-, past participle stem of resolvere loosen, RESOLVE. The meaning of a solving or answering is first recorded in 1548, and that of power of holding firmly to a purpose, in 1588.

resolve v. About 1380 resolven dissolve, break into parts; borrowed through Old French resolver, or directly from Latin resolvere to loosen, undo, settle (re- intensive + solvere loosen; see SOLVE). —n. 1591, determination, firmness of purpose, from the verb.

resonance n. Before 1460, reinforcement or prolongation of sound; borrowed from Middle French resonance, from Latin resonantia echo, from resonare RESOUND; for suffix see -ANCE. —resonant adj. 1592, borrowed perhaps through Middle French résonnant, from Latin resonantem (nominative resonans), present participle of resonare RESOUND; for suffix see -ANT. —resonate v. 1873, borrowed from Latin resonātum, past participle of resonare RESOUND; for suffix see -ATE¹.

resort v. About 1400 resorten to return, revert; also, turn for help (about 1410); borrowed from Middle French resortir go out again (Old French re- again + sortir go out). —n. About 1385 resort source of help, recourse; borrowed from Old French resort resource or help, from resortir to RESORT. The meaning of a place people go to, especially for recreation or relief, appeared in 1754.

resound v. About 1380 resounen to ring or reecho with some sound; borrowed from Old French resoner, from Latin resonare sound again, resound, echo (re- back, again + sonare to SOUND). The current spelling (influenced by sound) began to appear probably about 1450.

resource n. 1611, stock or reserve available; borrowed from French resource, ressource, from the feminine form of the past participle resors, resours* of Old French resourdre to rally, rise again, from Latin resurgere rise again; see RESURGENT. The plural form resources a country's actual potential wealth or means, is first recorded in 1779. —v. 1975, from the noun. —resourceful adj. (1851).

respect n. Probably about 1380 respekte relation, reference, regard; borrowed from Old French respect, and directly from Latin respectus (genitive respectūs) regard; literally, act of looking back at one, from respe-, past participle stem of respicere look back at, regard, consider (re- back + specere look at). —v. 1548, to regard, consider, take into account; probably from the noun reinforced by Middle French respector look back, delay, respect, and Latin respective, frequentative form of respicere look back at, regard. —respectability n. 1785, formed as a noun to respectable, after such pairs as capable, capability. —respectable adj. Before 1586, worthy of notice or consideration; probably formed from English respect, possibly by influence of Middle French respectable. —respectful adj. (1598) respective adj. About 1454, relating to, relative; borrowed perhaps through Middle French respectif (feminine respective) from Medieval Latin respectivus having regard for, from Latin respectus, past participle of respicere look back, have regard for, see RESPECT; for suffix see -IVE.

The meaning of with regard to each particular individual, is first recorded in English in 1646, probably from the earlier adverb use. —respectively adv. About 1454, relatively; formed from English respective + -ly¹. The sense of individually, separately, singly, is first recorded in 1626.

respire v. 1385 respiren come up for breath, breathe again; borrowed from Old French respirer, and directly from Latin respirare breathe again, breathe in and out (re- again + spirare to breathe).

The general meaning of breathe, draw breath, is first recorded probably before 1425. —respiration n. 1392 respiracioun; borrowed from Latin respiratiōnem (nominative respiratiō), from respirare breathe, RESPIRE; for suffix see -ATION. —respirator n. 1836, formed in English as if from Latin respirātor*, from respirare to breathe, respire; for suffix see -OR². —respiratory adj. 1790, borrowed from French respiratoire, from Late Latin respirātorius of or for breathing, from Latin respirāt-, past participle stem of respirare breathe, RESPIRE; for suffix see -ORY.

respite n. About 1250 respit; borrowed from Old French respit delay, respect, from Latin respectus consideration, recourse, regard. —v. Before 1330, respit; borrowed from Old French respit postpone, respect, from respit, n.

resplendent adj. Probably 1440, brilliant; borrowed, perhaps through influence of Middle French resplendant, resplendent, from Latin resplendentem (nominative resplendēns) brilliant, radiant, present participle of resplendēre to glitter, shine (re- intensive + splendēre to shine); for suffix see -ENT. —resplendence n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin resplendentia brilliance, radiance, from Latin resplendentem; see RESPLENDENT; for suffix see -ENCE.

respond v. About 1300 responde answer, reply; borrowed from Old French responde respond or correspond, from Vulgar Latin respondere*, altered from Latin respondēre respond, answer to, promise in return (re- back + spondēre to promise). —respondent adj. 1533, correspondent (to something else); probably borrowed directly from Latin respondentem (nominative respondēns), present participle of respondēre respond; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of answering or responding is first recorded in 1726, from respondent, n. —n. 1528, probably borrowed directly from Latin respondentem (nominative respondēns) a respondent, from present participle of respondēre.

response n. About 1300 response an answer or reply; later respons (before 1338); borrowed from Old French respons (feminine response), and directly from Latin respōsum answer, from neuter past participle of respondēre to RESPOND. —responsive adj. 1419, responding, answering; borrowed through Middle French responsif (feminine responsive), and directly from Late Latin respōnsivus, from Latin respōsus, past participle of respondēre to RESPOND; for suffix see -IVE.

responsible adj. 1599, corresponding or answering to something; borrowed from obsolete French responsible, from Latin respōsus, past participle of respondēre to RESPOND; for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of answerable or accountable is first recorded in English in 1643. —responsibility n. (1787) rest¹ n. sleep, stillness. Before 1121 reste, developed from Old English ræste, reste rest, bed, forms found in both Anglian and West Saxon sources: reste (before 830), and ræste, selereste (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English reste (from Proto-Germanic rastjō*) is cognate with Old Frisian rest bed, Old Saxon resta, Old High German resta; Old English ræsta (from Proto-Germanic rastō*) is cognate with Old Saxon rasta bed, resting place, Old High German rasta league (measure of distance) (modern German Rast rest), Old Icelandic rust (Norwegian rast, Swedish rast) league, distance after which one rests, Gothic rasta mile, a stage of a journey. —v. About 1175 resten, developed from Old English ræstan, restan to rest, ræstan (about 950), and restan (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English restan is cognate with Old Frisian resta to rest, Old Saxon restian; Old English ræstan is cognate with Old High German rastōn (modern German rasten) to rest. The verb in Old English is related to, if not derived from ræste, reste rest, n. —restful adj. 1340 restevol, restvol characterized by rest, contemplative; later restful quiet, peaceful (about 1395); formed from Middle English reste rest + -ful. —restless adj. Probably about 1380 restlez unceasing, endless; later resteles unable to rest, uneasy (about 1385); formed from Middle English reste rest + -less.

rest² n. remainder. About 1440; borrowed from Middle restaurant n. 1827, a public dining room (such as those first found in Paris); borrowing of French restaurant a restaurant; originally, food that restores, noun use of present participle of restaurer to restore or refresh, from Old French restorer RESTORE. —restaurateur n. 1796, a French word; formed from restaurer to restore + -eur, on the model of Late Latin restaurātor restorer, from Latin restaurāre RESTORE.

French reste remnant, from rester to remain, from Latin restāre stand back, be left (re- back + stāre to STAND).

restitution n. Before 1325 restituciun the act of restoring something to its owner, or of paying back a debt, etc.; later restitution (1423); borrowed from Old French restitucion, and directly from Latin restitūtiōnem (nominative restitūtiō) a restoring, from past participle of restituere restore, rebuild, replace (re- again + statuere to set up); for suffix see -TION.

restive adj. About 1410 restif not moving forward, stationary; later, (of a horse) refusing to go forward, unmanageable; borrowed from Middle French restif (feminine restive) motionless, from rester to remain, REST²; for suffix see -IVE.

restore v. About 1300 restoren give back, compensate for, rebuild, renew; borrowed from Old French restorer, from Latin restaurāre repair, rebuild, renew, restore (re- back, again + -staurāre, as in instaurāre restore). —restoration n. Probably before 1500 restoracion renewal, alteration (influenced by restore) of restauracion a restoring to health (before 1393); borrowed from Old French restauration, and perhaps directly from Latin restaurātiōnem (nominative restaurātiō), from restaurāre restore; for suffix see -ATION. —restorative adj. Before 1398 restoratif, alteration (influenced by restore) of restauratif (before 1393); borrowed from Old French restauratif, from Latin restaurātus, past participle of restaurāre restore; for suffix see -IVE. —n. Probably before 1435 restoratif; from the adjective.

restrain v. Before 1349 restreynen hold back, keep in check, stop; later, restraynen (about 1375); borrowed from Old French restraindre, restreindre, from Latin restringere draw back tightly, confine, check; see RESTRICT. —restraint n. About 1412, act of restraining, check, hindrance; borrowed from Middle French restrainte, noun use of feminine past participle of Old French restraindre to restrain.

restrict v. 1535, keep within limits, confine; probably a back formation from restriction; but possibly also borrowed from Latin restrictus, past participle of restringere bind fast, check, restrain (re- back + stringere draw tight). —restriction n. About 1412 restriccioun a cessation; borrowed through Middle French restriction, and directly from Late Latin restricciōnem (nominative restricciō) limitation, from Latin restrict-, past participle stem of restringere restrict; for suffix see -TION. —restrictive adj. Probably before 1425, astringent, binding; borrowed from Middle French restrictif (feminine restrictive), from Latin restrictus, past participle; for suffix see -IVE.

result v. Probably before 1425 resulten follow as an outcome; borrowed from Latin resultāre to spring back, rebound, frequentative form derived from the past participle of resilire to rebound. —n. 1626, act of springing back; from the verb.

—resultant adj. 1639, possibly formed from English result + -ant, and borrowed from Latin resultantem (nominative resultans), present participle of resultare to rebound; for suffix see -ANT.

resume v. 1404 resumen to get or take again; later, begin again (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French resumer, and directly from Latin resumere take again, assume again (re- again + sumere take up). —resumption n. 1443 resumpcion repossessing by grant; borrowed from Middle French resumption, and directly from Late Latin resumptiōnem (nominative resumptiō), from Latin resumpt-, past participle stem of resumere to resume; for suffix see -TION.

résumé n. 1804, borrowing of French résumé, noun use of past participle of Middle French resumer to sum up. The biographical summary, as of a person's career, is first recorded before 1950.

resurgent adj. 1808, probably formed from English resurge rise again (1575, borrowed from Latin resurgere rise again) + -ent. —resurgence n. Before 1834, formed from English resurgent + -ence.

resurrection n. About 1300, church festival commemorating the rising again of Christ; borrowed from Anglo-French resurrection and from Old French resurrection, and directly from Late Latin resurrectiōnem (nominative resurrectiō), from Latin resurrect-, past participle stem of resurgere rise again; for suffix see -TION.

The meaning of revival, restoration, is first recorded in 1649, from the sense of rebirth (about 1475). —resurrect v. 1772, back formation from resurrection.

resuscitate v. Probably about 1425, revive, restore; borrowed from Latin resuscitatus, past participle of resuscitare rouse again, revive (re- again + suscitare to raise, revive); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

After 1535 resuscitate displaced the variant Middle English verb resusciten (recorded probably about 1450); borrowed through Middle French resusciter, or directly from Latin resuscitare resuscitate. —resuscitation n. Probably about 1425 resuscitacion restoration; borrowed from Middle French ressuscitation, and directly from Late Latin resuscitātiōnem (nominative resuscitātiō), from Latin resuscitare resuscitate; for suffix see -ATION.

retail n. 1413 retayll, 1417 retaille; borrowed from Middle French retail (feminine retaille) piece cut off, shred, scrap, paring (also found in Italian ritaglio a selling by the piece), from Old French retailleur to cut off, pare, clip, divide (re- back + taillier to cut, trim). —v. 1419 retaylen sell in small quantities; borrowed from Middle French retailleur to cut off, divide. The meaning of recount or tell over again, is first recorded in 1594. —adj. 1601, from the noun. —retailer n. Probably 1466, earlier retailleur (1444); formed from Middle English retailen to retail + *-er*¹ or *-or*².

retain v. About 1386 reteinen hold back, restrain; later retaynen (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old French retenir, from Latin retinere hold back (re- back + tenere to hold). The meaning of continue keeping, is first recorded about 1450 and that of employ or secure the services of in 1437.

retainer¹ n. fee paid to secure services. 1453 reteignour retention of revenue from customs; later reteiner engagement of a person as a servant or for some other position (1467–68); formed from English retain, v. + *-er*³, influenced by noun use of Old French retenir to RETAIN.

retainer² n. servant, attendant. 1540 retaynour, 1570 reteyner; formed from English retain, v. + *-er*¹, on the model of Old French reteneor, from retenir to RETAIN.

retaliate v. 1611, probably a back formation from retaliation; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —retaliation n. 1581, formed from Latin retaliare pay back in kind (re- back + taliō exaction of payment in kind) + English -ation. —retaliatory adj. (1813) retard v. About 1477 retarden keep back, delay, hinder; borrowed from Middle French retarder, from Latin retardare to make slow, delay (re- intensive + tardare to slow). —retardant adj. 1642, formed from English retard + -ant. —n. 1952, from the adjective. —retardation n. Probably before 1430, act of retarding, delay; borrowed from Middle French retardation, and directly from Latin retardātiōnem (nominative retardātiō), from retardare to retard; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of mental slowness is first recorded in English in 1914. —retarded adj. 1910, from the past participle of English retard.

retch v. 1548, to clear the throat noisily, bring up phlegm (implied in retching), alteration (probably by influence of retch to stretch) of Middle English rechen to belch, retch (1392); developed from Old English hræcan to cough up, spit (before 899), from Proto-Germanic Hrækkjanan*, and related to hræca phlegm, from Proto-Germanic Hrækōn*.

The meaning of make efforts to vomit is first recorded in 1801.

retention n. 1392 retencioun power or capacity to retain; borrowed through Old French retention, and directly from Latin retentiōnem (nominative retentiō) a retaining, from retent-, past participle stem of retinere RETAIN; for suffix see -ION. —retentive adj. About 1390 retentif able to hold or keep; borrowed from Old French retentif (feminine retentive), from Medieval Latin retentivus restraining, confining, from Latin retent-, past participle stem of retinere RETAIN; for suffix see -IVE.

reticence n. 1603, borrowed from French reticence, from Latin reticentia silence, from reticere keep silent (re- intensive + tacere be silent; see TACIT); for suffix see -ENCE. —reticent adj. Before 1834, formed in English as an adjective to reticence, on the model of Latin reticentem (nominative reticēns), present participle of reticere; for suffix see -ENT.

reticulate adj. 1658, borrowed from Latin reticulatus having a netlike pattern, from reticulum little net, diminutive of rete net; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —reticular adj. 1597, borrowed from New Latin reticularis of or formed like a network, from Latin rēticulum little net; for suffix see -AR. —reticulation n. 1671, formed from English reticulate + -ion.

retina n. 1392, membrane at the back of the eyeball; borrowing of Medieval Latin retina, possibly abstracted from Vulgar Latin (tunica) rētina* netlike (tunic), enveloping the vitreous body of the eye, (accidentally associated with Latin rēfina* rein or a shortening from Latin retināculum tether, halter, but probably ultimately formed on Latin rēte net). The Vulgar Latin form may be a literal translation of Arabic (tabaqa) ṣabakīva netlike (layer), itself a translation of Greek amphiblestroeidēs (chitōn) netlike (tunic), from Latin rēte net; so called from its blood vessels as a fine network.

retinue n. About 1385, state of being in service; also, group of attendants; borrowed from Old French retenue group of followers, state of service, from feminine past participle of retenir to employ, RETAIN.

retire v. 1533, to retreat, go back; borrowed from Middle French retirer (re- back + Old French tirer to draw). The meaning of go away, as for seclusion or rest, is first recorded in 1538, and that of withdraw from an occupation in 1667. —retirement n. 1596, act of falling back or retreating; possibly formed from English retire + -ment, but also found in Middle French retirement, from retirer to retire; for suffix see -MENT. The meaning of withdrawal from an occupation, is first attested in 1648.

retort¹ v. About 1557, to return (an insult, wrong, etc.), retaliate; borrowed from Latin retortus, past participle of retorquere turn back (re- back + torquere to twist). —n. 1600, probably extended from the verb sense of retaliate.

retort² n. container with a curved neck, used for distilling. 1605, borrowed from French retorte a vessel with a curved neck, from Medieval Latin retorta thing with a twisted neck, from feminine past participle of Latin retorquere turn or bend back.

retract v. Probably before 1425 retracten draw in or pull back; borrowed from Latin retractus, past participle of retrahere draw back (re- back + trahere to draw).

The various senses of retract (in general, draw in or back, and withdraw or revoke) have become confused in English, but etymologically they represent distinct borrowings and the sense of retract to withdraw (an opinion, declaration, etc.), revoke, recall (1545) was originally either a back formation from retraction or borrowed from Latin retractare revoke or cancel (re- back + tractare draw violently, frequentative form of trahere to draw). —retraction n. About 1390 retraccioun withdrawal of an opinion, etc.; borrowed from Latin retractiōnem (nominative retractiō), from Latin retractare revoke, cancel. The generalized sense of a drawing back, found later in Middle English (probably before 1425), was borrowed from retract-, past participle stem of retrahere draw back; for suffix see -TION.

retreat n. Probably about 1300 retret a step backwards; later, signal for military withdrawal (1375); borrowed from Old French retret, retrait, noun use of past participle of retrere, retraire draw back, from Latin retrahere draw back (re- back + trahere to draw). The meaning of an act of withdrawing is first recorded in 1393, and that of a place for seclusion probably before 1437. —v. 1422 rereten draw back or in; later, to withdraw from battle (before 1460); from retret, n., and borrowed from Old French retret, retrait, past participle of retrere, retraire draw back.

retrench v. 1607, cut short, check, repress; later, cut down, reduce (1625); back formation from retrenchment, and borrowed from obsolete French retrencher, now retrancher (re- back + Old French trenchier to cut). —retrenchment n. About 1600, the act of cutting down or out, curtailment, reduction; borrowed from obsolete French retrenchement (now retranchement).

retribution n. About 1384 retribucion repayment, recompense, return; borrowed from Latin retributiōnem (nominative retributiō) recompense, repayment, from retribuere hand back, repay (re- back + tribuere to assign, allot); for suffix see -TION. —retributive adj. 1678, formed from earlier English retribute, v., give in return (1575, borrowed from Latin retributus, past participle of retribuere) + -ive.

retrieve v. About 1410 retriven (of dogs) to find again (lost game); borrowed from Middle French retruer-, stem of retro-uer find again (re- again + trouver to find, probably from Vulgar Latin tropare* to compose). The meaning of recover, regain, restore (anything) is first recorded in English in 1567. —n. 1575, from the verb. —retrieval n. Before 1643, act of retrieving, recovery; formed from English retrieve, v. + -al². —retriever n. 1486, dog used for retrieving game; formed from Middle English retriven, v. + -er¹.

retro- a prefix meaning backward, back, behind, as in retroactive, retrocede, retrogress. Borrowed from Latin retro-, from retro, prep., adv., backward, back, behind, probably originally the ablative form of a lost contrastive adjective reteros*, based on re- back.

This combining form became especially productive in reference to a rocket's backward or opposing thrust as in retrofire (1961), retro-rocket (1957).

retroactive adj. 1611, having an effect on what is past; borrowed from French rétroactif (feminine rétroactive) casting or relating back, from Latin retroactus, past participle of retroagere drive or turn back (retro- back, retro- + agere to drive).

retrofit v. 1954, formed from retro(ative) + fit, v. —n. 1956, from the verb.

retrograde adj. 1392, (of a planet) appearing to move backward or contrary to the normal movement; borrowed from Latin retrogradus going backward, from retrogradī move backward (retro- backward + gradī to go, step). —v. 1582, turn back, reverse, revert; borrowed from Latin retrogradī.

retrogress v. 1819, probably a back formation from retrogression; and perhaps borrowed (on the model of English progress) as if from Latin retrogressus*, past participle of retrogradī move backward. —retrogression n. 1646, apparent backward movement of a planet or other celestial body; formed (on the model of English progression) as if from Latin retrogressiōnem*, from retrogressus*, past participle of retrogradī move backward; for suffix see -ION. The act or fact of moving backward in development, is first recorded in English about 1768.

retrospect n. 1602, reference to a precedent or authority; borrowed as if from Latin retrōspect-*, past participle stem of retrōspicere look back (retrō- back, retro- + specere look at). —retrospection n. 1633, act of looking back; borrowed as if from Latin retrōspectiōnem* (nominative retrōspectiō*), from the past participle stem of retrōspicere look back; for suffix see -TION. —retrospective adj. 1664, looking back on things past; formed from English retrospect, n. + -ive. —n. 1932, from the adjective.

retrovirus n. 1977, formed from English retro- backward + virus; so called because it contains an enzyme (reverse transcriptase) that uses RNA instead of DNA to encode genetic information, reversing the usual pattern of encoding. The choice of retro- may also have been influenced by the initial letters of re(verse) tr(anscriptase).

return v. Before 1325 retornen come or go back; later retornen (about 1386); borrowed from Old French retornier, retourner turn back, return (re- back + torner, tourner to TURN). The meaning of to bring or send back is first recorded about 1380. —n. Before 1393 retorn act of returning; borrowed from Old French retorn, from retornier to return.

reunite v. 1591, from earlier participial adjective reunit reunited (before 1500); borrowed from Medieval Latin reunitus, past participle of reunire unite again (Latin re- again + unire join together, UNITE). —reunion n. 1610, borrowed from French réunion a reuniting (re- again + union UNION).

revamp v. 1850, from re- again + *vamp*¹ patch up.

revanchist n. 1926, formed in English from revanche revenge (1858, borrowed from French revanche, from Middle French revanche, revence REVENGE) + -ist anyone seeking to avenge Germany's defeat in World War I by recovering lost territory, probably modeled on French revanchard, used in reference to the defeat of France in the Franco-Prussian War.

reveal v. About 1400 revelen disclose, make known; borrowed from Old French reveler, from Latin revēlare reveal, unveil (re- opposite of + vēlare to cover, veil, from vēlum a veil).

veille n. 1644, borrowed from French réveillez awaken!, imperative plural of réveiller to awaken (Middle French re- again + eveiller to rouse, from Vulgar Latin exvigilāre*, from Latin ex- out + vigilāre be awake, keep watch).

revel v. About 1390 revelen make merry; borrowed from Old French reveler be disorderly, make merry, from Latin rebellāre to rebel. The meaning of take great pleasure (in) is first recorded in 1754. —n. Before 1375, as a surname (1201); borrowed from Old French revel, from reveler to revel. —revelry n. About 1410, formed from Middle English revel, n. + -ry.

revelation n. About 1303 revelacyun disclosure or communication of divine knowledge; borrowed through Old French revelation, or directly from Late Latin revēlātiōnem (nominative revēlātiō), from Latin revēlare to REVEAL; for suffix see -ATION.

Revelation as the name of the last book of the New Testament is first found in Middle English about 1384.

revenge v. 1375 revengen take vengeance; borrowed from Old French revengier, variant of revenchier (re- intensive + vengier take revenge). —n. 1547, borrowed from Middle French revange, revanche revenge, from Old French revengier, revenchier to revenge.

revenue n. 1419, profit from property or other source of income; 1422, return, yield; borrowing of Middle French revenue, from Old French revenue a return, from feminine past participle of revenir come back, from Latin revenire return, come back (re- back + venire come). The meaning of income from taxes, etc., that a government receives, is first recorded in English in 1690. —revenueur n. (1880).

reverberate v. 1547, to beat, drive, or force back; probably a back formation from earlier reverberation, formed on the model of Latin reverberātus, past participle of reverberāre beat back (re- back + verberāre to beat, from verber whip, lash, rod); for suffix see -ATE¹. Reverberate replaced Middle English reverberen (recorded probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French réverbérer, from Latin reverberāre.

The meaning of reecho, is first recorded in English in 1591. —reverberation n. About 1395 reverberacioun fact of being driven or forced back; later reverberation (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French reverberation, from Medieval Latin reverberationem (nominative reverberatio), from Latin reverberāre beat back; for suffix see -ATION.

revere v. 1661, to respect greatly, venerate; borrowed from French révéler revere, and possibly as a learned borrowing from Latin reverēri (re- intensive + verēri stand in awe of, fear). —reverence n. About 1280, deep respect; borrowing of Old French reverence, from Latin reverentia reverence, from reverēri to revere; for suffix see -ENCE. —reverent adj. About 1380, inspiring or worthy of reverence; showing respect (about 1390); probably formed in English as an adjective to the noun reverence, on the model of Latin reverentem (nominative reverēns), present participle of reverēri to revere; for suffix see -ENT. —reverential adj. About 1555, formed from Latin reverentia reverence + English *-al*¹.

reverend adj. 1428, borrowed from Middle French reverend, from Latin reverendus (he who is) to be respected, gerundive of reverēri to REVERE. Reverend as a respectful form of address or epithet applied to a member of the clergy is first recorded in 1484. —n. Before 1500, from the adjective.

reverie n. About 1350 ryvori wild conduct, frolic, revelry; later reverye (about 1390); borrowed from Old French reverie revelry, raving, delirium, from rever, resver to dream, wander, rave, of uncertain origin. The meaning daydream, is first recorded in English in 1657.

reverse adj. About 1303 revers opposite or contrary in character, order, etc.; borrowed from Old French revers reverse, cross, from Latin reversus, past participle of revertere turn back, REVERT. —n. About 1350, revers the opposite of something; from the adjective. —v. Before 1333 reversen change, alter; later go backward (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French reverser turn in an opposite direction, from Late Latin reversāre turn round, frequentative form of revertere turn back, REVERT. —reversal n. 1488, act of reversing; formed from English reverse, v. + -al². —reversible adj. 1648, formed from English reverse, v. + -ible. —n. 1863, a reversible garment; from the adjective. —reversion n. 1394, (in law) an estate returned to a donor; borrowed from Old French reversion, and possibly as a learned borrowing from Latin reversio (nominative reversio) act of turning back, from revers-, past participle stem of revertere turn back; for suffix see -SION.

revert v. Probably before 1300 reverten revive, recover consciousness; later, return to a previous condition (about 1450); borrowed from Old French revertir, from Vulgar Latin revertere*, variant of Latin revertere turn back (re- back + vertere to turn).

review n. 1441 review an inspection of military forces; later, a looking over something, a revision (1565); borrowed from Middle French reveüe, revue a reviewing or review, from feminine past participle of reveür to see again, go to see again, from Latin revidere (re- again + videre to see). —v. 1576, formed from English re- again + view, v., developed from review, n.

revile v. About 1303 revilen to degrade, abuse; borrowed from Old French reviler consider vile, despise (re- intensive + vil VILE).

revise v. 1567, borrowed from Middle French reviser, from Latin revisere look at again, visit again, frequentative form of revidere (re- again + videre to see). —n. 1591, from the verb. —revision n. 1611, borrowing of French revision, from Late Latin revisio (nominative revisio), from Latin revisere look at again; for suffix see -SION.

revive v. Probably before 1425 reviven return to consciousness; also, restore to health (about 1425); borrowed from Middle French revivre, from Latin revivere to live again (re- again + vivere to live). The meaning of bring back to notice, use or fashion, is first recorded in 1442. —revival n. 1651, act of reviving; formed from English revive + -al². —revivalist n. (1820) revivify v. 1675, borrowed from French revivifier, from Late Latin revivificāre revivify (re- again + vivificāre make alive).

revocation n. About 1410 revocacioun act of revoking, retraction; borrowed from Middle French revocation, and directly from Latin revocatio (nominative revocatio), from revocāre REVOKE; for suffix see -ATION. —revocable adj. Before 1500, probably borrowed from Middle French revocable, from Old French revouer revoke + -able -able, but later assimilated with revokable (1584), a formation in English of revoke, v. + -able, which dropped out of use in the 1700's.

revoke v. About 1350 revoken make a retraction; borrowed from Old French revouer, from Latin revocāre rescind, call back (re- back + vocāre to call).

revolt v. 1548, borrowed from Middle French revolter, from Italian rivoltare to overthrow, overturn, from Vulgar Latin re-* volūtāre to overturn, overthrow, frequentative form of Latin revolvere turn, roll back; see REVOLVE. —n. 1560, borrowed from Middle French révolte, from Italian rivolta an overthrow, turn, from rivoltare to revolt. —revolting adj. 1593, that revolts or rebels, from the present participle of revolt; for suffix see -ING². The sense of repulsive, disgusting, is first recorded in 1806.

revolution n. About 1385 revolucioun the revolving of a celestial body in orbit; later, a turning of a wheel (before 1420); borrowed from Old French revolution, from Late Latin revolutiōnem (nominative revolutiō) a revolving, from Latin revolūt-, past participle stem of revolvere turn, roll back; for suffix see -TION.

The political meaning of revolution is first recorded in English in 1600 (derived from French), and was later reinforced in reference to expulsion of the Stuart dynasty in 1688, and the French Revolution (1789–95), which caused much greater concern among the British than the American Revolution (1775–81). —revolutionary adj. 1774, of or connected with a political revolution; formed from English revolution + -ary. —n. 1850, from the adjective. —revolutionize v. 1797, bring about a revolution in (a country); formed from English revolution + -ize. The meaning of change over completely is first recorded in 1799.

revolve v. About 1385 revolven to change; later turn around (about 1450); borrowed through Old French revolver, and directly from Latin revolvere turn, roll back (re- back, again + volvere to roll). The meaning of travel around a central point, is first recorded in 1667.

revolver n. 1835, from revolve + -er¹; so called by its inventor, Samuel Colt.

revue n. 1872, show presenting a review of current events, fashions, etc.; borrowing of French revue from Middle French, survey; see REVIEW.

revulsion n. 1541, a diverting of blood from one region of the body to another; borrowed from Latin revulsio (nominative revulsio) act of pulling away, from revuls-, past participle stem of revellere to pull away (re- away + vellere to tear, pull); for suffix see -SION. The sense of a reaction of disgust, is first recorded in 1816.

reward v. Probably before 1300, to grant, bestow; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old North French rewarder, variant of Old French regarder, reguarder regard, watch over (re- intensive + garder, guarder look, heed, watch; see GUARD). —n. Before 1338, regard, consideration; borrowed from Anglo-French and probably Old North French reward, from rewarder take notice of. The meaning of recompense, is first recorded in 1371.

rhapsody n. 1542, epic poem; borrowed from Latin rhapsōdia, from Greek rhapsōidia verse composition, derived from rhapsōidos reciter of epic poems (rhāptein to stitch + ōidē song, ODE); for suffix see Y³.

The meaning of musical composition of indefinite form and sprightly character is first recorded in English after 1851.

—rhapsodic adj. 1782, shortened form of rhapsodical (1659, formed from Greek rhapsōidikós, from rhapsōidḗa rhapsody + English -ical). —rhapsodize v. 1607, formed from English rhapsody + -ize.

rhea n. 1801, bird similar to the ostrich. New Latin, the genus name, from Latin Rhea mother of Zeus, from Greek Rhéa.

rhenum n. 1925, New Latin, formed from Latin Rhēnus the Rhine River + New Latin -ium.

rheo- a combining form meaning flow, stream, current, as in rheology, rheostat; borrowed from Greek rhéōs a flowing, stream, from rhēin to flow.

rheology n. 1929, borrowed from French rhéologie (rheo- flow + -logie study of).

rheostat n. 1843, formed from English rheo- + -stat (regulating device).

rhesus n. 1827, New Latin, the genus name of this monkey, said to be an arbitrary use of Latin Rhēsus, name of a legendary prince of Thrace, from Greek Rhēsos.

rhetoric n. About 1330 Rettorike, later rethoryke (before 1382); borrowed from Old French rethorique, from Latin rhētoricē, from Greek rhētorikḗ téchnē art of an orator, from rhētōr (genitive rhētoros) orator; for suffix see -ic.

The spelling with rh- is first recorded about 1475. The sense of mastery of literary eloquence, appeared in 1395. —rhetorical adj. 1447 rethorycal, earlier rethorik, adj. (about 1385), formed from rethoryke, n. + -al, on the model of Latin rhētoricus, from Greek rhētorikós, from rhētōr orator. —rhetorician n. Before 1420 rethoricien; borrowed from Middle French rethoricien, from Old French rethorique + -ien -ian.

rheum n. About 1373 reame; also reume (about 1378); borrowed from Old French reume, from Latin rheuma, from Greek rhēuma a flowing, from rhēin to flow.

rheumatism n. 1601 rheumatisme excessive flow of rheum; borrowed perhaps through Middle French rhumatisme, from Latin rheumatismus rheum, flux, from Greek rheumatismós, from rheumatízein suffer from a flux, from rhēuma RHEUM.

The form reumatisme is recorded as an adjective (about 1425); probably borrowed from a Medieval Latin form of Latin rheumatismus. The meaning of a disease of the joints is first recorded in 1688, because rheumatism was thought to be caused by an excessive flow of rheum into a joint thereby stretching ligaments. —rheumatic adj. 1392 reumatik consisting of rheum; borrowed through Old French reumatique, and directly from Latin rheumaticus troubled with rheum, from Greek rheumatikós, from rhēuma rheum; for suffix see -ic. —rheumatoid adj. 1859, in the phrase rheumatoid arthritis, resembling rheumatism; formed from Greek rhēumat-, stem of rhēuma + English -oid.

Rh factor 1942, from rh(esus); so called because it was discovered in blood of the rhesus monkey.

rhin- a variant of the combining form rhino- before a vowel, as in rhinal, rhinitis.

rhinal adj. 1864, formed from English rhin- + -al.

rhinestone n. 1888, formed from Rhine + stone, as a loan translation of French caillou du Rhin Rhine pebble; so called because they were made in Strasbourg, a city near the Rhine River.

rhinitis n. 1884, New Latin; formed from rhin- of the nose + -itis inflammation.

rhino n. 1884, shortened form of rhinoceros.

rhino- a combining form meaning nose or of the nose, as in rhinoceros, rhinovirus. Borrowed from Greek rhīno-, combining form of rhīs (genitive rhīnós) nose.

rhinoceros n. Probably before 1300 rinoceros; borrowed from Latin rhinocērōs, from Greek rhīnókerōs (rhīnós nose + kéras horn).

rhinovirus n. 1961, formed from English rhino- of the nose + virus.

rhizome n. 1845, borrowed perhaps through French rhizome (1817), from New Latin rhizoma, from Greek rhízōma mass of tree roots, from rhízōn cause to strike root, from rhíza ROOT.

rhodium n. 1804, New Latin; formed from Greek rhódōn rose + New Latin -ium; so called from the rosy color of the element's salts.

rhododendron n. 1601, borrowed through French, or directly from Latin rhododendron, from Greek rhodódendron (rhódon rose + déndron tree).

rhombus n. 1567, borrowing of Late Latin rhombus, from Greek rhómbos rhombus, spinning top, from rhémbesthai to spin, whirl. —rhomboid n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French romboïde, from Late Latin romboïdēs, from Greek rhomboidēs shaped like a rhombus (rhómbos rhombus + -oidēs -oid).

rhubarb n. About 1390, borrowed from Old French rubarbe, reubarbe, from Medieval Latin rheubarbarum, alteration of rhabarbarum, from Greek rhā bárbaron foreign rhubarb (rhā rhubarb, associated with Rhā, ancient name of the Volga river; and bárbaron foreign, neuter of bárbaros). The Medieval Latin variant rheubarbarum was probably influenced in form by Greek rhēon rhubarb, from Persian rēwend.

rhyme or rime n. 1610 rhyme verse or poetry; a spelling alteration (influenced by rhythm) of Middle English ryme, rime measure, meter, rhythm (about 1200); later, rhymed verse (before 1250); borrowed from Old French rime (feminine), related to Old Provençal rim (masculine), both probably from a Germanic source (compare Old High German, Old Frisian and Old English rīm number, Old Icelandic rīm reckoning, computation, and Old English riman to count, recount, enumerate). —v. 1660 rhyme to make verse; spelling alteration (influenced by rhythm) of Middle English rymen, rimen (about 1300), from the noun.

rhythm n. About 1557, rhyming or rhymed verse; also, metrical movement (1560); borrowed from Latin rhythmus movement in time, rhythm, from Greek rhythmos measured flow or movement, rhythm, related to rheîn to flow.

The meaning in music is first recorded in English in 1776 and that of any movement with a regular succession of elements (as in the rhythm of the tides) in 1855. —rhythmic adj. Before 1631 rythmique (shortened form of rhythmical, 1567), formed from English rhythm + -ic, on the model of French rhythmique.

rib n. Probably before 1200 rib, ribbe; developed from Old English (before 800) ribb rib; cognate with Old Frisian ribb, rebbe rib, Old Saxon ribbi, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ribbe, Old High German rippi, rippa (modern German Rippe), and Old Icelandic rif (Norwegian riu), from Proto-Germanic reþja-*. —v. Before 1547, from the noun. The meaning of tease, fool, is first recorded in 1930, perhaps as a figurative use of the sense of beat (one) on the ribs (1723).

ribald n. Before 1250 ribaude rascal, scoundrel; later, ribald (before 1393); borrowed from Old French ribalt, ribaut, ribaud, from riber be wanton, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German riban be wanton, literally, to rub, modern German reiben to rub, cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wriwen to rub, from Proto-Germanic wribanan*). —adj. 1500–20, from the noun, and replacing ribaude. —ribaldry n. Before 1325, ribaude ribald language, debauchery; later ribaldrie (about 1450); borrowed from Old French ribaude, ribaude, from ribaude ribald; for suffix see -RY.

ribbon n. Probably about 1325 riban; borrowed from Old French riban a ribbon, variant of ruban, of uncertain origin (possibly from a Germanic compound whose first element is uncertain and whose second element is related to band, as in early modern Dutch ringband dog's collar).

riboflavin n. 1935, formed from English ribo(se) + flavin, from Latin flāvus yellow; so called because its color.

ribonucleic acid 1931, formed from English ribo(se) sugar component of this acid + nucleic acid.

ribose n. 1892, borrowing of German Ribose, shortened and altered form of English arabinose a sugar (about 1880); formed from gum arabic, used in preparing arabinose + -in² + -ose².

ribosome n. 1958, formed from English ribo- (nucleic acid) + -some³ body. —ribosomal adj. 1959, formed from English ribosome + -al¹.

rice n. 1234 ris, rys; later ryce (before 1475); borrowed from Old French ris, from Italian riso, from Latin oriza, oryza, from Greek óryza rice, from an Indo-Iranian form (compare Pashto vrižē and Sanskrit vrihī-s, both meaning rice). —v. 1923, from the noun.

rich adj. Before 1121 riche, probably a fusion of Old French riche wealthy, from a Germanic source; and Old English (before 900) rice wealthy, powerful, mighty. Old English rice (from Proto-Germanic rikijaz*) is cognate with Old Frisian rike wealthy, mighty, Old Saxon riki, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch rike (modern Dutch rijk wealthy), Old High German rihi (modern German reich), Old Icelandic rikr (Norwegian and Swedish rik, Danish rig), and Gothic reiks mighty, sovereign, reiki rule, realm, kingdom. The Germanic words were all borrowed from a Celtic group represented by Gaulish Rigo- and -rix (attested in proper names) and by Old Irish ri (genitive rig) king. —riches n. pl. Probably before 1200 riches wealth, variant of richesse (probably before 1200, a singular form misunderstood as a plural); borrowed from Old French richesse wealth, opulence, from riche RICH. The Old French suffix -esse derives from Latin -itia, added to adjectives to form nouns of quality, found in duresse, largesse.

rick n. Before 1325 reke stack of hay, straw, etc.; developed from Old English (900) hrēac rick; cognate with Middle Dutch rooc rick (modern Dutch rook), Old Icelandic hraukr rick (Norwegian rauk), from Proto-Germanic Hraukaz*.

rickets n. 1634, of uncertain origin. Rickets was originally a localism applied to the disease in Dorset and Somerset, England, about 1620. In 1650 New Latin rachitis was adopted from Late Greek rhachitis inflammation of the spine (from Greek rhachis spine), probably because of the resemblance of rachitis to the English name rickets. —rickety adj. 1685, liable to fall or break down; formed from English rickets + -y¹. The rare literal meaning of having rickets is first recorded about 1720.

rickettsia n. 1919, New Latin Rickettsia the genus name of this organism, formed in allusion to H. T. Ricketts, who first identified the microorganism.

rickey n. 1895, reputedly from the name of a Colonel Rickey.

rickshaw or ricksha n. 1887, a shortened and altered form of JINRIKISHA.

ricochet n. 1769, rebound (of a projectile); borrowing of French ricochet, from Old French, especially in fable du ricochet entertainment in which the teller of a tale skillfully evades questions, and chanson du ricochet a kind of repetitious song, of uncertain origin. —v. 1828, from the noun.

rid v. Probably before 1200 ruden, rudden to clear (a way or space), set free, save; also ridden (before 1250); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rydhja to clear of obstructions, past tense ruddi, past participle ruddr); cognate with Old Frisian rothia to clear, Middle Low German and modern German roden, and Old High German riuten to clear land (modern dialectal German reuten), from Proto-Germanic reudijanan*. —riddance n. 1535, clearance, removal; formed from English rid + -ance.

riddle¹ n. puzzling statement. Probably about 1225 redel, redels; developed from Old English rædels opinion, riddle (about 1000 and showing metathesis of s and l) cognate with Old Frisian riedsal riddle, Old Saxon rādslī, Middle Dutch naedse (modern Dutch raadsel), and Middle High German rātsel (modern German Rätsel), from Proto-Germanic ræ-disljan*. —v. 1571, from the noun.

riddle² n. coarse sieve. About 1350 ridelle; later riddil (about 1395); developed from Late Old English (before 1100) hriddel sieve, alteration (by dissimilation of l to r) of Old English (before 800) hrīder, hrīder sieve, cognate with Old High German rītera, rītra (modern German Reiter) a sieve, from Proto-Germanic Hrīðran*. —v. Probably before 1200 ridlen to sift; later riddlen (about 1395), from ridelle, riddil, n. The meaning of make many holes in is first recorded in 1817.

ride v. 1123 riden to ride, travel; developed from Old English ridan ride (as on horseback), move forward, rock (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian rida to ride, Old Saxon ridan, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch riden (modern Dutch rijden), Old High German ritan (modern German reiten), and Old Icelandic ridha (Swedish rida, Norwegian and Danish ride), from Proto-Germanic ridanan*. —n. About 1250, in wenden ride make one's way; from the verb. —riders n. Probably before 1200, found in Old English riders, ridere, formed from ridan + *-er*¹.

ridge n. Probably before 1200, rugge back, spine, ridge; also rug; earlier as a surname Rigge (1166); developed from Old English hrycg back of a man or beast (about 725, in Beowulf); and probably reinforced by Old Icelandic hryggr back, ridge; cognate with Old Frisian hregg the back, Old Saxon hruggi, Middle Low German rugge, Middle Dutch ruc (modern Dutch rug), and Old High German hrucki (modern German Rücken), from Proto-Germanic Hruzjás*. The spelling with -dg-, as in rydge, is first recorded before 1470; for a note on spelling see DRUDGE. —v. 1440 riggen put a ridgepole in a roof; from rigge, n. —ridgepole n. (1788) ridicule n. 1677, laughable or absurd thing; borrowed from French ridicule, and directly from Latin ridiculum laughing matter, joke, from neuter of ridiculus RIDICULOUS. The meaning of words or actions that make fun of something or someone is first recorded in 1690. —v. 1684, make ridiculous, from English ridicule, n., reinforced by French ridiculer (now ridiculiser). The meaning of make fun of, is first recorded in English before 1700. —ridiculous adj. 1550, borrowed from Latin ridiculōsus laughable, from ridiculus, from ridēre to laugh; for suffix see -OUS.

rife adj. Probably before 1200 rife abundant, widespread; developed from Old English rife abundant; cognate with Middle Low German rive abundant, Middle Dutch rive, rijf, and Old Icelandic riřr agreeable, desired (modern Icelandic riřur abundant, ample).

riff n. 1935 (but according to jazzmen, current since about 1917), recurring melodic phrase in jazz, of uncertain origin; perhaps a shortened form of RIFFLE, n. —v. 1955, from the noun.

rifle v. 1754, to form a stretch of choppy water; perhaps variant of RUFFLE¹ make rough. The meaning of shuffle (cards) is first recorded in 1894 and that of skim, leaf through quickly, in 1922. —n. 1785, stretch of choppy water; from the verb.

riffraff n. About 1475, from earlier rif and raf one and all, every scrap (before 1338); borrowed from Old French rif et raf, from riřler to spoil, strip, RIFLE² and rařler carry off, related to rařle plundering, RAFFLE.

rifle¹ n. gun with spiral grooves in its barrel. Before 1751, noun use of rifled, adj. (1689, as in rifled piece); from the verb. —v. 1635, to cut spiral grooves in (a gun barrel); probably borrowed from French riřler, from Old French riřler to scratch or groove; see RIFLE².

rifle² v. search and rob. About 1333 riřfen; borrowed from Old French riřler to graze, scratch; also, strip, plunder, probably from a Germanic source; compare obsolete Dutch riřfelen to scratch, modern German riřeln to groove (from Low German), Old English geriřlian to wrinkle.

rift n. Before 1325 riřt a split, act of splitting or breaking; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic riřt, pronounced riřt, and meaning breach).

rig v. About 1489 riggen, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish and Norwegian rigge to equip, rig, and Swedish rigga to rig). —n. 1822, either from the verb or a shortened form of rigging. The sense of clothes, costume, is first recorded in 1857. —rigging n. (1594) right adj. Before 1121 riht, rihte straight, lawful, true, genuine; later right (about 1303); found in Old English (before 830) riht just, good, fair, proper, fitting, straight; cognate with Old Frisian riucht right, Old Saxon reht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch recht, Old High German reht (modern German recht), Old Icelandic rēttir (Norwegian rett, Danish ret, Swedish rätt), and Gothic rahts, from Proto-Germanic reHtaž*. The meaning right, as opposed to left, is first recorded in 1125. —n. About 1121 riht; later in the spelling right (about 1303), found in Old English riht fairness, justice, just claim (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian riucht, n., right, Old Saxon reht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch recht, Old High German reht (modern German Recht), and Old Icelandic rēttir (Norwegian rett, Danish ret, Swedish rätt); related to Old English riht, adj. The meaning of right side or hand is first recorded probably about 1200. Right, in the sense of the conservative members of a legislative body (customarily assigned to the right side of the chamber in relation to the presiding officer) is first recorded in 1825, as a loan translation of French Droite (1791) the Right, Conservative Party in the French National Assembly of 1789. —v. Probably about 1150 riřten to correct, amend; later rihten to straighten, set in order, govern, (probably before 1200), and in the spelling right (about 1300); developed from Old English rihtan to straighten, rule, set up, set right (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian rihtta to right, Old Saxon rihtian, Middle Low German rihten, rehten, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rihten, rehten, Old High German rihten (modern German richten), Old Icelandic rētta (Norwegian and Danish rette, Swedish rätta), and Gothic garalhtjan to guide. —right angle (about 1400) —righteous adj. 1526, alteration of earlier rightuous (before 1475), rihtwise (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 830) rihtwīs (riht right, adj. + wīs WISE). The suffix -eous, -ous was a substitution based on courteous and similar formations of the 1500's. —rightful adj. 1100 rihtfullan honorable; later, according to law (probably before 1300); developed from Old English rihtfull (found in unrihtfull). —right of way (1768) —right wing (1905) —righty n. right-handed person (1949)

rigid adj. Probably before 1425 rigide stiff; borrowed from Latin rigidus, from rigēre be stiff, probably altered from regēre* by influence of erigere raise up. —rigidity n. 1624, borrowed from Latin rigiditas, from rigidus rigid; for suffix see -ITY.

rigmarole n. 1736, a long, rambling discourse; alteration of earlier ragman roll long list or catalogue (1523), in Middle English Ragmane Rolle a roll of verses descriptive of personal character, used in a medieval game of chance called Rageman (about 1450); perhaps from Anglo-French Ragemon le bon Ragemon the good, the heading of a set of the verses, referring to a character by that name. The transferred sense of lengthy and foolish activity or commotion, is first recorded about 1955 (but was known orally in the 1930's).

rigor n. 1392 rigour stiffness, numbness; also, harshness, severity (about 1395); borrowed from Old French rigor, rigour, and directly from Latin rigor numbness, stiffness, rigor, from rigēre be stiff; for suffix see -OR¹. —rigorous adj. Before 1425, harsh, severe, stern, strict (implied earlier in rigorously, 1408); borrowed from Old French rigoros, rigoureux, and directly from Medieval Latin rigorosus, from Latin rigor rigor; for suffix see -OUS. —rigor mortis 1839–47, a Latinate form from rigor stiffness, and mortis (genitive of mors death).

rile v. 1825, irritate, vex, spelling alteration perhaps from a dialectal pronunciation of roil, as heist from hoist.

rill n. 1538, borrowed from Dutch ril or Low German rille groove or furrow, forms cognate with Frisian ril narrow passage, and probably related to Middle Low German rīde brook, stream, Old Saxon rīth, and Old English rīth, rīthe brook, stream, which survives only in English dialect.

rim n. Probably before 1200 rieme edge, border, margin; and rim (1440); developed from Old English rima edge, border (as in særima rim of the sea, seashore, 897); cognate with Old Frisian rim edge, and Old Icelandic rimi ridge, rim fence. —v. 1794, from the noun.

rime¹ n. white frost. Probably before 1200 rim (as in rim frost); developed from Old English (about 725) hrīm; cognate with Old Icelandic hrīm, hrīmi frost (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish rim frost, rime), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rijm, Middle High German rīm, from Proto-Germanic Hrīma-*.

rime² n. See RHYME.

rind n. Old English rinde bark, crust (before 899); later, peel of a fruit or vegetable (about 1150); cognate with Old Saxon rinda bark, Middle Low German rinde, Middle Dutch rinde, rende, runde (modern Dutch ruin tanning bark), Old High German rinda, rinta bark, rind (modern German Rinde), from Proto-Germanic rendō*; related to Old English rendan to REND.

ring¹ n. circle. Probably before 1200 ring; earlier in the surname Ringstan (1167); developed from Old English hring circular band (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hring ring, Middle Dutch rinc (modern Dutch ring), Old High German hring (modern German Ring), and Old Icelandic hringr ring (modern Icelandic hringur, Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish ring), from Proto-Germanic Hrengaz*. —v. Probably before 1387 ringen provide or attach a ring, from the noun. —ringleader n. 1503, from the phrase lead the ring be foremost in a group, (originally) lead the dance, from Middle English leden the ring (probably about 1343).

ring² v. sound, as a bell does. About 1131 ringen; developed from Old English hringan (about 725, in Beowulf, from Proto-Germanic Hrenzanan*); cognate with Old Icelandic and modern Icelandic hringja to ring (Norwegian ringe, ringje, Swedish ringa, Danish ringe), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ringen to ring, and Old Icelandic hrang noise, din. —n. 1549, from the verb.

ringer¹ n. one who rings a bell. About 1425, earlier as a surname Ringere (1207); formed from Middle English ringen, v. + *-er*¹.

ringer² n. be a (dead) ringer for, resemble very closely. 1891, from ringer, a horse entered fraudulently in a race, possibly from British ring in to substitute or exchange (coins, hats, etc.) fraudulently (1812), associated with ring the changes to substitute counterfeit money in various ways, a pun on ring the changes go through all the variations in ringing a peal of bells (1614).

rink n. 1375 (Scottish dialect) renk, rinc area marked out for a contest, perhaps confused with ring an area for sport or contest (1303); borrowed from Old French renc, reng row, line, from Frankish; see RANK¹ row.

rinky-dink n. 1912, something cheap, tinny, or trite, (said to be imitative of the sound of banjo music formerly played at parades, but of uncertain connection to the meaning). —adj. 1913, probably from the noun.

rinse v. Probably about 1300 rincent to cleanse with water; borrowed from Old French rinier, variant of raïnier and perhaps a dissimilated form (with loss of i) of recincier cleanse, from Vulgar Latin recentiāre* renew, refresh, from Latin recens (genitive recentis) fresh. —n. 1837, from the verb.

riot n. Probably before 1200 riote debauchery, extravagance, unrestrained revelry; borrowed from Old French riote (masculine riot) dispute, quarrel, corresponding to Provençal riota, both of uncertain origin. The meaning of public disturbance, is first recorded before 1393.

The phrase run riot to act without restraint, appeared in 1523 as a figurative use of the meaning of a hound's following the wrong scent (about 1410). —v. About 1390 rioten to revel, live wantonly; from the noun. The meaning of take part in a public disturbance is first recorded in 1755. —riotous adj. 1340, troublesome, wanton, extravagant; formed from Middle English riote, n. + -ous.

rip¹ v. tear apart. Before 1400 ripen to cut, pull out, or tear away vigorously; cognate with Flemish ripen to strip off roughly, rip, Frisian rippe to tear, rip, and probably with Middle Low German reppen to move, touch; see RAFFLE. The phrase rip off to steal or rob, is first recorded about 1967, from prison slang rip to steal (1904). —n. 1711, from the verb. —rip-off n. theft, robbery, racket (1970).

rip² n. water made rough by cross currents. 1775, perhaps special use of rip¹, n.

riparian adj. 1849, of the bank of a river, lake, etc., formed from Latin ripārius of a riverbank + English -an.

ripe adj. Old English ripe ready for reaping (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon ripi ripe, Middle Dutch ripe (modern Dutch rijp), Old High German rīfi (modern German reif), from Proto-Germanic rīpjaz*; compare Old English repan, ripan to REAP. —ripen v. 1561, grow ripe, come to maturity; formed from modern English ripe + -en¹, gradually replacing earlier ripe, v., about 1250, Middle English ripen; developed from Old English ripan, from ripe, adj., and cognate with Old Saxon ripōn become ripe, Middle Dutch ripen (modern Dutch rijpen), Old High German rīfan, rīffen (modern German reifen).

riposte n. 1707, (in fencing) a quick return thrust; borrowed from French riposte, dissimilated form (by omission of -s- in ris-) of risposte, from Italian risposta a reply, from rispondere to respond, from Vulgar Latin respondere*, altered from Latin respondere RESPOND. The sense of a sharp reply, retort, is first recorded in English in 1865, from the verb. —v. 1707, (in fencing) to make a quick thrust; borrowed from French riposter, dissimilated form of risposter, probably from the noun in French. The sense of make a sharp reply, is first recorded in English in 1851.

ripple v. Before 1425 rippen, ripen to wrinkle, crease, of unknown origin; later, to form small waves (implied in rippling, n. formation of ripples, 1669); re-formed in English perhaps as a frequentative form of English rip¹; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1755, stretch of shallow, rippling water; from the verb. The meaning of a very small wave is first found in 1798.

riproaring adj. 1834, alteration of earlier riproarious (1830); formed from rip¹ tear apart + -roarious, as in uproarious (1819).

ripsnorter n. 1840, perhaps formed from rip¹ tear apart + snort, v. + -er¹.

rise v. 1135 risen rebel, revolt; probably before 1200, get up, go up, ascend; developed from Old English rīsan (found usually in ārisan, before 830); cognate with Old Frisian rīsa to rise, Old Saxon rīsan, Middle Dutch rīsen (modern Dutch rijzen), Old High German rīsan to rise, flow, Old Icelandic rīsa to rise (Norwegian rise), and Gothic urrisan (from Proto-Germanic us-risanan*). Related to RAISE. —n. About 1400, a rebellion; from the verb. The meaning of rising ground is first recorded about 1440, and that of upward movement, about 1573. —riser n. 1397, a rebel; later, one who rises from bed (before 1450); formed from Middle English rīsen + -er¹.

risible adj. 1557, inclined or able to laugh; borrowed from Middle French risible, and directly from Late Latin risibilis laughable, from Latin rīsus, past participle of rīdere to laugh; for suffix see -IBLE.

risk n. 1661 risque hazard, danger; borrowing of French risque, from Italian risco, risico, rischio, of uncertain origin. The spelling risk (1741) was influenced by the spelling risk of the verb. Compare RISQUÉ. —v. Before 1687 risque to expose to hazard or danger; borrowed from French risquer, from Italian risicare, rischiare, from the noun in Italian. The spelling risk is first recorded in 1728. —risky adj. 1826–27, venturesome, bold, hazardous; formed from English risk, n. + -y¹.

risqué adj. 1867, borrowing of French risqué, past participle of risquer to RISK.

rite n. Before 1333, borrowed from Latin rītus (genitive rītūs) religious observance or ceremony, custom, usage.

ritual adj. 1570, borrowed perhaps through Middle French ritual or directly from Latin rītualis relating to rites, from rītus (genitive rītūs) RITE; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1649, from the adjective. —ritualism n. 1843, excessive practice of ritual; formed in English from ritual + -ism, as a noun to ritualist one versed in ritual (1657), influenced by French ritualisme, from Middle French ritual + -isme. —ritualistic adj. 1850, formed from English ritualist one versed in ritual (1657) + -ic.

ritzy adj. 1920, smart, stylish, formed from Ritz, name of a chain of palatial hotels founded by César Ritz + -y¹.

rival n. 1577, competitor; borrowing of Middle French rival, and directly from Latin rivalis a rival; originally, a person who uses the same stream as another, from rīvus stream, brook; for suffix see -AL². —adj. 1590, from the noun. —v. 1605, from the noun. —rivalry n. 1598, formed from English rival, n. + -ry.

rive v. Probably before 1200 riven, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rīfa to tear apart, Norwegian rive, riva to split, tear, cognate with Old Frisian rīva to tear). The Scandinavian forms derive from Proto-Germanic rīfanan*. —riven adj. Probably before 1300, from the past participle of rive.

river n. Probably about 1225 rivere; borrowed through Anglo-French rivere, Old French riviere, from Vulgar Latin rīpāria* riverbank or seashore, river, noun use of feminine of Latin ripārius of a riverbank, from ripa (steep) bank of a river, shore. —riverside n. (Probably before 1400) rivet n. 1358–59, borrowed from Anglo-Latin rivettis, and from Old French rivet, from river to fix or fasten; also perhaps, in part, from Middle Dutch wriwen turn, grind. —v. Probably before 1430, from the noun. The sense of fix firmly (as the eye) is first recorded in 1602. —riveting adj. 1854, from the past participle of rivet, v.

rivulet n. 1587, borrowed in part possibly from Italian rivoletto, diminutive of rivolo, and directly from Latin rīvulus, diminutive of rīvus stream, brook; for suffix see -ET.

roach¹ n. 1837, shortened form of COCKROACH. The butt of a (marijuana) cigarette is first recorded in 1938.

roach² n. fish. Probably about 1200 roche; borrowed of Old French roche, of uncertain origin.

road n. Probably about 1200 rade a riding, journey; later rode (1250); developed from Old English rād (871, and from Proto-Germanic raidō*) cognate with Old Frisian rēd ride, Old Saxon rēda, Middle Dutch rede, Old High German reita, reiti foray, raid, and Old Icelandic reidh a riding, vehicle; from the Proto-Germanic root ridanan*, the source of Old English ridan to RIDE. Related to RAID. The spelling road was not the established form until the 1700's. The meaning of an open way for traveling between two places is first recorded late in English (1596–97). —roadster n. 1744, ship lying near the shore; later, a light carriage (1892); automobile, especially an open two-seater (1908); formed from English road + -ster.

roam v. About 1330 romen to wander about; earlier to walk or walk about (before 1300); probably an alteration of ramen, represented by rameden (before 1200), of uncertain origin; possibly developed from Old English rāmian*, from raiman*; cognate with Old Icelandic reimudhr act of wandering about, reimast to haunt, and probably related to Old English ārēman arise, lift up. —n. 1667, from the verb.

roan adj. 1530, borrowing of Middle French roan reddish brown, from Spanish roano, probably from a Germanic source (compare Gothic raudan, accusative of rauths red). —n. roan horse. 1580, from the adjective.

roar v. Probably about 1200 varin; later roren (before 1225); developed from Old English (before 900) rārian, probably of imitative origin. Similar formations are found in Middle Dutch rerēn to roar, Middle Low German rāren, Old High German rēren to bleat (modern German röhren to bellow). —n. Before 1393 rore the roar of a beast, from the verb.

roast v. About 1280 rosten to cook by dry heat; borrowed from Old French rostir, from Frankish raustjan* (compare Old High German rōstan to roast, and Middle Dutch roosten). —adj. Before 1338 rost, from the past participle of rosten to roast. —n. Probably about 1300 roste piece of roasted meat; borrowing of Old French rost, from rostir to roast.

rob v. Probably before 1200 robben to steal from, plunder, pillage; borrowed from Old French rober, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German roubōn to rob, modern German rauben, Old Saxon rōbōn, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch roven, modern Dutch rooven, Gothic biraubōn, Old English rēafian, from Proto-Germanic raubōjanan*). —robber n. Probably before 1200 robber, robbere; borrowed from Old French robere, from rober to rob; for suffix see -ER¹. —robbery n. Probably before 1200 roberie, borrowing of Old French roberie, from rober to rob; for suffix see -RY.

robe n. Probably about 1200, borrowing of Old French robe long, loose outer garment; originally, plunder or booty, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German rouba vestments, presumably taken from the enemy, spoils or booty; related to roubōn to ROB, from Proto-Germanic raubō*). —v. About 1378 roben, from the noun.

robin n. 1549, shortened form of Robin Redbreast (about 1450); from Robin (before 1376); borrowing of Old French Robin, diminutive of Robert. An earlier Middle English name robynet (before 1425), was borrowed from Old French robinet, diminutive of Robin; for suffix see -ET.

robot n. 1923, formed in Czech as the name for the mechanical men of the play R.U.R. (Rossum's Universal Robots, the firm manufacturing the robots). Czech robot from robota work or labor, related to Old Slavic rabū slave. —robotic adj. 1941, coined from robot + -ic. —robotics n. 1941, coined from robot + -ics.

robust adj. 1549, borrowed perhaps through Middle French robuste, or directly from Latin rōbustus strong and hardy; originally, oaken, from rōbur, rōbus (genitive rōboris) oak tree, hard timber, strength.

roc n. 1579, legendary bird of enormous size; borrowed from Arabic rukhh, from Persian rukh.

rock¹ n. stone. About 1250 roc cliff, outcropping of rock; later rocke (about 1384); found in, and probably in part developed from, Old English rocc (in stānrocc stone rock or obelisk); also, borrowed from Old North French roque, from Vulgar Latin rocca*, of uncertain origin.

Middle English also had the form roche rock formation, cliff, at least by 1225, and in the meaning "rock, stone," probably before 1300; borrowed from Old French roche, from Vulgar Latin rocca*. Except in the term roche montonée a glacially round bedrock, the word disappeared from the record of English in the early 1800's.

rock² v. to sway. Probably before 1200 rocken; developed from Late Old English (before 1100) roccian; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch rucken to sway (modern Dutch rukken to pull, tug), Old High German nucken cause to move (modern German nücken), and Old Icelandic rykkja to pull, tug (Danish rykke, Swedish rycka). —n. 1823, rocking movement, from the verb. Rock musical rhythm marked by a strong beat is first recorded in 1946 and became the first element in rock and roll (1954, shortened to rock, 1957). —rockier n. Before 1325, one who rocks a cradle, nurse; also, rocking chair (1852); formed from rock, v. + *-er*¹. —rocking chair (1766) —rocking horse (1724) rocket¹ n. garden plant. Before 1500 rokette; borrowed from Middle French roquette, from Italian rochetta, nuchetta, diminutive of ruca a kind of cabbage, from Latin ērūca; for suffix see -ET.

rocket² n. self-propelling device. 1611, rocket fireworks; borrowed from Italian rochetto a rocket; literally, a bobbin (from the similarity in shape; also found in Old Italian and in Medieval Latin rochetta, rocheta), diminutive of Italian rocca distaff, possibly from a Germanic source (compare Old High German rocko distaff, spinning wheel, modern German Rocken; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch rocken distaff, modern Dutch rokken, and Old Icelandic rokkr, modern Icelandic rokkur and Norwegian rokk spinning wheel, from Proto-Germanic rukka-*); for suffix see -ET.

The meaning of a device or craft carried or propelled by a rocket engine is first recorded in 1919. —v. 1803, bombard with rockets; from the noun. The meaning of fly like a rocket, soar, is first recorded in 1924. —rocketry n. 1930, formed from rocket,² n. + -ry.

rococo adj. 1836, old-fashioned, antiquated, in reference to the rococo style; borrowed from French rococo, n. and adj. By the 1840's rococo took on the meaning of having to do with lavish ornamentation, in art, music, architecture, etc., at the end of the baroque period. —n. 1840, borrowing of French rococo, apparently alteration of rocaille shellwork, with a humorous substitution of coco peek-a-boo, cocorico cock-a-doodle-do, etc. French rocaille derives from Middle French roche rock, from Vulgar Latin rocca* stone, rock¹; in reference to excessive use of shell designs in this style of ornamentation.

rod n. About 1250 rodde; found in Old English rodd a rod, pole; probably cognate with Old Icelandic rudda club.

rodent n. 1835, borrowed from Latin rōdentem (nominative rōdēns), present participle rōdere to gnaw. —adj. 1833, borrowed from Latin rōdentem (nominative rōdēns), present participle.

rodeo n. 1834, the driving together of cattle; borrowing of Spanish rodeo pen for cattle at a fair or market; also, a going round, from rodear go around, surround (from Vulgar Latin rotidiāre*, as if from a Latin rotizāre*), related to rodar revolve, roll, from Latin rotāre go around; see ROTATE.

roe¹ n. fish eggs. About 1450 row, roof; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch roge roe, Old High German rogo, rogan (modern German Rogen), and Old Icelandic hrogn (Norwegian and Danish rogn, Swedish rom), from Proto-Germanic Hrūzná* or Hrūznān*.

roe² n. small deer. Probably about 1200 ro; later roe (before 1398); developed from Old English (about 700) rā, from rāha; cognate with Old Saxon rēho roe, Middle Low German rē, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ree, Old High German rēh (modern German Reh), and Old Icelandic rā (Danish, Norwegian rå, rådyr, Swedish rådjur), from Proto-Germanic raiHōn*. —roe*buck n. Before 1387 roobukke; earlier Robucke (1209); formed from ro, roo *roe*² + bucke, bukke buck¹.

roentgen or Roentgen rays 1896 Röntgen, in allusion to Wilhelm K. Röntgen, the German physicist who discovered X rays.

roger interj. 1941, a radio communications word for the letter r (derived from the name Roger), used as an abbreviation for "received."

rogue n. 1561 roge vagabond, perhaps a shortened form of roger (pronounced with the g in go) a begging vagabond pretending to be a poor scholar from Oxford or Cambridge (about 1540); perhaps formed from Latin rogāre to ask + English *-er*¹.

roil v. 1590, probably borrowed from Middle French rouiller to rust, make muddy, from Old French rouil, rouille mud, rust, (compare Old Provençal rovilh, rovilha), from Vulgar Latin rōbīcula*, alteration of Latin rōbīgō (genitive rōbīgīnis) rust.

The sense of disturb, irritate, vex, is first recorded before 1734.

roister v. 1582, from the obsolete noun roister (1551, roisterer); probably borrowed from Middle French ruistre, rustre a ruffian, variant (with added r) of Old French ruste a rough country person, from Latin rūsticus RUSTIC.

role or rôle n. 1606 rowle; borrowed from French rôle part played by a person in life; literally, roll (of paper) on which an actor's part was written, from Old French rolle ROLL.

roll n. Probably before 1200 rolle scroll, list, rolled-up mass; borrowed from Old French rolle, roule, from Latin rotula small wheel, diminutive of rota wheel. The meaning of dough which is rolled over before baking is first recorded before 1450. —v. About 1300 rollen turn over and over; borrowed from Old French roller, from Vulgar Latin rotulāre*, from Latin rotula small wheel. The meaning of move about from side to side appeared before 1325, and that of make deep, loud sounds, as of thunder (1598). —roller n. 1295 rollere thing that rolls; before 1399, a rolling pin; formed from Middle English rollen to roll + -ere *-er*¹.

rollicking adj. 1826, adjective use of the present participle of rollick to frolic, sport; perhaps a blend of roll, v. + frollic, v.

roly-poly adj. 1820, probably a varied reduplication of roll, influenced by roly-poly, n., name of various games in which a ball is rolled (1713). The formation is found as early as 1601 meaning a rascal.

romaine n. 1907, borrowing of French romaine, from feminine of Old French romain Roman, from Latin Rōmānus Roman; perhaps so called because this lettuce was introduced into France at the time of the Avignon papacy (1309–77).

Roman adj. Before 1325 romain of ancient Rome, its people, or their language; probably from the noun, reinforced by Old French romain, romein, roman, from Latin Rōmānus, from Rōma Rome; for suffix see -AN. This later form replaced Romanisce and Romanishe (about 1200), developed from Old English rōmānisc (before 899); borrowed from Latin Rōmānus + -isc -ish. —n. About 1300 romein, borrowed from Old French romain, romein, adj. and n.; earlier as a surname Roman (1205); developed from Old English romane inhabitant of ancient Rome or of the Roman Empire (before 899); borrowed from Latin Rōmānus, adj. and n. —Roman Catholic 1605, member of the Church of Rome; 1614, of or belonging to the Church of Rome. —Roman numeral (1735) roman¹ adj. of or in the upright style of type, typical of Roman inscription, and most used in printing, as distinguished from italic. 1519 Romayne, borrowed from Middle French Romain, from Old French romain; see ROMAN. The spelling in lower-case form is first found in 1848. —n. 1598, from the adjective.

roman² n. a novel. 1889, borrowing of French roman, from Old French romanz verse narrative; see ROMANCE. The term roman à clef, a novel in which the characters represent real persons; literally, novel with a key, is first found in English in 1893.

romance n. Probably before 1300 romaunce; about 1300 romance story about the adventures of some hero in chivalry; later, the vernacular language of France, as opposed to Latin (before 1338); borrowed from Old French romans, romanz verse narrative; originally, an adverb with the meaning of in the vernacular language, from Vulgar Latin rōmānicē* scribere to write in a Romance language (that is, one developed from Latin instead of Frankish), from Latin Rōmānicus of or in the Roman style, from Rōmānus Roman. In English Romance was later extended to include Spanish, Italian, etc., developed from Latin (1612).

The meaning of an adventurous or imaginative quality, is first recorded in 1801, and that of a love affair, idealistic quality in a love affair, is found in 1916. —v. About 1390, recite a narrative, give an account of; from the noun. The meaning of exaggerate, is first recorded in English in 1671, and that of court as a lover in 1942.

Romanesque adj. 1715, descended from Latin, Romance; later, of the architectural style developed in Europe between the Roman and Gothic periods of architecture (1819); formed from English Roman + -esque, influenced in form by French romanesque.

romantic adj. 1659, borrowed from French romantique, from Middle French romant a romance, formed as an oblique case of the Old French noun romanz verse narrative, see ROMANCE; for suffix see -IC. The form romantic displaced romancical (1656, formed from English romance + -ical). —n. 1679, from the adjective. The meaning of romantic person is first recorded in 1865. —romanticism n. 1803, formed from English romantic, adj. + -ism. The meaning of a tendency toward romantic ideas is first recorded in English in 1840, and applied to literature, music, or art, is probably borrowed from French romanticisme. —romanticist n. (1830) —romanticize v. (1818) romp v. 1709, perhaps variant of RAMP², v. —n. 1734, from the verb. —rompers n. pl. 1909, formed from English romp, v. + -er + -s, modeled after trousers, pants, etc.

Romany n. 1812 romani Romany, feminine of romano, adj., Gypsy, from rom man, husband, male Gypsy, plural romá, from Sanskrit (Prākrit) ḍomba-s, ḍoma-s a male member of a low caste of musicians.

rondeau n. 1525, short poem; borrowing of Middle French rondeau, from Old French rondel RONDEL. The meaning of a musical composition, now rondo is first recorded in English in 1773.

rondel n. About 1380 roundel, short poem, borrowed from Old French rondel, literally, small circle, diminutive of roont (feminine roonde) circular, ROUND; so called because the initial couplet is repeated in the middle and at the end.

rondo n. 1797, a musical composition of one principal theme; borrowing of Italian rondo, from French rondeau, rondel, from Old French rondel little round; see RONDEL, RONDEAU.

rood n. Before 1121 rode the cross on which Christ died, crucifix; later rood (before 1400); developed from Old English (before 830) rōd cross, pole, measure of land; cognate with Old Frisian rōd, rōde gallows, Old Saxon rōda pole, gallows, cross, roof n. About 1175 rof; later roof (1431); developed from Old English hrōf roof, ceiling, top (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hrōf roof, Middle Low German rōf, nīf roof, covering, Middle Dutch roef (modern Dutch roef deckhouse), Old Icelandic hrōf boat shed (from Proto-Germanic Hrōfaz*). —v. Before 1420 rofen, from the noun.

Middle Low German rōde rod, stick, Middle Dutch roede (modern Dutch roede, roe), Old High German ruota (modern German Rute), and Old Icelandic rōdha rod, cross (influenced in meaning by Old English rōd), from Proto-Germanic rōdō*.

rook¹ n. European crow. Probably about 1200 roc; later, rook (before 1325), developed from Old English (about 725) hrōc; cognate with Middle Low German rōk rook, Middle Dutch roec (modern Dutch roek), Old High German hruoh, ruoho, Old Icelandic hrōker rook (modern Icelandic hrōkur, Swedish röka, Danish råge), from Proto-Germanic Hrōkaz*.

The word was applied to persons as a disparaging term as early as 1508 and extended by 1577 to mean a cheat, especially at cards or dice. —v. About 1590, to cheat; from the noun. —rookery n. 1725, formed from English rook + -ery.

rook² n. chess piece. Probably before 1300 roke; later rok (before 1338), and rook (probably before 1430); borrowed from Old French roc, from Arabic rukḥḥ, from Persian rukḥ, of unknown meaning, but in Middle English confused with ROC.

rookie n. 1892, inexperienced recruit, perhaps an alteration of recruit, influenced by *rook*¹ in the sense of a person easily duped.

room n. Probably about 1200 rum space; later roum (about 1330); developed from Old English rīm (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon rīm space, room, Middle Dutch ruum (modern Dutch ruim), Old High German rūm (modern German Raum), Old Icelandic rūm (Swedish and Danish rum, Norwegian rom), and Gothic rūm, from Proto-Germanic rūman*, with corresponding adjectives in Old English rūm roomy, spacious, Middle Dutch ruum, Old High German rūmi, Old Icelandic rūmr, and Gothic rūms, from Proto-Germanic rūmaz*. The sense of a chamber or cabin appeared (1312–13) as a nautical term; and was first applied to dwellings or houses in the 1400's. —v. 1828, from the noun.

roost n. Before 1398 rooste a chicken's perch; developed from Late Old English (before 1100) hrōst; cognate with Old Saxon hrōst framework of a roof, attic, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch roest roost, of unknown origin. —v. 1530, from the noun. —rooster n. 1772, formed from roost, n. + -er; compare roost cock (1606). The use of rooster came to be strongly favored in the United States over the use of cock probably for euphemistic reasons (cock being an English equivalent of penis, attested since 1618). Similar hypersensitive changes are found in occupy in the 1500's and 1600's, and in the pronunciation of harass and Uranus in contemporary English.

root¹ n. underground part of a plant. 1127 rot, also rote (probably before 1200); found in Late Old English rōt; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rōt root, Norwegian and Swedish rot, with traditional loss of w- before r in wrōt*, vrōt*). Late Old English rōt, perhaps also represented in wrōt*, is a collateral form of Old English wyrt root, herb, plant, which is related to Latin rādīx root; see WORT. —v. Probably before 1200 roten (in past participle roted) fix or establish firmly; from the noun. The meaning of pull, dig, or take out (as in to root out evil) is recorded before 1500. —rootless adj. (about 1385) root² v. dig with the snout. 1538, alteration (influenced by *root*¹) of Middle English wroten dig with the snout (about 1200); developed from Old English (about 725) wrōtan; cognate with Middle Low German wrōten dig with the snout, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wroeten, Old High German ruozzen, and Old Icelandic rōta (Norwegian rote, Swedish rota, Danish rode), from Proto-Germanic wrōtanan*. The meaning of poke, pry, search is first recorded in 1831.

root³ v. cheer or support a contestant, etc. 1889, probably derived from earlier sense of *root*², v. to study or work hard (1856).

rope n. About 1200 rope, developed from Old English (about 725) rāp; cognate with Old Frisian rāp in silrāp shoe thong, Middle Low German rēp rope, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch reep, Old High German reif hoop (modern German Reifen), Old Icelandic reip rope (Norwegian reip, Swedish rep, Danish reb), and Gothic -raip in skaudaraip shoe thong, from Proto-Germanic raipaz*. —v. About 1515, from the noun. The irregular form raipen is recorded once in Middle English before 1325. —ropy adj. 1480, formed from Middle English rope, n. + *-y*¹.

rorqual n. 1827, borrowing of French rorqual, from Norwegian reyrkeval, from Old Icelandic reyðharhvalr (reyðhr rorqual, related to raudhr RED + hvalr WHALE); compare NARWHAL.

Rorschach test 1927, in allusion to Hermann Rorschach, who devised this test.

rosary n. About 1440 rosarie rose garden; borrowed from Latin rosarium, from neuter of rosarius of roses, from rosa rose; for suffix see -ARY. The sense of a series of prayers (1547) probably came from Middle French rosaire developed as a figurative sense of a rose garden, conveying the idea of a "garden" of prayers, corresponding Medieval hortulus animae little garden of the soul, meaning prayerbook.

rose n. Old English rose, rōse (before 899); borrowed from Latin rosa; later, in Middle English influenced by Old French rose which reinforced the spelling rose. The Latin word was borrowed by other Germanic languages: compare Middle Dutch rōse (modern Dutch roos), Old High German rōsa (modern German Rose), Old Icelandic rōsa (Danish and Norwegian rose, Swedish ros).

Latin rosa was probably adapted from Greek rhōdon rose (compare Aeolic wrōdon, from Persian vrda-*, represented by Armenian vard rose). —adj. 1816, from the noun. —rosy adj. About 1381; formed from rose + *-y*¹, but probably modeled on Old French rosé pink, rosy. The sense of bright, cheerful, is first recorded in English in 1775.

rosemary n. 1373 rosemarye, borrowed from Latin rōsmarīnus the plant; literally, dew of the sea (rōs dew + marīnus MARINE). Middle English rosmarine was a literal translation of the Latin; the formation of rosemary was by association of the word in popular etymology with rose and the name Mary.

rosette n. 1790, borrowing of French rosette, from Old French rosette, diminutive of rose rose, from Latin rosa ROSE; for suffix see -ETTE.

rosin n. 1295 rosyn; before 1393 rosine; both forms borrowed as alterations of Old French raisine, rousine, variants of résine RESIN, and also borrowed through Anglo-Latin rosina, from Medieval Latin rosina, from Latin rēsina. —v. 1356 (implied in rosinyne rosin); from the noun.

roster n. 1727, military roster; borrowed from Dutch rooster table, list; originally, gridiron, from Middle Dutch roosten to ROAST; so called from the parallel lines drawn on the paper in making a list; for suffix see -ER¹.

rostrum n. 1542, borrowing of Latin rōstrum platform in the Forum decorated with the beaks of ships taken in the first naval victory of the Republic; also, beak, muzzle, snout; originally, means of gnawing, instrument-noun to rōdere gnaw. The sense of a platform for public speaking is first recorded in English in 1766.

rot v. Probably before 1200 roten, developed from Old English rotian (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian rotia to rot, Old Saxon rotōn, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch roten (modern Dutch rotten), Old High German rozzēn, and Old Icelandic rotna to rot (Norwegian rotne, rātne, Swedish ruttna, Danish raadne), a weak verb formed from Proto-Germanic rut-*, the same stem as is found in Old Icelandic rotinn, whence English rotten. —n. Before 1325, either from the verb or possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare modern Icelandic and Norwegian rot decay, corruption, related to Old Icelandic rotna to rot).

rotary adj. 1731, borrowed from Medieval Latin rotarius pertaining to wheels, from Latin rota wheel; for suffix see -ARY.

rotate v. 1808, probably a back formation from rotation; for suffix see -ATE¹. —rotation n. 1555, borrowed possibly through Middle French rotation, and directly from Latin rotātiōnem (nominative rotātiō), from rotāre revolve, roll; for suffix see -ATION. —rotator n. 1676, muscle by which a limb is rotated; borrowed from Latin rotātor one that causes to rotate, a spinner, from rotāre to rotate; for suffix see -OR². —rotatory adj. 1755, formed from English rotator + *-y*¹, or from Latin rotator + English *-y*¹.

rotavirus n. 1974, wheel-shaped virus causing inflammation of the lining of the stomach and intestines; formed from Latin rota wheel + English virus.

rote n. Probably about 1300, in the phrase bi rote by heart, according to form; of uncertain origin; occasionally said to be connected with Old French rote, route a way or route, or from Latin rota wheel.

roisserie n. 1868, restaurant where meat is roasted on a spit; borrowed from French roisserie shop selling cooked foods; also, restaurant, from rôtiss-, stem of rôtir to roast, from Old French rostit ROAST.

rotogravure n. 1913 Rotogravure; borrowed from German Rotogravur, said to be a blending of two company names: Roto(phot) and (Deutsche Photo)gravur (roto- ultimately from Latin rota wheel + gravur; see GRAVURE).

rotor n. 1873, shortened form of ROTATOR, paralleling vector; the sense coming from velocity of rotation about an axis (called a rotor); later rotating part of a machine (1903).

rotten adj. Probably before 1300 rotten, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rotinn decayed, past participle of an old strong verb, related to rotna to decay, ROT).

The sense of corrupt (as in "Something is rotten in the state of Denmark") is recorded from about 1380. The weakened sense of bad, nasty, lousy (as in rotten luck) appeared in 1881, along with use as an adverbial intensifier (as in spoiled rotten).

rotund adj. 1705, borrowed from Latin rotundus round, circular, like a wheel, related to rota wheel. The form rotund replaced rotound (1619), which developed from rotounde (probably before 1425). The Middle English word was a borrowing of Italian rotondo round; see ROTUNDA. —rotundity n. 1597, roundness; borrowed from Latin rotunditas, from rotundus round; for suffix see -ITY.

rotunda n. 1611, alteration of Italian rotonda (originally feminine of rotondo, adj.), from Latin rotunda, feminine of rotundus ROUND.

roué n. 1800, borrowing of French roué dissipated man, rake; originally, past participle of Old French rouer to break on the wheel, from Latin rotāre roll; said to be first applied in French about 1720 to a group of profligate companions of the Regent of France (1715–23), to suggest that they deserved to be broken on the wheel.

rouge n. 1753, borrowing of French rouge red coloring matter; also, as an adjective, red, from Old French rouge red, from Latin rubeus red; related to ruber red. This was a reborrowing of a word that existed in Middle English as a noun meaning a red color (1437), and as an adjective (before 1425), both borrowed from Old French. It was also used in various titles, such as Rouge Dragon. The modern equivalent term for the cosmetic is blush. —v. 1777, from the noun.

rough adj. Probably before 1200 ruhe shaggy, hairy; also ruchæ rugged, uneven (probably about 1225); developed from Old English (about 1000) nūh; cognate with Middle Low German nū, nūch, nūw shaggy, hairy, rough, Middle Dutch nuch (modern Dutch nug), and Old High German nūh (modern German rau rough), from Proto-Germanic nūHaz*.

The original sound represented by gh in rough, and also in cough, laugh, etc., was a guttural ch, as in Scottish loch or German ach. As the pronunciation shifted to the sound of f in off, the spelling of many words also changed to reflect this process, as in draft for draught, etc.; but a group of spellings remained fixed. —n. Probably before 1200 ruhe rough surface; later rough quality of being rough, coarseness (about 1353); probably from the adjective. The sense of a stretch of rough ground is first recorded in 1600. The phrase in the rough in a rough state, appeared in 1823. —adv. About 1300 rowe angrily, fiercely; later, roghe in a violent manner, roughly (probably about 1390); from the adjective. —v. 1763, especially in rough up to make rough; from the adjective. The phrase to rough it to live without conveniences is first recorded in 1768. An earlier form rouen to cough is first recorded before 1300, developed from late Old English hrohan and disappeared in early modern English. —roughage n. 1883, rough grass or weeds; formed from English rough, adj. + -age. The meaning of coarse, bulky kinds of food, such as bran, is first recorded about 1927. —roughen v. 1582, formed from English rough, adj. + *-en*¹. —roughly adv. About 1300 rohly, rulhi violently; formed from ruhe rough + *-ly*¹. The meaning of approximately is first recorded in 1841. —roughness n. Before 1398, rouznesse, rowenesse; formed from rowe, rouzh rough + -nes.

roulette n. Before 1734, a small wheel; later, a gambling game played on a revolving wheel (1745); borrowing of French roulette the gambling game, a small wheel, from Old French roetele little wheel; formed on the model of Late Latin rotella (diminutive of Latin rota wheel); for suffix see -ETTE.

round adj. Probably before 1300 round circular or spherical; also rowund, rount, roend; borrowed through Anglo-French röunde, röunt, and directly from Old French roont, roond (feminine roonde), and reont, probably (with loss of the medial consonant) from redond*, rodond*, from Vulgar Latin retundus*. Formation of Vulgar Latin retundus* (evidenced by existent Provençal redon, redun, Spanish and Portuguese redondo, Old Italian ritondo) is assumed by dissimilation of the "rounded" vowel sound represented by o and by u around t in Latin rotundus like a wheel, circular, round, related to rota wheel. —adv. About 1300 rounde in a ring or circle; from the adjective. The meaning of throughout (as in the year round) is first recorded in 1753. —v. About 1387 rounden be curved, make circular; from the adjective. —n. Before 1325 round a halo; also, round mass (about 1330); borrowed from Old French roond, roont and noun use of Middle English round, adj. —prep. 1602, from the adjective, and as a shortened form of around. —rounder n. 1624, sentinel; later, chronic drunkard or criminal, loafer, especially one who, originally, went habitually from offense to jail (1854). —roundly adv. Probably before 1425, in an arc; also, completely, fully; formed from Middle English round + *-ly*¹. —round number 1648, from earlier sense of full or complete, also used in reference to numbers (1340).

roundelay n. Probably before 1430, in Lydgate's writings; borrowed from Middle French rondellet, diminutive of rondel short poem with a refrain; literally, small circle, from Old French rondel, diminutive of rond circle, sphere; originally, an adjective and late variant of roont, roond; see ROUND. The spelling roundelay developed from an association with *lay*³ (poem to be sung), probably confused with the French pronunciation of -let in rondellet.

rouse v. About 1460 rowsen (implied in rowsyng rising); later, (of a hawk) to shake the feathers or the body (before 1475); probably borrowed from Anglo-French or Old French, but of uncertain origin. The meaning of start from sleep is first recorded in 1590, and the variant form arouse in 1593, on the pattern of such pairs as rise, arise, wake, awake.

roust v. 1658, a probable alteration of ROUSE. —roustabout n. 1868, a deck hand or wharf laborer; formed from roust + about. The sense of a casual or unskilled laborer is first recorded in 1877 and that of a worker in a circus in 1931.

A parallel form rouseabout (1746, a rough, drifter), is almost certainly an independent formation from rouse + about, and is also known in Australian English with the meaning of a hired hand on a sheep station, from 1881.

roust n. flight of a defeated army in disorder. 1598, borrowed from Middle French route disorderly flight of troops; literally, a breaking off or rupture, from Latin rupta, feminine past participle of rumpere to break. —v. About 1600 (implied in routing, n.), to put (an army) to rout; from the noun.

Earlier use (sometimes analyzed as a separate form because of a difference in application) is found in the of a group of soldiers (probably before 1225); later, a gang of outlaws or disorderly people, a mob (about 1300), and in run in rout (rennen in rowte, before 1400).

roust v. poke about, rummage. 1547–64, (of swine) dig with the snout, root; irregular variant of ROOT². The sense of search out, bring to light, uncover is found in 1805, and a sense, used in carpentry, of hollow out, scoop out, gouge, in 1726. —router n. (1818) route n. Probably before 1200 rute a way, road; later route a course, progression (before 1333); borrowed from Old French rute, from Latin rupta via a road opened up by force, from rupta, feminine past participle of rumpere to break. The meaning of a fixed or regular course for carrying things (as in the overland mail route) is first recorded in 1792, and is an extension of a customary path of animals, game trail (about 1410). —v. 1881, from the noun.

routine n. Before 1680, borrowing of French routine usual course of action, beaten path, from route way, path, course; see ROUTE. The computer sense of a sequence of coded instructions for a specific task is recorded from 1945. —adj. 1817, following routine, mechanical, unvaried; from the noun. —v. 1897, from the noun and adjective.

rove v. 1536, wander about, roam; of uncertain origin, possibly a dialectal variant of earlier northern British English and Scottish dialect rave to wander, stray, rove; developed from Middle English raven (probably about 1380), probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Icelandic rāfa to wander, rove); or perhaps found in obsolete rove to sail as pirates, roam the seas as rovers (implied in roving, 1513), which was probably a back formation from ROVER.

rover n. Before 1393 rovere, borrowed from Middle Dutch rover, rovere robber, predator, plunderer (especially in zeerovere sea robber, pirate), from roven to ROB; for suffix see -ER¹.

row¹ n. line of people or things. Probably before 1200 rawe order, succession; also, a row or line of people or things (probably about 1200); developed from Old English rēaw a row, line (940, also probably rāw, and in Late Old English rēawe, rēwe). The Old English rēaw (from Proto-Germanic raiwiwiz*) is probably cognate with Middle Dutch rie line, row (modern Dutch rij), Middle High German rihe (modern German Reihe line, row, series), Old High German riga line (modern German Riege squad, section), and dialectal Norwegian reig row.

row² v. propel a boat by using oars. Probably before 1200 rowen, also, in the spelling rowen (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 950) rōwan; cognate with Middle Dutch roeyen, royen to row (modern Dutch roeien), Middle Low German rōien, rōen, Middle High German rōn, ruejen, and Old Icelandic rōa (Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish ro). —n. 1832, from the verb. —rowboat n. (1538) row³ n. noisy commotion or disturbance. 1746, of uncertain origin; perhaps related to, or a shortened form of, rouse a carousal or bout of drinking (1602), also spelled rouse (1604), a shortened form of carouse. —v. 1790, to tease; later, to make a noisy disturbance (1797); from the noun.

rowdy n. 1808, probably formed on ROW³, n. —adj. 1819, from the noun.

rowel n. 1344 ruel small wheel; later rowel small wheel with sharp points on a spur (about 1400); borrowed from Old French roelle, ruele little wheel; see ROULETTE.

royal adj. About 1250 royal fit for a king, magnificent; later, pertaining to a monarch, majestic, regal (about 1375); borrowing of Old French royal, roial, from Latin rēgālis, from rēx (genitive rēgis) king; for suffix see -AL¹.

French origin is evident in the position of the adjective after the noun, as in battle royal (1672). —n. Before 1400 royalle a royal person; from the adjective. —royalty n. About 1390 roialtee magnificence, wealth; also royalte royal authority (probably before 1400); probably formed from Middle English royal + -te *-ty*², on the model of Old French roiauté, from roial royal. The sense of royal persons collectively is first recorded in 1480, and that of a share of the earnings made from the use of land and mineral rights (1839), or from the sale of a publication, such as a book, musical composition, etc. (1857), derived from the meaning of a royal prerogative or right granted to an individual or corporation (1483).

rub v. Before 1325 robben to rub, massage, rubben to scratch (before 1338); later to rub (about 1378); of uncertain origin (compare East Frisian rubben to scratch, rub, and Low German rubbelig, rubberig rough, uneven, and Danish and Norwegian rubbe, Swedish rubba to rub, scrub). —n. 1586, an obstacle in bowls; from the verb. The sense of any obstacle (as in Hamlet's there's the rub) is first recorded in 1590. The general meaning of an act or spell of rubbing is not recorded before 1615.

rubber n. 1) a hard brush, cloth, or the like, used for rubbing. 1536, formed from English rub, v. + *-er*¹. 2) India rubber (elastic substance obtained from the latex of tropical plants). 1788–89, called rubber from its use originally as an eraser.

rubbish n. About 1400 robous; later robys (1429–30), and robish (1477), found in Anglo-French robouses (1419), and rubouses (1392–93); of uncertain origin (connection with Old French is not possible to establish); development with the suffix -ish may have been through some erroneous association with the verb rub. —v. 1953, treat with contempt, originally Australian and New Zealand figurative use; from the noun.

rubble n. 1376–77 robeyl, 1425 rubyll, probably related to rubous, robys RUBBISH (rubble being considered the rubbish of demolished buildings); the suffix -le is unaccounted for.

rube n. 1899, respelling of Reub (1896), shortened form or nickname of Reuben, perhaps because it was considered a common name among countryfolk.

Rube Goldberg 1940's, (of an invention, device, or scheme) ridiculously complicated, in allusion to Rube Goldberg an American cartoonist noted for depicting fantastically complicated mechanical inventions for performing the simplest tasks.

rubella n. 1883, New Latin rubella rash, from Latin, neuter plural of rubellus reddish, a diminutive related to ruber RED.

rubicund adj. Probably before 1425 rubicunde red, reddish; borrowed from Latin rubicundus red, very red, related to ruber RED.

rubidium n. 1861, New Latin, from Latin rubidus red, from rubere be red, related to ruber RED; so called in reference to the two red lines in the element's spectrum.

rubric n. Probably about 1300 robryk directions in religious services, often in red writing or print; later rubrice any title or heading of a book (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French rubrique, and directly from Latin rubrica red ochre, red coloring matter, from ruber RED.

ruby n. Probably about 1300 ribe, about 1325 ruby; borrowed from Old French rubī, probably from Medieval Latin rubinus lapis red stone, from Latin rubeus red, related to ruber RED. —adj. About 1477, from the noun.

rucksack n. 1866, borrowing of German Rucksack; dialectal (Alpine) German Ruck (standard German Rücken the back) + Sack bag.

ruckus n. 1890 ruus (originally dialectal); sometimes suggested as a blend of earlier ruction disturbance (1825) and rumpus (1764).

rudder n. 1377–78 rother device for steering a boat; also found as roper oar (about 1225); developed from Old English (about 725) rōthor paddle or oar; also in compounds, scip-rōthor ship rudder. Old English rōthor is cognate with Old Frisian rōther rudder, Middle Dutch roder, roeder (modern Dutch roer), Old High German ruodar (modern German Ruder), and Old Icelandic rōdhr act of rowing (modern Icelandic rōdhur, Norwegian ror rudder), from Proto-Germanic rōthru-*.

The spelling with d (for th) is first recorded in 1440 and represents a change opposite to that which occurred in father, mother, gather. The spelling with u appears in the late 1200's becoming established in the 1600's. —v. 1856, from the noun.

ruddy adj. Late Old English (before 1100) rudi, probably from rudu redness, related (with different vowel grade) to rēad and rēod RED; for suffix see -y¹.

rude adj. Probably about 1280 reud (of a board) coarse, rough; later rude (of writing) artless, simple (before 1325), ill-mannered (probably before 1350); borrowed from Old French rude, and directly from Latin rudis rough, crude, unlearned; related to rūdus rubble.

rudiment n. 1548, borrowed from Middle French, or directly from Latin rudimentum early training, first experience, from rudis unlearned, untrained; for suffix see -MENT.

—rudimentary adj. 1839, pertaining to the rudiments of knowledge; formed from English rudiment + -ary, perhaps by influence of French rudimentaire, and replacing earlier rudimental (1597).

rue¹ v. feel regret. Probably about 1150 rewen; later reuwen (about 1300), and ruen (about 1330); developed from a blend of: 1) Old English hrēowan make sorry, grieve (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian riowa to affect with sorrow, rue, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rouwen to mourn, lament, Old Saxon hrewan to regret, rue, Old High German hriuwān (modern German reuen), from Proto-Germanic Hrewanan*, and Old Icelandic hryggja make sad, from Proto-Germanic Hruvjanan*; and 2) hrēowan feel pain or sorrow; cognate with Old Saxon hriwōn and Old High German hriuwōn.

rue² n. plant. Before 1300, borrowing of Old French rue, from Latin rūta rue (the plant), probably from Greek rhýtē.

ruff n. 1523, ruffle on a sleeve; probably a shortened form of RUFFLE¹, v. (found in ruffling, adj. forming ruffles).

ruffian n. 1531, borrowed from Middle French rufian, from Italian ruffiano a pander, pimp, of uncertain origin. The English meaning of a rough, brutal person, rowdy, may have been influenced by the similarity in sound with the word rough because earliest citations refer to rough behavior and thieves, not to the business of pimping. —adj. 1533, from the noun.

ruffle¹ v. make rough or uneven, wrinkle. Before 1325 ruffelen stir up, poke about; cognate with Low German ruffelen to crumple, curl, Dutch roffelen work roughly, and perhaps Old Icelandic hrufila to scratch, of unknown origin.

The meaning of disarrange (hair or feathers) is first recorded about 1450, and that of make irregular, disorder, in 1528; the sense of annoy, disconcert is found in 1658. —n. 1533, disorder or confusion; from the verb.

ruffle² n. low, steady drumbeat. 1779, noun use of earlier ruffle, v., to beat a drum with a low, steady beat (1721). The verb may be a frequentative form of roffe (1688), ruff low steady drumbeat (1706); perhaps of imitative origin; for suffix see -LE³.

rufous adj. 1782, borrowed from Latin rūfus RED; for suffix see -OUS; used to describe the color of birds and other animals, often becoming part of the name, as in rufous hummingbird, rufous lemur.

rug n. 1551–52, coarse fabric; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian dialect nugga coarse coverlet, Swedish nugg ruffled or coarse hair, and Old Icelandic rogg shaggy tuft); related to RAG. The meaning of a coverlet or wrap is first recorded in English in 1591, and that of a mat for the floor, in 1808.

Rugby n. 1864, named after Rugby, school where the game was played, in Rugby, a city in central England.

rugged adj. Probably before 1300, rough with hair, shaggy; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rogg shaggy tuft); see RUG; for suffix see -ED². The sense of rough, uneven, suggests some relation to rug. The sense of rough, uneven, is first recorded in 1548, and that of harsh, severe, in 1597, and of strong, hardy, in 1731.

ruin n. About 1375 myne a falling down or collapse of a building, etc.; also, a condition of ruin, degradation (about 1380); borrowed from Old French ruine and directly from Latin ruina a collapse, related to ruere to rush, fall, collapse. The sense of devastation, wreckage, ruins, is found before 1420. —v. 1581, to destroy, eradicate; borrowed through Middle French ruiner, or directly from Medieval Latin ruinare, from Latin ruina ruin, n. —ruination n. 1664, ruin, destruction; derived from English ruinate reduce to ruins (before 1548); borrowed from Medieval Latin ruinatus, past participle of ruinare to destroy, ruin; for suffix see -ATION. —ruinous adj. About 1384 ruynouse going to ruin, dilapidated; borrowed from Latin ruinōsus fallen to ruin, from ruina a collapse, ruin; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of causing ruin, destructive, disastrous, is found probably before 1439.

rule n. Probably before 1200 riwle principle or regulation governing conduct; also reule (before 1225), and rule (about 1378); borrowed from Old French riule, reule, from Vulgar Latin regula* alteration (by influence of regere to rule) of Latin regula straight stick, bar, ruler, pattern; related to regere to rule, straighten, guide; see RIGHT. —v. Probably before 1200 riwlen to direct, guide, regulate; borrowed from Old French riuler, reuler, from Vulgar Latin regulāre* to regulate, from regula rule. —ruler n. Before 1382 rewlere one who rules; also, straight edge; formed from rewlen, riwlen to rule + -er¹.

rum¹ n. liquor made from sugar cane or molasses. 1654, apparently shortened form of rumbullion (about 1651), of uncertain origin. The form rombostion, with the same meaning, is recorded in 1652. English rum was borrowed into Dutch, Portuguese, Danish, and Italian as rum, into German as Rum, into Swedish and Russian as rom, into French as rum, (later) rhum, and Spanish as ron.

rum² adj. Before 1700, good, fine, excellent; alteration of earlier rome fine (1567); said to be borrowed from Romany rom male, husband (see ROMANY), but the semantic connection is not at all clear.

rumba n. 1922, borrowing of Cuban Spanish rumba, originally spree, carousal, party, from Spanish rumbo spree, party; earlier, pomp, ostentation, leadership; originally, the course of a ship, an alteration of rombo rhombus, in reference to the compass marked with a rhombus. —v. 1938, from the noun.

rumble v. About 1375 romblen make noise; also romblen move with a heavy continuous sound (about 1380); of uncertain origin (compare Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rommelen to rumble, Middle High German and modern German rummeln, Old Swedish rumbla, Danish and Norwegian rumle, and Old Icelandic rymja to shout, roar). —n. About 1385 rumbel, probably from the verb. The sense of commotion, uproar, is recorded about 1395 and that of a street fight in the 1940's. In this later use, rumble is perhaps an Anglicization of Spanish rumbo.

ruminant n. 1661, borrowed from Latin ruminantem (nominative rumināns), present participle of rumināre to chew the cud; see RUMINATE; for suffix see -ANT. —adj. 1679, from the noun.

ruminare v. 1533, turn over in the mind, muse or meditate on; also, chew the cud (1547); borrowed from Latin ruminātus, past participle of rumināre to chew the cud, chew or turn over again, turn over in the mind, meditate, from rūmen (genitive rūminis) gullet; for suffix see -ATE¹. —rumination n. 1600, contemplation, meditation; probably formed in English from ruminare + -ation, on the model of Latin ruminātiōnem (nominative ruminātiō), from rumināre.

rummage n. 1526 romage act of arranging cargo in a ship; shortened form of Middle French arrumage arrangement of cargo, from arrumer to stow cargo (a- to + -rumer, probably from Germanic; compare Old Icelandic rūm compartment in a ship, and Gothic and Old High German rūm space); for suffix see -AGE. —rummage sale (1858) —v. 1544, to arrange (cargo) in a ship; from the noun. The meaning of search thoroughly is first recorded before 1616.

rummy n. 1910 rum, rhum, rhummy; of uncertain origin. The spelling rummy appeared in 1915. The name gin rummy for a kind of rummy game is first recorded in 1941.

rumor n. About 1380 rumour unsubstantiated report, hearsay, gossip; borrowed from Old French rumour widespread noise or report, and directly from Latin rūmor noise, clamor, report, common talk, rumor, related to ravus hoarse. —v. 1594, to circulate by way of rumor, from the noun.

rump n. About 1410 rumpe rump of a quadruped animal, tail; as a surname (about 1170); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish rumpa rump, buttocks, Danish and Norwegian rumpe, and Icelandic rumpr, which are cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch romp trunk, torso, Middle Low German rump, and Middle High German rumpe, modern German Rumpf).

The sense of a small, unimportant, or contemptible remnant (derived from the sense of a tail), is first recorded in English in 1649, in reference to English parliamentary history. —adj. small, unimportant, inferior, as of a splinter group. 1605, from the noun.

rumple v. 1603, possibly a variant of earlier (and now dialectal) rimple to wrinkle (probably before 1400, developed from Old English hrympel), influenced in alteration to rumpel by Dutch rompelen, Middle Dutch rumpelen. —n. 1500–20, possibly a variant of earlier rimple a wrinkle (1440), influenced in alteration to rumpel by Middle Dutch rumpel, from the verb in Middle Dutch.

rumpus n. 1764, of uncertain origin (perhaps a fanciful alteration of robustious boisterous, noisy, before 1548).

run v. About 1325 runnen, representing originally distinct forms: a strong intransitive verb and a weak transitive verb, both commonly recorded in Middle and Old English with sounds of the initial syllable transposed. The strong intransitive verb, Middle English rinnen and irnen (both probably before 1200), developed from Old English rinnan, irnan, past tense ran, past participle runnen; cognates with Old Frisian rinna, Old Saxon rinnan, Middle Dutch rinnen, Old High German rinnan (modern German rinnen to run, flow), Old Icelandic rinna (Norwegian renne, Swedish rinna, Danish rinde), and Gothic rinnan, from Proto-Germanic renwanan*. The weak transitive verb, Middle English rennen (before 1121) and ernen (probably about 1200), developed from Old English ærnan, earnan; cognates with Old Frisian renna to cause to run, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rennen, Old Saxon rennian, Old High German rennen, Old Icelandic renna to cause to run (Norwegian renne, Swedish ränna, Danish rende), and Gothic urranjan let go up, from original (rannjanan*), a causative of a Proto-Germanic root ren-*. —n. About 1390 ren a running, a run; from the verb. The spelling run for the noun is not found before 1450.

runcible spoon 1871, a nonsense phrase coined by Edward Lear, of unknown origin; perhaps formed on the botanical term runcinate (1776) irregularly saw-toothed (formed from Latin runcina a plane, but taken to mean a saw or something sharp-edged) + the suffix -ible; or an alteration of runcival (1573, variant of rouneival) large for its kind; however, Lear used the term with indistinct meaning, applying runcible to a cat (1877), to a hat (1888), and to a goose and a wall (1895). About 1926 runcible spoon was adopted as the name of a spoon-like three-pronged fork.

rune n. 1685 (but implied in runic, 1662); introduced into English by early Germanic philologists from a Scandinavian source, possibly Danish rune (compare modern and Old Icelandic rún rune). An obsolete parallel form was known in Middle English rune, roune utterance, whisper, murmur, message (probably about 1175); language, speech (probably before 1200); song, poem (probably about 1200); and in Old English rūn, rūne a secret or mystery (about 950); a runic letter (before 899); and counsel or consultation (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon rūna a secret, mystery, counsel, rune, Middle Dutch rune, Old High German rūna, and Gothic rūna, from Proto-Germanic rūnō*. —runic adj. 1662, consisting of runes, perhaps formed in English from rune + -ic (paralleling earlier Middle English runisch, 1380); or borrowed from New Latin runicus (Icelandic rūn + Latin -icus -ic).

Runes are believed to be developed from an early contact with the Greek, and later Roman, alphabets (though prolonged contact with the Roman alphabet, especially in Christian texts, finally supplanted the runic forms before 1100).

rung n. About 1300 roungue step of a ladder; runge horizontal side rail of a cart (before 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) hrung a rod or bar; cognate with Middle Dutch ronghe spoke of a wheel (modern Dutch rong), Middle Low German and Middle High German runge, Old High German runga (modern German Runge), Gothic hrunga staff, from Proto-Germanic Hrungō*.

runnel n. 1577, small stream, alteration (probably by association with run) of Middle English (about 1350) ryneil; developed from Old English (about 825) rinelle, related to rinnan to RUN.

runt n. 1501, an old or decayed tree stump; of uncertain origin. The meaning of an ox or cow of a small breed or size, is first recorded in 1549, and that of an undersized person or animal (before 1700).

rupture n. 1392, the breaking of a vein; later, a violation of a treaty (1439); borrowing of Middle French rupture a breaking, breach, and directly from Latin ruptura the breaking (of a limb), fracture, from rupt-, past participle stem of rumpere to break; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of an abdominal hernia is first recorded probably before 1425. —v. 1739, from the noun.

rural adj. Before 1420 rural common, lowly, unlearned, unskilled; also, probably before 1425 rural of or having to do with farm work; borrowed from Middle French rural, from Latin rūralis of the countryside, from rūs (genitive rūris) open land, country; for suffix see -AL¹.

ruse n. 1625 trick, originally the dodging movements of a game animal (about 1410); borrowing of Old French ruse, reūse, noun of ruser, reūser to dodge, repel, retreat, from Latin recūsare deny, reject, oppose (re- intensive + causari plead as a reason, object, allege, from causa reason, cause).

rush¹ v. move with speed. 1375 ruschen to drive back, repel; also, move quickly, dash (about 1380); borrowed from Anglo-French russher, variant of Old French ruser, reūser to dodge, repel; see RUSE. —n. About 1380 rusche a charge, onslaught, from the verb. —adj. 1879, from the noun.

rush² n. grasslike plant with hollow stems. Before 1325 ress, about 1350 ruch; developed from Old English resc (before 1100); earlier risc (about 725); cognate with Middle Low German risch, rusch rush, Middle Dutch rusch (modern Dutch rus), Middle High German rusch.

rusk n. 1595, a hard, crisp bread; borrowed from Spanish or Portuguese rosca roll, twist of bread; literally, coil or spiral, of uncertain origin.

russet n. About 1248, a coarse homespun cloth of a reddish-brown color; later, the color (1422); borrowed from Old French rousset, from rosset, russet, adj., reddish, diminutive of ros, rous red, from Latin russus, related to nuber RED; for suffix see -ET. —adj. 1390 russet (of cloth) reddish-brown; borrowed from Old French rosset, russet reddish, or from the noun in English.

rust n. Old English rūst (about 725); cognate with Old Saxon rost rust, Old High German rost (modern German Rost), Swedish rost, Danish and Norwegian rust, and Middle Dutch and modern Dutch roest; from the root represented by Old Icelandic rydh, rydhr rust, and Old English rudu redness. —v. Probably before 1200 rusten become covered with rust; from the noun. —rusty adj. Before 1225, developed from Old English rūstig (before 899); formed from rūst rust + -ig *-y*¹. The sense of impaired by neglect, requiring exercise or practice, is first recorded in 1508.

rustic adj. Probably 1440, shortened form of rustical (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin rūsticus, from rūs (genitive rūris) open land, country; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL. The sense of rough or awkward is first recorded in 1585, and that of simple or plain in 1594. —n. About 1550, countryman, peasant; from the adjective.

rusticate v. 1660, probably a back formation from rustication, formed after Latin rūsticātus, past participle of rūsticārī live or stay in the country, from rūsticus RUSTIC; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —rustication n. 1623, borrowed from Latin rūsticātiōnem (nominative rūsticātiō) the act or fact of living or staying in the country, from rūsticārī; for suffix see -ATION.

rustle v. Before 1387 (implied in rustelyng) making a sound of things rubbing together; perhaps of imitative origin, also possibly influenced by Scandinavian words, such as Old Swedish rūska rustle, shake, and Icelandic rýsla rattle and hrista shake, tremble; for suffix see *-LE*³.

The meaning of move about vigorously, hustle, is first recorded in 1844, and that of steal (cattle, etc.) in 1882, implied in rustler. —n. 1759, from the verb.

rut¹ n. track made in the ground by the wheels of a vehicle.

1580, of uncertain origin; perhaps a variant of route, also found in Middle English rule, route. The meaning of a narrow and monotonous course of life or action, is first recorded in 1839. —v. 1607, from the noun.

rut² n. 1183 ruyth the rutting season, especially among deer; later rutte (about 1410); borrowed from Old French rut, ruit, from Vulgar Latin rūgitus*, from Late Latin rūgitus a bellowing, from Latin, past participle of rūgīre to bellow. —v. Before 1425, from the noun.

rutabaga n. 1799, borrowing of dialectal Swedish rotabagge (rot root + bagge bag).

ruth n. Probably before 1200 reuthe pity, compassion, from reowen, reuwen to RUE¹; for suffix see *-TH*¹. —ruthless adj. About 1330 reutheles; formed from reuthe pity + -les -less.

ruthenium n. 1848, New Latin, from Medieval Latin Ruthenia Russia; so called because the element was discovered in platinum ore from the Urals. The term was coined in 1828 for the platinum ore, but the word was first applied to the element itself in 1845.

-ry a suffix, a shortened form of -ery, forming especially abstract nouns with the meaning of act of, quality or condition of, as in mimicry, ribaldry, wizardry, and collective nouns, as in citizenry, jewelry, peasantry. Middle English -rie, borrowed from Old French -rie, shortened form of -erie -ERY.

rye n. Before 1325 rie cereal grass that yields rye grain; later, the grain itself (about 1333–52); developed from Old English (about 725) ryge; cognate with Old Icelandic rugr rye (Swedish råg, Danish and Norwegian rug), Old Frisian rogga, Old Saxon roggo, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch rogge, and Old High German rocko (modern German Roggen). As a shortened form of rye whiskey (1785), the word rye appeared in 1835. The form rye bread is first recorded about 1440.

S

-s¹ a suffix forming the plural of most nouns, as in books, fathers, pilgrims. Also *-es*¹ after nouns ending in s, z, sh, ch, etc. Middle English -es, -s, developed from Old English -as, nominative and accusative plural ending of certain masculine nouns.

-s² a suffix forming the third person singular (present indicative) of verbs, as in knows, looks, runs. Also *-es*² after forms ending in s, z, sh, ch, etc. Middle English -es, -s, developed from Old English -es, -as.

-s³ a suffix forming some adverbs, as in needs, unawares. Middle English -es, -s, developed from Old English -es, from the genitive singular ending of masculine and neuter nouns and adjectives.

-s⁴ a suffix forming the possessive case of nouns, as in boy's, cat's, England's, women's. Also -s' for plural nouns, as in customers' confidence, and for proper names that normally end in *-s*¹, as Jones' house. Middle English -es, -s, developed from Old English -es, genitive singular ending of masculine and neuter nouns.

Sabbath n. Old English (about 950) sabat the seventh day of the week (Saturday) observed by Jews as a day of rest; borrowed from Latin sabbatum, from Greek sábbaton, from Hebrew shabbāth, from shābath he rested. Sabbath was applied to the first day of the week (Sunday) about 1410. The spelling with double b is first recorded about 1280, and that with th though recorded before 1382, did not become widespread before the 1500's.

sabbatical adj. 1645, of or suitable for the Sabbath, formed in English from Greek sabbatikós of the Sabbath (from sábbaton SABBATH) + English -*al*¹; also probably borrowed from French sabbatique, from Greek.

The use of sabbatical to designate a year's leave of absence is granted teachers (originally every seven years to university professors) appeared in 1886; also sabbatical year, in allusion to the sabbatical year (1635–56) the seventh year, in which according to Mosaic law the land was to remain untilled and debtors and slaves were to be released. —n. Before 1934, shortened from sabbatical year.

saber n. 1680, borrowed from French sabre heavy, curved sword, alteration of sable, from German Sabel (now Säbel), from a Slavic source (compare Russian sábyla and Polish szabla sword, saber; also Hungarian szábyla saber).

sable n. Probably before 1422; borrowed from Middle French sable the mammal or its fur, from Old French, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch sabel, Middle Low German sabel, and Middle High German zabel, zobel), ultimately from Russian *sóbol*¹.

The word is recorded earlier in Middle English (probably before 1325) in the sense of black, as one of the heraldic colors, probably in reference to the color of the mammal's fur. However, this use of sable may not be the name of the mammal, since the fur is generally brown, not black, which has led to the conjecture that it may have been customary to dye sable fur black, and that the heraldic term is a different word. —adj. Before 1400 sabyll (in heraldry) black; from the noun (see note above).

sabot n. 1607, borrowing of French sabot, alteration (by association with Old French bot, bote BOOT¹) of Middle French savate old shoe, from the same indeterminate source as Catalan and Old Provençal sabata shoe, Portuguese sapato, Spanish zapato, Italian ciabatta old shoe, Basque zapatu shoe, and Arabic sabbāt sandal. Earlier sabaton a piece of armor to cover the foot (1338), and later, a kind of shoe (1423); sabbatin (1448) and sabatin (probably about 1475), are apparently different words, borrowed from Medieval Latin sabbatum.

sabotage n. 1910, borrowing of French sabotage, from saboter to sabotage, bungle, walk noisily, from sabot wooden shoe, SABOT; for suffix see -AGE. Traditionally associated with the action of striking workers who threw sabots into machinery to damage it, the verb in French (which carries the sense of bungle, execute poorly), suggests a different semantic development more closely associated with the noise the wooden shoes make in walking. —v. 1918, from the noun. —saboteur n. 1921, borrowing of French saboteur, from saboter to sabotage.

sac n. 1741, borrowing of French sac, from Latin saccus bag, SACK¹. The meaning was known earlier in Middle English (1340), as one of the meanings of sak, later sack.

saccharin n. 1885 saccharine, said to be coined from Latin saccharon (erroneously saccharum) + English -*ine*², but more likely a transferred use of saccharine, n., saccharine matter, sugar (1841), or noun use of saccharine, adj. (1674), formations in English commonly found in the vocabulary of science and technology in the 1700's and 1800's.

saccharine adj. 1674, of or like sugar; formed in English from Medieval Latin saccharum sugar, from Latin saccharon (from Greek sákcharon, from Pali sakkharā, from Sanskrit śárkarā gravel, grit, SUGAR) + English -*ine*¹. The sense of overly sweet, sugary, is first recorded in 1841–44.

sacerdotal adj. About 1400; borrowed from Old French sacerdotal, and directly from Latin sacerdōtālis of or pertaining to a priest, from sacerdōs (genitive sacerdōtis) priest; literally, one who offers sacrifices; for suffix see -AL¹.

sachem n. 1622, borrowed from Algonquian (Narragansett) sáchimau chief, ruler; cognate with Abnaki sāngman SAGAMORE. The sense of political leader, chief, ruler, is first recorded in 1684.

sachet n. 1838, borrowing of French sachet, diminutive of sac SACK. Sachet a small bag or wallet (1483), is related to sacket in the same sense (about 1450).

sack¹ n. large bag. Probably before 1200 sac; later sack (1275–76); reinforced by Old French sac, Old Icelandic sekk, and Latin saccus, but initially developed from Old English (about 1000, in West Saxon) sacc large cloth bag, but also found in Mercian sec, and Old Kentish sæc, and in sæce sackcloth. The Old English sac is an early borrowing of Latin saccus, from Greek sákkos, from Semitic (compare Hebrew saq sack), and is parallel to similar early borrowings from Latin saccus, found in Middle Dutch and Middle Low German sak sack, Old High German sac, Old Icelandic sekk, and Gothic sakkus sackcloth. —v. 1303 sekker; later sakken (about 1390); from the noun.

sack² n. act of plundering. 1549, borrowed from Middle French sac (found in the phrase mettre à sac put into a bag, also Old French a sac a command authorizing the sack of a city), from, or parallel to, Italian sacco (found in a sacco to the plunder), from Latin saccus bag, SACK¹; perhaps referring to the filling of sacks with plunder, as found in the verb of Vulgar Latin saccāre* take by force. —v. Before 1547, probably from the noun, although recorded somewhat earlier.

sack³ n. sherry. 1531–32, alteration of French vin sec dry wine, from Latin siccus dry.

sacrament n. Probably before 1200 sacrement; later sacrament (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old French sacrement, sacrament, and directly from Latin sacrāmentum a consecrating, from sacrāre to consecrate, from sacer (genitive sacrī) holy, SACRED; for suffix see -MENT. sacred adj. About 1380 sacrid, from past participle of sacren to make holy, consecrate (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French sacer, or directly from Latin sacrāre to make sacred, consecrate, from sacer (genitive sacrī) sacred, related to sancire make sacred, confirm, ratify, ordain.

sacrifice n. About 1275 sacrefise; later sacrifice (1340); borrowed from Old French sacrifise, sacrefise, and directly from Latin sacrificium, from sacrificus performing priestly functions or sacrifices (sacra sacred rites, from neuter plural of sacer SACRED + the root of facere to perform). The sense of the act of giving up one thing for another is first found in 1592. —v. About 1300 sacrifisen, formed from Middle English sacrefise, sacrifise, n. —sacrificial adj. 1607, formed from Latin sacrificium sacrifice + English -al¹.

sacrilege n. About 1303 sacrylage; later sacrilege (before 1325); borrowed from Old French sacrilege, from Latin sacrilegium temple robbery, from sacrilegus robber of temples or altars (sacrum sacred object, from neuter singular of sacer SACRED + legere take, pick up). —sacrilegious adj. About 1449 sacri-legiose; later sacrilegious (1582); formed from Middle English sacrilege + -iose -ious.

sacristan n. About 1375; earlier as a surname Sacristain (1199); borrowed from Medieval Latin sacristanus, from sacrista a sacristan, from Latin sacer (genitive sacrī) SACRED; for suffix see -AN. Middle English segerstane (1367); borrowed from Old French segrestein, secrestein, from Medieval Latin sacristanus did not survive.

sacristy n. About 1450 sacristie; borrowed from Anglo-French sacrestie, sacristie, from Medieval Latin sacristia; later sacristy (1656); probably reborrowed directly from Medieval Latin sacristia, from sacrista SACRISTAN; for suffix see -Y³.

sacrosanct adj. Before 1500 sacroseint (reinforced by Middle English seint holy, sacred); borrowed from Latin sacrōsānctus; later sacrosanct (1601); reborrowed from Latin sacrōsānctus protected by religious sanction (sacrō, ablative of sacrum religious sanction, from neuter singular of sacer SACRED + sānctus, past participle of sancire make sacred).

sacrum n. 1753, borrowing abstracted from Late Latin os sacrum sacred bone, from Latin os bone, and sacrum, neuter of sacer SACRED; probably so called because the bone was thought to be offered in sacrifices; a translation of Greek hierōn ostēon. In Middle English texts the bone was referred to as os sacrum (probably before 1425).

sad adj. Probably before 1200 sad sated, satisfied, weary or tired of; later, sorrowful, unhappy (before 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) sæd sated; cognate with Old Saxon sad sated, Middle Dutch sat (modern Dutch zat), Old High German sat (modern German satt), Old Icelandic sadhr, saddr, and Gothic sads, from Proto-Germanic sadās*. Development of the meaning sorrowful, unhappy is unclear as the seemingly intervening senses of sober, serious, appear in the record at least 75 to 100 years after the sense of unhappy and that of pensive about 170 years later. —sadden v. 1628, formed from English sad + -en¹; note, however, the verb use of Middle English saden to become sated, grow weary of (about 1390), and to become resolute, be serious (about 1378), developed from Old English sadian, and also from the adjective in Middle English; it is difficult to determine how indebted modern English sad sorrowful is to the Middle English verb.

saddle n. Probably before 1200 sadele; later sadle (probably before 1300); developed from Old English sadol seat for a rider (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Dutch sadel saddle, Old High German satul, and Old Icelandic sodhull, from Proto-Germanic sadulaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 sadelien; later sadelen (probably about 1225), sadlen (probably about 1300); developed from Old English sadolian (about 1000), from sadol, n.

sadism n. 1888, borrowed from French sadisme, from the name of Count Donatien A.F. de Sade + -isme -ism. The "Marquis" de Sade was notorious for cruel sexual practices and for his novels describing them. —sadist n. 1897, formed from English sadism + -ist. —sadistic adj. 1892, probably formed from English sadist + -ic, after German sadistisch.

sado- a combining form meaning sadistic, involving sadism, as in sadomasochism (1935). Formed in English from sadist or sadism + connective -o-, on the pattern of psycho-, etc.

safari n. 1890 (also in earlier travel account, 1860); borrowed from Swahili safari journey, expedition, from Arabic safar journey.

safe adj. About 1280 sauf not damned, redeemed; later, uninjured, free from danger, secure (about 1300), and safe (about 1343); borrowed from Old French sauf, saif, from Latin salvus uninjured, healthy, safe, related to salūs good health, safety, salūber healthful, and solidus solid. —n. 1440, save a chest or cupboard for keeping meats, etc.; noun use of save, v., also found in in saaf in a safe place (about 1430; borrowed from Middle French en sauf in safety). The spelling safe is first recorded in 1688, influenced by the adjective. —safe-conduct n. (about 1300) —safeguard n. About 1385 save-garde promise of safety. —v. About 1445 (implied in saaf gadyng); from the noun. —safekeeping n. (about 1410) —safety n. Before 1325 sauvete salvation, state of being spiritually safe; later saftē (about 1378); borrowed from Old French sauveté, salveté, from Medieval Latin salvitatē, from Latin salvus safe; for suffix see -TY².

safflower n. 1407 saflour; borrowed from Middle French saffleur, from early Italian saffiore, zaffrole, from Arabic asfar a yellow plant, yellow. The spelling was influenced (in the 1600's) by saffron and flower.

saffron n. Probably before 1200 saffran; borrowed from Old French safran, from Medieval Latin safranum, ultimately from Arabic za'farān. —adj. Before 1398, from the noun.

sag v. 1392 saggen; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian sakke slow down, lag behind, and Swedish sacka settle, sink down; probably related to Old Icelandic sökkva to SINK) or from Middle Low German sacken to sink (as dregs do). —n. 1580, from the verb.

saga n. 1709, Medieval Icelandic story of heroic deeds; borrowed from Old Icelandic saga saga, story.

sagacious adj. 1607, acute in sensory perception; probably formed in English as an adjective to the earlier noun, on the model of Latin sagāx (genitive sagācis) of quick perception, acute, related to sāgus prophetic and sāgīre perceive keenly; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of wise, shrewd, is first recorded in 1650. —sagacity n. Before 1500 sagacite; borrowed from Middle French sagacité, from Latin sagacitatem (nominative sagacitās) the quality of being acute or having quick perception, from sagāx, see SAGACIOUS; for suffix see -ITY.

sagamore n. 1613 sagamo a chief or great man; borrowed from Algonquian (Abnaki) sāngman chief, ruler; cognate with Naragansett sāchiman SACHEM.

sage¹ adj. wise. About 1300; as a surname (1179); borrowed from Old French sage, from Gallo-Romance sabiū*, alteration of Vulgar Latin sapius*, from Latin sapere have a taste, have good taste or discernment, be wise. —n. Probably before 1350; from the adjective, perhaps influenced by Old French sage one who knows.

sage² n. plant. Before 1325 sage; borrowed from Old French sauge, from Latin salvia, from salvus healthy, SAFE; so called from the plant's supposed healing properties. —sagebrush n. (1852) sago n. 1555, East Indian palm tree; borrowed from Malay sagu. The meaning of starchy food obtained from the pith of the sago tree is first recorded about 1580.

sahib n. 1673, borrowed from Hindi ṣāḥib master, lord, from Arabic, (originally) friend.

sail n. Probably before 1200 seil; later sayle (1265), sail (probably before 1300); developed from Old English segl (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian seil sail, Old Saxon segel, Middle Dutch seil (modern Dutch zeil), Old High German segal (modern German Segel), and Old Icelandic segl sail, probably originally a piece of cloth cut, from Proto-Germanic sezlan*. —v. Probably before 1200 seilen travel on a ship with sails; later saylen (about 1250); developed from Old English seglian, seglan (before 899); cognate with Middle High German segelen, sigelen (modern German segeln), and Old Icelandic sigla, all derived from the Germanic source of Old English segl, n. —sailboat n. (1798) —sailcloth n. (probably before 1200) —sailor n. Probably before 1400 sailer, formed from sailen sail, v. + *-er*¹. The suffix was later changed to *-or*² (before 1642) on the model of tailor, jailor, bailor, and distantly advisor, etc.

saint n. About 1125 seinte; later sainte (before 1225), borrowed from Old French saint, seinte, from Latin; also Middle English sont (before 1200) and sannt (about 1200), developed from Old English sanct, borrowed from Latin, and borrowed into Middle English directly from Latin sānctus holy, consecrated (in Late Latin found as a noun), past participle of sancire make sacred, ordain; see SACRED. In Middle English first use of saint as a title is found in Seinte Marian Magdalene, but earlier use is known by appearance of the abbreviated S or St., at least by 1100, and in Old English by 963. —v. Probably before 1200 sonten to be or become a saint; later saynten (before 1450); from the noun, probably influenced by Old French saintir through Anglo-French santir. The meaning of make a saint of is first recorded in 1375. —sainthood n. 1550, formed from English saint, n. + -hood. —saintly adj. 1629, formed from English saint, n. + *-ly*², but found earlier as an adverb about 1460.

sake¹ n. purpose, cause, account. Probably about 1175 sake blame, guilt; later, strife, dispute, account, sake (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sacu a cause at law, crime, dispute (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian seke, sake affair, thing, dispute, Old Saxon saka lawsuit, enmity, guilt, thing, Middle Dutch sake (modern Dutch zaak) lawsuit, cause, thing, Old High German sahha (modern German Sache) thing, matter, cause, Old Icelandic sök lawsuit, guilt, crime, cause, sake, (from Proto-Germanic sakō*). The phrases for the sake of (probably before 1200), and for (someone's or something's) sake (about 1325) were perhaps adopted from Old Icelandic.

sake² n. Japanese alcoholic beverage. 1687 saque, borrowed from Japanese sake.

sal n. About 1395; earlier in combinations such as salkemini common salt, and in the place name Salford (about 1100); borrowed from Old French sal (variant of sel), and directly from Latin sāl salt.

salaam n. 1613, borrowed from Arabic salām a greeting, literally, peace. —v. 1693, from the noun.

salacious adj. 1661, borrowed from Latin salāx (genitive salācis) lustful, probably originally fond of leaping, as in animals' sexual advances, from salire to leap; for suffix see -OUS.

salad n. Before 1399 salat raw vegetable dish, salad; later salade (1472); borrowed from Old French salade, and from Medieval Latin salata*; both from Vulgar Latin salāta* salted, feminine past participle of salāre* to salt, from Latin sāl (genitive salis) salt. The phrase salad days days of youthful inexperience, in allusion to the figurative sense of green, is first recorded in 1606.

salamander n. 1340 salamandre legendary lizardlike animal supposed to be able to endure fire; borrowed from Old French salamandre, and directly from Latin salamandra, from Greek salamandra. The sense of a lizardlike amphibian is first recorded in 1611.

salami n. 1852, borrowed from Italian salami, plural of salame spiced pork sausage, from Vulgar Latin salāmen*, from salāre* to salt, from Latin sāl (genitive salis) salt.

salary n. Probably about 1280 salerie periodic payment for regular service; later salarye (about 1378); borrowed through Anglo-French salarie, Old French salaire, salare, sallere, and directly from Latin salārium soldier's allowance for the purchase of salt, and from this, a salary or stipend, from neuter of salarius pertaining to salt, from sāl (genitive salis) salt. —v. About 1477 salarien to pay, reward; from the noun.

sale n. Probably before 1300 sale; developed from Late Old English (about 1050) sala a sale; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sala, sal sale); cognate with Old High German sala sale, delivery of goods, (from Proto-Germanic salō*), related to Old English sellan to SELL.

salient adj. 1646, leaping, jumping, replacing earlier salience, adj. (before 1393); borrowed from Latin salientem (nominative salīens), present participle of salire to leap. The sense of pointing outward is first recorded in 1687 and that of prominent, striking in 1840.

The phrase salient point, originally referring to the heart of an embryo, which seems to leap as if alive, is a translation of New Latin punctum saliens, going back to Aristotle's writings. The sense of a starting point, is first recorded in 1672. —n. 1828, a salient angle or part; from the adjective. —salience n. 1836, formed as a noun to salient + -ence.

saline adj. Before 1500 saline made of salt; probably borrowed from Latin salinus* (found only in the neuter form salinum salt cellar, and in the feminine plural form salinae salt pits), from sāl (genitive salis) salt; for suffix see *-INE*¹. —salinity n. 1658, formed from English saline + -ity.

saliva n. Probably before 1425 salive, borrowing of Middle French salive, from Latin saliva; later saliva (1676); reborrowed from Latin saliva spittle. —salivary adj. 1709, formed in English from saliva + -ary on the model of Latin salivarius resembling saliva, slimy, from saliva. —salivate v. 1657, back formation from salivation, and possibly formed after Latin salivātus, past participle of salivāre, from saliva saliva; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —salivation n. 1598, borrowing of Middle French salivation, and directly from Late Latin salivatiōnem (nominative salivatiō), from Latin salivāre to produce saliva; for suffix see -ATION.

sallow adj. Probably before 1400 salowe; developed from Old English salo, salu dusky, dark, sallow (before 1000), related to sōl dark, dirty. The Old English forms are cognate with Middle Dutch salu dirty, discolored, Old High German salo dirty gray, murky, and Old Icelandic splr dirty, from Proto Germanic salwa-*.

sally n. 1542, place from which a sudden attack is launched; later, an attack (1560); borrowed from Middle French saillie a rushing forth, outburst, noun use of feminine past participle of saillir to leap, from Latin salire to leap. —v. 1560, from the noun.

salmagundi n. 1674, borrowed from French salmigondis originally, seasoned salt meats (as in French salmis salted meats), from Middle French salmigondin, of uncertain origin (but probably related to salomene a hodge-podge of meats or fish cooked in wine, before 1325; borrowed from Old French salementine).

salmon n. 1228 salmon; as a surname Salmun (1205); borrowed from Old French salmon, saumon, salmon, from Latin salmōnem (nominative salmō) a salmon, of uncertain origin, but possibly in the literal sense of leaper, from salire to leap. —adj. 1786, from the noun.

salmonella n. 1913, New Latin Salmonella the genus name, formed from Daniel Elmer Salmon, who isolated one type of these bacteria in 1885.

salon n. 1699, borrowing of French salon, from Italian salone large hall, from sala hall, from a Germanic source; compare Old High German sal hall, house (from Proto-Germanic salaz*), modern German Saal hall, Old Saxon seli, Middle Dutch sāle, modern Dutch zaal, Old English sele hall, (from Proto-Germanic saliz*), Old Icelandic salr hall, house, and Gothic salithwōs inn, saljan stay at an inn. The gathering of fashionable people in a salon is first recorded in English in 1888 (in the form saloon, in 1838).

saloon n. 1728, Anglicized form of SALON; for ending see -OON. By extension saloon developed the sense of any large hall in a hotel or other public place, and by 1841 the meaning of a place where alcoholic drinks are sold and drunk, a public bar.

salsa n. 1975, borrowed from Spanish salsa, literally, sauce, from Vulgar Latin salsa* condiment, SAUCE.

salsify n. 1706, borrowed from French salsifis, from earlier Italian erba salsifica, of uncertain origin.

salt n. Old English sealt, salt (probably before 830, implied in saltnisse saltiness); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Old Icelandic, and Gothic salt salt, Middle Dutch sout (modern Dutch zout), and Old High German salz (modern German Salz), from Proto-Germanic saltan*.

The meaning of a chemical compound derived from an acid and a base is first recorded in English in 1790. —adj. Old English (before 900) sealt, salt; from the noun. —v. Old English sealtan, saltan, also probably influenced by Old English sieltan* (found in Northumbrian selta) and seltan, syltan; cognate with Middle Low German solten to salt, Middle Dutch souten (modern Dutch zouten), Old High German salzan (modern German salzen), Old Icelandic salta, and Gothic saltan; from the Germanic source of Old English sealt, salt, n. —saltpeter n. Before 1400, alteration (by influence of salt) of salpetre (about 1330); borrowing of Old French salpetre, and directly from Medieval Latin sal petrae salt of rock (Latin sāl salt + petrae, genitive of Latin petra rock); so called because it appears as a saltlike encrustation on rocks. —saltwater n. (before 1225); adj. (before 1420 water salt; later saltwater 1528) —salty adj. 1440 salti; in the surname Saltiland (1286); formed from salt, n. + *-y*¹.

SALT n. 1968, acronym formed from S(trategic) A(rms) L(imitation) T(alks).

salubrious adj. 1547, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French salubre, from Latin salūber healthful; for suffix see -OUS.

salutary adj. 1490, earlier as a noun meaning remedy (1426); borrowed from Middle French salutaire beneficial, or directly from Latin salūtāris healthful, from salūs (genitive salūtis) good health; for suffix see -ARY.

salutatory adj. 1670, designating the welcoming address given at a college commencement; borrowed from Latin salūtātōrius pertaining to visiting or greeting, from salūtāt-, past participle stem of salūtāre to greet, SALUTE; for suffix see -ORY. —n. 1779, welcoming address at a college commencement; from the adjective. A noun sense of a place for salutations is first recorded in 1641. —salutatorian n. 1847, formed from salutatory, adj. + -an.

salute v. Before 1382 saluten to greet; borrowed from Latin salūtāre to greet (wish health to), from salūs (genitive salūtis) greeting, good health. The meaning of greet with a gesture of respect is first recorded about 1440. —n. Before 1400 salut act of saluting; borrowed from Old French salut, from Latin salūtem (nominative salūs) greeting. —salutation n. About 1384 salutacioun; borrowed from Old French salutacion, or directly from Latin salūtatiōnem (nominative salūtatiō), from salūtāre to greet; for suffix see -ATION.

salvage n. 1645, payment for saving a ship from wreck or capture; borrowing of French salvage, from Old French salver, sauver to SAVE¹; for suffix see -AGE. —v. 1889, from the noun.

salvation n. Probably before 1200 salvatiun deliverance from sin and damnation; borrowed from Old French salvaciun, salvation, and directly from Late Latin salvatiōnem (nominative salvatiō), from salvāre to SAVE; for suffix see -ATION.

salve¹ (sav) n. Probably before 1200 salve spiritual remedy; also, healing ointment (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 700) sealf salve; cognate with Old Saxon salba salve, Middle Low German salve, Middle Dutch salve (modern Dutch zalf), and Old High German salba (modern German Salbe), from Proto-Germanic salbō*. —v. Probably before 1200 salven to heal or treat spiritually; also, to apply ointment (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 700) sealfian anoint (a wound) with salve; cognate with Old Saxon salbōn to salve, anoint, Middle Low German salven, Middle Dutch salven (modern Dutch zalven), Old High German salbōn (modern German salben), and Gothic salbōn, from Proto-Germanic salbōjanan*; from salbō*, n. The figurative sense of soothe (one's conscience, wounded pride, etc.) is first recorded in 1825.

salve² (salv) v. to salvage. 1706, back formation from SALVAGE or from SALVABLE. —salvable adj. 1654, implied in salvability, but probably formed as if from Latin salvābilis* of or pertaining to saving or salvation, or directly from Latin salvāre to save + English -able.

salver n. 1661, formed (on the model of platter or similar words) from French salve tray used for presenting certain objects to the king + English -er¹. The French word was borrowed from Spanish salva a testing of food or drink; hence, a tray on which it was placed to show the contents were safe to eat, from salvar to save, render safe, from Late Latin salvāre to SAVE¹.

salvo n. discharge of guns as a salute. 1719, alteration of salva simultaneous discharge of firearms (1591); borrowed from Italian salva, from French salve, from Latin salvē (a Roman greeting) hail!, be in good health!, imperative of salvēre to be in good health, from salvus healthy, SAFE.

samara n. 1577, dry fruit that has a winglike extension, New Latin samara, from Latin, variant of samera elm seed.

samarium n. 1879; formed in English from samarskite a mineral (1849) + New Latin -ium; so called because this element was first found in the mineral samarskite; borrowed from German Samarskit, formed in allusion to Colonel Samarski, a Russian official in the 1800's + German -it -ite¹.

samba n. 1885 Zemba; later Samba (1911); borrowed from Portuguese samba, zamba, shortened from zambacueca a type of dance, probably an alteration (influenced by zamacueco stupid), of zambapalo a grotesque dance, alteration of zampapalo stupid man, from zamparse to bump, crash.

same adj. Probably about 1200; probably abstracted from the adverbial use in Old English swā same the same as, likewise, in part by influence of Scandinavian use (compare Old Icelandic samr, same, sama same); cognate with Old Saxon so sama the same, Old High German and Gothic sama same, from Proto-Germanic samōn*. —pron. About 1303, from the adjective.

samite n. Probably before 1300 samyt; borrowed from Old French samit, from Medieval Greek hexámiton*, from neuter of Greek hexámitos six-threaded (hék SIX + mitos warp thread).

samizdat n. 1967, borrowing of Russian samizdat, literally, self-publishing; formed from sam self + izdat(el'stvo) publishing, probably as a word play on Gosizdat the former State publishing house.

samovar n. 1830, borrowing of Russian samovar, literally, self-boiler; formed from sam self + varít' to boil, from Old Slavic variti to cook.

sampan n. 1620, borrowed from Chinese san pan, literally, three boards or planks (san three + pan board).

sample n. Probably about 1300 saumpele parable; also, about 1303 sample illustration, example; borrowed through Anglo-French saumpele, sample, variants of Old French essample, exsample from Latin exemplum a sample; see EXAMPLE; and developed as a shortened form of Middle English ensample a model, example (about 1275); also found in Anglo-French ensample. —adj. 1820, from the noun. —v. 1592, to parallel, put in comparison with; from the noun; later, take a sample of (1767). —sampler n. Before 1325 sampler pattern, model, example; earlier as a surname Sampler (1250); borrowed from Anglo-French essampleire, essampler, Old French essampleire, from Latin exemplarium copy, from exemplum example.

samurai n. 1727, borrowing of Japanese samurai warrior, knight.

sanatorium n. 1839, New Latin sanatorium, from neuter of Late Latin sānātorius health-giving, from Latin sānāt-, past participle stem of sānāre to heal, from sānus healthy, sane. Compare SANITARIUM.

sanctify v. Before 1400 sanctifier, alteration (influenced by the Latin form) of seintefien consecrate, hallow (before 1393); borrowed from Old French saintifier, seintefier, and later directly from Late Latin sanctificāre, from sanctificus holy (sanctus holy; see SAINT + the root of facere make); for suffix see -FY.

sanctimony n. 1540–41, borrowed from Middle French sanctimonie, and directly from Latin sanctimōnia holiness, virtuousness, from sanctus holy; see SAINT; for suffix see -Y³. —sanctimonious adj. 1603, formed from Latin sanctimōnia holiness + English -ous.

sanction n. Probably before 1425 sanccion confirmation or enactment of a law; later sanction (probably before 1475); borrowed through Middle French sanction, or directly from Latin sanctiōnem (nominative sanctiō), the act of decreeing or ordaining; also, a decree or ordinance, from sanctare to decree, confirm, ratify, make sacred; for suffix see -TION.

The meaning of economic or military pressure used to achieve a change in policy or action is first found in 1845, and that of encouragement given by an authoritative person or by custom, in 1738. —v. 1778, make valid or binding; later, authorize, allow (1797); from the noun.

sanctity n. About 1390 saunctite, sauntite; borrowed from Old French sainctité, saintité, from Latin sanctitatem (nominative sanctitās) holiness, sacredness, from sanctus holy; see SAINT; for suffix see -ITY.

sanctuary n. Before 1325 santuare; later sanctuary (about 1340); also seintuarie, seyntewarie, etc. (1380's–1470's); borrowed through Anglo-French sentuarie, from Old French sainctuarie, seintuarie, and directly from Late Latin sanctuārium a sacred place, shrine; also, a private room, from Latin sanctus holy; see SAINT; for suffix see -ARY. The extended meaning of a place of refuge or protection, is first recorded in English about 1380.

sanctum n. 1577, borrowing of Latin sanctum, as in Late Latin sanctum sanctorum holy of holies, from neuter of sanctus holy; see SAINT.

sand n. Old English (before 830) sand; cognate with Old Frisian sond sand, Old Saxon sand, Middle Dutch sand, sant (modern Dutch zand), Old High German sant (modern German Sand), and Old Icelandic sandr (Swedish and Danish sand), from Proto-Germanic sanda-, earlier sámaða-. —v. About 1385 sonden; later sanden; from the noun. The sense of polish with sand is recorded in 1858. —sandy adj. 1384 sandy; developed from Old English (about 1000) sandig, formed from sand + -ig -y¹.

sandal n. 1382 sandalie open shoe, later sandal (about 1425); borrowed from Old French sandale, and directly from Latin sandalium, from Greek sandálion, diminutive of sádon sandal.

sandalwood n. About 1511, earlier sandal dish colored with sandalwood (1381); borrowed from Old French sandale, and directly from Medieval Latin sandalum, found also in Late Greek sántalon (= sádon), from Sanskrit chādana-m the sandalwood tree.

sandwich n. 1762, said to be in allusion to the fourth Earl of Sandwich, who on occasion is traditionally supposed to have spent long hours at the gaming tables without other refreshment than some slices of cold meat between slices of toast. —v. 1861, from the noun.

sane adj. 1721, possibly formed in English as an adjective to earlier sanity, n. by back formation from sanity on the model of Latin sānus healthy, sane; also probably borrowed from Latin sānus.

Earlier use with the sense of sound, healthy, in the legal phrase of sane memory, is recorded as early as 1628.

Sanforized adj. 1930, formed from the name of its inventor Sanford L. Cluett + -ized, as in sterilized, oxidized, etc.

sangfroid n. 1750, borrowing of French sang froid, literally, cool blood (sang blood + froid cold).

sangria n. 1736 sangre; later sangaree (1785), sangria (1954); of uncertain origin.

sanguinary adj. 1625, possibly formed from English sanguine + -ary, perhaps by influence of French sanguinaire, and on the model of Latin sanguinārius pertaining to blood, from sanguis (genitive sanguinis) blood; for suffix see -ARY.

sanguine adj. 1378 sanguen blood-red; as a surname Sanguin (1194); also sanguine (before 1398); borrowed from Old French sanguin (feminine sanguine), and directly from Latin sanguineus of blood, bloody, bloodthirsty, from sanguis (genitive sanguinis) blood.

The meaning of cheerful, hopeful, confident, is first found in 1509, and was associated with a sanguine complexion, thought to be an indication of the predominance of blood over the other humors (before 1392).

sanitarium n. 1851, New Latin sanitarium; formed from Latin sānitās health (from sānus healthy, sane) + -ārium -ary.

sanitary adj. 1842, borrowed from French sanitaire; formed from Latin sānitās health, from sānus healthy, sane + French -aire -ary.

sanitation n. 1848, formed from English sanit(ary) + -ation. Sanitation to replace garbage, as in sanitation worker and sanitation department, was coined as a euphemism in 1939.

sanitize v. 1836, formed from English sanit(ary) + -ize. The sense of make acceptable by removing offensive aspects is recorded in 1934.

sanity n. Probably before 1425 sanite health, healthy condition; borrowed from Middle French sanité health, from Latin sānitās health, sanity, from sānus healthy, sane; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of soundness of mind, mental health, is first recorded in 1602.

sans-serif or sans-serif n. 1830, possibly formed from French sans without + English serif from earlier ceref, syrif (1827, perhaps borrowed from Dutch schreef line).

Santa Claus 1773, borrowed from dialectal Dutch Sante Klaas (modern Dutch Sinter-klaas), from Middle Dutch Sinter

(Ni)kelaas Saint Nicholas, a bishop of Asia Minor who became a patron saint associated with children.

sap¹ n. liquid in a plant. 1340 zep; later sap (1377); developed from Old English (about 750) sæp; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch sap sap, juice, and Old High German saf (modern German Saft), from Proto-Germanic sapan*. The meaning of a simpleton, fool, is first recorded in 1815 and was possibly in part a back formation from sappy, and a shortened form of sapskull (1735). —sappy adj. 1435; developed from Old English (before 1100) sæpig; formed from sæp *sap*¹ + -ig *-y*¹. The meaning of wet, sodden, is first recorded about 1470; perhaps the figurative sense of foolish, especially in a silly, sentimental way (1670), developed from this meaning.

sap² v. wear away. 1598, dig a trench to approach the enemy's position; borrowed from Middle French saper, from sappe spade, (also found in Italian zappare, from zappa spade); both from Late Latin sappa spade. The sense of weaken, use up (1755), was probably influenced by the sense of undermine (1711) and by *sap*¹, as if to drain the vital sap from. —sapper n. 1626, formed from English *sap*² + *-er*¹; patterned on Middle French sappeur.

sapient adj. 1468; as a surname (1413); probably formed in Middle English as the adjective to earlier sapience (before 1376), influenced by Old French sapient; and, in part, borrowed directly from Old French sapient, and from Latin sapientem (nominative sapiēns), present participle of sapere be wise; for suffix see -ENT.

sapling n. About 1330; as a surname (about 1277); formed from English *sap*¹ liquid + -ling.

sapodilla n. 1697, borrowed from Spanish zapotilla, diminutive of zapote fruit of the sapodilla, from Nahuatl tzapotl.

saponify v. 1821, borrowed from French saponifier make fat into soap, from New Latin saponificare, formed as if from an adjective saponificus* (Late Latin sāpō, genitive sāpōnis SOAP + the root of Latin facere to make).

sapphire n. About 1250 saphir; earlier as a surname Safir (1221); borrowed from Old French saphir, safir, and directly from Latin sapphīrus, from Greek sāppheiros, from a Semitic language, probably Hebrew sappīr sapphire. —adj. 1432 saffir, from the noun.

saprophyte n. 1875, bacteria or fungi that live on decaying organic matter, formed from Greek saprós rotten + English -phyte plant.

sarcasm n. 1579 sarcasmus sharp, cutting remark; borrowed from Late Latin sarcasmos; later replaced by sarcasm (1619, borrowed from French sarcasme, also from Late Latin); from late Greek sarkasmós a sneer, from sarkazein to speak bitterly, sneer; literally, to strip off flesh, from sárx (genitive sarkós) flesh. —sarcastic adj. 1695, derived from English sarcasm, on the pattern of enthusiasm, enthusiastic; for suffix see -IC.

sarcoma n. 1657, fleshy excrescence, New Latin sarcoma, from Greek sárkōma, from sarkōin to produce flesh, grow fleshy, from sárx (genitive sarkós) flesh. The meaning of a harmful tumor of the connective tissue is first recorded in 1804.

sarcophagus n. 1601, borrowing of Latin sarcophagus, from Greek sarkophágos limestone used for coffins; literally, flesh-eating in reference to the supposed action of limestone on the body (sárx, genitive sarkós flesh + phagēin to eat). The sense of a stone coffin is first recorded in English in 1705.

sardine n. 1393 sardyn; borrowed from Middle French sardine, from Italian sardina, and directly from Latin sardīna, from Greek sardīnē, possibly from Sardō Sardinia, an island in the Mediterranean Sea, near which the fish was probably caught in great numbers and then exported.

sardonic adj. 1638, probably borrowed from French sardonique; also found in Spanish sardónico and Italian sardonico; formed as if from Latin sardon(ius) + -icus, from Greek sardónios of bitter or scornful laughter; for suffix see -IC.

Greek sardónios was an alteration (influenced by Sardónios Sardinian) of sardánios, found in Homer; the reason for the alteration was a belief among the ancient Greeks that the word had a primary reference to a "Sardinian plant" called sardónion that when eaten produced facial convulsions resembling those accompanying bitter or scornful laughter.

sargasso n. 1598, borrowing of Portuguese sargasso, sargaço seaweed, perhaps from sarga a type of grape (because of the berrylike air sacs on the seaweed), or perhaps from Latin sargus a kind of fish.

sari n. 1785, borrowed from Hindi sārī, from Prakrit sāḍī, from Sanskrit śāṭī garment, petticoat.

sarong n. 1834, borrowed from Malay sāring sheath, covering.

sarsaparilla n. 1577, borrowed from Spanish zarzaparrilla (zarza bramble, from Arabic šaras thorny plant + parrilla, diminutive of parra vine).

sartorial adj. 1823, formed as if from Late Latin sartōrius*, from sartor patcher, mender + English *-al*¹. Late Latin sartor is formed from Latin sart-, past participle stem of sarcire to patch, mend + -or *-or*².

Earlier forms derived from the Latin stem sartor- include sartor, n. (1656), sartorian, adj. (1668), sartry (sartre 1448–49, sarterie 1275), and sartin (1199).

sash¹ n. strip of cloth. 1599 shash strip of cloth twisted into a turban; borrowed from Arabic shāsh muslin cloth (worn as turbans). The spelling sash represents a differentiation of sound in the beginning and end of the word (1687) and is preceded by an earlier dissimilated form shass (1617). The meaning of a strip of cloth worn around the waist or over the shoulder is first recorded in 1681.

sash² n. window frame. 1681 sashes, pl., alteration of French châssis frame, as of a window or door; see CHASSIS. The French word was apparently taken as a plural because of the -s ending and the singular sash was formed from it before 1704 by back formation.

sashay v. 1836, alteration of chassé gliding step (1867); borrowing of French chassé a gliding step; literally, chased, past participle of chasser to chase, from Old French chacier to hunt. The sense of glide or move about usually with an affected casualness is first recorded in 1865. —n. 1900, (figurative) a short trip or excursion, from the verb.

sassafras n. 1577, borrowed from Spanish sasafrás, from Late Latin saxifragia a kind of herb, variant of saxifraga SAXIFRAGE.

sassy adj. 1833, alteration of SAUCY.

Satan n. Old English (about 750) Satan; borrowed from Late Latin Satān, from Greek Satanās, adapted from Sātān, from Hebrew śātān adversary, one who plots against another, from śātān to oppose, plot against. —satanic adj. 1667, of Satan, shortened form of Satanical (before 1548) and formed from Satan + -ic on the model of French satanique, from Greek Satanikós.

satchel n. About 1340 sachel, borrowing of Old French sachel, from Late Latin sacellum money bag, purse, diminutive of Latin sacculus, a diminutive of saccus bag.

sate v. 1602, probably alteration (influenced by Latin satiāre SATIATE) of sade, in Middle English saden become satiated, satiate (about 1390); developed from Old English sadian to satiate (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German saden sate, Middle Dutch saden (modern Dutch verzaden), and Old High German satōn (Middle High German saten), from Proto-Germanic sadiōjanan*, from the West Germanic source of Old English sæd sated; see SAD.

sateen n. 1878, variant of satin, perhaps influenced by velveteen.

satellite n. Before 1548, one who attends a person of importance; borrowing of Middle French satellite, and directly from Latin satellitem (nominative satelles) attendant.

The sense of a small planet that revolves around a larger one was first applied in 1611 to the secondary planets revolving around Jupiter. The man-made object launched into orbit is found in 1880.

satiare v. About 1450 saciaten; borrowed from Latin satiātus, past participle of satiāre fill full, fill enough, from satis enough; for suffix see -ATE¹. The spelling satiare is first found in 1611. —satiation n. 1638, probably formed from English satiare + -ion, on the model of Latin satiātiōnem* (nominative satiātiō*), from satiāre satiate. —satiety n. 1590; earlier saciety (1533); borrowed from Middle French satiété, from Latin satiētatem (nominative satiētās) sufficiency, abundance, from satis enough; for suffix see -TY².

satin n. 1369 satyn, borrowed from Old French satin, zatanin, probably from Arabic (atlas) zaitūnī (satin) from Zaitūn, the name of a Chinese city identified with Tsinkiang (Quanzhou), in southern China used as a port in the Middle Ages. —adj. 1449 satyn; from the noun.

satire n. 1509, work intended to ridicule vice or folly; borrowing of Middle French satire, and borrowed directly from Latin satira satire, poetic medley, from lanx satira mixed dish; literally, full dish, from feminine of satur sated. The alteration of Latin satira to satyra and satira developed from the mistaken notion that this Roman genre derived from Greek satyr drama. —satiric or satirical adj. 1509 satiric, borrowed from Middle French satirique, and directly from Late Latin satiricus, from Latin satira satire; before 1529 satirical, formed in English from Late Latin satiricus + English *-al*¹. The form satiric appears in Middle English as a noun, a writer of satires (before 1387), but was replaced by satirist. —satirist n. 1589, formed from English satire + -ist. —satirize v. 1601, probably formed from English satire + -ize, on the model of Middle French satiriser, from satire satire.

satisfaction n. Before 1325 satisfacciun performance of an act set forth by a priest or other Church authority to atone for some wrong, sin, etc.; borrowed from Old French satisfaction, and directly from Latin satisfactiōnem (nominative satisfactiō) a satisfying of a creditor, reparation, apology, from satisfacere SATISFY; for suffix see -TION.

The sense of contentment, appeasement, is found before 1382. —satisfactory adj. About 1443 satisfactorie capable of atoning for sin; borrowed from Late Latin satisfactorius affording satisfaction, from Latin satisfact-, past participle stem of satisfacere satisfy; for suffix see -ORY. The sense of adequate, good enough, is first recorded in 1640.

satisfy v. About 1412 satisfien make amends, recompense; also, fulfill, assuage (1419); borrowed from Middle French satisfier, variant of satisfaire, from Old French, from Latin satisfacere discharge fully, comply with, make amends; literally, do enough (satis enough + facere perform); for suffix see -FY.

satrap n. Probably about 1380 sathrapas (pl.) governor of a province of ancient Persia; also, governor or leader; before 1382 sathrape; borrowed from Latin satrapa, satrapēs a provincial governor of ancient Persia, from Greek satrápēs, from Old Persian xshathrapāvan-, literally, guardian of the realm (xshathra- realm, related to xshāyathiya- king + pāvan- guardian).

saturate v. 1538, to satisfy, satiate, probably developed as verb use of saturate, adj., satisfied, satiated (before 1450); borrowed from Latin saturātus, past participle of saturāre to fill full, sate, drench, saturate, from satur sated, full; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of soak thoroughly, drench, imbue, is first recorded in English in 1756. —saturation n. Probably 1554, a being saturated; probably formed from English saturate, v. + -ion, on the model of Late Latin saturātiōnem (nominative saturātiō), from Latin saturāre to saturate.

Saturday n. Probably before 1200 Sæterdæi; later Saturday (about 1300); developed from Old English Sæterdæg (before 899), also Sæternesdæg, literally, day of the planet Saturn (Sæternes, genitive of Sæter, Sætern Saturn, borrowed from Latin Sāturnus + Old English dæg DAY). The Germanic compounds found in Old Frisian Sāterdei Saturday, Middle Low German Sāterdach, Middle Dutch Saterdag, and Dutch Zaterdag, are a partial loan translation of Latin Sāturni diēs Saturn's day.

Saturnalia n. pl. 1591, borrowing of Latin Sāturnālia ancient Roman festival of Saturn from neuter plural of Sāturnālis pertaining to Saturn, from Sāturnus Saturn. The sense of any period of unrestrained revelry is first found in 1782.

saturnine adj. About 1380 saturnyn having characteristics determined by influence of the planet Saturn; later, gloomy, grave, taciturn (about 1433); formed from Middle English Saturne, the planet (supposed to cause gloomy behavior in those born under its sign) + *-ine*¹.

satyr n. Before 1398 satire a type of ape; earlier satirus (implied in the Latinate plural satiry) deity of the woods (about 1385); borrowed from Old French satire, and directly from Latin sātyrus, from Greek sātyros.

sauce n. 1340 saue a liquid seasoning or condiment; later sauce (in the compound saucemaker, 1353); borrowed from Old French saue, sauce, (earlier) saule, from Vulgar Latin salsa*, noun use of Latin salsa, feminine singular or neuter plural form of salsus salted, from past participle of sallere (earlier stem sald-*) to salt, from sāl (genitive salis) salt. —v. Before 1438 sausen; later saucen (1450); from the noun.

saucer n. 1343 saucer; borrowed from Old French saucer, saucier sauce dish (from sauce SAUCE), and from Anglo-Latin saucerium, from Late Latin salsarium, neuter of salsarius of or for salted things, from Latin salsus salted; see SAUCE; for suffix see -ER².

saucy adj. 1508, resembling sauce, savory; later, impertinent, forward, cheeky (1530); formed from English sauce + *-y*¹.

sauerkraut n. 1617 sower crawt; later sour-croit (1775); borrowed from German Sauerkraut (sauer SOUR + Kraut vegetable, cabbage, from Old High German krūt, from Proto-Germanic kriudān*).

sauna n. 1881, bathhouse with sauna; borrowing of Finnish sauna. Reference to the steam bath itself is first recorded in 1936. —v. 1966, from the noun.

saunter v. Before 1667, probably developed from Middle English sauntren to muse, brood (before 1500), and perhaps, if not the same word as saunteren (found in sauntering idle chattering, babbling, before 1450); of uncertain origin. —n. 1712, from the verb.

sausage n. About 1450 sawsyge; borrowed from Old North French saussiche, from Vulgar Latin salsicia* (also found in Medieval Latin salsicia, pl., sausages, salted meats), from Latin salsus salted; see SAUCE. The spelling sausage (probably mistakenly influenced by the suffix -age in the sense of something that is the result of the verb; in this case “to salt”) is first recorded in 1553.

sauté n. 1813, borrowing of French sauté, literally, jumped or bounced (in reference to tossing while cooking, so the meat, or whatever is cooked does not lie on the surface of the pan continuously), from past participle of sauter to jump, from sauterne n. 1833, from Sauternes (1711); named after Sauternes, a town in France, in the region where the grapes are grown.

Latin salire to hop, dance, frequentative form of salire to leap. —v. 1859, from the noun. —adj. 1869, from the noun.

savage adj. About 1250 savage fierce, ferocious; later, wild or untamed, bold, cruel (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French sauvage, from Late Latin salvaticus, alteration by vowel assimilation of i to a of Latin silvaticus wild, of the woods, from silva forest, grove; for suffix see -AGE. —n. Probably before 1400 savagys, pl.; from the adjective. —v. 1563, from the adjective. —savagery n. 1595, formed from English savage, adj. + -ry.

savanna or savannah n. 1555 zavana; later savana (1604); borrowed from Spanish sabana, from Spanish zavana, from Arawakan (Haiti).

savant n. 1719, borrowing of French savant a learned man, from savant learned, knowing, former present participle of savoir to know, from Old French, from Vulgar Latin sapere*, from Latin sapere be wise.

save¹ v. make or keep safe. Probably before 1200 sauven rescue, bring to safety; later saven (about 1250); borrowed from Old French sauver, salver save, from Late Latin salvare make safe, secure, from Latin salvus safe. The meaning of store up, accumulate, is first recorded (about 1303), and that of keep possession of, before 1376. —n. 1890, (in sports) an act of preventing the opposite side from scoring.

save² prep. except, but. Probably about 1300 save; from the adjective safe, saf, sauf SAFE keeping safe or intact, reserving, excepting (about 1300), on the pattern of a similar development in the use of the equivalent Old French sauf safe.

In Old French the adjective sauf, feminine saue, had already assumed a prepositional role in phrases such as sauf votre respect saving your reverence with the sense “being excepted,” so that it eventually became (like the analogous except, past participle, in Middle English) functionally equivalent to a preposition. —conj. Probably before 1325 saf; about 1325 save; from the adjective safe, saf, sauf SAFE, on the pattern of the similarly used Old French sauf safe.

saving prep. About 1375 savynge, from the present participle of *save*¹, v. The meaning of without prejudice or offense to _____ (as in saving your reverence, saving your honor, grace, etc.) is found in Middle English before 1387.

savior or saviour n. Probably before 1300 saveour one who saves mankind from sin, a title of Jesus Christ; borrowed from Old French saveour, from Late Latin salvātorē (nominative salvātor) a savior, preserver, from salvare to save¹; for suffix see -OR². The word in Late Latin and especially in English was chiefly used in reference to Christ, as a translation of Greek sōtēr savior.

savor n. Probably before 1200 savur agreeable flavor, taste, sweetness; probably about 1200 savour; borrowed from Old French savor, savour, savur, from Latin sapōrē (nominative sapor) taste, flavor, related to sapere to have a flavor. —v.

Probably before 1250 savouren give pleasure to; later, give a taste or flavor to, season (about 1350), to relish, enjoy (probably 1382); borrowed from Old French savourer, savorer, from Late Latin sapōrāre give taste or flavor, from Latin sapōrem taste, savor, n.

savory¹ adj. pleasing in taste or smell. Probably about 1200 savure spiritually delightful; later savery flavorful (about 1300); borrowed from Old French savouré, past participle of savourer to taste, SAVOR; for suffix see *v*⁴.

savory² n. herb. 1373 savory; saueray, saveray (1400's); ultimately borrowed from Latin saturēia. The history of this word in English is also uncertain. The Middle English word may be an alteration of Old English satherie (about 1000), from Latin, or it may be borrowed from an Old French form sarree with alteration to v (compare modern French form savorée), perhaps influenced by savour SAVOR.

savvy v. 1785, borrowed from French savez (-vous)? do you know? and probably in part from Spanish sabe (usted) you know; both from Vulgar Latin sapere*, from Latin sapere be wise, be knowing. —n. 1785, from the same source as the verb. —adj. 1905, from the noun.

saw¹ n. cutting tool. About 1350 sawe; earlier sagen, pl. (about 1125), and in dialect of northern England sagh (before 1335); developed from Old English sagu (about 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch saghe saw (modern Dutch zaag), Old High German saga, and Old Icelandic sög (Swedish såg, Danish sav), from Proto-Germanic sazō*. —v. About 1300 sawien; later sawen (about 1350); earlier isahet, past participle (probably about 1200); from the noun. —sawdust n. (1530) —sawyer n. 1257 sawer; as a surname Saer (1202); also sawier (1350); formed from Middle English sawe saw¹ + -er, -ier.

saw² n. proverb. Probably about 1150 sawe; developed from Old English (before 1000) sagu saying, discourse, speech; related to seggan SAY. Old English sagu is cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sage story, account (modern Dutch sage legend, myth), Old High German saga story, account, (modern German Sage myth, rumor), Old Icelandic and Icelandic saga story, tale, saga, and Swedish saga fairy tale, from Proto-Germanic sazwō*.

saxifrage n. 1373 saxifrage; later saxifrage (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French saxifrage, sassifrage, from Late Latin saxifraga kind of herb, from Latin saxifragus stone-breaking (saxum stone, rock + frag-, root of frangere to BREAK). The plant was probably so called because it was used medicinally to dissolve gallstones.

Saxon adj., n. Probably before 1200 Sexun; later Saxon (before 1338); borrowed from Late Latin Saxonem (nominative Saxō, usually found in the plural Saxonēs), from an old Germanic form represented by Old English seaxe, seaxa; cognate with Old High German sahso (modern German Sachse), Old Icelandic saxi (Swedish Sachsare, Danish Sachser), all with the possible literal sense of swordsmen, found in Old English seax a short sword or knife, cognate with Old High German sahs, from Proto-Germanic saHsan*. Middle English Saxon replaced the Old English seaxe and in the 1300's and 1400's, was a parallel term to sessoun, sesson, sesiogn, Anglicized borrowings of Old French saisoigne, sesne and Anglo-French sessoun, ultimately borrowed from Germanic.

saxophone n. 1851, borrowing of French saxophone (after Antoine Joseph Sax, Belgian instrument maker + connecting -o- + French -phone sound).

say v. Before 1121 seien, seggen, developed from Old English seggan to utter, say (about 725, in Beowulf); also sægen (1070); cognate with Old Frisian sedza to say, Old Saxon seggian, Middle Dutch segghen, Dutch zeggen, Old High German sagēn, modern German sagen, and Old Icelandic segja to say, from Proto-Germanic sazjanan* (earlier sazwjanan*). The spelling of the past tense said developed through Middle English seid, sēde, seaide, from Old English segde, sēde, sægde. —n. 1571, from the verb. The meaning of the right or authority to influence a decision (as in have a say) is first recorded in 1614. —say-so n. 1637, mere word; later, authority (1902).

scab n. About 1275 scab skin disease forming pustules or scales; probably developed in part from Old English sceabb scab, itch, related to scafan to scratch; and borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skabb scab, itch, Danish skab, Norwegian and Swedish skabb). Related to SHABBY.

The meaning of a crust that forms over a wound (1392), probably reinforced by Latin scabiēs scab, itch, mange, from scabere to scratch. The person who refuses to join a trade union is first recorded in 1777, and that of a strikebreaker, in 1806. —v. 1632, form a scab; later, become covered with scabs (1683); from the noun. —scabby adj. (probably before 1425) scabbard n. 1391 scabard; spelling alteration (perhaps influenced by tabard or a similar word) of earlier scauberk (probably before 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French escauberc* sheath (implied in escaubers, pl.), escauberge (also Anglo-French escalbert, eschaubert and Anglo-Latin scabergia, scaubergum). These forms suggest a Germanic derivation, probably a compound (represented by known elements found in Old High German) whose literal meaning was blade protector, made up of Frankish skār* blade (compare Old High German skār; see SHEARS) + berg-* protect (compare Old High German bergan to protect; see BURY, and HAUBERK).

scabies n. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin scabiēs mange, itch, related to scabere to scratch. —scabious adj. 1603, borrowed through French scabieux, and directly from Latin scabiōsus mangy, rough, from scabiēs scabies; for suffix see -OUS.

scabrous adj. Before 1585, harsh, unmusical; borrowed from Late Latin scabrōsus rough, from Latin scaber rough, scaly, related to scabere to scratch, scrape; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of full of difficulties, thorny, is first recorded in 1646, and that of risqué, vulgar, indelicate (1881) was extended to begrimed, squalid, in 1939, and nasty, repulsive, obnoxious, about 1951.

scads n. pl. 1869, of uncertain origin. Earlier meanings of dollar, money (1809), and gold left after panning (1863) are probably not of the same word. Though sometimes referred to a British dialect scald a great many, it may be that scads originated from a Scandinavian word related to Old Icelandic skattir tax, tribute, money, Danish skat and Swedish skatt treasure, tax, or is distantly related to Latin scatere gush, abound.

scaffold n. About 1385 scaffold raised platform; skaffald (1354), and as a surname Scaffol (1299); borrowed from a dialect variant (compare Middle French eschafault) of Old French eschafaut scaffold, expanded (probably by influence of eschace a prop, support) from earlier chaffaut, from Vulgar Latin catafalicum*; see CATAFALQUE. —v. Before 1548, from the noun.

scalar adj. 1656, resembling a ladder; borrowed from Latin scalāris of or pertaining to a ladder or flight of steps, from scālae, pl., ladder, steps; for suffix see -AR. The sense of indicating magnitude, appeared in 1846.

scalawag n. 1848, of uncertain origin; possibly an alteration (influenced by wag habitual joker) of Scottish scallag farm servant, rustic; or in the sense of an undersized or worthless animal, perhaps an alteration of Scalloway, one of the Shetland Islands, in allusion to the small size of the Shetland ponies.

scald v. Probably before 1200 scalden (implied in scaldinge); borrowed from Old North French escalder, escauder, from Late Latin excaldāre bathe in hot water (Latin ex- off + caldus, calidus hot). —n. 1601, from the verb.

scale¹ n. plate on fishes, snakes, etc. Probably about 1300, borrowed from Old French escala scale, husk, from Frankish (compare Old High German scala SHELL). —v. Probably before 1425 scalen to scrape, remove; from the noun. —scaly adj. Before 1398 scaly covered with scales; formed from Middle English *scale*¹, n. + *-y*¹.

scale² n. pan of a balance. Probably before 1200, drinking cup, bowl; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skāl weighing scale, bowl, Swedish and Danish skål bowl, related to Old Icelandic skel SHELL); cognate with Old Saxon skāla cup, bowl, Middle Dutch scāle, Dutch schaal, Old High German skāla, and modern German Schale, from Proto-Germanic skālē*.

The meaning of a pan of a balance (about 1390); was followed by that of a weighing instrument (usually scales) in 1421–22. —v. 1603 to compare, estimate; from the noun.

scale³ n. series of steps. 1391 skale series of marks along a line to use in measuring; borrowed from Latin scālae, pl., ladder, steps, (earlier scandslai*), related to scandere to climb.

The meaning of a series of musical tones is found in 1597; the sense of a standard for estimation (as in on a large or small scale), is found in 1626. —v. Probably about 1380 scathen (error for scalen) climb up by means of a ladder; from the noun.

scalene adj. 1684, having the axis inclined to the base; borrowed from Late Latin scalēnus, from Greek skalēnós uneven, unequal, rough, from skállein chop, hoe, related to skélos leg, and skoliós crooked. The meaning of having three unequal sides (of a triangle) is found in English in 1734.

scallion n. Before 1375 scaloun something of little or no value; later scalone kind of onion (probably before 1387), and scalyon (1483); borrowed from Anglo-French scalun, escalone, Old scallop n. Probably before 1400 skalop scallop shell; later scalop scallop, the shellfish (1440); borrowed from Old French escalope shell variant of eschalope, probably from a Germanic source (compare Old Icelandic skalpr sheath, and Middle Dutch schelpe shell). —v. 1737, bake with sauce (implied in scollopt); from the noun. The meaning of cut out in the form of a scallop shell is first recorded in 1749.

French eschaloigne, from Vulgar Latin escalōnia*, from Latin (caepa) Ascalōnia (onion) from Ascalon a seaport in southwestern Palestine (now Ashkelon). Compare SHALLOT.

scalp n. About 1340 scalp top of the head; as a surname (1201); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skalpr sheath; cognate with Middle Dutch schelpe shell, Dutch schelp, Middle Low German schulpe, and probably with Old High German scala husk, SHELL). —v. 1676, from the noun. —scalper n. 1760, formed from English scalp, v. + *-er*¹. The person who sells tickets, etc., and sells them at unauthorized prices, is found in 1869.

scalpel n. 1742, borrowed from Latin scalpellum, diminutive of scalprum, scalper (genitive scalprī) tool for scraping or cutting, knife, related to scalpere to carve, cut.

scam n. 1963, swindle, a carnival term of unknown origin. —v. 1963, presumably from the same source as the noun.

scamp¹ n. rascal. 1782, highway robber; probably from the dialectal verb scamp to roam (1753), shortened from SCAMPER. The meaning of rascal, rogue, is first recorded in 1808.

scamp² v. do in a hasty, careless manner. 1837, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skemma to shorten, from skammr short; see SCANT).

scamper v. 1687, run away, flee; probably borrowed from Flemish schampeeren, a frequentative verb form of schampen run away, from Old French escamper, from Italian scampare, from Vulgar Latin excampāre* decamp, leave the field, from Latin ex campō (ex out of; campō, ablative of campus field). —n. 1697, from the verb.

scan v. Before 1398 scanden to mark off (verse) into metric feet; later scannen (1440); borrowed from Latin scandere to scan verse; originally, to climb. The sense of look at closely, examine minutely, is first recorded in English in 1550. The opposite sense of look over quickly, skim, is found in 1926. —n. 1706, from the verb.

scandal n. 1581, discredit caused by irreligious conduct; borrowed from Middle French scandale, from Late Latin scandalum cause for offense, stumbling block, temptation, from Greek skándalon stumbling block; originally, trap with a springing device. Damage to reputation is first recorded in 1590, and a shameful action or event in 1591.

The forms scandle and schaundle are recorded in a single manuscript (probably about 1200), borrowed from Old French escandele, escandle scandal, from Late Latin scandalum. The current form is a reborrowing from Middle French. —scandalize v. About 1489, make a public scandal of; borrowed from Middle French scandaliser, from Late Latin scan- dalizāre tempt, cause to stumble, from Greek skandalízein, from skándalon stumbling block. The meaning of shock by doing something improper is first recorded in 1647. —scandalous adj. About 1475 standalouse (error for scandalouse) disgraceful, shameful; borrowed from Middle French scandaleux, from Late Latin scandalum temptation.

scandium n. 1879, New Latin, formed from Latin Scandia Scandinavia + New Latin -ium; so called because scandium is found in various minerals in Scandinavia.

scansion n. 1671, the marking off of verse into metric feet. (1654, act of climbing); borrowed from Late Latin scānsiōnem (nominative scānsiō), from Latin, act of climbing, from scandere to climb; for suffix see -sion.

scant adj. Probably before 1350, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skamt, neuter of skammr short, brief, Icelandic skammur; cognate with Old English and Old High German scamm short). —v. About 1415 scanten become scant; from the adjective. The meaning of limit the supply of, withhold, is found in 1573–80. —scanty adj. 1660, formed from English scant, adj. + *-y*¹.

scantling n. 1526, measured or prescribed size, as of timber or stone; alteration (by influence of words ending in -ling) of Middle English scantiloun, scantlon tool for measuring thickness, gauge (about 1250); borrowed from Old French escantillon, eschantillon, alteration of eschandillon* (compare Old Provençal escandalh) gauge or measure, standard of measure, from Vulgar Latin scandāculum* kind of measure, from Latin scandere to climb, scale, measure off (verse). The meaning of small measure or amount, is first recorded in 1585, and that of a small timber, in 1663.

—scape a combining form meaning scene, picture, view, as in seascape, moonscape; abstracted from LANDSCAPE. The first attested use of the combining form is in the compound prison-scape, which appeared in 1796.

scapegoat n. 1530, a goat sent into the wilderness on the Day of Atonement, symbolic bearer of the sins of the people; formed from English scape, n., a shortened variant of ESCAPE + goat.

Scapegoat was coined to express Hebrew 'azāzēl (Leviticus 16:8, 10, 26), interpreted as 'ēz ōzēl goat that departs; actually a proper name, in Jewish tradition thought to be a demon or devil, sometimes correlated with the name that of the Canaanite deity Aziz. The sense of one who is blamed or punished for the mistakes or sins of others is first recorded in 1824. —v. 1943 (technical term in psychology); from the noun.

scapegrace n. 1809, formed from English scape, v., shortened variant of ESCAPE + grace, literally one who escapes the grace of God. Possibly influenced by scapegoat.

scapula n. 1578, New Latin, from Late Latin scapula shoulder, from Latin scapulae, pl., shoulders, shoulder blades; perhaps originally, spades, shovels; probably so called from the similarity in shape to a spade.

scar n. About 1395 scar mark left by a healed wound, burn, etc.; borrowed from Old French escare scab, and Medieval Latin escara; both from Late Latin eschara, from Greek eschārā scab formed after a burn, hearth, fireplace. —v. 1555, from the noun.

scarab n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French scarabée, from Latin scarabaeus a beetle, from Greek kárabos beetle, crayfish.

scaramouch or scaramouche n. 1662 Scaramuzza; later, Scaramouch (1677); name of a cowardly braggart in traditional Italian comedy; borrowed from French Scaramouche, from Italian Scaramuccia, from scaramuccia skirmish, from schermire to fence, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skirmen defend; see SKIRMISH).

scarce adj. About 1300 scars not abundant, scant, meager; later scarce (probably before 1400); borrowed from Old North French scars, escars, Old French eschars; developed from Vulgar Latin excarpus* made scant; literally, plucked out, from past participle of excarpere* pluck out, alteration of Latin excerpere pluck out, EXCERPT. —adv. Before 1325 scarce; from the adjective. —scarcity n. Probably before 1300 scarsete; borrowed from Old North French escarseté, from escars scarce, adj.; for suffix see -ity.

scare v. 1591, alteration of Middle English skerren to frighten (probably about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skirra to frighten, from skjarr timid, shy). —n. Before 1548; alteration of Middle English sker fear, dread (probably before 1400); from the verb. —scarecrow n. 1553, person employed in scaring birds; later, figure used to scare birds (1592). —scary adj. 1582, terrifying, frightful; formed from English scare, n. + *-y*¹.

scarf¹ n. strip of cloth. 1555, variant of scarp a heraldic stripe; borrowed from Old North French escarpe sash, sling, a dialect variant of Old French escherpe pilgrim's purse suspended from the neck, from Frankish skirpja* little bag woven of rushes, from Latin scirpus rush, bulrush.

scarf² n. connecting joint. 1276, in scarfneil nail for fastening a scarf joint; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish skarv scarf, seam, and Old Icelandic skarfi); cognates with Old High German scarbōn cut into pieces, Middle Low German scharven, Old English scarfian scrape off, and sceorfan to gnaw, bite, from Proto-Germanic skerf-/skarf-*. —v. 1627, from the noun.

scarify v. 1392 scarifien; borrowed from Middle French scarifier, from Late Latin scarificāre, alteration (through influence of the suffix -ficāre -fy) of Latin scarifāre, scariphāre scratch open, from Greek skariphásthai to scratch an outline, sketch; for suffix see -fy. —scarification n. 1392 scarificacioun; borrowed from Late Latin scarificātiōnem (nominative scarificātiō) a scratching open, from scarificāre scarify; for suffix see -ation.

scarlet n. About 1250 scarlet bright red cloth; later scarlat bright red color (about 1300); borrowed through Old French escarlata, or directly from Medieval Latin scarlatum, scarlata scarlet, a cloth of scarlet, from Persian saqlāt, variant of siqlillāt scarlet cloth, rich cloth, from Arabic siqlillāt fine cloth. —adj. About 1300 scarlat of scarlet color; from the noun.

scarp n. 1589, inner slope of a ditch surrounding a fortification; borrowed from Italian scarpa slope, probably from a Germanic source (compare German schroff steep, Middle High German schroffe sharp rock, crag, and Old High German screvōn to cut into; cognates with Old Icelandic skref step, pace, Middle Low German schreve line, stroke, Middle Dutch scrēve, and Old English scræf cave, grave, related to scarfian scrape off; see SCARF joint). —v. 1803, from the noun.

scat¹ interj., v. go away! 1838 'scat, scat, also s'cat in the expression quicker than s'cat in a great hurry (1833), possibly representing a hiss followed by the word cat.

scat² n. nonsense chatter and sounds sung to jazz music. 1929, probably of imitative origin. —v. 1935, from the noun.

scathe v. Probably about 1200 scathen to hurt, damage; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skadha to hurt, injure, Swedish skada, and Danish skade; cognate with Old English sceathian to hurt, injure, Old Frisian skethia, Old Saxon skathon, Middle Dutch scāden, modern Dutch schaden, Old High German scadōn, modern German schaden, and Gothic skathjan, from Proto-Germanic skath-*).

The meaning of sear with invective or satire, usually in the participial adjective scathing (1852), developed from the sense of scar, scorch 1667.

scatology n. 1876, formed from Greek skat-, stem of skōr (genitive skatós) excrement + connective -o- + English -logy treatise, study. —scatological adj. 1924, formed from English scatology + -ical.

scatter v. Probably before 1160 scateren distribute, squander; later, disperse, separate (about 1300); possibly a northern English variant of Middle English schateren to SHATTER. —n. 1642, from the verb.

scavenger n. 1530, person hired to remove refuse from streets, alteration of Middle English scawageour (1373), scavager (1477–79) an inspector in charge of collecting a toll or duty on goods for sale; borrowed from Anglo-French scawager, from scawage toll or duty on goods, from Old North French escauwaige inspection, from escauwer to inspect, from a Germanic source (compare Flemish scawwen to inspect, cognate with Old English scēawian to look at, inspect; see SHOW). In the 1500's a sound represented by n developed before the final syllable of scavager as is found in some other words, including harbinger and passenger (compare MESSENGER).

The sense of a person who searches through refuse to collect things (1562) was later applied to anyone who removed refuse or putrid matter, especially to any animal feeding on decaying matter (1596). —scavenge v. Before 1644, to remove refuse; back formation from scavenger.

scenario n. 1878, borrowing of Italian scenario, from scena scene, from Latin scæna, scēna SCENE. The outline of an imagined situation or chain of events is first recorded in 1962. —scenarist n. 1920, formed from English scenario + -ist.

scene n. 1540, part of an act of a play; also, stage scenery; borrowed from Middle French scène, and directly from Latin scæna, scēna scene, stage, from Greek skēnē scene, stage; originally, tent or booth; see SHINE. —scenery n. 1748, dramatic action or display of feeling; alteration (influenced by words in -ery) of earlier scenary scenario (1695); borrowed from Italian scenario SCENARIO. The meaning of painted objects used on a stage to represent places is found in 1770 and that of natural features of a landscape, in 1784. —scenic adj. 1623, dramatic, theatrical; borrowed from French scénique, and probably directly from Latin scēnicus, scaenicus, from Greek skēnikós, from skēnē scene; for suffix see -ic.

scent v. Before 1398 senten to feel; later, perceive by smell (about 1410); borrowed from Old French sentir to feel, perceive, smell, from Latin sentire to feel, perceive, sense. —n. 1375, odor or smell as a means of pursuit by a hound; probably from the verb, although attested somewhat earlier. The spelling scent did not appear until the 1600's, perhaps by mistaken analogy with ascent, descent, but compare the more closely related forms assent, consent, dissent.

scepter n. Probably before 1300 ceptre; later sceptre (before 1393); borrowed from Old French sceptre, from Latin scep̄trum, from Greek skēptron staff. —v. 1526, from the noun.

sceptic n. See SKEPTIC.

schedule n. 1397 sedule written document; later, appendix to a document (about 1420), and cedule (1403–04); borrowed from Old French cedule, from Late Latin schedula strip of paper, diminutive of Latin schida, scida one of the strips forming a papyrus sheet, from Greek schida.

The spelling schedule was introduced in English in the 1400's after the Latin form, and the original pronunciation (sed'yül) remained in use until the French pronunciation of certain words spelled sch- caused (shed'yül) to become the standard in Great Britain. In the United States, the practice of Webster promoted the pronunciation (skej'ül), patterned on that of school, scheme, etc.

The specific sense of a printed timetable is first recorded in 1863. —v. 1855, file a schedule; later, enter in a schedule (1862); from the noun.

scheme n. 1553, figure of speech; borrowed from Latin schēma shape, figure, form, from Greek schēma (genitive schēmatis) figure or appearance, related to schein to get, échein to have, hold. The meaning of a program of action, plan, appeared in 1647. —v. 1716, reduce to a scheme; later, devise a scheme (1767); from the noun. —schematic adj. 1701, borrowed from New Latin schematicus, from Latin schēma (genitive schēmatis) shape, form.

scherzo n. 1852, borrowed from Italian scherzo, literally, sport or joke, from scherzare to jest or joke, from a Germanic source (compare Middle High German scherzen to jump merrily, enjoy oneself, modern German scherzen to jest).

Schick test 1916, test to determine susceptibility to diphtheria, from the name of Béla Schick, who developed the test.

schism n. About 1384 scisme dissension within the church; borrowed from Old French scisme a cleft, split, from Late Latin schisma, from Greek schisma (genitive schismatos) division, cleft, from schízein to split. —schismatic adj. 1456 scismattike guilty of participating in a religious schism; borrowed from Middle French scismatique, from Late Latin schismaticus, from Latin schisma schism; for suffix see -IC. —n. About 1378 scismatic person who participates in a religious schism; borrowed from Old French scismatique, from Late Latin schismaticus, noun use of schismaticus, adj.

schist n. 1795, borrowed from French schiste, from Latin schistos lapis stone that splits easily, from Greek schistós divided, separated, from schízein to split; so called because schist splits easily into layers.

schistosome n. 1905, borrowed from New Latin Schistosoma the genus name, from Greek schistós divided; see SCHIST + sóma body, -some³. —schistosomiasis n. 1906, New Latin, from Schistosoma + -iasis diseased condition.

schizo- a combining form meaning split, division, cleavage, as in schizogenesis (reproduction by cleavage), schizophrenia. Also, schiz- before vowels. New Latin, from Greek schizo-, schiz- split, from schízein to split.

schizoid adj. 1925, borrowed from German schizoid; formed from Schizo(phrenie) schizophrenia + -oid resembling, like. —n. 1925, borrowed from German Schizoid, from the noun.

schizophrenia n. 1912, New Latin, from Greek schizo- split + phrén (genitive phrénós) mind + the New Latin -ia disordered condition, disease; originally coined in German as Schizophrenie. —schizophrenic adj. 1912, from English schizophrenia + -ic. —n. 1926, from the adjective.

schlemiel n. 1892, borrowed from Yiddish shlemiel bungler, probably from the Biblical name of Shelumiel chief of the tribe of Simeon, identified with the Simeonite prince Zimri ben Salu, who was killed while committing adultery.

schlepp or schlep v. 1922; borrowed from Yiddish shlepn to drag, from Middle High German schleppen (modern German schleppen), related to Old High German slifan to drag, and slifan to slide, SLIP¹. —n. 1939, borrowed from Yiddish shlep a bore, a drag, from the verb.

schlock or shlock n. 1915, borrowed from American Yiddish shlak, borrowing of German Schlacke dregs, scum, dross, SLAG. —adj. 1916, from the noun.

schmaltz n. 1935, cloying sentimentality, as in music, art, etc., borrowed from Yiddish shmaltz, literally, melted fat, from Middle High German smaltz, from Old High German, related to smelzan to melt. Modern German Schmalz fat, grease, has the same figurative meaning. —v. 1936, from the noun. —schmaltzy adj. 1935, formed from schmaltz + -y¹.

schmear n. 1961, in the whole schmear, the entire affair (originally show business jargon); borrowed from Yiddish shmir spread, from shmirn to smear, grease, from Middle High German smiren, from Old High German smirwen to SMEAR.

schmooze or schmoose v. 1897, borrowed from Yiddish shmuesn to chat, from shmues idle talk, chat, from Hebrew shemu'oth news, rumors. —n. 1939, borrowed from Yiddish shmues chat.

schnapps or schnaps n. 1818, borrowing of German Schnaps, originally, a mouthful, gulp, from Low German snaps, from snappen to snap.

schnauzer n. 1923, borrowing of German Schnauzer, from Schnauze SNOUT.

schnitzel n. 1854, borrowing of German Schnitzel cutlet, slice, formed from Schnitz a cut, slice + -el, diminutive suffix. German Schnitz is from schnitzen to carve, a frequentative form of schneiden to cut, from Old High German snidan, which is cognate with Old Icelandic snidha, Old Frisian snitha, and Old English snithan to cut, from Proto-Germanic snithanan*.

schnook n. 1948, simple or stupid person, probably borrowed from Yiddish shnuk elephant's trunk.

scholar n. About 1300 scholer, scoler learned person; developed from Old English (about 1000) scolere, scoliere student; borrowed from Medieval Latin scholaris, from Late Latin scholāris of a school, from Latin schola SCHOOL¹; for suffix see -AR. —scholarship n. 1535–36, status of a scholar, formed from English scholar + -ship. The meaning of learning, erudition, is first recorded in 1589.

scholastic adj. 1596, of or relating to scholasticism; probably replacing earlier scolasticale (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French scholastique, and directly from Medieval Latin scholasticus, from Latin scholasticus of a school, learned, from Greek scholastikós studious, learned, from scholázein be a scholar, devote one's leisure to learning, from scholē SCHOOL¹; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of having to do with schools, scholars, or education is first recorded in English in 1647. —n. 1644, borrowed from Medieval Latin scholasticus scholar, learned man, noun use of scholasticus, adj. —scholasticism n. 1756–82, theological and philosophical teaching in the Middle Ages; formed from English scholastic + -ism.

school¹ n. place of instruction. Probably before 1200 scole; developed from Old English scōl (before 899); borrowed from Latin schola, from Greek scholē school, lecture, discussion, leisure; originally, a holding back, a keeping clear, formed from schēin to get (échein to have, hold) by the addition of -olē through analogy with bolē a throw, stolē outfit, etc. —v. About 1425 skolen to study at a university; later scolen to instruct, teach (about 1445); from the noun and replacing scoleyen to study at school (about 1387–95) probably borrowed from Anglo-French escoleier*, from Old French escole school, from Latin schola. —schoolhouse n. (1429) —schooling n. (about 1449) school² n. group of fish. About 1400 scole; earlier scoie (1386); borrowed from Middle Dutch schole group of fish or other animals, multitude; cognate with Old English scolu band, troop, school of fish.

schooner n. 1716 skooneer, of uncertain origin. The respelling schooner, 1721, was probably influenced by Dutch words beginning with sch.

schottische n. 1849, borrowing of German Schottische, from schottisch Scottish, from Schotte a native of Scotland, from Old High German Scotto, from Late Latin Scottus member of an Irish tribe (one which invaded Scotland after the Romans left Britain in 423).

schtik n. See SHTICK.

schwa n. 1818 sheva; earlier Scheua (1582); the modern form schwa is a borrowing of German Schwa, and both the German and earlier English forms are borrowed from Hebrew shēwā emptiness, a neutral vowel quality.

sciatic adj. 1547, borrowed from Middle French sciastique of or affecting the hip, from Medieval Latin sciaticus, alteration of Latin ischiadicus of pain in the hip, from Greek ischiadikós, from ischíās (genitive ischíados) pain in the hips, from ischíon hip joint; for suffix see -IC. —sciatica n. Before 1400, borrowed from Medieval Latin sciatica, found in sciatica passio sciatic disease, feminine of sciaticus sciatic.

science n. About 1340 science knowledge, branch of learning, skill; borrowed from Old French science, from Latin scientia knowledge, from sciēns (genitive scientis), present participle of scīre to know; for suffix see -ENCE. A branch of learning based on observation and tested truths, arranged in an orderly system, is first recorded in English in 1725, developed from the sense of a particular branch of knowledge (logic, grammar, rhetoric, music, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy) as distinguished from art (1678), and related to the sense of a recognized branch of learning (before 1376).

scientific adj. 1589, concerned with science or the sciences; borrowed from Middle French scientifique, and directly from Medieval Latin scientificus, from Latin scientia knowledge; see SCIENCE + -ficus making, from facere to make. —scientist n. 1834, formed from Latin scientia knowledge + English -ist.

scimitar n. Before 1548 cimiterie short, curved sword; borrowed from Middle French cimeterre, and from Italian scimitarra, of uncertain origin (perhaps from Persian shimshūr). The spelling scimitar, first found in 1562, was influenced by the Italian form of the word.

scintilla n. 1692, borrowing of Latin scintilla particle of fire, spark, glittering speck.

scintillate v. 1623, formed as if from Latin scintillātum*, from past participle of scintillāre to sparkle, from scintilla spark; for suffix see -ATE¹. —scintillation n. 1623, borrowed from French, and directly from Latin scintillationem (nominative scintillātiō), from scintillāre; for suffix see -TION.

sciolist n. 1615, pretender to knowledge; formed from Late Latin sciolus one who knows a little, diminutive of sciūs knowing, from scīre to know + English -ist.

scion n. Before 1300 sioun; later scyoun (before 1398); borrowed from Old French sion, cion, of uncertain origin. The meaning of an heir or descendant appeared in 1814.

scissors n. pl. About 1380 sisoures cutting tool; borrowed from Old French cisoires, pl., from Vulgar Latin cisōria*, pl., from cisus*, abstracted from such compounds as Latin excisus, past participle of excādere to cut out; for suffix see -OR². The spelling with sc- is first recorded in the 1500's, influenced by Medieval Latin scissor tailor, from Latin, carver, cutter, from sciss-, past participle stem of scindere to split.

sclerosis n. 1392 sclirosus; before 1400 sclirosis; borrowed from Medieval Latin sclirosis a hardness, hard tumor, from Greek sklērosis hardening, from sklēros hard; for suffix see -OSIS. —sclerotic adj. Probably before 1425 schlyrotyk hard; borrowed from Medieval Latin scleroticus hard, from Greek sklēroûn to harden, from sklēros hard; for suffix see -IC.

scoff v. Probably before 1300 scoffen to jest, make light of something; from scof something trivial or ridiculous (before 1300); perhaps borrowed from Scandinavian skof* (compare Old Icelandic skaup, skop mockery, and early modern Danish skuf, skof jest, mockery, skuffe to deceive, frustrate, ridicule).

scofflaw n. 1924, formed from scoff, v. + law. Scofflaw was the winning entry in a national contest held during Prohibition to coin a word characterizing a person who drinks illegally.

scold n. Probably about 1150 scold ribald or abusive person; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skáld poet, one who lampoons, indicated in skáldskapr poetry, libel in verse). —v. About 1378 scolden quarrel noisily, use abusive language; from the noun.

sconce n. About 1392, lantern or candlestick with a screen; borrowed from Old French esconse lantern, hiding place, from Medieval Latin sconsa, from Latin abscondēsa, feminine past participle of abscondere to hide. The wall bracket used to hold a light is first recorded about 1450.

scone n. 1513, in Scottish; probably borrowed from Dutch schoon bread, in schoon brood fine bread, from Middle Dutch schoonbroot (schoon, scōne bright, beautiful + broot bread).

scoop n. 1324–25 scope ladle; later, kind of shovel (1487); borrowed from Middle Dutch schōpe, schoepe bucket; cognate with Middle Low German schōpe ladle, schuppe shovel, Middle High German schuofē ladle, bucket (from Proto-Germanic skōp-*), and probably also with Old Saxon sceppian to draw water, Low German and Dutch scheppen, Old High German scephan (modern German schöpfen), from Proto-Germanic skap-*.

The sense of news published before a rival newspaper does is found in 1874, derived from the verb. —v. Before 1338 scopen to ladle or bail out water; from the noun. The informal sense of appropriate so as to exclude competitors is found about 1850.

scoot v. 1758 scout, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skjōta to shoot). The spelling scoot originated in American English. —n. 1864, from the verb. —scooter n. 1820, simple kind of plow used for marking furrows, etc.; formed from English scoot, v. + -*er*¹. The child's vehicle propelled by pushing against the ground with one foot is first recorded in 1919.

scope¹ n. extent. 1534, range, space, extent; borrowed from Italian scopo aim, purpose, object, from Latin scopus, from Greek skopós aim, target, watcher, related to skopeîn behold, look, consider. The distance the mind can reach, extent of view, is first recorded about 1600.

scope² n. instrument for viewing. 1872, abstracted from telescope, microscope, etc.

—scope a combining form meaning an instrument for viewing, examining, or observing, as in stethoscope, radarscope. Borrowed from New Latin -scopium instrument for examination, from Greek -skōpion, from skopeîn look at.

—scopy a combining form meaning viewing, examining, observation, as in microscopy, rhinoscopy. Borrowed from Greek -skopîa observation, from skopeîn look at.

scorbutic adj. 1655, borrowed from New Latin scorbuticus pertaining to scurvy, from scorbutus scurvy (1558); for suffix see -IC.

scorch v. Before 1325 scorchen to burn on the surface, char, possibly an alteration of scorcnenn to make dry, parch (implied in scorcnedd, past participle, probably about 1200); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skorþna to be shriveled, cognate with Old English scrimman to shrink, dry up). —n. 1611, from the verb; also skorke superficial burn, scorch (probably about 1450), from scorchen, skorcken to scorch.

score n. About 1230 score financial record; later, twenty (about 1250), limit, boundary (about 1303), reckoning, total amount (about 1330); developed from late Old English scoru twenty (before 1100); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skor mark, tally, twenty).

The meaning of a printed piece of music (1701), developed from the practice of connecting related staves by scores or lines. —v. About 1390 scoren to notch, mark, record by notches; from the noun, perhaps reinforced by a Scandinavian word (compare Old Icelandic skora to notch, record, from skor, n.).

scorn n. Probably before 1200 scorne, scarn; possibly from the verb, and borrowed from Old French escarn, escharn mockery, derision, contempt, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skern mockery, jest, sport). —v. Probably about 1150 scarnen to slander; later, to mock, ridicule, deride (probably before 1200), and scornen (about 1250); borrowed from Old French escarnir, escharnir mock, despise, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skernon mock, deride). Probably influenced later by Old French escorner insult, humiliate; originally, to dishonour, from Vulgar Latin excornāre*, from Latin ex- without + cornū horn (compare Italian scornare treat with contempt). —scornful adj. Before 1400 scornfull; earlier skornefulle (about 1350); formed from Middle English scorne + -full -ful.

scorpion n. Probably before 1200 scorpiun; later scorpion (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French scorpion, and directly from Latin scorpiōnem (nominative scorpiō), from Greek skorpîos a scorpion.

Scot n. Probably before 1200 Scotte; developed from Old English Scottas, Sceottas inhabitants of Ireland, Irishmen; a borrowing of Late Latin Scotti, of uncertain (perhaps Celtic) origin. Originally Old English Scottas meant the Irish of Ireland. After King Alfred, the name applied to the Irish who had settled in the northwest of Great Britain, and to the kingdom of the Scots in Britain. —Scotch adj. 1591, earlier, in Scotchman (1570); contraction of Scottish. —Scotland n. (before 1126 Scotlande) —Scots adj. About 1333 Skottis, also Scottis (probably before 1350), northern variant of Scottish. —Scotsman n. (1375 Scottis man) —Scottish adj. Probably before 1200 Scottis; formed from Middle English Scotte Scot + *-ish*¹, probably by influence, or as an alteration, of Old English Scyttisc Scottish (before 899), from Scottas, Sceottas + -isc *-ish*¹.

scotch v. About 1412 scocchen to cut, score, gash; perhaps borrowed through Anglo-French escocher, Old French cocher, cochier to notch, nick, from coche a notch, groove, probably from Latin cocum berry of scarlet oak (notched or notchlike in appearance), from Greek kókkos. The meaning of make harmless for a time (1798) was extended to stamp out, crush (1825).

scot-free adj. Before 1066 scotfre exempt from royal tax; formed from scot royal tax, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skot contribution, shot), and a transferred use of scot, sceot SHOT + fre free.

scoundrel n. 1589 skowndrell, of unknown origin. The spelling scoundrel is first recorded in 1601.

scour¹ v. clean or polish. Probably before 1200 scuren; later scouren (about 1390); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch scūren, and from Old French escurer, from Late Latin excūrāre clean off (Latin ex- out + cūrāre care for). The borrowing from Middle Dutch suggests the word was originally a technical term among the Flemish workmen in England. —n. 1619, from the verb.

scour² v. move quickly about in search of something. Before 1425 scouren, scuren traverse in search or pursuit of enemies; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian skure move quickly, related to Old Icelandic skúr rain).

scourge n. Probably before 1200 scurge whip, lash; later scourge (about 1250), and in the sense of affliction, calamity (before 1382); borrowed through Anglo-French escorge, back formation from Old French escorgier to whip, from Vulgar Latin excorrigiāre* (Latin ex- out, off + corrigia thong, shoelace, probably from a Gaulish word related to Old Irish cúimrech fetter). —v. About 1300 scourgen, from the noun.

scout¹ v. to spy or hunt around. Probably about 1380 scouten to search, scout; borrowed from Old French escouter to listen, heed, variant of asouter, from Vulgar Latin ascultāre*, alteration (by dissimilation of vowel sounds represented by au and u) of Latin auscultāre to listen, give heed to. —n. 1553, act of scouting; 1555, person who scouts; borrowed from Middle French escoute act of listening or scouting, scout, sentinel, from the verb in Old French escouter to listen, heed. In the sense of a person who scouts, modern English scout may also be a shortened form of Middle English scoute-wach sentinel, guard (probably about 1380, from Old French escoute + Middle English wacche watch, sentinel).

scout² v. dismiss scornfully. 1710; earlier, to mock (1605); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skúta to taunt).

scow n. 1780, borrowed from Dutch schouw a ferry boat, punt, from Middle Dutch scouwe, scoude; cognate with Middle High German schalte barge, Old High German scalta pole to push or punt a boat, scaltan to push off, and Old Saxon scaldan push (a boat) from the shore.

scowl v. 1340 skoulen look angry or sullen by lowering the eyebrows; later scowlen (about 1400); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian skule look furtively, squint, look embarrassed). —n. 1500–20, from the verb.

scrabble v. 1537, to scrawl, scribble; borrowed from Dutch schrabbelen, frequentative form of schrabben to scratch. The meaning of scratch or scrape about, is first recorded in 1600, and that of struggle, scramble, in 1638. —n. 1794, a confused struggle, scramble; from the verb. —Scrabble (trademark for a word game) 1950, probably abstracted from scribble-scrabble hasty writing (1760), a reduplicated formation on SCRIBBLE, n.

scrag n. 1542, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish skragge old and torn thing, Danish and Norwegian skrog hull, carcass, and Icelandic skröggur decrepit person). —scraggly adj. 1879, formed scrag + *-ly*², but -gg- implies scraggle* (recorded only in scragged, scraggling). —scraggy adj. 1611, formed from English scrag, n. + *-y*¹.

scram v. 1928, perhaps a shortened form of SCRAMBLE.

scramble v. Before 1586, make one's way by climbing, crawling, etc.; perhaps variant of SCRABBLE. —n. 1674, a confused struggle; from the verb.

scrap¹ n. small piece. Before 1387 scrappe fragment of food; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skrap scraps, trifles). —v. 1891, from the noun. —scrapbook n. (1825) —scrappy adj. 1837, formed from English *scrap*¹, n. + *-y*¹.

scrap² n. fight. n1846, possibly a variant of SCRAPE, n. an abrasive encounter. —v. 1874, from the noun. —scrappy adj. 1895, formed from English *scrap*², n. + *-y*¹.

scrape v. Probably about 1225 skrapen erase with a knife; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skrapa to scrape, erase, Swedish skrapa and Danish skerabe to scrape; cognate with Old English scrapian to scrape, Middle High German schreffen to scratch, and Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch schrapen to scrape), from Proto-Germanic skrap-*. —n. About 1440, from the verb. The sense of a difficulty, predicament, is first recorded in 1709.

scrapple n. 1855, probably a diminutive formation from *scrap*¹ piece.

scratch v. About 1400 scrachen to wound slightly with something sharp; probably a fusion of scratten to scratch (before 1250; compare scratlen to scratch, probably before 1200); and of crachen to scratch (about 1330); both of uncertain origin; Middle English crachen was possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch cratsen to scratch (modern Dutch krassen), cognate with Old High German krazzōn to scratch (modern German kratzen), Old Swedish kratta. The sense of rub or scrape to relieve itching is recorded in 1530. —n. 1586, a mark made by scratching; from the verb. The starting point of a contestant with no odds (1867) was the source of the meaning the beginning, nothing (usually in the phrase from scratch) (1922). —adj. 1853, collected or prepared hastily; from the noun. —scratchy adj. 1710, affected with the scratches (a disease); formed from English scratch, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of tending to scratch or scrape is found in 1866.

scrawl v. 1612 (implied in scrawling); perhaps developed from Middle English scrawlen spread out the limbs, sprawl, gesticulate (before 1425); possibly an altered form of sprawlen to SPRAWL by association with crawlen to CRAWL. —n. 1693, something scrawled; from the verb.

scrawny adj. 1833, apparently variant of dialectal scranny lean, thin (1820); of uncertain origin.

scream v. About 1225 screamen to utter a shrill, piercing cry; earlier scræmen (about 1175), shreamen (probably about 1200); of uncertain origin (compare Old Icelandic skrams to scream, Middle Dutch schremen, scremen, and scrēuwen, Flemish schreemen and Frisian skrieme, Old Frisian skria to shout, scream, which may have been borrowed into Old English scræman*). —n. Before 1460 skreme; from the verb.

scree n. 1781, back formation from screes, pl., pebbles and small stones; borrowed from Old Icelandic skridha landslide (Swedish and Danish skred), from skridha to slide, glide; cognate with Old English scrīthan to go, glide, from Proto-Germanic skrīthanan*.

screech v. 1577 skrech utter a loud, piercing cry; later screech (1602), alteration of skrichen (before 1325), schrichen (about 1250); possibly of imitative origin in English and resembling similar formations in Old Saxon skrikōn and Old Icelandic skrækja to screech. —n. 1560 skreeche; alteration of earlier scrich (1513), from verb skrichen to screech.

screed n. Before 1333 screade fragment; later screde strip of cloth (before 1425); developed in northern dialect of England from Old English scrēade SHRED. A long list, lengthy speech, is first recorded before 1789.

screen n. 1348 skrene covered frame for protection from the heat of a fire or from drafts; borrowed probably from Old North French escren, Old French escran a screen against heat, from Middle Dutch scherm, schirm screen, cover; cognate with Middle Low German scerm and Old High German skirm screen, shield, (modern German Schirm umbrella, shade, shield). An open mesh for sifting is first recorded in 1573, and a mesh in a window or door to protect against insects, in 1840. —v. About 1485 screanen to shield or protect from danger, from the noun.

screw n. 1404 scrwe cylinder with a spiral groove or ridge; later skrewe (1497); borrowed from Middle French escroue nut, cylindrical socket, hole in which a screw turns, probably from Gallo-Romance scrōba*, altered from Latin scrobis hole, pit by influence of scrōfa breeding sow, of uncertain origin. Note that in Medieval Latin scrōfa could mean female screw, and in South Italian scrōfula means screw. Apparently the Germanic forms (Middle Dutch schruve, Middle High German schrübe, etc.) were all derived through Low German schruve from Old French. The spelling with -ew was influenced by dew, flew, etc. —v. 1599, from the noun. —screwdriver n. (1779) —screwy adj. 1820, tipsy or slightly drunk; later, crazy, ridiculous (1887).

screwball n. 1866, (in cricket) ball bowled with a screw or twist; later, (in baseball) pitch that curves in an unexpected erratic way (1928); formed from English screw, n. + ball. An eccentric person is first recorded in 1933.

scribble v. About 1456 scribblen write carelessly or hastily; possibly borrowed from Medieval Latin scribillare, a diminutive form of Latin scribere to write + substitution of English -le¹ or -le³. —n. 1577, from the verb.

scribe n. Probably about 1200, a teacher of Jewish law, Pharisee; probably originally borrowed from Late Latin scriba, used in the Vulgate to render Greek grammateús, corresponding to Hebrew sōphēr writer, scholar. In Latin scriba a keeper of accounts, or secretary was from the verb scribere to write.

Scribe a secretary or clerk is first recorded in Middle English before 1382. The person whose occupation is writing, especially copying manuscripts, is first recorded in 1535. —v. 1467–68 scriben to write (something), either developed from the noun in English or borrowed from Latin scribere to write; later, to mark or score (wood, stone, metal) with a pointed tool (1678), perhaps shortened from describe.

scrim n. 1792, kind of thin fabric, of unknown origin.

scrimmage n. About 1470, skirmish, minor battle; alteration of SKIRMISH; for suffix see -AGE. The meaning in Rugby and American football is first recorded in 1857; a scrimmage originally involved a confused struggle between the players. —v. Before 1825, to skirmish or quarrel; later, put a football in a scrimmage (1881); from the noun.

scrimp v. Before 1774, treat stingily; developed from earlier scrimp, adj., scant, meager (1718); possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish skrumpta to shrink, shrivel up). —scrimpy adj. 1855, formed from English scrimp, v. + -y¹.

scrimshaw n. 1864, back formation of earlier scrimshander (1851), apparently derived from the verbal noun scrimshonging (1850), scrimshonting (1825–26) the making of scrimshaw work, of unknown origin.

scrip n. 1762, receipt for a portion of a loan subscribed, probably shortened from (sub)scrip(tion receipt). The meaning of a certificate issued as currency in place of money is first recorded in 1790.

script n. About 1385, piece of writing, text, alteration (influenced by the Latin form) of earlier scrite (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French escrit a writing, a written paper, from Latin scriptum a writing, book, law, line or mark, noun use of neuter past participle of scribere to write. The meaning of handwriting is first recorded in 1860, and that of the manuscript of a play in 1897. —v. 1935, from the noun.

Scripture n. Before 1325 scriptur the sacred writings of the Bible; borrowed from Late Latin scriptūra the writings contained in the Bible; also, a passage in the Bible, from Latin scriptūra a writing, character, inscription, from script-, past participle stem of scribere write; for suffix see -URE.

scrivener n. Before 1399 scrivener scribe; as a surname Scriviner (about 1375); also, notary (1477–79); from earlier scribein scribe (about 1303); borrowed from Old French escrivain a writer, notary, clerk, from Vulgar Latin scribānem*, accusative of scriba a scribe, from Latin (modeled on accusatives such as fullōnem, nominative fullō); for suffix see -ER¹.

scrod n. 1841, possibly borrowed from earlier Dutch schrood piece cut off, from Middle Dutch scrōde SHRED; if so borrowed, the name is probably associated with the fish because it is sliced into pieces for drying or cooking.

scrofula n. 1791 (but implied earlier in scrofulous), singular of Middle English scrophulas (before 1400); borrowed from Late Latin scrofulae, pl., swelling of the glands of the neck, from Latin scrōfa breeding sow, of uncertain origin (perhaps so called because the glands associated with this disease resemble the back of a hog). —scrofulous adj. 1612, formed from Medieval Latin scrofula + English -ous; also found in Middle English (probably before 1425), borrowed from Medieval Latin scrofulosus, scrophulosus.

scroll n. 1405 scrowell roll of parchment or paper, written document; later scrolle (probably 1438); alteration (by association with rolle roll) of earlier scroue, probably before 1200; borrowed from Anglo-French escroue, Old French escroe, escroue scrap, roll of parchment, from Frankish skrōda* (compare Old High German scrōt piece cut off, SHRED). —v. 1606, to write down in a scroll; from the noun. The meaning of show on a computer or TV screen a few lines at a time appeared in 1981.

scrotum n. 1597, borrowing of Latin scrotum, cognate with Old English scrūd garment (modern English shroud).

scrounge v. 1915, alteration of earlier dialectal English scrunge to search about stealthily, rummage, pilfer (1909), of uncertain origin.

scrub¹ v. rub hard. Before 1425 scrobber curry a horse; earlier shrubben (probably before 1300); also, scratch or rub oneself (about 1303); borrowed either from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German schrubben to scrub, or from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian and Danish skrubbe to scrub, Swedish skrubba). —n. 1621, from the verb.

scrub² n. brush, shrubs. Before 1398 scrub a low, stunted tree or shrub; variant of shrobbe, shrub SHRUB. The collective meaning of land overgrown with scrub, is first recorded in scruff n. 1790, alteration (influenced by scruff crust, scum) of scuft (1787), probably cognate with North Frisian skuft back of the neck of a horse, and Dutch schoft withers of a horse.

1809. —adj. 1710–11, from the noun. —scrubby adj. 1591, from *scrub*², n. + *-y*¹.

scruffy adj. 1660, scaly, covered with scurf, from earlier scruff dandruff, scurf (1526), variant of SCURF; for suffix see *-y*¹. The figurative sense of shabby or dirty, is first recorded in 1871.

scrumptious adj. 1830, stylish, splendid, first-rate; probably alteration of SUMPTUOUS. The sense of delicious is first recorded in 1881.

scruple n. Before 1382 scripil; later scrupul (probably about 1425); borrowed from Old French scrupule, and from Latin scripulus uneasiness, anxiety, pricking of conscience, literally a small sharp stone or pebble, diminutive of scripus sharp stone or pebble, used figuratively by Cicero for a cause of uneasiness or anxiety, probably alluding to a pebble in one's shoe or sandal. The plural scruples is recorded before 1500. —v. 1627, from the noun. —scrupulous adj. About 1443, very careful to do what is right, borrowed from Middle French scrupuleux, and directly from Latin scripulosus, from scripulus scruple; for suffix see -ous.

scrutiny n. 1415 scrutinie the taking of a vote to choose someone or decide some question; borrowed from Latin scrūtiniū a search, inquiry, from scrūtārī to examine, search (as through trash), from scrūta, pl., trash, rags. The meaning of close examination, is first recorded in English in 1604. —scrutinize v. 1671, formed from English scrutin(y) + -ize.

scuba n. 1952, acronym formed from S(elf)-C(ontained) U(nderwater) B(reathing) A(pparatus). —v. 1964 scuba-dive; 1969 scuba; from the noun.

scud v. 1532, perhaps verb use of Middle English scut rabbit, rabbit's tail (1440, referring to the movement of a rabbit); earlier scot (probably before 1300); of uncertain origin; or perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish skyde to shoot, glide, and Old Icelandic skjōta to throw, SHOOT). —n. 1609, from the verb.

scuff v. 1595, to evade; Scottish, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish skuffa and Old Icelandic skūfa, skýfa to SHOVE). The meaning of walk with a shuffle, is first recorded in 1847, and that of injure the surface of, in 1897. —n. 1824, a glancing blow, Scottish; from the verb. The meaning of noise made by scuffing is first recorded in 1899. —scuffle v. 1579, probably a frequentative form of scuff, perhaps from the same source as SCUFF; for suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1606, from the verb.

scull n. 1345–46 skulle; later sculle (1486); of unknown origin. —v. 1624 (implied in sculling); from the noun.

scullery n. 1445 squillery household department concerned with the care of kitchen utensils; earlier as a surname Squillerye (1330); also sculerie (1454), scullery (1474); borrowed from Middle French escuelerie office of the servant in charge of plates, etc., from escuelle dish, from Vulgar Latin scūtella*, alteration (influenced by scūtum shield, and its resemblance to a platter), of Latin scutella serving platter, salver; see SCUTTLE¹ bucket; for suffix see -ERY.

scullion n. Probably about 1475 scavlioun; later scullian (1515), scullyon (1531); borrowed from Middle French escouillon, escouvillon a swab, cloth, from escouve broom, twig, from Latin scōpae, pl., broom.

sculpt v. 1864, borrowed from French sculpter, from Latin sculpt-, past participle stem of sculpere to carve; and reinforced by back formation in English from sculptor or sculpture, n.

sculpture n. Before 1393, art of carving or engraving; borrowed from Latin sculptūra sculpture, from sculpt-, past participle stem of sculpere to carve, engrave, back formation from compounds (such as exsculpere) of scalpere to carve, cut; for suffix see -URE. —v. 1645, from the noun. —sculptor n. 1634, borrowing of Latin sculptor, from sculpere carve; for suffix see *-OR*².

scum n. 1340 some foam, froth; later, thin layer on top of a liquid (1392); and scum (1440); borrowed from Middle Dutch scūme (modern Dutch schuim) foam, froth; cognate with Middle Low German schūm foam, and Old High German scūm (modern German Schaum), from Proto-Germanic skūma-*. The sense of the dross of society, is first recorded in 1586. —v. 1373 scomen remove scum from; later scumen (before 1400); from the noun. —scummy adj. 1577, formed from English scum, n. + *-y*¹.

scupper n. 1422–27 scoper, later scupper (about 1590); of uncertain origin (perhaps from Old French escopir, escupir to spit out; or possibly related to Middle English scope scoop).

scurf n. Old English (before 1000) scurf; alteration (probably by Scandinavian influence) of scof, scoef; cognate with Middle Dutch scoft scurf (modern Dutch schurft), Old High German scof (modern German Schoff), Danish skurv, and Icelandic skurfa scurf, from Proto-Germanic skurf-*. —scurfy adj. 1483, covered with scurf, of the nature of scurf; formed from Middle English scurf + *-y*¹.

scurrilous adj. 1576, formed from English scurrile coarsely joking + -ous. English scurrile was borrowed from Middle French, and directly from Latin scurrilis buffoonlike, from scurra fashionable city idler; later, buffoon.

scurry v. 1810, to run quickly, scamper; perhaps abstracted from hurry-scurry (adj. 1732, v. 1771), a reduplication of HURRY. An earlier sense of ride out as a scout is first recorded in 1580. —n. 1823, from the verb.

scurvy n. About 1565, noun use of Middle English scurvy covered with or suffering from scurf (probably about 1425), formed from SCURF + *-y*¹. At first only a variant of scurfy, by the 1500's scurvy took on the meaning of Dutch scheurbiuk and French scorbut scurvy (disease causing swollen and bleeding gums, prostration, a hemorrhaging), from Old Icelandic skyr-bjúgr a swelling (bjúgr) from consumption of sour milk (skyr) on long sea voyages.

scuttle¹ n. bucket. 1366–67 scutel basket; later scutle (1541); found in Old English (about 1050) scutel dish, platter; borrowed from Latin scutella serving platter, salver, diminutive of scutra flat tray, dish; perhaps related to scūtum shield; see SCULLERY. Latin scutella was borrowed into other Germanic languages as well; compare Old Icelandic skutill, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch schotel, Middle Low German schötel, and Old High German scuzzila (modern German Schüssel). The meaning of a bucket for holding coal is first recorded in 1849.

scuttle² v. scamper, scurry. Before 1450 scottlen (implied in scottlynge); later scutlen (1657); probably related to SCUD; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1623, from the verb.

scuttle³ n. opening in a ship's deck. 1497 skottell; later scuttle (about 1595); borrowed from Middle French escoutille, or directly from Spanish escotilla hatchway, of uncertain origin. —v. 1642, cut a hole in the bottom of (a ship) to sink it, from the noun. The sense of undermine is first recorded in 1888.

scuttlebutt n. 1805 scuttle-butt water cask kept on a ship's deck, formed from English *scuttle*³ opening, hole + *butt*⁴ barrel, replacing earlier scuttled cask (1777). The meaning of rumor, gossip, is first recorded in 1901 (originally nautical slang), traditionally said to be from the fact that sailors gathered around the scuttlebutt to gossip.

scuzzy adj. 1969, perhaps blend of scummy and fuzzy.

scythe n. Probably before 1300 sithe; developed from Old English (about 700) sithe, sigthi; cognate with Middle Low German segede, sigde scythe, Middle Dutch sichte (modern Dutch zicht), and Old Icelandic sigðr, from Proto-Germanic seǵithō*. The spelling with sc- is first recorded in 1422–41, influenced by association with Latin scissor carver, cutter; see SCISSORS. —v. 1573–80, from the noun.

sea n. Probably about 1150 see; later sea (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sæ sea, lake (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian sē sea, Old Saxon sēo, Middle Low German sē, Middle Dutch see (modern Dutch zee), Old High German sē, sēo sea, lake, pond (modern German See lake, sea), Old Icelandic sær, sjör, sjár sea (Norwegian sjø, Swedish sjö, Danish sej), and Gothic sáius sea, marsh, from Proto-Germanic saiwiz*.

The sense of a copious quantity of something (as in a sea of troubles) is first recorded, probably before 1200. —sea change transformation (1610) —seacoast n. (before 1400) —seafaring adj. (probably before 1200) —seaman n. (about 725, in Beowulf) —seashell n. (before 900) —sea wall (about 725, cliff by the sea, in Beowulf; about 1450, wall to prevent encroachment of the sea) —seawater n. (about 1000) seal¹ n. design stamped on wax. Probably about 1200 seil (figurative) something that joins two things; later seel official seal, authenticating mark (1258); and seal (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French seel, from Vulgar Latin sigillum*, from Latin sigillum small picture, engraved figure, seal, diminutive of signum mark, token, SIGN.

Seabee n. 1942, formed from pronunciation of C.B., abbreviation of Construction Battalion.

Latin sigillum was adopted into several Germanic languages: Gothic sigljō, Middle High German sigel (modern German Siegel), Old Frisian sigel, Middle Low German segel, Middle Dutch segel (modern Dutch zegel), Swedish sigill, Danish and Norwegian segl. A compound, or perhaps derivative form, occurs in Old English insegel, Old High German insigili, Old Frisian insigel, and Old Icelandic innsigli. Significance of the prefix in- is unknown, but it has been suggested that the form may have some relation to Latin insigne sign, mark. —v. Probably before 1200 sealen fasten with a seal; borrowed from Old French seeler, from seel seal, n.

seal² n. mammal with flippers. 1293, implied in selesmer, probably meaning pieces of blubber; developed from Old English sēol- (before 899), stem in the declension of seolh seal; cognate with Middle Low German sel, sēl seal, Middle Dutch seel, sael, Old High German selah, and Old Icelandic selr, (Norwegian sel, Swedish säl, Danish sæl), from Proto-Germanic selhaz*.

seam n. About 1303 seme seam in a garment, hem; developed from Old English sām (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian sām hem, seam, Middle Low German sōm, Middle Dutch soom (modern Dutch zoom), Old High German soum (modern German Saum), and Old Icelandic saumur (Swedish söm, Danish søm), from Proto-Germanic saumaz*; ultimately derived from the same Germanic source as Old English sīwian to SEW. —v. 1582, join with a seam; from the noun. —seamstress n. 1644, before 1613 sempstresse; formed from Middle English semster person whose work is sewing (1379) + -ess; developed from Old English (about 995) sēamestre seamstress, tailor (sēam seam + -estre -ster); originally the designation of a woman, but in Old English also applied to a man, and lack of a feminine form led to formation of seamstress. —seamy adj. 1604, (figurative) least pleasant, worst; formed from English seam, n. + *-y*¹.

séance n. 1789, a sitting or session, as of a learned society or other body of persons; borrowed from French séance a sitting, from seoir (replaced by asseoir) to sit, from Latin sedēre SIT. The meaning of a spiritualistic session, is first recorded in 1845.

sear v. Before 1400 seren cauterize, burn; later, cause to wither (before 1420); developed from Old English (probably about 890) sēarian dry up, wither, from sēar dried up, withered, SERE.

search v. Probably before 1300 serchen dig for; later, go about trying to find something, explore (about 1330); borrowed from Old French cerchier to search, from Latin circāre go about, wander, traverse, from circus CIRCLE. —n. Probably before 1400 serche, borrowed through Anglo-French serche, Old French cerche, from cerchier to search.

season n. Probably before 1300 seysoun, seysyne proper time, suitable occasion, time of the year; also season (about 1350); borrowed from Old French saison, seison a sowing, planting, from Latin satiōnem (nominative satiō) a sowing (in Vulgar Latin, time of sowing), from sat-, past participle stem of serere to sow. —v. Probably about 1390 sesoumen improve the flavor of by adding spices or condiments; borrowed from Old French assaisonner to ripen, season (a- to + saison, seison season), from the sense in Old French of ripen, make (fruit) more palatable by extending its growing season. This sense of ripen, and to dry or harden (of timber), is not recorded in English before 1540. —seasonable adj. About 1380 sesounable; formed from Middle English sesoun season, n. + -able. —seasonal adj. 1838, formed in English from season, n. + -al. —seasoning n. 1511, act of adding something to food to improve its flavor; later, something added to improve flavor (1580); formed from English season, v. + *-ing*¹.

seat¹ n. thing to sit on. Probably before 1200 sete; borrowed from Old Icelandic sæti seat, position, from Proto-Germanic sæt-*; related to SIT; also probably a blend with Old English sæt a place where one sits as in ambush; cognate with Old Icelandic sāt a sitting in ambush, ambush, both words related to Old Icelandic sæti seat, and its cognates Old High German gisāzi (modern German Gesäss) a seat, and Middle Dutch gesaete. —v. 1589, from the noun.

seat² n. established place, residence, location. About 1200 sate; later sete (about 1250); extended use of sete SEAT¹, influenced by Old French siege seat, established place, residence, and Latin sēdes seat, resting place, residence, center of a particular activity.

The meaning of a location or site (as the seat of a disease) is found in Middle English before 1393, and that of the city or place in which a throne or government is established, about 1400. —v. 1577, located; later, to locate in a particular place (1603); from the noun.

sebaceous adj. 1728, secreting a fatty or oily substance; later, fatty, oily (1783); formed from Latin sēbum tallow, grease + English -aceous.

secant n. 1593, borrowed from Latin secantem (nominative secāns) cutting, present participle of secāre to cut; for suffix see -ANT.

secede v. 1702, withdraw, retire; formed as a verb to secession, n., by borrowing from Latin sēcēdere (sē- apart + cēdere to go, CEDE). —secession n. 1533, withdrawal, retirement; borrowed from Latin sēcēssionem (nominative sēcēssio), from sēcēss-, past participle stem of sēcēdere secede; for suffix see -ION. —secessionist n. 1860, formed from secession + -ist.

seclude v. 1451 secluden shut off, keep out; borrowed from Latin sēcludere shut off, confine (sē- apart + cludere to shut, CLOSE). —seclusion n. 1616, borrowed from Medieval Latin seclusionem (nominative seclusio), from Latin sēclūs-, stem of the past participle of sēcludere seclude; for suffix see -SION.

second¹ adj. next after the first. About 1300 seconde; borrowed from Old French second, and directly from Latin secundus following, next in order, from the root of sequi follow; see SEQUEL. —adv. Before 1382, from the adjective. —n. Probably before 1325, from the adjective. Seconds, in the sense of articles below first quality, is first recorded about 1600. —v. Before 1586, borrowed from Middle French seconder, from Latin secundāre to assist, make conditions favorable, from secundus assisting, favorable, following, second. —secondary adj. Before 1382 seoundarie, borrowed from Latin secundarius of or belonging to the second class, second-class, inferior, from secundus second; for suffix see -ARY.

second² n. $\frac{1}{60}$ of a minute. 1391 seconde, seconde $\frac{1}{60}$ of a minute of time or of angular measurement; borrowed from Old French seconde, from Medieval Latin secunda, as in secunda pars minuta second diminished part (the result of the second division of the hour by sixty), from Latin secunda, feminine of secundus SECOND¹.

secrecy n. 1573, alteration of secretee (about 1415); formed from secre, adj., secret (about 1375, borrowed from Old French secré, variant of secret SECRET) + -tee *-ty*². Changing of Middle English secretee (representing the suffix *-ty*²) to secrecy (with suffix -cy) was common in early modern English.

secret adj. About 1378, hidden, concealed, private; borrowed from Old French secret concealed, private, and directly from Latin sēcrētus set apart, withdrawn, hidden, originally past participle of sēcernere to set apart (sē- apart + cernere separate). —n. About 1380, something kept secret, mystery; borrowed from Old French secret a secret place, and borrowed directly from Latin sēcrētum a secret, originally neuter of sēcrētus, past participle of sēcernere to set apart.

An earlier form secre (about 1300), was borrowed from Old French secré, variant of secret secret, n. —secretive adj. 1464 secretife secret, hidden, formed from Middle English secret, adj. + -ife, -ive. The sense of not frank and open, is first recorded in 1853 as a back formation from earlier secretiveness (in phrenology) quality or state of being secretive (1815); formed from secret + -ive + -ness, after French secretivité.

secretary n. Before 1387 secretarie person entrusted with secrets; borrowed from Medieval Latin secretarius clerk, notary, confidential officer, confidant, from Latin sēcrētum a SECRET; for suffix see -ARY. The meaning of a person who writes letters, keeps records, etc., originally applied to a king's secretary appeared in English probably before 1430. —secretarial adj. 1801, of or pertaining to a secretary; probably formed from Medieval Latin secretarius secretary + English *-al*¹. —secretariat n. 1811, office or position of secretary; borrowing of French secrétariat, from Medieval Latin secretarium office of secretary, from secretarius secretary.

secrete¹ v. to produce and discharge. 1707, probably a back formation from secretion. —secretion n. 1646, borrowed from French secrétion, from Latin sēcētionem (nominative sēcētiō) separation, from sēcēt-, stem of the past participle of sēcernere to separate, set apart; for suffix see -TION. —secretory adj. 1692, formed from Latin sēcrētus, past participle + English -ory.

secrete² v. to conceal, hide, keep secret. 1741, probably alteration of secret to conceal (1595, from the noun), by influence of Latin sēcrētus set apart, hidden; see SECRET.

sect n. Probably about 1350 secte a religious order or body; borrowed through Old French secte, and directly from Late Latin secta religious group or sect, from Latin secta following, school of thought; originally, a way, road, from the feminine of sectus, variant past participle of sequi to follow. —sectarian adj. 1649, formed from sectary member of a sect (1556) + -an; borrowed from Middle French sectaire, or directly from Medieval Latin sectarius, from Latin secta sect. —n. 1654, from the adjective.

section n. About 1319 section a division, an intersection; borrowed from Middle French section, or directly from Latin sectionem (nominative sectiō) a cutting, or cutting off, division, part cut or separated, from sect-, stem of the past participle of secāre to cut; for suffix see -TION. —v. 1819, from the noun. —sectional adj. 1806, formed from English section, n. + -al.

sector n. 1570, section of a circle between two radii; borrowed from Late Latin sector section of a circle, from Latin sector a cutter, from sect-, stem of the past participle of secāre to cut; for suffix see -OR².

The meaning of an area, section, division, segment (as in the public sector), appeared in the 1920's.

secular adj. About 1300 secular living in the world, and not belonging to a religious order, belonging to the State; later secular (1402); borrowed from Old French seculer, and directly from Late Latin saeculāris worldly, secular, from Latin saeculāris of an age, occurring once in an age, from saeculum age, span of time, generation; for suffix see -AR. —secularism n. 1851, formed from English secular + -ism. —secularize v. 1611, borrowed from French seculariser, from Late Latin saeculāris secular; for suffix see -IZE.

secure adj. Probably 1533, without care or apprehension, overconfident; borrowed from Latin secūrus without care, safe, from a lost prepositional phrase sē cūrā*; (sē free from, and cūrā, ablative of cūra care). The meaning of safe, free from danger, is first recorded in English in 1582. —v. 1593, make secure; from the adjective. —security n. Before 1425, freedom from anxiety, condition of being secure; borrowed from Latin secūritās, from secūrus secure; for suffix see -ITY.

sedan n. 1635, covered chair carried on poles, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from a dialectal (southern) Italian derivative of sede chair, from Latin sedēs, related to sedēre to SIT. The meaning of a closed automobile seating four or more persons is first recorded in 1915.

sedate¹ adj. quiet, calm, serious. 1663, borrowed from Latin sedātus, past participle of sedāre to settle, calm, causative of sedēre to SIT; for suffix see -ATE¹. —sedation n. Probably before 1425 sedacioun, sedacion alleviation of pain; borrowed through Middle French sedation, and directly from Latin sedātionem (nominative sedātiō), from sedāre; see SEDATE, adj.; for suffix see -ATION. —sedative adj. Probably before 1425 sedatif, sedatyve tending to alleviate pain, soothing; borrowed through Middle French sedatif (feminine sedative), and directly from Medieval Latin sedativus, from Latin sedāt-, stem of the past participle of sedāre; see SEDATE, adj.; for suffix see -IVE. —n. 1785, sedative medicine; from the adjective; a revival of the noun use (first recorded in 1392).

sedate² v. treat with sedatives. 1945, back formation from SEDATION.

sedentary adj. 1598, remaining in one place, not migratory; borrowed from Middle French sedentaire, and probably directly from Latin sedentārius sitting, remaining in one place, from sedēns (genitive sedentis), present participle of sedēre to SIT; for suffix see -ARY.

sedge n. About 1250 segge, developed from Old English (about 700) segg, from Proto-Germanic saxjás*; cognate with Middle Low German segge sedge.

The form sedge (1590's) did not generally displace seg, segge until the early 1900's; for a note on the later spelling see DRUDGE.

sediment n. 1547, borrowed from Middle French sédiment, and probably directly from Latin sedimentum a settling, sinking down, from sedēre to settle, SIT. —sedimentary adj. 1830, formed from English sediment + -ary. —sedimentation n. 1874, formed from English sediment + -ation.

sedition n. Probably about 1350 sediciun violent strife between factions; later sedicioun (about 1384); borrowed from Old French sedicion, sedition, and directly from Latin seditionem (nominative seditiō) civil disorder, dissension; literally, a going apart, separation (sēd-, variant of sē- apart + itiō a going, from it-, past participle of ire to go); for suffix see -TION. —seditious adj. Probably 1435 sedicious; borrowed from Middle French sediteux (feminine sediteuse), from Latin seditiōsus factious, from seditionem (nominative seditiō) sedition; for suffix see -OUS.

seduce v. 1526, to lead astray, tempt, entice; borrowed from Latin sedūcere lead away, lead astray (sē- aside, away + dūcere to lead). Seduce replaced Middle English seduisen (1477), borrowed from Middle French séduis-, stem of séduire seduce, an alteration influenced in form by Medieval Latin seducere to seduce, of Old French sūduire to corrupt, seduce, from Latin subdūcere draw away, withdraw, remove (sub- from under, further + dūcere to lead). —seduction n. 1526, borrowed from Middle French séduction, from Latin sedūctionem (nominative sedūctiō) a leading astray, from seduct-, stem of the past participle of sedūcere lead away, lead astray; for suffix see -TION. —seductive adj. Before 1770, probably formed as an adjective to seduction, on the model of Medieval Latin seductivus deceiving, from Latin seduct-, stem of the past participle + English suffix -ive.

sedulous adj. 1540, constant, persistent; later, diligent, industrious (1593); borrowed from Latin sedulus attentive or painstaking, probably evolved from the adverb sedulō sincerely, painstakingly, diligently, representing Latin sedolō without deception or guile (sē without + dolō, ablative of dolus deception or guile); for suffix see -OUS.

see¹ v. look at. Before 1126 seen; earlier sen (1106); developed from Old English seon (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian siā to see, Old Saxon sehan, Middle Dutch sien (modern Dutch zien), Old High German sehan (modern German sehen), Old Icelandic sjā (Norwegian and Swedish se), and Gothic saihwān, from Proto-Germanic seHwanan* see.

The forms in modern English did not become established until well into the 1600's, though see appeared before 1300; saw (represented in Old English seah, plural sāwon) gradually replaced see and seen also being used for the past tense; seen (Old seek v. 1155 sechan require, demand; later sechen try to find, look for (probably about 1175), and sekenn (about 1200, probably by influence of Old Icelandic sækja); developed from Old English sēcan visit, pursue (about 725, in Beowulf), and in the sense of try to find (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian sēka to seek, Old Saxon sōkian, Middle Dutch soeken (modern Dutch zoeken), Old High German suohhan (modern German suchen), Old Icelandic sækja, and Gothic sōkjan, from Proto-Germanic sōkjanan*.

English sewen) replaced Middle English seyen, seyn in the past participle. —seer n. Before 1338, one to whom divine revelations are made in visions; formed from Middle English seen to see + -er.

see² n. position of a bishop. About 1300 se throne of a bishop or monarch; 1307 see; borrowed from Old French sié, from Gallo-Romance sedem*, alteration (influenced by Latin sedēre) of Latin sēdem (nominative sēdēs) seat, abode, related to sedēre SIT.

seed n. Before 1124 sed grain of a plant; later sede (probably about 1150), seed (before 1376); developed from Old English sēd (before 830), earlier sēd (before 1050); cognate with Old Frisian sēd seed, Old Saxon sād, Middle Dutch saet (modern Dutch zaad), Old High German sāt (modern German Saat), Old Icelandic sādh, and Gothic manasēths mankind, the world, from Proto-Germanic sædīs*, sædā-, from the root sæ- to sow. —v. About 1375 seden, seeden flower, flourish; later, to produce seed (before 1398); from the noun. The meaning of sow seed is first recorded about 1440. —seedling n. 1660, formed from English seed, n. + *-ling*¹. —seedy adj. 1440 sed fruitful, abundant; formed from Middle English sed seed, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of shabby (1749) is probably an allusion to the appearance of a flowering plant that has run to seed.

seem v. Probably before 1200 semen befit, be suitable to; probably about 1200, appear to be; later seemen (probably about 1350); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sēma to befit, conform to, and sēm fitting, seemly); cognate with Old Saxon sōmi fitting, Old English sōm agreement, reconciliation, from Proto-Germanic sōm-*. —seemly adj. Probably before 1200 semlich; later seemly (about 1380); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sēmiligr, from sēm fitting); for suffix see *-ly*².

seep v. 1790, variant of earlier sipe to leak (1503); evidence for the word's occurrence in Middle English is uncertain. English sipe is probably related to Old English sipian to seep and cognate with Middle Low German sipen to seep, Middle High German sipfen, dialectal Norwegian and Swedish sipa, Danish sive, from Proto-Germanic sip-*. —seepage n. 1825, leakage, oozing; formed from English seep + -age.

seersucker n. 1722 sea sucker; later, seersucker (1736); borrowed from Hindi śīrśakar, from Persian shīr o shakkar striped cloth; literally, milk and sugar. (Compare Sanskrit śīrā-m milk; śarkara-m sugar.)

The name evolved in allusion to the surface of the cotton cloth which originally had alternate smooth and puckered stripes, thereby producing the effect of the smooth surface of milk and the bumpy surface of sugar.

seesaw n. 1640, probably imitative of the motion of sawyers and the sound of the action of a two-man saw drawn over wood or stone. This notion is reinforced by the fact that seesaw was originally part of a rhythmical jingle imitating the back-and-forth motion of sawyers, as in see saw sacke a downe (1640). —v. 1712, from the noun.

seethe v. About 1300 sethen boil; earlier suden (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sēothan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian siātha to boil, Middle Low German sēden, Middle Dutch sieden (modern Dutch zieden), Old High German siodan (modern German sieden), Old Icelandic sjōdha to boil (Norwegian and Danish syde, Swedish sjuda), from Proto-Germanic seuthanan*.

segment n. 1570, (in geometry) part of a circle cut off by a line; borrowed from Latin segmentum a strip or piece cut off (in Medieval Latin a geometric segment), from earlier segmentum*, from secāre to cut; for suffix see -MENT. —v. 1859, from the noun. —segmental adj. (1816) —segmentation n. 1656, a cutting into small pieces; later, division into segments specifically cell growth and division (1851).

segregate v. 1542, borrowed from Latin sēgregātus, past participle of sēgregāre separate from the flock, isolate, divide, from a lost prepositional phrase sē grege* (sē apart from; and grege, ablative of grex herd, flock); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —segregation n. 1555, borrowed from Late Latin sēgregatiōnem (nominative sēgregatiō) a separating, dividing, from sēgregāre; for suffix see -ATION. —segregationist n. (1920's)

seigneur n. feudal lord or landowner. 1592, borrowed from Middle French seigneur, from Old French seignior SEIGNIOR.

seignior n. lord, lord of a manor. Probably before 1300 seygnour ruler; later seygnior (about 1400); borrowed from Old French seignior, seignior, from Latin seniōrem, accusative of senior older, SENIOR.

seine n. About 1300 seyne; developed from Old English (about 950) segne; borrowed from Latin sagēna, from Greek sagēnē a fishing net; also, a hunting net. Other Germanic words borrowed from the Latin include Old Saxon segina and Old High German segina seine, but the spelling in English, though from Latin, was later influenced by Old French seine, from Latin. —v. 1836 (implied in seining); from the noun.

seismic adj. 1858, formed from Greek seismós earthquake + English -ic. —seismograph n. 1858, formed from Greek seismós earthquake + English -graph. —seismology n. 1858, formed from Greek seismós earthquake + English -logy. The words were extracted from a report of the British Association for the Advancement of Science describing the work of the physicist Luigi Palmieri, who invented a seismograph while director of the meteorological observatory on Vesuvius.

seismo- a combining form meaning earthquake, as in seismograph, seismology. Borrowed from Greek seismo-, combining form of seismós earthquake, a shaking, from seiein to shake.

seize v. 1265 saisen take possession of; later sesen, seisen (probably before 1300), and seizen (before 1500); borrowed from Old French seisir, from Late Latin saīre, perhaps from Frankish sakjan* lay claim to, related to Old Saxon saka a case in court, and Gothic sōkjan to SEEK. —seizure n. 1482 seisure act of seizing; formed from seisen to seize + -ure, and replacing earlier sesir (1449), seiser (1451); borrowed from Old French seisir to seize; see -ER³.

seldom adv. Probably about 1150 selden; later seldom (probably before 1300); developed from Old English seldum (before 900), alteration of seldan, on the analogy of adverbial dative plurals ending in -um, like whilom at one time. Old English seldan is cognate with Old Frisian, Middle Low German, and Middle Dutch selden seldom, Old High German seltan (modern German selten), and seltsāni (modern German seltsam strange, odd), Old Icelandic sjaldan (Swedish sällan, Danish and Norwegian sjelden), and Gothic sildaleiks wonderful, astonishing, from Proto-Germanic selda-*.

select v. 1567, borrowed from Latin selectus, past participle of seligere choose out, select (sē- apart + legere gather, select). —adj. 1565, borrowed from Latin selectus, past participle. —selection n. 1623, act of selecting; borrowed from Latin selectiōnem (nominative selectiō) a choosing, selection, from select-, stem of the past participle of seligere; for suffix see -TION. —selective adj. 1625, formed from English select, v. + -ive.

selenium n. 1818, New Latin; formed from Greek selēnē moon (Doric selānā), from selas light, brightness + New Latin -ium, chemical suffix. Selenium was named in reference to the moon, in contradistinction to tellurium, an element with similar properties, named after the earth.

self pron. Old English self, seolf, syf one's own person, not another, same (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon self self, same, Middle Dutch selve, self (modern Dutch zelf), Old High German selb (modern German selbst), Old Icelandic sjálf self (Norwegian sjøl, Swedish själv, Danish selv), and Gothic silba, from Proto-Germanic selba-, selban-.

The pronoun self was originally used with a noun or pronoun, as in the man self and the self deed; this construction has been superseded by the use of intensive and reflexive pronouns such as himself, myself, as in he can do it himself, I couldn't help myself. —n. Before 1325 self, from the pronoun. —selfish adj. 1640, formed from English self, n. + -ish. —selfsame adj. (1408) self- a combining form meaning: 1 of or over oneself: self-control = control over oneself. 2 by or in oneself or itself, without outside aid: self-evident = evident in itself. 3 to or for oneself: self-respect = respect for oneself. 4 oneself (as object): self-defeating = defeating oneself. 5 automatic or automatically: self-winding = winding automatically. Developed from Old English self-, syf-, combining form of self, seolf, syf SELF, corresponding to Old Saxon and Middle Dutch self-, Old High German selb- (modern German selb-, also genitive selbst-), Old Icelandic sjálf-, and Gothic silba-, with reflexive meaning "oneself," "itself."

sell v. Probably before 1200 sellen; developed from Old English sellan to give, sell (about 725, in Beowulf).

Old English sellan (past tense sealde, past participle seald) is cognate with Old Frisian sella to give, sell, Old Saxon sellian to give, Middle Low German sellen to sell by retail, Old High German sellen to deliver, Old Icelandic selja to hand over, sell (Norwegian salge, Swedish sälja to sell, Danish sælge), and Gothic saljan to offer (a sacrifice), from Proto-Germanic sal-janan*. It has been suggested that these words may be causative verb forms related to Old English sala sale, Old High German sala delivery of goods, and Old Icelandic sala sale. —n. 1838, act of betraying; from the verb. —seller n. (probably before 1200)

Seltzer n. 1775, alteration of earlier Selters (1741); borrowed from German Selterser a kind of mineral water; literally, of Selters, Germany, where the mineral water is found.

selvage or selvedge n. Probably before 1425 selfegge, probably formed in English from self + egge edge, on the model of Middle Flemish selfegge edge of a fabric; literally, self-edge; so called because the edge of such fabric so finished does not unravel and can therefore be its own edging.

semantic adj. 1894, borrowed from French sémantique, from Greek sēmantikós significant, from sēmalnein to show, signify, indicate by a sign, from sēma sign (Doric sāma); for suffix see -IC. The word was recorded earlier in English in the adjective sense of related to signs of the weather, a now obsolete meaning. —semantics n. 1893, borrowed from French sémantique, noun use of sémantique, adj.; for suffix see -ICS. The study of semantics as a branch of 19th century philology was known earlier in English as semasiology (1847), borrowed from German Semasiologie, from Greek sēmasiā signification, meaning, from sēmalnein signify + German -logie -logy).

semaphore n. 1816, probably borrowed from French sémaphore; ultimately formed from Greek sēma sign, signal + -phoros bearer, from pherein to carry. —v. 1893, from the noun.

semblance n. Before 1325 semblance appearance; borrowed from Old French semblance likeness, appearance, from sembler to seem, appear, from Latin simulāre, similāre to resemble, imitate, from similis like; for suffix see -ANCE. An earlier form semblant (probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French semblant, n., appearance, likeness, from semblant, adj., from sembler) was replaced by semblance and is not recorded in English after the mid-1600's, except as an adjective (1843). The meaning of likeness, is first recorded in Middle English about 1380.

semen n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin sēmen SEED.

semester n. 1827, borrowed from German Semester, from Latin sēmestris in cursus sēmestris course of six months, from sēmestris of six months (sex SIX + mēnsis month).

semi- a prefix meaning: 1 exactly half: semicircle = a half circle. 2 about half, partly, incompletely: semi-skilled = incompletely skilled. 3 half a (period of time), twice: semiannually = every half year, twice a year. Borrowed from Latin sēmi- half, and corresponding to Old High German sāmi- and Old English sām- half, found in such formations as sāmhāl in poor health; literally, half-whole; sāmsoden half-cooked; figuratively, half-baked or stupid; and sāmcucu half-dead; literally, half-alive. The last survivor of this group is sand-blind dim-sighted, the assimilated resultant of Old English sāmbblind*.

The prefix is used freely in English, as found in Middle English semigod, after Latin semideus; semidouble, after Medieval Latin semiduplex; or words borrowed from Latin or Old French: semicircular; or purely Middle English formations, such as semibousi half-drunk; or as in some of the newer formations: semifinal, n., adj. (1884), semitrailer, n. (1919), semidetached, adj., n. (1859). These latter examples have also produced a new clipped formation semi, n. meanings: 1) semifinal, n., 2) semi-detached house, 3) semitrailer truck.

seminal adj. Before 1398, borrowed from Old French seminal, and directly from Latin seminālis, from semen (genitive seminis) SEED; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of having the possibility of future development is first recorded in English in 1634, in the adverbial use seminally.

seminar n. 1887, borrowing of German Seminar, from Latin seminārium breeding ground, plant nursery. The sense of any meeting for discussion of a subject is first recorded in 1944.

seminary n. About 1440, plot where plants are raised from seed; borrowed from Latin seminārium plant nursery, (figurative) breeding ground, from seminārius of seed, from semen (genitive seminis) SEED; for suffix see -ARY. The school for training students to be priests is first recorded in 1581; the sense of any school (as in a ladies' seminary) was current from 1585 to the early 1930's. —seminarian n. 1584, formed from English seminary + -an.

semiotics n. 1880, borrowed from Greek semeiōtikós observant of signs, adjective to semeiōsis indication (earlier semeiōtis*), from semeiōn to signal, from semeion sign, from sema sign; for suffix see -ICS. A form of the word closer to Greek is found in English semeiotics that branch of medicine dealing with the interpretation of symptoms (1670), and is referred to even earlier in the adjective semeiotal (1588). In the general sense of signs or symbols and the study of their use in conveying meaning, the word is recorded as early as 1641.

Semite n. 1847, probably a back formation from Semitic, formed by influence of French Sémite (1845), from New Latin Semita, formed on Late Latin Sēm Shem, one of the three sons of Noah, regarded as the ancestor of the Semites, from Greek Sēm, from Hebrew Shēm; for suffix see -ITE¹. —Semitic adj. 1813, borrowed probably through German semitisch, from New Latin Semiticus, from Semita Semite; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1875, from the adjective.

semolina n. 1797, alteration of Italian semolino, diminutive of semola bran, from Latin simila the finest flour, probably from the same Semitic source as Greek semdālīs the finest flour (compare Assyrian samīdu and Syrian semdā fine meal).

senate n. Probably before 1200 senat Roman senate; later senat governing body of a city (about 1380); senate (about 1384); borrowed from Old French senat, and directly from Latin senātus the highest council of state in ancient Rome; literally, council of elders, from senex (genitive senis) old man, old; for suffix see -ATE³. The meaning of the upper and smaller branch of a legislature is first recorded in English in 1775.

—senator n. Probably before 1200 senatur Roman noble; borrowed from Old French senateur, and directly from Latin senātor, from senex old man, old; for suffix see -OR². The meaning of a member of the governing body of any state (before 1387), is found in a figurative sense before 1382. —senatorial adj. 1740, formed from English senator + -ial, or borrowed from French sénatorial, from Latin senātorius pertaining to a senator; for suffix see -IAL.

send v. Before 1121 senden cause or order to go; developed from Old English sendan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian senda to send, Old Saxon sendian, Middle Dutch senden (modern Dutch zenden), Old High German senten (modern German senden); Old Icelandic senda (Swedish sända, Danish and Norwegian sende), and Gothic sandjan from Proto-Germanic sandijanan*. —send-off n. (1872) senile adj. 1661, of or belonging to old age; borrowed from French senile, and directly from Latin senilis of old age, from senex (genitive senis) old, old man. —senility n. 1791, formed from English senile + -ity.

senior adj. 1287–88 seniore the elder (as added to a personal name identical with a son's name); borrowed from Latin senior older, comparative of senex (genitive senis) old; for suffix see -OR². The meaning of higher in rank or longer in service (as in a senior officer) is first recorded in 1513. —n. 1363 seniour person of authority; borrowed from Latin senior, noun use of senior, adj., older. The sense of an advanced student is first recorded in 1612; and that of a student in the 4th year (1741). —senior citizen (1938, American English) —seniority n. Probably about 1450 seniorite priority or precedence in office or service; borrowed from Medieval Latin senioritas, from Latin senior senior; for suffix see -ITY.

senna n. 1543, plant of the same genus as cassia, New Latin, from Arabic sanā.

sensation n. 1615, the action of the senses, physical feeling; borrowed from French sensation, and directly from Medieval Latin sensationem (nominative sentatio), from Late Latin sensātus endowed with sense, sensible, from Latin sensus feeling, SENSE; for suffix see -ATION. The state of strong or excited feeling produced by some (shocking, surprising, etc.) event is first recorded in English in 1779. —sensational adj. 1840, of or pertaining to the senses; formed from English sensation + -al¹. The meaning of arousing strong or excited feeling, occurs in 1854. —sensationalism n. 1865, (in literature, journalism, etc.) given or tending toward what is sensational; earlier, the theory that sensation is the only source of knowledge (1846); formed from English sensational + -ism.

sense n. Before 1382 sense meaning; borrowed from Old French sens, and directly from Latin sensus (genitive sensūs) perception, feeling, understanding, meaning, formed from sentire perceive, know, feel. The faculty of perception or sensation (as in a sense of touch) is first recorded in English in 1526, and that of understanding, appreciation (as in a sense of humor), before 1540. —v. 1598, from the noun. —senseless adj. (1557) sensible adj. About 1380, perceptible by the senses, capable of being felt; borrowed from Old French sensible, and directly from Latin sēnsibilis having feeling, perceptible by the senses, from sēnsus, past participle of sēntire perceive, feel; for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of having good sense or judgment, reasonable, is first recorded in Middle English probably about 1400. —sensibility n. About 1380 sensibilitie perceived image; later, ability to sense or perceive (1392); borrowed from Old French sensibilité, from Late Latin sēnsibilitatem (nominative sēnsibilitās) the sense of words, from Latin sēnsibilis SENSIBLE; for suffix see -ITY.

sensitive adj. 1392 sensitif having feeling or sensation; borrowed from Middle French sensitif (feminine sensitive), and directly from Medieval Latin sensitivus capable of sensation, from Latin sēnsus, past participle of sēntire feel, perceive; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of easily affected (as in to have a sensitive nature), is first recorded in 1816. —sensitivity n. 1803, quality of being sensitive; formed from English sensitive + -ity. —sensitize v. 1856, make sensitive; formed from English sensitive + -ize.

sensor n. 1958, from an earlier adjective sensor sensory (1865), shortened from SENSORY, probably on the pattern of motor.

sensory adj. 1749, formed from Latin sēnsus (past participle of sēntire to perceive, feel) + English -ory.

sensual adj. Probably before 1425, carnal, unspiritual; later, pertaining to the physical senses (about 1443); borrowed from Middle French sensuel, and directly from Latin sēnsuālis endowed with feeling, sensitive, from sēnsus (genitive sēnsūs) feeling, SENSE; for suffix see -AL¹. —sensuality n. Before 1340 sensualite; borrowed from Old French sensualité, from Late Latin sēnsuālitatem (nominative sēnsuālitās) capacity for sensation, from sēnsuālis endowed with feeling; for suffix see -ITY. —sensuous adj. 1641, formed from Latin sēnsus sense + English -ous. Sensuous was probably coined to avoid the sense of lustful often connoted by sensual.

sentence n. Probably before 1200, doctrine, authoritative teaching; later, punishment imposed by a court (about 1300); borrowed from Old French sentence, and directly from Latin sententia thought, meaning, judgment, opinion, alteration (by dissimilation in the second syllable from -tiēn- to -ten-) of sententia*, from sentientem (nominative sentientiēs), present participle of sēntire be of opinion, feel, perceive; for suffix see -ENCE. The sense in grammar of a statement with a subject and predicate, is first recorded in English before 1398. —v. 1413 sentensen (implied in sentensed, error for sentensed) to pass judgment; borrowed from Old French sentencier, from sentence sentence, n.

sententious adj. 1440, full of meaning; borrowed from Middle French sententieux, and directly from Latin sententiōsus full of meaning, from sententia opinion, maxim; see SENTENCE; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of given to uttering pointed sayings or maxims, addicted to pompous moralizing, is first recorded in 1598–99.

sentient adj. 1632, borrowed from Latin sentientem (nominative sentientiēs) feeling, present participle of sēntire to feel; for suffix see -ENT.

sentiment n. 1639, what one feels about something, feeling, opinion; spelling alteration (influenced by modern French sentiment) of Middle English sentement (about 1385); borrowed from Old French sentement, and directly from Medieval Latin sentimentum feeling, affection, opinion, from Latin sēntire to feel; for suffix see -MENT. —sentimental adj. 1749, formed from English sentiment + -al¹. The sense of having too much sentiment appeared in 1827, perhaps implied earlier in sentimentalist, in 1783. —sentimentality n. (1770) —sentimentalize v. (1788) sentinel n. 1579, armed soldier keeping watch, sentry; borrowed from Middle French sentinelle, from Italian sentinella, of unknown origin.

sentry n. 1611, watchtower; 1632, sentinel; perhaps a shortening or back formation (taken as containing the suffix -ry) of earlier centrinel (1598), variant of SENTINEL.

sepal n. 1829, borrowed from New Latin sepalum, coined from Latin petalum PETAL apparently by substitution of the first syllable of Latin sēparāre SEPARATE for the first syllable of petalum.

separate v. Probably before 1425 separaten keep or put apart; borrowed from Latin sēparātus, past participle of sēparāre (separate + parāre make ready, prepare); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adj. 1600, borrowed from Latin sēparātus, past participle. —n. 1612, person who favors separation from a church, separatist; from the adjective. The meaning of an article or document issued separately is first recorded in 1884. —separation n. Before 1400 separacion; borrowed from Old French separation, from Latin sēparātiōnem (nominative sēparātiō), from sēparāre separate, v.; for suffix see -ATION. —separatism n. (1628) —separatist n. (1608) sepia n. 1821, brown paint or ink prepared from the inky fluid of cuttlefish; borrowing of Italian seppia in Middle English, cuttlefish (before 1398); borrowed from Latin sēpia cuttlefish, from Greek sēplā; so called from the inky fluid which the cuttlefish secretes. —adj. 1827, from the noun.

sepo n. 1717–18, borrowed from Portuguese sipae, from Urdu sipāhī, from Persian sipāhī soldier, horseman, from sipāh army.

sepsis n. 1876, New Latin sepsis, from Greek sēpsis putrefaction, from sēpein to rot.

September n. Old English (about 1050) september, borrowed from Latin September, from septem SEVEN, this being originally the seventh month of the ancient Roman Calendar; for the ending -ber see DECEMBER.

septet or septette n. 1828, borrowed from German Septett, from Latin septem SEVEN; for suffix see -ET and -ETTE.

septi- a combining form meaning seven, as in septsyllable, septivalent. Borrowed from Latin septi-, combining form of septem SEVEN. Also spelled sept- before a vowel, as in septennial.

septic adj. 1605, borrowed from Latin sēpticus of or pertaining to putrefaction, from Greek sēptikós characterized by putrefaction, from sēpein cause to rot; for suffix see -IC.

septicemia or septicaemia n. 1866, New Latin septicaemia, formed from Greek sēptikós SEPTIC + haima blood.

septuagenarian adj. 1793, formed from Latin septuagēnārius containing seventy + English -an. Latin septuagēnārius derives from septuagēni seventy each, from septem SEVEN. An earlier sense of English septuagenarian, pertaining to the number seventy (1715) is preceded by septuagenary between 70 and 80 years old (1605), borrowed from French septuagenaire, and directly from Latin septuagēnārius. —n. 1805, from the adjective.

Septuagint n. 1633, borrowed from Late Latin septuāgintā interpretēs seventy interpreters, from Latin septuāgintā seventy (septem SEVEN + -gintā tens).

The Septuagint was so called because according to tradition the translation was made by seventy Jewish scholars. An earlier English use of Septuagint (1577) refers to the translators of the Septuagint.

septum n. 1720, New Latin, from Latin saepum a fence, from the neuter of the past participle of saepire to hedge in, from saepēs hedge, fence.

sepulcher n. Probably before 1200 sepulcre; later sepulchre (before 1300); borrowed from Old French sepulcre, and directly from Latin sepulcrum, sepulchrum, from the root of sepelire to bury. —sepulchral adj. 1615, borrowed from Latin sepulchrālis, sepulchrālis of or belonging to a sepulcher, from sepulcrum, sepulchrum sepulcher; for suffix see -AL.

sequel n. 1439 sequele consequence, corollary; later, offspring, heirs (about 1450); borrowed from Middle French sequelle, and directly from Late Latin sequēla that which follows, result, consequence, from sequi to follow. The sense of a story that continues an earlier story is first recorded in English before 1513.

sequence n. Before 1398, hymn sung after the Hallelujah and before the Gospel; borrowed through Old French sequence answering verses, a sequence at cards, and directly from Medieval Latin sequentia a following or succession, from Late Latin, from Latin sequenter (nominative sequēns), present participle of sequi to follow; for suffix see -ENCE.

Medieval Latin sequentia was in part also a loan translation of Greek akolouthiā, denoting a prolonged succession of notes sung on the last syllable of the Hallelujah, from akólouthos following. The general sense of a succession, order of succession, connected series, is first recorded in English in 1575. —sequential adj. 1822–29, occurring as an aftereffect of disease or injury, formed from Medieval or Late Latin sequentia sequence + English -al. The meaning of characterized by a regular sequence of occurrences is first recorded in 1844.

sequester v. About 1384 sequestren to remove, set aside; borrowed from Old French sequester, and directly from Latin sequestrāre to place in safekeeping, from sequester trustee, mediator; originally, a follower; related to sequi to follow. The meaning of seize by authority, confiscate, is first recorded in English before 1513. —sequesterate v. Probably before 1425 sequestraten to isolate, segregate; borrowed from Latin sequestrātus, past participle of sequestrāre sequester; for suffix see -ATE. —sequestration n. Probably about 1400, act of sequestering; borrowed from Late Latin sequestrātiōnem (nominative sequestrātiō) separation, a laying aside, from Latin sequestrāre sequester; for suffix see -ATION.

sequin n. 1617, a former Italian and Turkish gold coin; borrowed from French sequin, from Italian zucchini, from zecca a mint, from Arabic sikkah a minting die. The meaning of a spangle appeared in English in 1882, from the resemblance to gold coins.

sequoia n. 1869, borrowing of New Latin Sequoia the genus name of the tree, from Sequoya, in Muskogean (Cherokee) Sikwayi, the name of a Cherokee Indian who invented the Cherokee system of writing.

seraglio n. 1581, borrowing of Italian serraglio, alteration of Turkish saray palace, court, from Persian sarāi palace, inn. The Italian word was probably influenced in form by serraglio enclosure, cage, from Medieval Latin serraculum bung, stopper, from Vulgar Latin serrāre* to lock up, bolt; see SERRIED.

serape or sarape n. 1834 zarape; later serape (1853); borrowing of Mexican Spanish serape, sarape, probably from Nahuatl. The precise origin of this word is difficult to determine because there is no r- sound in Nahuatl.

seraph n. 1667, new singular formed by back formation from Old English seraphim, seraphin, pl. (about 750); borrowed from Late Latin seraphim, seraphin, from Greek seraphim, seraphēim, from Hebrew šērāphīm, plural of šārāph, probably from šārāph it burned. Traditionally seraphs have been regarded as burning or flaming angels.

The English singular seraph was probably formed on analogy with cherub, cherubim. There is further confusion with “flying,” perhaps related to the root of Arabic sharafa be lofty.

sere adj. Probably before 1300 sere, developed from Old English sēar dried up, withered (824); cognate with Middle Low German sōr dry, Middle Dutch soor (modern Dutch zoor) from Proto-Germanic sauzās*, and Old High German sōrēn to wither. Related to SEAR.

serenade n. 1649, borrowed from French sérénade, from Italian serenata an evening song, probably from sereno the open air, noun use of sereno clear, calm, from Latin serēnus peaceful, calm, serene; for suffix see -ADE. Italian serenata was influenced in meaning by sera evening, from Late Latin sēra evening, from the feminine of Latin serus late. —v. 1668, from the noun.

serendipity n. 1754, coined from the title of the fairy tale “The Three Princes of Serendip” whose heroes “were always making discoveries, by accidents and sagacity, of things they were not in quest of”; for suffix see -ITY. Serendip was an old name of Ceylon (Sri Lanka), from Arabic Sarandīb. —serendipitous adj. Before 1950, formed from English serendipity + -ous.

serene adj. Probably 1440, (of the weather) clear, calm; borrowed from Latin serēnus peaceful, calm, clear.

English serene was applied to people, with the sense of calm, untroubled, before 1635, though it occurs earlier as an honorific epithet ("most serene") given to princes (1503). —serenity n. About 1450 serenite title of honor given to princes and other dignitaries; before 1460, fair weather, clearness; borrowed from Middle French sérénité, from Latin serēnitatem (nominative serēnitās) clearness, calmness, from serēnus serene; for suffix see -ITY.

serf n. 1483, a slave; borrowing of Middle French serf, from Latin servus slave; see SERVE.

The meaning of a member of the lower class of soil cultivators (as in Germany, Russia, etc.) is first recorded in English in 1611. —serfdom n. 1850, formed from English serf + -dom.

serge n. Before 1382 sarge; borrowed from Old French serge, sarge. Old French sarge developed from Vulgar Latin sārica* (in Medieval Latin, a silken tunic), variant of Latin sērica vestis silken garment. Old French serge developed from Medieval Latin serga, sarga cloth of wool mixed with silk or linen, from Latin sērica, from Greek serikē, feminine of serikós silken; see SILK.

sergeant n. Probably before 1200 sergente servant; later, officer of a city or royal household (about 1250); also, common soldier (about 1300); borrowed from Old French sergent, serjent, from Medieval Latin servientem (nominative serviens) servant, vassal, soldier, (in Late Latin, public official), from Latin servientem (nominative serviens) serving, present participle of servire to SERVE; for suffix see -ANT. The meaning of a non-commissioned military officer is first found in English in 1548.

serial adj. 1840, arranged in a series; 1841, (of a story) published one part at a time; formed from English series + -al. —n. 1846, from the adjective. —serialize v. 1892, formed from English serial, adj. + -ize.

seriatim adv. Probably before 1500 seratim; borrowing of Medieval Latin seriatim, from Latin seriēs SERIES.

series n. 1611, number of similar things in a row; borrowed from Latin seriēs row, chain, series, from serere to join, link, bind together, put. An isolated instance occurs in Middle English as serie (about 1385).

serif n. 1841 ceriph; earlier ceref, syrif (1827); perhaps borrowed from Dutch schreef line, stroke, from Middle Dutch scrēve; see SCARP.

serious adj. 1440 seryous earnest, solemn; borrowed through Middle French sérieux grave, earnest, and directly from Late Latin sēriōsus, from Latin sērius weighty, important, grave; for suffix see -OUS.

sermon n. Probably before 1200 sarmun public talk on religion; later, sermon (before 1325); borrowed through Angloserous adj. Probably before 1425 serous, cerous (of fluids in an infection) watery, wheylike; later reinforced by Middle French sereux, but borrowed from Latin serum watery fluid, whey; for suffix see -OUS.

French sermun, variant of Old French sermon, and directly from Latin sermōnem (nominative sermō) discourse, speech, talk; originally, a stringing together of words, related to serere to join.

serpent n. Before 1300 serpent, borrowing of Old French serpent, sarpent, and directly from Latin serpentem (nominative serpens) snake, from present participle of serpere to creep.

serpentine adj. Probably about 1408 serpentyne; borrowed from Old French serpentin (feminine serpentine), and directly from Late Latin serpentinus of a serpent, from Latin serpentem (nominative serpens) snake; see SERPENT; for suffix see *-INE*¹. The meaning of twisting or winding is first recorded in English in 1615. —n. 1408, serpentyne greenish mineral; borrowed from Medieval Latin serpentinum and serpentina, noun uses of the neuter and feminine singular respectively of Late Latin serpentinus serpentine, adj.

serrate adj. 1668, borrowed from Latin serrātus notched like a saw, sawlike, from serra a saw; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. An earlier form serratic is recorded in Middle English as serratyke (1392), formed from Latin serrātus + Middle English -ic. —serrated adj. serrate. 1703, formed from Latin serrātus notched like a saw + English *-ed*².

serried adj. 1667, from past participle of an earlier verb serry to press close together (1581); borrowed from Middle French serre close, compact, past participle of serre press close, fasten, from Vulgar Latin serrāre* to bolt, lock up, variant of Latin serāre, from sera bolt, lock; for suffix see *-ED*².

serum n. 1672, borrowed from Latin serum watery fluid, whey. The meaning of blood serum is first recorded in English in 1893.

servant n. Probably before 1200, one owing duty or service to a master or lord; borrowed from Old French, an attendant, servant, noun use of servant serving, waiting, present participle of servir to attend, wait upon, SERVE; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of one who serves another for wages, as a butler, domestic, etc., is probably first recorded about 1325. The specific sense of a government official, as in public servant, is first recorded in 1570.

serve v. About 1175 serven give service to, be useful to; borrowed from Old French servir to serve, from Latin servire to serve; originally, be a slave, related to servus slave, perhaps from an Etruscan word (compare the Etruscan proper names Servi, Serve). The sense of take the place or meet the needs of (as in One turf shall serve as pillow for us both) is first recorded in 1387. —n. 1688, act or way of serving a ball in tennis, badminton, etc., from the verb.

service n. Probably before 1100 serfise religious ritual or ceremony; later service the serving of God (about 1175), and performance of work or duties (probably before 1200); and service

(probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French servise, service, from Latin servitium slavery, servitude, from servus slave. The sense of the duty or performance of a soldier or sailor is first recorded in 1590. —v. 1893, to supply with a service; from the noun. The sense of perform maintenance or repair work on is first recorded in 1926. There was also a Middle English verb servisen serve as a retainer (about 1300); from the Middle English noun. —serviceable adj. Before 1375 servisabil willing to serve, ready to do service; later servicable suitable, useful (before 1393); borrowed from Old French servicable, servisable, from service, servise service, n.

serviette n. 1818, borrowing of French serviette napkin, towel, perhaps from an earlier serviette*, from servit, past participle of servir to SERVE, or perhaps directly from servir; for suffix see -ETTE. Earlier forms in English such as serviot (1489) and serviat (1560) were of Scottish use; the word was reintroduced into standard English in the 1800's.

servile adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Latin servilis of a slave, servile, from servus slave. Earliest use in English was in the phrase servile work work forbidden to be done on the Sabbath and festivals. The sense of behaving like a slave, slavish, meanly submissive, cringing, fawning, is first recorded in 1605.

servitude n. Before 1420, borrowed from Middle French servitude, and directly from Late Latin servitūdō slavery, from Latin servus a slave; for suffix see -TUDE.

servo n. 1910, a servomechanism or device; abstracted from servo-motor (1889, borrowing of French servo-moteur, formed from Latin serv(us) slave + French connective -o- + moteur motor, from Latin mōtor mover).

servomechanism n. 1926, formed from English servo-, abstracted from servo-motor + mechanism.

sesame n. Probably about 1425 sisamie, probably borrowed from Middle French sisame, and directly from Latin sēsama, sēsamum, from Greek sēsamon (Doric sāsamon), from Late Babylonian šawaš-šammu* (compare Assyrian šamaš-šammu sesame; literally, oil-seed, Aramaic šūmshēmā, and Arabic simsim). The word occurs in the late 1700's, in the tale of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," where it is used as a magic password to open and shut the door of the thieves' den. The phrase open sesame has been used since about 1826 in the sense of means of gaining admission or a desired goal.

sesquicentennial n. 1880, formed from Latin sēsqui- one and a half + English centennial. Latin sēsqui- (compounding form of sēsque*) literally means "and a half," compound of sēmis a half (formed from sēmi- half, by analogy with bis twice) + -que and. —adj. 1888, from the noun.

sessile adj. 1725, adhering close to the surface; borrowed from Latin sessilis sitting, from sessum, past participle of sedēre to SIT. The meaning of sedentary, occurs in 1860.

session n. About 1387–95, the sitting together of a court, council, etc.; borrowed from Latin sessiōnem (nominative sessiō) act of sitting, from sess-, past participle stem of sedēre to set v. Before 1121 setten, developed from Old English settan cause to sit, put in some place, fix firmly (about 725, in Beowulf), causative verb form of sittan to SIT. Old English settan is cognate with Old Frisian setta to set, Old Saxon settian, Middle Dutch setten (modern Dutch zetten), Old High German sezzen (modern German setzen), Old Icelandic setja (Norwegian sette, Swedish sätta, Danish sette), and Gothic satjan, from Proto-Germanic satjanan*.

SIT; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a sitting together of a legislative body, is found in Middle English before 1425. The sense of a period of time set aside for some activity occurs originally in the term bull session (1920).

Many uses have become confused with sit since the early 1300's partly because of close similarity of past tense and past participial forms and partly because of a closeness of meaning in some uses (as in to be set meaning seated, and to sit; also set down, sit down, etc.). The phonetic similarity and close grammatical use when set is used reflexively or without an object has also contributed to this confusion. —adj. Probably about 1200 sett; from past participle of setten to set. —n. Before 1338 set act of setting, condition of being set; from the verb or adjective. Middle English sette, meaning a number or collection of things, is first recorded in 1443, developed from an earlier sense of a number or group of persons, religious body (before 1387). This use of the word was borrowed from Old French sette sequence, a learned borrowing from Medieval Latin secta retinue, suite, from Latin secta a following, SECT.

settee n. 1716, perhaps variant of *settle*² bench; for suffix see -EE.

setter n. 1576, formed from English set, v. + *-er*¹; so called because the setter was originally "set" on game.

settle¹ v. come to rest, fix. Probably about 1200 setten to seat, place on a seat; developed from Old English settan (about 1000), from setl a seat; see SETTLE². The sense of come to rest, is first recorded before 1300. The sense of establish a permanent residence, occurs in 1627, and that of decide (a question, dispute, etc.) in 1621. —settled adj. 1556, from the verb. The sense of quiet, orderly, steady, is first recorded probably as early as 1557. —settlement n. 1626, the act of settling or becoming set; formed from English *settle*¹ + -ment. The sense of a group of people settled in a new country, a colony, is first recorded in 1697, and that of a settling arrangements (as in divorce settlement) in 1677.

settle² n. long bench. Before 1121 setle abode; later, seat or bench (probably before 1200); developed from Old English setl a seat, position, abode (about 725, in Beowulf), related to sittan SIT. Old English setl is cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch setel seat (modern Dutch zetel), Old High German sezal (modern German Sessel), and Gothic sitls seat, from Proto-Germanic setla-*.

seven adj. Probably about 1175 sevene; developed from Old English seofon (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian soven, sigun seven, Old Saxon sibun, Middle Dutch seven (modern Dutch zeven), Old High German sibun (modern German sieben), Old Icelandic sjau (Swedish and Norwegian sju, Danish syv), and Gothic sibun, from Proto-Germanic sebūn*. —seventeen adj. Probably before 1200 seoventene; later seventene (probably before 1300); developed from Old English (about 900) seofontýne (seofon seven + -tēne -teen, from tēn TEN) —seventh adj. About 1290 seventhe, a new formation from Middle English sevene + *-th*², replacing earlier sefende (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (Anglian) seofunda; cognate with Old Saxon sivondo seventh, Old High German sibunto, Old Icelandic sjaunde, etc., from Proto-Germanic sebundōn*. —seventy adj. Before 1250 seoventi; about 1250 seventi; developed from Old English seofontig (seofon seven + -tig group of ten, -TY¹).

sever v. Probably about 1300 severen; borrowed through Anglo-French severer, variant of Old French sevrer, from Vulgar Latin sēperāre*, from Latin sēparāre SEPARATE. —severance n. 1422, borrowed through Anglo-French severance, variant of Old French sevrance, from sevrer to sever; for suffix see -ANCE.

several adj. Probably about 1421 saverale a number of, some; 1422 severall separate, individual; borrowing of Anglo-French several, from Medieval Latin seperalis, separalis separate, from Latin sēpare, sēpari (ablative of sēpar*) distinct, back formation from sēparāre to SEPARATE; for suffix see -AL¹.

severe adj. 1548, borrowed through Middle French severe, or directly from Latin sevērus stern, strict, serious, possibly formed from the phrase sē vēō* without kindness (sē without + vēō* kindness, neuter ablative of vēnus true); also possibly formed in English by back formation as an adjective to the noun severity. —severity n. 1481, borrowed through Middle French severité, or directly from Latin sevērītātem (nominative sevērītās) strictness, earnestness, from sevērus severe; for suffix see -ITY.

sew v. About 1290 seuwen; later seuen (before 1325); developed from Old English siwian to stitch (before 1050); earlier siowian (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian sia to sew, Old High German siuwen, Old Icelandic sjja (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish sy), and Gothic siujan, from Proto-Germanic siw-janan*. The spelling sew began to appear in the late 1300's.

sewage n. 1834, formed in English from sew a sewer, drain (1475) + -age.

sewer n. 1402–03 seuer ditch for drainage; borrowed through Anglo-French sewere, corresponding to Old North French sewiere sluice from a pond; literally, something that makes water flow, from Gallo-Romance exaquāria* (Latin ex out + aquāria, feminine of aquārius pertaining to water, from aqua water). Sometime between about 1440 and 1600 the term developed the sense of a conduit for drainage of waste water and refuse.

sex n. About 1380, either males or females collectively (as in both sexes); borrowed from Latin sexus (genitive sexūs) state of being either male or female, gender, (also secus, probably only in the nominative and accusative), perhaps related to secare to divide or cut. The meaning of the quality of being male or female (as in the distinction of sexes) is first recorded in 1526, and that of the distinction between male and female (as in the organs of sex), in 1631. The meaning of sexual intercourse, is attested in 1929. —sexual adj. 1651, borrowed from Late Latin sexualis of or pertaining to sex or the sexes, from Latin sexus sex; for suffix see -AL¹. —sexuality n. Before 1800, formed from English sexual + -ity. —sexy adj. 1928, engrossed in or concerned with sex; 1932, sexually attractive; formed from English sex, n. + *-y*¹.

sex- a combining form meaning six, as in sexennial, sextuplet. Borrowed from Latin sex SIX. Also spelled sexi- in some compounds, as in sexivalent.

sexagenarian n. 1738, formed from Latin sexāgenārius containing sixty + English -an. Latin sexāgenārius derives from sexāgeni sixty each, from sex SIX. —adj. 1862, from the noun. An earlier adjective with the same meaning, sexagenary, is found in 1638, borrowed from French sexagenaire, or directly from Latin.

sextant n. 1628, borrowed from New Latin sextans (genitive sextantis), from Latin sextāns a sixth, from sex SIX; so called because the sextant has a graduated arc equal to a sixth part of a circle; for suffix see -ANT. An earlier meaning of sextant, one sixth of a circle, is found in English in 1596.

sextet or sextette n. 1841, alteration of sestet, by influence of German Sextett and of Latin sex SIX; for suffixes see -ET and -ETTE. The earlier form sestet, 1801, was borrowed from Italian sestetto, diminutive of sesto sixth, from Latin sextus, from sex SIX.

sexton n. About 1303 sekesteyn person in charge of the sacred objects of a church, sacristan; later sexten (before 1450); borrowed from Old French segrestein, secrestein, from Medieval Latin sacristanus SACRISTAN. The sense of any custodian of a church, temple, etc., is found in 1582.

sextuple adj. 1626, formed in English from Latin sextus sixth (from sex SIX), with the ending patterned on English quadruple, quintuple, etc. —n. 1657, from the adjective. —sextuplet n. 1852, formed from English sextuple, adj., on the pattern of triolet, quadruplet, etc.

sh The sound of sh was represented in Old English by the digraph sc, as in Old English fisc fish, and scearp sharp. After the 1100's the use of sc became rare, and scribes began using ss and sometimes s in its place. Since the sound of sh did not exist in early Old French, the early Middle English texts, written by French-educated scribes, show great diversity in representing the sound. In medial and final positions ssh was common; the prevailing form in initial position was sch, and most probably the digraph sh developed as a simplification of sch. From the time of Caxton onwards sh has been the standard spelling in all words except those which (as machine, ratio, the derivatives in -tion, etc.) are spelled on etymological grounds. See also CH, TH, WH.

shabby adj. 1669, poorly dressed, derived from earlier shab scab (about 1300 schabbe); developed from Old English sceabb (before 899); see SCAB; for suffix see -Y¹. The meaning of dingy, much worn, is first recorded in 1685.

shack n. 1878, also shackle (1890); perhaps borrowed from Mexican Spanish jacal, from Nahuatl xacalli wooden hut; or perhaps a back formation from either dialectal English shackly shaky, rickety (1848), or from RAMSHACKLE. —v. 1891, dwell; from the noun. The sense of cohabit (shack up) is first recorded in 1935.

shackle n. Probably before 1200 schakel metal fetter for ankle or wrist; developed from Old English sceacel (before 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch scākel link of a chain (modern Dutch schakel), and Old Icelandic skokull rope, carriage shaft (Swedish skakel shaft, Norwegian skåke, skokle shaft, Danish skagle trace of a horse), from Proto-Germanic skakula-*. —v. 1440 schaklen, from the noun.

shad n. 1538, developed from Old English sceadd (1002), of uncertain origin; possibly cognate with dialectal Norwegian skadd small whitefish.

shade n. About 1300 ssade partial darkness, shadow; later schade (before 1325), shade (about 1375); developed from Old English (before 900) sceadu shade (from Proto-Germanic skadwō*); cognate with Old Saxon skado shade, Middle Dutch scāduwe, scāde (modern Dutch schadu), Old High German scato, genitive scatawes, (modern German Schatten), and Gothic skadus, from Proto-Germanic skadwis*.

The meaning of degree of lightness or darkness of color is first recorded in 1690. —v. Probably about 1380 schaden protect from the sun; from the noun. —shady adj. 1579, affording shade; formed from English shade, n. + *-y*¹. The sense “of doubtful honesty or character” is first recorded in 1862.

shadow n. Probably before 1200 schadewe; later schadowe (probably before 1300), shadow (about 1340); developed from Old English sceadwe, sceaduwe, oblique case forms of Old English sceadu SHADE. —v. About 1350 shadowen; earlier sseduyen (1340); developed from Old English (about 1000) sceadwian, from sceadu SHADE, n. —shadowy adj. About 1380 schadowy resembling a shadow, unsubstantial, fleeting; later schadowy (before 1398); formed from Middle English schadowe shadow, n. + *-y*¹.

shaft n. Probably before 1200 scaft, later shafte (probably before 1300); developed from Old English sceaft long slender rod of a staff or spear (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian skeft shaft, spear, Old Saxon skaft, Middle Dutch schacht, scaft (modern Dutch schacht, schaft), Old High German scaft (modern German Schaft), and Old Icelandic skapt shaft, handle (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish skaft), from Proto-Germanic skaftaz*.

shag n. 1592 shage a napped fabric, probably from Middle English shagge*; developed from Old English (about 1050) sceaega hair; cognate with Old Icelandic kegg beard, from Proto-Germanic skazjān*. —shaggy adj. About 1590, formed from English shag, n. + *-y*¹.

shake v. Probably before 1200 schaken; developed from Old English sceacan to vibrate, make vibrate, move away (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon shakan go away, Low German schacken to shake, Old Icelandic skaka to shake (Swedish skaka), from Proto-Germanic skakanan*. —n.

Probably before 1300 shak sudden movement; from the verb. —shaker n. 1440 schakare person or thing that shakes; formed from Middle English schaken + -are, -ere *-er*¹. —shaky adj. 1703, (of timber) split, cracked; formed from English shake, v. + *-y*¹. The meaning of liable to break down, not firm or solid, appeared in 1850.

shako n. 1815, borrowed through French schako, or directly from Hungarian csákó peaked cap; originally, projecting point of a cow's horn.

shale n. 1747, possibly a specialized use of earlier shale shell, husk, pod (about 1380); developed from Old English (before 800) scealu; see SHELL; also perhaps reinforced in geology by German Schalstein laminated limestone, and in Schalgebirge layer of stone in stratified rock.

shall v. Probably before 1200 shal; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) sceal I owe, he owes, will have to, ought to, must (infinitive sculan, past tense sceolde); cognate with Old Frisian skel, skil (infinitive skilun, past tense scolde), Old Saxon skal (infinitive skulun, past skolda), Middle Dutch sal (infinitive sullen, past solde), modern Dutch zal (infinitive zullen, past zou), Old High German scal (infinitive scolan, past scolta), modern German soll (infinitive sollen, past sollte), Old Icelandic skal (infinitive skulu, past skylda), Swedish skall (past skulle), Norwegian and Danish skal (past skulle), and Gothic skal (past skulda), Proto-Germanic skal-/skul-*.

Old English sceal, while retaining its primary sense of obligation or necessity, functioned as a sign of tense announcing a future event that was certain to happen, and in Middle English, shall began to express simple futurity. A past tense began to appear as should (sholde, shuld) only in the 1200's, and was not established before the late 1500's.

shallot n. 1664, borrowed from French échalote, from Middle French eschalotte, alteration of Old French eschaloigne, from Vulgar Latin escalōnia* SCALLION.

shallow adj. Before 1387 shalowe not deep; earlier shelowe thin (1373); probably related to the synonymous schald, schold not deep (1375); developed from Old English (839) sceald; see SHOAL¹ shallow place. —n. Usually shallows pl. 1571, from the adjective.

sham n. 1677, fraud, trick, perhaps dialectal variant of SHAME. The meaning of a counterfeit, an imitation, is first recorded in 1728. —adj. 1681, from the noun.

shaman n. 1698, borrowed probably from Russian shamán, from Tungus šaman Buddhist monk, from Prakrit samaña, from Sanskrit śramanā-s Buddhist ascetic.

shamble v. 1592 (implied in shambling); from shamble, adj., ungainly, awkward, from shamble, n., table, bench, from Middle English schamil; see SHAMBLES; perhaps so called from the straddling legs of a bench. —n. 1828, from the verb.

shambles n. pl. or sing. 1477–78 sheambles meat or fish market, plural of earlier schamil table or stall for vending (probably before 1325); developed from Old English (before 830) scomul, sceamel stool, footstool, table for vending; an early borrowing of Latin scamillus, scamillum low stool, alteration (influenced by scamnum) of scabillum, diminutive of scamnum stool, bench. Other Germanic borrowing from the Latin include Old Saxon skamel stool, Middle Dutch scēmel (modern Dutch schemel), Old High German scamil (modern German Schemel).

From the Middle English meaning of meat market, developed the sense of a slaughterhouse (1548); of a place of butchery (1593) and of a confusion, mess (about 1901).

shame n. Probably before 1200 shame, scheome; developed from Old English (before 800) sceamu, sceomu feeling of guilt or disgrace; cognate with Old Frisian skame shame, Old Saxon skama, Middle Dutch scāme (modern Dutch schaamte), Old High German scama (modern German Scham), and Old Icelandic skōmm (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish skam), from Proto-Germanic skamō*. —v. Probably before 1200 shamen, scheomien feel shame; developed from Old English sceamian, sceomian (about 725, in Beowulf), from sceamu shame, and cognate with Old Frisian skamia to shame, Old Saxon skamon, Middle Dutch scāmen (modern Dutch schamen), Old High German scamōn (modern German schāmen), Old Icelandic skemma to shame, and Gothic skaman be ashamed. —shame-faced adj. 1555 (implied in shamefacedness); alteration by popular etymology of earlier shamefast (about 1200); developed from Old English scamfæst bashful (before 899); formed from sceamu, scamu shame + -fæst, adjective suffix. —shameful adj. Probably before 1200 scheomeful modest; later, causing shame, disgraceful (before 1250), and shameful (about 1390); developed from Old English (before 950) sceomful modest; formed from sceamu, sceomu shame + -ful.

shampoo v. 1762, to massage; Anglo-Indian shampoo, borrowed from Hindi chāmpō, imperative of chāmpnā to press, knead the muscles, perhaps from Sanskrit capāyati pounds, kneads. The meaning of wash the hair is first recorded in 1860. —n. 1838, act of shampooing; from the verb. The meaning of soap for shampooing is first recorded in 1866.

shamrock n. 1577, earlier shamrote (1571); borrowed from Irish seamróg, diminutive of seamar clover.

shanghai v. 1871; so called from the former practice of kidnapping sailors to serve on extended voyages, as to the Chinese seaport of Shanghai.

shank n. Probably before 1200 shonke; later shanke (about 1300); as a surname Schanke (1176); developed from Old English sceanca leg, shank (about 1000); earlier scanca (probably about 750); cognate with Middle Low German schenke leg, shank, Middle Dutch scenkel (modern Dutch schenkel), Middle High German schenkel thigh (modern German Schenkel), and probably with Old Icelandic skakkr askew, aslant, crooked (Norwegian skonk shank, Danish and Swedish skank); from Proto-Germanic skanka-*.

shantung n. 1882, from the name of Shantung, a province of northeastern China, where this fabric was manufactured.

shanty¹ n. roughly built cabin. 1820, borrowed from Canadian French chantier lumberjack's headquarters, from French, timber yard, dock, from Old French chantier gantry, from Latin canthērius rafter, frame; see GANTRY.

shanty² n. song sung by sailors. 1869, spelling alteration of CHANTEY.

shape v. Probably before 1200 shapen, a new present-stem form developed in Middle English from Old English (before 1000) scapen, past participle of sceppan, scieppan to create, form, destine; cognate with Old Frisian skeppa to create, form, Old Saxon skeppian, Middle Dutch sceppen (modern Dutch schep-pen), Old High German scepfen, scaffan (modern German schaf-fen), Old Icelandic skepja, skapa, and Gothic gaskapjan, from Proto-Germanic skapjanan create, ordain.

Old English sceppan, scieppan survived as a strong verb into Middle English as sheppen, shippen, but from the 1500's shape has been a regular verb (past tense and past participle shaped), though the old past participle form shapen still survives in the word misshapen. —n. Probably before 1200 shap; developed from Old English (before 1000) gesceap creation, form, destiny, from ge- perfective prefix expressing completion (see ENOUGH) + -sceap, from the root of sceppan, scieppan to create, shape. —shapely adj. (before 1382) shard n. About 1300 scherde; later sherd (before 1382); as a surname Sharde (1275); developed from Old English sceard fragment, gap (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian skerdt cut, notch, Middle Low German skart crack, chink, Middle Dutch scaert, scart fragment, notch (modern Dutch schaard), Middle High German scharte notch, gap (modern German Scharte), and Old Icelandic skardh, all noun uses of adjective forms Old English sceard cut, notched, Old Frisian skerde, Old Saxon skard, Old High German scart, Middle High German schart, and Old Icelandic skardhr, from Proto-Germanic skardās*, a past participle on the variant skar-* of the root of Old English sceran to cut, SHEAR. The Middle English form is still seen in the word potsherd.

share¹ n. portion. 1372, duty levied on fishing boats; about 1375, a portion or share of something; developed from Old English (about 1000) scearu a cutting, shearing, division, also in compounds such as land-scearu division of land, boundary; related to sceran, scieran to cut, SHEAR; and cognate with Old Frisian -skere portion, share (in hermskere share of penalty), Old Saxon scara share in a common field, division, troop, Middle Low German schäre troop, share, Middle Dutch scäre troop, crowd (modern Dutch schaar, schare), Old High German scara troop, share of forced labor (modern German Schar troop, band, crowd), and Old Icelandic skgr rim, edge, boundary, from Proto-Germanic skarō*. —v. About 1586, to apportion, divide; from the noun. The meaning of have in common, is first recorded in 1590.

share² n. plowshare. About 1300 ssare; later share (before 1382); developed from Old English (before 800) scear, scær, related to sceran, scieran to cut, SHEAR. Old English scear (from Proto-Germanic skara-*) is cognate with Old Frisian sker plowshare, Middle Low German schar (feminine schare), Old High German scaro (feminine scara), and modern German Schar (feminine).

shark¹ n. large predatory fish. 1569, of uncertain origin.

shark² n. dishonest person who preys on others. 1599, a worthless sponger and petty swindler; of uncertain origin, but possibly a borrowing of German Schorck, variant of Schurke scoundrel, villain. In later uses (as in loan shark, 1905); influenced in meaning by *shark*¹ predatory fish.

sharp adj. Probably before 1200 scharp; developed from Old English (before 830) scearp cutting, keen, sharp; cognate with Old Frisian skerp, skarp sharp, Old Saxon skarp, Middle Dutch scarp, scerp (modern Dutch scherp), Old High German scaff (modern German scharf), and Old Icelandic skarpr withered, sharp (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish skarp sharp), from Proto-Germanic skarpaz*. —adv. About 1250 scharpe loudly, shrilly; later sharpe sharply, keenly (before 1420); developed from Old English (about 1000) scearpe, from scearp sharp, adj. The meaning of promptly, exactly, is first recorded in 1840. —n. Before 1200 scearpe sharp weapon, sharp edge; later sharp (about 1350); from the adjective. The meaning of a musical tone one half step above a given tone, is first recorded in 1576. —sharpen v. Probably about 1395 scharpenen; formed from Middle English scharp, adj., sharp + -enen *-en*¹.

shatter v. Probably before 1300 schatren to break apart; later schateren disperse, scatter (before 1350); of uncertain origin (possibly a variant of Middle English scateren to SCATTER). Both schateren and scateren probably represent an unrecorded Old English form cognate with Middle Dutch schateren, schatern and Middle Low German schateren to resound, laugh uproariously, be shattered by an explosion.

shave v. Probably before 1200 schaven cut off (hair) with a razor, scrape off; developed from Old English (before 800) sceafan; cognate with Middle Dutch schāven to shave, scrape (modern Dutch schaven), Old High German skaban (modern German schaben), Old Icelandic skafa, and Gothic skaban, from Proto-Germanic skabanan*. —n. 1352, instrument for cutting or scraping; developed from Old English sceafa (before 800). The meaning of an act of shaving the beard is first found in 1838, and that of a narrow escape (as in a close shave) in 1856. —shaving n. About 1386, a thin slice, especially of wood (probably recorded chiefly in the plural by about 1440).

shawl n. 1662, kind of scarf or wrap worn in parts of Asia; borrowed through Urdu and other Indian languages from Persian shāl.

she pron. About 1250; earlier scæ (probably before 1160); also sho (about 1300); probably developed by alteration (influenced by Old Icelandic sjá this) of Old English sēo, sīo (accusative sīe), feminine of sē, demonstrative pronoun and adjective; see THE¹.

The Old English word for she was hēo, hīo, feminine of hē HE. However, phonetic development made hēo and hīo almost indistinguishable; hence, the feminine demonstrative pronoun was probably used to replace the original feminine personal pronoun (hēo, hīo). —n. Before 1325 sco; later she (about 1380); from the pronoun.

sheaf n. Probably about 1200 shæf bundle of reaped grain;

later sheve (about 1250), sheef (about 1386); developed from Old English sceaf (about 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch scoof bundle, sheaf (modern Dutch schoof), Old High German scoub (modern German Schaub), and Old Icelandic skauf fox's tail, from Proto-Germanic skaubaz*.

shear v. About 1250 sheren to cut with shears or scissors; developed from Old English sceran, scieran (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian skera to shear, Middle Dutch scēren (modern Dutch scheren), Low German scheren, Old High German sceran (modern German scheren), and Old Icelandic skera (Norwegian skjære, Swedish skära, Danish skære), from Proto-Germanic sker-* to cut, shear. Related to SHARD. —n. shears pl. About 1300 shres (error for sheres) large scissors; developed from Old English sceāra pair of shears or scissors (before 899); related to sceran to cut, SHEAR. Old English sceāra, pl., is cognate with Old Frisian skēre shears, Old High German skār blade, plural skāri (Middle High German schære, modern German Schere), and Old Icelandic skæri shears, from Proto-Germanic skær-*.

sheath n. About 1250 sheeth case for the blade of a sword, knife, etc.; earlier shæthe (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 950) sceath, scæth, from Proto-Germanic skaithiz*; cognate with Old Frisian skēthe sheath, Old Saxon sceitha, Middle Dutch scēde (modern Dutch scheede), Old High German sceida (modern German Scheide), from Proto-Germanic skaithijō*, and Old Icelandic skaidh (Norwegian skjede, Swedish skida, Danish skede). —sheathe v. Probably before 1400 schethen furnish with or put into a sheath; from the noun in Middle English.

shebang n. 1862, a hut, shed, shelter; of uncertain origin (perhaps alteration of SHEBEEN). The meaning of affair, thing, business (usually in the phrase the whole shebang) is first recorded in 1869, but its relation to that of hut is obscure.

shebeen n. 1787, (chiefly in Ireland and Scotland) place where alcoholic liquor is sold without a license; borrowed from Irish seibín small mug, bad ale, diminutive of seibe mug, bottle, liquid measure.

shed¹ n. building for storage, etc. 1481 shadde; possibly a variant of SHADE.

shed² v. cast off. Probably before 1200 sheden to separate, divide; also scheden to pour out, spill; developed from Old English (about 1000) sceadan, scādan to divide, separate; cognate with Old Frisian skētha to divide, separate, Old Saxon skēthan, Middle Dutch sceiden (modern Dutch scheiden), Old High German sceidan (modern German scheiden to part, depart, separate), and Gothic skaidan, from Proto-Germanic skaithanan/skaīdanan*. Related to SHIFT.

sheen n. 1602 (acting as a verbal noun to shine) developed as noun use of earlier adjective sheene beautiful, bright, found in Middle English schene (probably before 1200); developed from Old English scēne, sciēne (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian skēne beautiful, bright, Old Saxon skōni, Middle Dutch scōne (modern Dutch schoon), Old High German skōni sheep n. Probably before 1200 scheap; later sheep (about 1280); developed from Old English (before 830) scēap, scēp; cognate with Old Frisian skēp sheep, Old Saxon scāp, Middle Low German schāp, Middle Dutch scaep (modern Dutch schaap), and Old High German scāf (modern German Schaf), from Proto-West-Germanic skāpan*. —sheepish adj. (probably before 1200, sheeplike; 1693, bashful).

(modern German schön), and Gothic skáuns beautiful, from Proto-Germanic skauniz*, root skau-* behold, SHOW.

sheer¹ adj. very thin. 1565 sheer, probably developed from Middle English schiere thin, sparse (about 1400). Middle English schiere was probably in part a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skær bright, clean, pure, from Proto-Germanic skairjaz*, Swedish skär clear, and Norwegian skjær pure, sheer), and in part developed from dialectal Middle English shire, schir clear, pure, thin; found in Old-English sār bright, clear, pure (about 725, in Beowulf). The two Middle English words are ultimately related to each other: Old Icelandic skær is related to skírr bright, clear, pure, which is cognate with Old English sār, of the same meaning, and also with Old Frisian skire, Old Saxon skīri, Middle Low German schīre, Middle High German schīr (modern German schier), and Gothic skeirs clear, from Proto-Germanic skiraz*.

Use of sheer absolute, utter (as in sheer nonsense) is first recorded in 1583. The meaning of very steep (as in a sheer drop) is first found in 1800. —adv. completely, quite. Before 1600, from the adjective.

sheer² v. turn aside, swerve. 1626, probably borrowed from Low German or modern Dutch scheren to withdraw, depart, originally, divide, SHEAR. —n. 1670, from the verb.

sheet¹ n. broad, thin piece of cloth, etc. About 1250 shet; later shete (about 1280), sheet (before 1382); developed from Old English sciēte cloth, covering (about 900, West Saxon), scēte (before 800, Mercian), from Proto-Germanic skautijōn*; related to scēat corner, region, lap, cloth. Old English scēat is cognate with Old Frisian skāt lap, lappet, Middle Low German schōt, Middle Dutch scoot (modern Dutch schoot), Old High German scōz (modern German Schoss), Old Icelandic skaut corner, lap, lappet (Norwegian skaut sheet, headdress, Danish skød lap, skirt), and Gothic skaut hem of a garment, from Proto-Germanic skauta-*. The sense of a piece of paper is first recorded in English in 1510; and that of a broad, flat surface, in 1593.

sheet² n. rope that controls a sail. 1294–95 sheete; developed from Old English scēat (in the compound scēatline sheet-line), from scēata lower part of sail, piece of cloth, related to scēat corner, region, lap, cloth; see SHEET¹.

sheik or sheikh n. 1577, borrowed from Arabic shaykh chief; literally, old man.

shekel n. Before 1382, borrowed from Hebrew sheqel, from shāqal he weighed.

sheldrake n. Before 1325 shelderake, sheldrake (sheld- variegated + drake).

shelf n. About 1390 shelves, pl.; later shelves (in 1422); probably borrowed from Middle Low German schelf shelf, set of shelves; cognate with Middle Dutch scelf haystack (modern Dutch schelf), Old English scylfe, saife shelf, ledge, floor, scylf peak, pinnacle, and possibly with Old Icelandic -skjalf bench, peak, from Proto-Germanic skelf-/skalf-*.

shell n. Probably before 1300 shelle; developed from Old English sciell, scill (before 1100); earlier scel (before 800); related to Old English scealu shell, husk; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch schelle shell, pod, rind, Old High German scala shell, husk (modern German Schale), Old Icelandic skel shell, and Gothic skalja tile, from Proto-Germanic skaljo*. —v. 1562, from the noun. —shellfish n. (before 899) shellac n. 1713, formed from English shell + lac; translation of French laque en écailles lac in thin plates. —v. 1882, from the noun.

shelter n. 1585, something that covers or protects from weather; of uncertain origin, but possibly an altered form of Middle English sheltron, sheltrun roof or wall formed by locked shields (probably before 1400), earlier sceldtrume (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) scyltrumma, scieldtruma (scield shield + truma troop), compact body of troops; originally body of men protected by their shields locked to form a roof and wall. —v. 1590, from the noun.

shelve¹ v. put on a shelf. 1591, to overhang, project; back formation from shelves, plural of SHELF (also first recorded as a plural). The meaning of put on a shelf is first recorded in 1655 and that of lay aside, dismiss, in 1812.

shelve² v. to slope gradually. 1587 (implied in shelving), to tilt or tip up; later, to slope gradually (1614); developed from Middle English shelven to slope, from shelfe grassy slope (before 1400); see SHELF.

shenanigan n. 1855, of uncertain origin. Spanish chanada (a shortened form of charranada) trick or deceit, is a possible source, or less likely, German peddler's argot Schenigelei work, craft, or the German slang verb schinäglen to toil.

shepherd n. Probably about 1200 shephirde tender of sheep; later shepherde (about 1387–95); developed from Old English (before 1023) scēaphierde (scēap sheep + hierde herder, from heord a herd). —v. 1790 (implied in shepherding) to tend sheep; from the noun. The sense of watch over, guide, direct, is found in 1820.

sherbet n. 1615 sherbet cooling drink made of fruit juice and sweetened water, popular in the Orient; earlier zerbet (1603); borrowed from Turkish serbet, from Persian sharbat, from Arabic sharbah a drink, from shariba he drank. Compare SYRUP. The sense of flavored ice is first recorded in 1891.

sheriff n. 1100 scireve law-enforcing officer of a shire or county; later sherref (about 1350), sheryff (before 1425); developed from Old English (about 1034) scīrgerefa representative of the royal authority in a shire (scīr SHIRE + gerefa chief official, reeve).

sherry n. 1608, singular formed from sherris (1597), which was taken as a plural; borrowed from Spanish vino de Xeres wine from Xeres, a town (now called Jerez), near the port of Cadiz, where this wine was made.

shibboleth n. Before 1382 Seboleth; later Schiboleth (1535); borrowed from Hebrew shibboleth flood, stream; said to have been used as a password by the Gileadites to distinguish their own men from the fleeing Ephraimites, because the Ephraimites could not pronounce the sh sound. The figurative sense of a test word, watchword, or slogan, is first recorded in 1638.

shield n. Probably before 1200 scheld piece of armor, protection; later shilde (about 1450); developed from Old English scield, sceld, scild (about 725, in Beowulf), related to sciell SHELL, and cognate with Old Saxon skild shield, Middle Dutch schild, schild (modern Dutch schild), Old High German silt (modern German Schild), Old Icelandic skjöldr (Swedish sköld, Norwegian and Danish skjold), and Gothic skildus, from Proto-Germanic skeldūs*. —v. Probably before 1200 schilden; developed from Old English scildan (about 725, in Beowulf), from sild shield, n.

shift v. About 1250 shiften change, exchange, replace; earlier sciften divide, distribute (about 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) sciften arrange, divide; related to scēadan divide, separate; see *SHED*² cast off, and cognate with Old Frisian skifta determine, Middle Low German schiften, schichten arrange, divide, Middle Dutch schichten (modern Dutch schiften separate, sift), German schichten arrange in layers, and Old Icelandic skipta to share, divide, change (Swedish skifta, Norwegian and Danish skifte), from Proto-Germanic skiftanan*.

The sense of change appeared about 1250, that of move, transfer probably before 1300, and that of manage to get along (as in shift for oneself) in 1461. —n. Before 1325, sift effort, attempt; about 1300 shift; from the verb, and probably influenced by Old Icelandic skipta. The sense of a change, substitution, succession, is first recorded in 1580. —shiftless adj. 1562, helpless; later, not resourceful, lazy (1584); formed from earlier shift resourcefulness + -less. —shifty adj. 1570, able to manage for oneself, full of expedients; formed from English shift, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of using dishonest methods, not straightforward, is first recorded in 1837.

shill n. 1916, one who acts as a decoy for a gambler, auctioneer, etc. (probably originally circus or carnival use); perhaps shortened from shillabera a shill (1913), of unknown origin. —v. 1914, related to the noun.

shillelagh or shillalah n. 1772, cudgel; earlier, the oak wood used to make cudgels (1677); from Shillelagh, a town and barony of Ireland.

shilling n. Probably before 1225 shillinges; developed from Old English (about 900) scilling; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon skilling coin used as unit of money, Middle Dutch scellinc (modern Dutch schelling), Old High German skilling (modern German Schilling), Old Icelandic skillingr (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish skilling), and Gothic skillinggs. The Old English word and its cognates have been referred to Proto-Germanic skell-* to resound, ring and to Proto-Germanic skeld-* shield. The ending may represent the suffix -ling.

shilly-shally adv. 1703, from earlier shill I, shall I (1700), varied reduplication of shall I?, reflected in and probably influenced by such formations as dilly-dally, and wishy-washy. —v. 1782, from the adverb.

shimmer v. Before 1250 schimeren, gleam faintly; developed from Late Old English (before 1100) scimerian; related to scīman to shine, grow dark, and scīnan to SHINE, and cognate with Middle Low German schēmeren be shadowy, grow dark, shimmer, Middle Dutch scēmeren (modern Dutch schemereren), and modern German schimmern to shimmer. —n. 1821, from the verb.

shimmy n. 1918, a jazz dance with much shaking of the body (originally in the phrase shaking the shimmy and shimmy shake, names of the dance); of uncertain origin (suggested as an extended sense of shimmy a chemise, 1837, alteration of CHEMISE, but more likely built on shimmer and its sense of glistening light). The general sense of a shaking or vibration is first recorded in 1925. —v. 1919, to dance the shimmy; from the noun. The general sense of shake, shiver, vibrate, is found in 1925.

shin n. About 1250 shine; developed from Old English (before 1000) scīnu; cognate with Middle Low German schēne shin, Middle Dutch scēne (modern Dutch scheen), Old High German scīna shin, needle, modern German Schienbein shinbone, Schiene rail, band, Swedish skena, and dialectal Norwegian skina thin disc, from Proto-Germanic skīnō*. —v. 1829, from the noun. —shiny v. 1888, extended form of shin, v. + *-y*³.

shindig n. 1871, probably from earlier shindy a spree, merry-making (1821), of unknown origin.

shine v. Probably before 1200 schinen; probably about 1200 shinen; developed from Old English (before 800) scīnan shed light, be radiant; cognate with Old Frisian skīna to shine, Old Saxon skīnan, Middle Dutch scīnen (modern Dutch schijnen), Old High German skīnan (modern German scheinen), Old Icelandic skīna (Norwegian and Danish skinne, Swedish skina), and Gothic skeinan, from Proto-Germanic skīnanan*. —n. Before 1529, from the verb. —shiny adj. 1590, formed from English shine n. + *-y*¹.

shingle¹ n. thin piece of wood. About 1200 scindle; later schingle (before 1300), shyngle (1439); probably borrowed from Late Latin scindula, alteration (by influence of Greek schidax lath, or schindalmós splinter) of Latin scandula shingle. The small signboard is found in 1842, and the woman's short haircut in 1924. —v. 1562, from the verb.

shingle² n. loose stones on the seashore. 1513, beach covered with pebbles; later, the pebbles themselves (1598); of uncertain origin (sometimes referred to Norwegian singl small stones, coarse sand).

shingles n. sing. or pl. Before 1398 schingles; borrowed from Medieval Latin cingulus, variant of Latin cingulum girdle, from cingere to gird; so called because shingles often causes inflammation that extends around the middle of the body. The Medieval Latin word is a loan translation of Greek zōstēr girdle, shingles.

ship n. Probably before 1200 schip, shiþe; developed from Old English (before 800) scip ship, boat; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon skip ship, Middle Dutch scip (modern Dutch schip), Middle Low German schip, schēp (modern Low German schipp), Old High German scif, skef (modern German Schiff), Old Icelandic skip (Swedish skepp, Norwegian skip, Danish skib), and Gothic skip, from Proto-Germanic skipan*. —v. Probably before 1300 shippen put or take on board a ship; developed from Old English (about 900) gescipian provide with ships; from scip ship, n. —shipboard n. (about 1200) —shipper n. (1075, a seaman; 1755 one who ships goods) —shipwreck n. (probably before 1100); v. (1589)

—ship a suffix forming nouns meaning: 1 quality or condition, as in partnership = the condition of being a partner. 2 act, power, or skill, as in workmanship = skill of a workman. 3 relation between, as in fellowship = relation between fellows. 4 office, position, or occupation, as in governorship = office of a governor. 5 number, as in readership = the number of readers. Middle English -schipe, -shiþe, -ship; developed from Old English -scipe state or condition of being, related to sceppan, sieppan to create, form, cognate with Old Frisian -skip, -skipi state or condition, -ship, Old Saxon -skap, -skepi, -skipi, Middle Dutch -scap (modern Dutch -schap), Old High German -scaf, -scaft (modern German -schaft), and Old Icelandic -skapr (Norwegian and Swedish -skap, Danish -skab), from Proto-Germanic -skapaz*.

shire n. Probably before 1200 schire; developed from Old English (before 800) scīr administrative office or district. The only known Germanic cognate is Old High German scīra care, official charge (from Proto-Germanic skīzō*).

shirk v. 1633 sherk, 1634 shirk (implied in shirking) to practice fraud or trickery, prey on others, sponge; of unknown origin. The meaning of evade one's work or duty, is found in 1785.

shirr v. 1847 (implied in shirred); of unknown origin. —shirred adj. 1847, having elastic threads woven into the texture.

shirt n. Probably before 1200 shurte; later schirt (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 1000) scyrte; cognate with Middle Low German schörte apron, skirt, Middle Dutch scorte (modern Dutch schort), Middle High German schurz (modern German Schurz apron, Schürze apron, skirt), and Old Icelandic skyrta shirt, from Proto-Germanic skurtijōn*, a short garment, and derived from the same source as Old English scort, seort SHORT. —shirtsleeve n. Usually shirtsleeves pl. (about 1566) shish kebab 1914, borrowing of Armenian shish kabab, from Turkish siskebab (sis skewer + kebab roast mutton).

shivaree n. 1843, alteration of earlier charivari, charivary (1735); borrowed from French charivari, from Old French chaliwali discordant noise made by pans, pots, etc., from Late Latin caribaria, carēbaria severe headache, from Greek karēbariā headache (kārē head + barýs heavy).

shiver¹ v. shake. Probably before 1405 shyveren; alteration of earlier chiveren (about 1200), of uncertain origin. —n. 1727, from the verb. The alteration in spelling from ch- to sh- has been attributed to influence of sh- in shake.

shiver² n. small piece. Probably before 1200 scifre; later schiver (about 1300); probably cognate with Middle Low German schēver, schiver splinter, Old High German scivaro, modern German Schiefer slate, Scheibe slice, pane, and Old Icelandic skífa a slice; see SKEWER. —v. Probably before 1200 shivren break into shivers, later shiveren (before 1338); from the noun.

shoal¹ n. place where water is shallow. About 1375 schald; later sholde (1414); noun use of adjective shald not deep, shallow (1375); earlier schealde (before 1333); developed from Old English (839) sceald shallow. The final -d gradually disappeared in the 1500's. Old English sceald is cognate with Middle Low German schal stale (modern Low German, dry), Middle High German and modern German schal stale, insipid; dialectal Swedish skäll thin, stale (from Proto-Germanic skala-*). Related to SHALLOW. —v. 1574 (implied in shoaling); from earlier shoal, adj., shallow (before 1554), alteration of Middle English shald (1375); developed from Old English sceald shallow.

shoal² n. large number, crowd. 1579 shole, probably developed (through Middle English shole*) from Old English scolu band, troop, school of fish; cognate with Old Saxon scola troop, multitude, Middle Dutch shole multitude, flock, school of fish, West Frisian skoal; perhaps all with an original meaning of division. —v. 1610, from the noun.

shoat n. 1408 schote; perhaps borrowed from a Low German word (compare Flemish schote shoat).

shock¹ n. sudden and violent shake, blow, or crash. 1565, encounter in a battle, joust, or charge; borrowed from Middle French choc violent attack, from Old French choquer strike against, probably borrowed from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch schokken to push, jolt, Middle Low German schocken to shake, tremble, and Middle High German schocken to swing, dance, all possibly cognate with Old High German scioban to push, SHOVE). The sense of a sudden and violent shake, blow, or crash, is first recorded in English in 1614. —v. 1568, to shake or weaken by a shock; borrowed from Middle French choquer to strike against. The sense of offend, displease, astonish, is first recorded in 1694. —shocking adj. (1691, with the French spelling choquant; 1697 shocking; 1703, offensive) shock² n. bundles of grain. Before 1325 scholke (probably an error for schokke); later schocke (about 1350); perhaps borrowed from Middle Low German schok shock of corn, group of sixty; cognate with Dutch schok group of sixty, Middle High German schoc pile, group of sixty (modern German Schock), and Old Saxon scol group of sixty, from Proto-Germanic skeuka-*. —v. Before 1338 schokken; from the noun.

shoddy adj. 1862, adjective use of earlier shoddy inferior kind of wool made of woolen waste, old rags, etc. (1832), of uncertain origin.

shoe n. Probably before 1200 scheo, sho covering for the foot; later shoe (about 1378); developed from Old English (about 950) scōh; cognate with Old Frisian skōch shoe, Old Saxon skōh, Middle Dutch scoe, scoen (modern Dutch schoen), Old High German scuoh (modern German Schuh), Old Icelandic skōr (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian sko), and Gothic skōhs, from Proto-Germanic skōHaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 scheoien; later shoen (probably before 1300); developed from Old English scōgan, scōgian (before 899), from the noun. —shoemaker n. (1381) shoot v. Probably about 1200 scheoten move swiftly, rush, fly; later shoten, schoten (probably before 1300), shooten (before 1463); developed from Old English scēotan (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian skiāta to shoot, Old Saxon skiotan, Middle Dutch scieten (modern Dutch schieten), Old High German skiozzan (modern German schiessen), Old Icelandic skjōta (Norwegian skytte, Swedish skjuta, Danish skyde), and Crimean Gothic schieten to shoot, from Proto-Germanic skeutanan*. Such common meanings of shoot as that of send forth swiftly and suddenly and send forth or wound with missiles are recorded in Old English —n. About 1450 schoyte young branch, new growth, from the verb. The meaning of an act of shooting (with firearms, etc.) is first recorded in 1534. —shooting star (1593)

shop n. About 1300 ssope place where goods are made for sale; later schoppe (before 1387), and as surname Shoppe (1301); developed from Old English (before 1050) scoppa booth or shed for trade or work; related to Old English scypen, scipen cowshed, and cognate with Middle Low German schoppe shed, and Old High German scopf porch, shed, from Proto-Germanic skupp-*. —v. 1583, to shut up in prison; from the noun. The meaning of visit shops is first recorded in 1764.

shore¹ n. land at the edge of a sea, lake, etc. Probably about 1380 shore, of uncertain origin; possibly developed by shift in vowel grade from Old English sceran shear (as in scoren cliff precipice); or perhaps borrowed from Middle Low German schōr, schōre shore, coast, headland, or from Middle Dutch score land washed by the sea (modern Dutch schor, cognate with Frisian schoarre, and Old High German scorna steep cliff). It is probable that all of these words had an original sense of division as (between land and water), and derive from the same source as Old English sceran, scieran to cut, SHEAR.

shore² v. prop up, support. 1340 ssoren; later schorien (before 1425); probably from the noun, perhaps reinforced by Middle Dutch scōren (modern Dutch schoren) to prop up, support, which is cognate with Frisian schoarje, and Old Icelandic skordha (Norwegian skorde). —n. 1318 shor; probably borrowed from Middle Low German schōre a prop, stay, support; cognate with Middle Dutch scōre a prop, support (modern Dutch schoor), Frisian schoarre, and Old Icelandic skordha (Norwegian skorde).

short adj. Probably about 1200 shorrt; developed from Old English scort, scort (before 899); cognate with Old High German scurz short, and Old Icelandic skort, skortr lack, skorta to lack; probably from Proto-Germanic skurtā-*. —adv. Before 1325 schort in a short manner; from the adjective. —n. Before 1586, summary, upshot, especially in the short of it, though earlier found in the sense of briefly, concisely in in short (about 1386); later, something short (1591); from the adjective. Shorts, pl., short trousers, is first recorded in 1826. The meaning of an electrical short circuit is first recorded in 1854. —v. 1867, to cause or experience an electrical short circuit. —shortage n. (1868) —shorten v. 1470, formed from English short, adj. + *-en*¹. —shortening n. butter or other fat used in baking. 1823, formed from shorten make crumbly (from short in the sense of easily crumbled) + *-ing*¹. —shortly adv. Probably before 1200 shorrtlike briefly; developed from Old English scortlice (before 899); formed from scort short + -lice *-ly*¹. The sense of "in a short time" is first recorded before 1050.

shot¹ n. discharge of a weapon. Probably about 1300 schot act of shooting; developed from Old English scot, sceot, gesceot that which is discharged in shooting (before 899, from Proto-Germanic skutan*); related to scēotan to SHOOT, and cognate with Old Frisian skot missile, shot, Old Saxon -scot, Middle Low German schot, Middle Dutch scot (modern Dutch schot), Old High German scoz, giscosz missile (modern German Geschoss), scuz shot (modern German Schuss), and Old Icelandic skot (Norwegian skot, Swedish skott, Danish skudd).

The meaning of the discharge of a bow (later applied to a firearm) is first recorded in Old English (about 1000). The collective sense of balls, bullets, or other projectiles is first recorded in Middle English before 1387.

shot² adj. woven so as to show a play of colors. 1763, adjective use of shot, past participle of SHOOT in the earlier sense of variegated by mixing in different colored threads in the woof (1532–33).

should v. Probably about 1200 sholde; developed from Old English sceolde, scolde (about 725, in Beowulf), past tense of sceal SHALL.

shoulder n. Probably about 1200 shuldre; later sholdre (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 800) sculdor; cognate with Old Frisian skuldere shoulder, Middle Low German schulder, Middle Dutch scouder (modern Dutch schouder), and Old High German scultra, sculterra (modern German Schulter), from Proto-Germanic skuldrō*. —v. About 1300 shuldren to push against with the shoulder; from the noun. The sense of bear a burden, assume a responsibility or expense, is first recorded in 1582. —shoulder blade (about 1300) shout v. 1375 schouten to call or cry out loudly; of uncertain origin; probably a derivation from the root of SHOOT, v., —n. 1375 shout, from the same source as the verb, and corresponding to Old Icelandic skūta a taunt.

shove v. Probably before 1200 scuven, shufen to thrust away, push; later shoven (probably before 1300); developed from Old English scūfan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian skūva to push, shove, Middle Low German schūven, Middle Dutch scūven (modern Dutch schuiven), Old High German scioban (modern German schieben), Old Icelandic shovel n. About 1300 schovelle spadelike digging tool; implied in soveltrouwe (1277); developed from Old English scofl (before 800), related to scūfan SHOVE. Old English scofl (from Proto-Germanic skublō*) is cognate with Old Saxon skūfla shovel, Middle Low German schūfle, schuffele, Middle Dutch schuffel (modern Dutch schoffel), Old High German skūfla, scūvala (modern German Schaufel), and Old Swedish skofl (Swedish skovel). —v. 1440 schovelen, from the noun.

skūfa, skýfa (Norwegian skyve), and Gothic afskiuban push away from Proto-Germanic skeub-/skūb-*. —n. Before 1325 scov act of shoving, push; from the verb.

show v. Probably before 1200 shewen let be seen, put in sight; later showen (before 1300); developed from Old English scēawian look at, see (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian skāwia, skōwia look at, see, Old Saxon skauwon, Middle Dutch scouwen (modern Dutch schouwen), Old High German scouwōn (modern German schauen), from Proto-Germanic skauwōjanan*, root skau-* behold, look at, and Old Icelandic skygn sharp-sighted, skygna to spy (Norwegian skygne). —n. Probably before 1300 schewe act of showing; from the verb. The meaning of an elaborate spectacle, large display, is first recorded in 1561.

shower n. Probably about 1200 shure; later shoure (about 1325), showre (probably before 1425); developed from Old English scūr short fall of rain, fall of missiles or blows (about 950); cognate with Old Saxon scūr shower, Old Frisian skūr fit of illness, Middle Dutch schuur shower, Old High German scūr (modern German Schauer), from Proto-Germanic skūrāz*; Old Icelandic skūr shower, and Gothic skūra storm, from Proto-Germanic skūrō*.

The sense of a shower bath is first recorded in 1851, that of a party for giving presents (1904), and an abundant supply, as in a shower of gifts (about 1325). —v. 1573, from the noun.

shrapnel n. 1806, from the name of Henry Shrapnel, British army officer who invented this shell. The sense of shell fragments is first recorded in 1940.

shred n. Probably before 1200 shrade fragment, scrap; later schreade (before 1250), shrede (about 1300); developed from Old English scrēade (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian skerēd a cutting, clipping, Middle Low German schrōt, schrāt shred, piece cut off, Middle Dutch scrōde, Old High German scrōt (modern German Schrot), Old Icelandic skerjōðhr old book, from Proto-Germanic skraudās*. —v. Probably about 1200 shredenn chop, cut up; later shreden (1373); developed from Old English scrēadian prune, cut (about 1000), related to scrēade, n. The Old English verb is cognate with Middle Low German schrōden, schrāden to shred, cut up, Middle Dutch scrōden (modern Dutch schroeien), and Old High German scrōtan (modern German schroten).

shrew¹ n. small mammal. 1538, developed from Old English (before 800) scrēawa. The word is not found elsewhere in Germanic and its origin is uncertain.

shrew² n. scolding woman. Probably about 1225 schrewe ras-cal, rogue; later, scolding woman (about 1303). Traditionally the word is considered a figurative use of SHREW¹ in reference to various superstitions about the malignant influence of the animal, popularly held to be venomous and otherwise injurious. —shrewish adj. 1565, scolding, bad-tempered, formed from English *shrew*² + -ish. An earlier meaning of wicked or evil is found about 1375.

shrewd adj. About 1280 schrewede wicked, evil, malicious; later shrewde (before 1382); formed from shrewe, schrewe SHREW² + *-ed*². The sense of astute, clever, cunning, is first recorded in 1520.

shriek v. 1567 shrick; later shreke (1577); apparently a variant of earlier skericke (perhaps before 1500), screak (1565); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skrækja to SCREECH). —n. 1590, act of shrieking; from the verb.

shrift n. Probably before 1200, confession to a priest followed by penance and absolution; developed from Old English scrift (about 1030), verbal noun from scrifan to SHRIVE and is an early borrowing of Latin scriptum (see SCRIPT), corresponding to Old Frisian skrift letters, writing, Middle Low German scrift, Middle Dutch scrift (modern Dutch schrift), Old High German scrift (modern German Schrift), and Old Icelandic skript (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish skrift).

The meaning of penance and confession is confined to Old English and Scandinavian, arising probably from an original meaning of prescribed penalty. The other languages cited have only the senses of writing, scripture, written characters. The expression short shrift originally, a brief time for a criminal to confess before execution (1594), is extended in the figurative sense of little or no consideration, mercy, or delay in dealing with a person or problem (as in give short shrift to) first recorded in 1814.

shrike n. 1544, perhaps developed from Old English scric a thrush, any bird with a shrill call; cognate with Middle Low German schrike moor hen, modern Icelandic skrikja crow, Swedish skrika jay, and possibly with Old Icelandic skrækja to SCREECH.

shrill adj. Probably about 1380 schrylle high and sharp in sound, piercing; later shrille (about 1390); probably related to Old English scralletan to sound loudly, and cognate with Low German schrell shrill (modern German schrill), Norwegian skrelle a rattle, Swedish skrälla to crack, clap, and Old Icelandic skerlta to rattle, clatter.

shrimp n. 1327 shrimpe kind of slender shellfish; cognate (and having a shared sense of thin) with dialectal Danish skrimpe thin cattle, dialectal Norwegian skrumpe thin cow, and probably with standard Norwegian skrumpe to shrink up, shrivel, Swedish skrumpna, Middle High German schrimpfen (modern German skrumpfen), and Old Icelandic skreppa (n.) thin person, (v.) draw together, from Proto-Germanic skrempanan*. Compare SCRIMP. The meaning of a diminutive or puny person (about 1390), probably came directly from the etymological sense of a shrunken creature.

shrine n. About 1280 schryne case or box holding a relic; developed from Old English (about 1000) scrīn ark of the covenant, case for relics, borrowed from Latin scrinium case or box for keeping papers. The Latin word was borrowed by other Germanic languages: Old Frisian skrin shrine, Middle Low German schrin, Middle Dutch scrine (modern Dutch schrijn), and Old High German scrini (modern German Schrein). The place of worship is first recorded in 1627. —v. enclose in a shrine. About 1300 schrienen; from the noun.

shrink v. Before 1300 schrinken wither, shrivel; developed from Old English scrinan (before 899), from Proto-Germanic skrenkanan*; cognate with Middle Dutch schrinken draw back, Old Swedish skrunken shrunken, Swedish skrynkla to wrinkle, crease, Norwegian skrukke wrinkle, and Old Icelandic skrukka wrinkled old woman. The meaning of draw back, recoil, is first recorded in English about 1325; the sense of make smaller, about 1380. —n. 1590, from the verb. The slang sense of psychiatrist is first recorded in 1966; compare earlier head-shrinker (1950).

shrive v. Probably before 1200 scriven, scrifen hear the confession of, impose penance on, and grant absolution to; later scriven (about 1230); developed from Old English (before 776) scrifan assign, decree, impose penance; borrowed from Latin scribere to write (see SCRIBE), borrowed into other Germanic languages: Old Frisian skriwa to shrive, write, Old Saxon skriban to write, Middle Low German schriuen, Middle Dutch scriven (modern Dutch schrijven), Old High German scriban (modern German schreiben), and Old Icelandic skrifja to draw, paint, write, depict. Related to SHRIFT.

shrivel v. 1568 (implied in shriveled, adj.); of unknown origin. Swedish skryvla to shrivel, is a possible cognate.

shroud n. Probably before 1200 shrud garment; later shroude (about 1325); developed from Old English (about 1000) scrūd a garment, clothing (Proto-Germanic skrudān*), related to scēade SHRED and cognate with Old Icelandic skriðh shrouds of a ship, ornament, fabric, Middle Swedish skruther formal clothing, ornament, Norwegian and Swedish skrud attire. The meaning of a cloth or sheet for burial is first recorded in 1570. The meaning of shroud, shrouds, any of the ropes supporting the mast of a ship, is an extension of clothe as supported by the nautical phrase clothe the mast with shrouds and the application of naked to a mast or spar without its rigging. The same sense of development appears in Old Icelandic. —v. Probably before 1350 schruden to dress, clothe; later, to cover, veil (before 1420); from the noun.

Shrovetide n. Before 1400 Schroftyde; formed in Middle English from Schrof, Shrof (related to scrifen SHRIVE) + tide time; so called because Shrovetide is a time for confession and absolution.

shrub n. Probably before 1387, developed from Old English (972) scrybb brushwood, shrubbery; possibly cognate with Middle Danish skrubbe thicket, shrub. Compare SCRUB², n. —shrubbery n. 1748, a plot of shrubs; formed from English shrub + -ery.

shrug v. 1440 schruggen to shiver, shudder (possibly earlier in schurgyng, about 1400); also, about 1450, raise the shoulders as an expression of dislike, indifference, etc.; of uncertain origin. —n. 1594, from the verb.

shtick or schtik n. 1959 schtik, borrowed from Yiddish shtik an act, gimmick; literally, a piece, slice, from Middle High German stücke, from Old High German stucki; see STOCK.

shuck n. 1674, husk, pod, or shell, of unknown origin. The meaning of something valueless (as in it isn't worth shucks) is first recorded in 1847. The interjection shucks, a euphemistic exclamation of impatience or irritation, derives from this sense (1847). —v. 1819, from the noun.

shudder v. Probably about 1200 schuderen; of uncertain origin (possibly borrowed from Middle Dutch schūderen to shudder, or Middle Low German schōderen, both derived from the source of Old High German skutten to shake), from Proto-Germanic skud-*. —n. 1607, from the verb.

shuffle v. 1532 shoffle to put together hastily; later shuffle to push or thrust in underhandedly, smuggle in (1565); probably from Middle English shovelen to move with dragging feet (before 1450); probably a frequentative form of shoven SHOVE; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1628, evasive trick, subterfuge; from the verb. The sense of a dragging movement of the feet is found in 1659.

shun v. Probably before 1200 schunen keep away from, avoid; developed from Old English scunian to shun, detest (before 950), of uncertain origin.

shunt v. Before 1250 schunten to shy or start; later, turn away, withdraw (about 1390); perhaps derived from shunen to SHUN. The sense of move out of the way, push aside, is first recorded in 1706. —n. 1842, railroad switch; from the verb. The technical sense of an electric conductor, is found in 1863.

shut v. Probably before 1200 schutten; developed from Old English scyttan to put (a lock, bar, or bolt) in place so as to fasten a door or gate (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian sketta to shut up, obstruct, Middle Dutch scutten (modern Dutch schutten), and Middle Low German schutten, from Proto-Germanic skutjanan*. —shutter n. 1542, person or thing that shuts; formed from English shut, v. + *-er*¹. The sense of a movable cover for a window is first recorded in 1720.

shuttle n. 1338 shuttle; later shetel (before 1425), shootyll (probably 1450), shutylle (probably about 1475); developed from Old English (before 850) scytel a dart, arrow, related to scēotan to SHOOT, and cognate with Old Icelandic skutill harpoon, Norwegian skutel, and Swedish skyttel shuttle, from Proto-Germanic skutilaz*. The sense of a train that runs back and forth over a short distance is first recorded in 1895, and as applied to aircraft is found in 1942. —v. 1550, from the noun.

shy¹ adj. bashful. Before 1250 sheouh easily frightened or startled; later schey (1440); developed from Old English (about 1000) scēoh; cognate with Middle Low German schūw shy, Middle Dutch scā, scou (modern Dutch schuw), Middle High German schiech shy (from Proto-Germanic skeuH(w)az*), modern German scheu shy, Old High German sciuhen make fearful, frighten (modern German scheuchen), Norwegian and Swedish skygg shy (from Proto-Germanic skuwās*). The spelling shy is not recorded before the 1600's. The sense of cautious, suspicious, is first recorded in 1600, and that of bashful, retiring, in 1672. —v. 1650, recoil, shrink; from the adjective. The meaning of start back or aside suddenly (said of horses) appeared in 1796.

shy² v. to throw, fling. 1787, of uncertain origin; earlier uses refer to throwing sticks at cocks, suggesting shy cock timid person (1768), perhaps meaning a cock that refuses to fight; see SHY¹.

shyster n. 1843, unscrupulous lawyer; alteration (by -ster, as in trickster) of German Scheisser incompetent, worthless person, from Scheisse (vulgar) excrement.

si n. 1728, seventh note of the musical scale; ti; borrowed from Italian, from the initial letters of Latin Sancte Iohannes Saint John, the words sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day; see GAMUT.

sib adj. Old English sibb (about 725, in Beowulf), related to sibb, n., kinship, relationship; cognate with Old Frisian sibbe kinship, sib akin, Old Saxon sibbia kinship, sibbio kinsman, Middle Dutch sibbe kinship, Old High German sippea, sippa (modern German Sippe), Old Icelandic sifjar, pl., and Gothic sibja kinship, from Proto-Germanic sehjō*. —n. Old English (before 1000) sibb kinsfolk, relatives; later, a kinsman, relative (before 1023); from the adjective. —sibling n. 1903, modern revival (in anthropology) of Old English sibling relative, kinsman (about 1000); formed from sib, sibb sib, adj. + -ling.

sibilant adj. 1669, borrowed from Latin sibilantem (nominative sibilans), present participle of sibilare to hiss, whistle, possibly of imitative origin; for suffix see -ANT. —n. 1822, from the adjective.

sibyl n. Probably before 1200 sibeli any of several prophetesses that the ancient Greeks and Romans consulted; later sibil (before 1325); borrowed from Old French sibile, sebile, and from Medieval Latin Sibilla, from Latin Sibylla, from Greek Sibylla. —sibylline adj. 1579–80, said or written by a sibyl; later, prophetic, mysterious (1817); formed in English from sibyl + -ine on the model of Latin Sibyllinus of a sibyl, from Sibylla a sibyl.

sic¹ adv. so, thus (used to show that something has been copied as in the original). 1887, borrowed, perhaps by influence of its use in French (1872), from Latin sic so or thus, related to sī if.

sic² or sick¹ v. set upon or attack, as in "Sick him!" 1845 sick; 1890 sic dialectal variant of SEEK.

sick² adj. ill, ailing. Probably about 1175 sek; later sik (probably about 1225), sick (about 1300); developed from Old English sēoc (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian siak sick, Old Saxon siok, Middle Dutch siek (modern Dutch ziek), Old High German sioh, siuh (modern German siech), Old Icelandic sjúk (Norwegian and Swedish sjuk, Danish syg), and Gothic siuks, from Proto-Germanic seukaz*. For spelling see WICK. —sicken v. Probably about 1200 secnen become sick (sek sick + -enen *-en*¹). The sense of make sick is first recorded in 1613.

—sickly adj. Before 1375 sekly ailing, often sick; formed from Middle English sek sick + *-ly*²; compare Middle Dutch siekelic (modern Dutch ziekelijs), Old Icelandic sjúkligr (Norwegian and Swedish sjuklig, Danish sygelig). —sickness n. Probably before 1200 secnesse; developed from Old English (about 967) sēcnesse (sēoc sick + -nesse -ness).

sickle n. Probably before 1200 sikel; developed from Old English (about 1000) sicol, sicel; borrowed from Vulgar Latin sicula*, from Latin sēcula sickle. Other Germanic languages also borrowed the Latin word: Middle Dutch sickele (modern Dutch sikkel), and Old High German sichila (modern German Sichel).

side n. Old English (before 800) sīde; cognate with Old Frisian sīde side, Old Saxon sīda, Middle Dutch sīde (modern Dutch zijde), Old High German sīta (modern German Seite), and Old Icelandic sīdha (Swedish sida, Danish and Norwegian side), from Proto-Germanic sīdōn*, originally denoting the long part or aspect of a thing, and connected with Old English sīd long, wide, Old Frisian sīde low, wide, Middle Dutch sīde low, Old High German sīto, adv., loose, and Old Icelandic sīdhr long (Norwegian and Danish sid), from Proto-Germanic sīdās*.

The figurative sense of a position or attitude of a person in relation to another, interest, point of view, is first recorded in Middle English about 1250. —adj. Before 1375, at or toward one side; from the noun. —v. Before 1450 syden (implied in syded, past participle) to carve (an animal) into sides; from the noun. The sense of take the side of, favor, is found in 1591. —sideways adv. (1577) —siding n. 1825, short track parallel to a main railway; 1829, boards, shingles, etc., forming the outside walls of a wooden building (side, n. or v. + *-ing*¹).

sideburns n. pl. 1887, alteration of burnsides (1881), from the name of Ambrose E. Burnside, Union general in the Civil War, who popularized side whiskers.

sidereal adj. 1634, starlike; borrowed from French sidereal (Latin siderēus starry, astral + French -al *-al*¹). Latin siderēus derives from sīdus (genitive sīderis) star, constellation.

sidle v. 1697, probably a back formation from Middle English (before 1338) sidlyng, adv., obliquely, sideways (side, n. + -ling); formed on the analogy of verbs ending in -le. —n. 1853, from the verb.

siege n. Probably before 1200 sege seat used by a person of distinction; later, act of establishing forces to cut off a castle, town, etc. (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French sege, siege seat, throne, from Vulgar Latin sedicum* seat, from a lost verb sedicare*, from Latin sedere to SIT. —v. Probably before 1300 segen; from the noun.

sienna n. 1760 terra sienna; 1787 sienna, borrowing of Italian, short for terra di Sienna earth of Siena, city in central Italy, where the coloring matter was probably first produced.

sierra n. 1613, borrowing of Spanish sierra mountain range; literally, a saw, from Latin serra a saw.

siesta n. 1655, borrowing of Spanish siesta, from Latin sexta hōra sixth hour of the Roman day, midday, from sexta, feminine of sextus sixth, from sex SIX.

sieve n. Probably before 1300 sive; developed from Old English (before 800) sife; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sēve sieve (modern Dutch zeef), Old High German sib (modern German Sieb), Old Icelandic sef rush (a plant used for making sieves), Norwegian sev, Swedish säv, Danish siv, from Proto-Germanic sibī*. —v. Probably before 1475 syffen; later syve (1530); from the noun.

sift v. Before 1325 siften to pass (something) through a sieve; developed from Old English (before 800) siftan, related to sife SIEVE, and cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch siften (modern Dutch ziften). The sense of look carefully through is first recorded in 1535.

sigh v. About 1250 sigen; later syghen (about 1303); probably a back formation from sighte, past tense of Old English sican to sigh (before 899); of unknown origin. —n. Before 1325, from the verb.

sight n. Probably about 1175 sihte thing seen, power or act of seeing; later syght (about 1303); developed from Old English gesiht, gesihth (about 950); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sicht sight (modern Dutch zicht), and Old High German siht (modern German Sicht); from Proto-Germanic seH(w)*-, the stem of Old English sēon to SEE. —v. 1556, to look at, inspect; later, to see (1602); from the noun.

sign n. Probably before 1200 sine; later signe (about 1280); borrowed from Old French signe sign, mark, signature, and directly from Latin signum mark, token, indication, signal. —v. About 1300 signen to make the sign of the cross; later, to mark or stamp (about 1350); borrowed from Old French signer, from Latin signāre, from signum, n., sign. The sense of write one's name to show authority is first recorded in English in 1440.

signal n. About 1380, visible sign, indication; borrowed from Old French signal, seignal signal, sign, from Medieval Latin signale, from Late Latin signālis, adj., used as a signal, from Latin signum signal, SIGN; for suffix see -AL². The sense of an agreed-upon sign (as in a signal to begin firing) is first recorded in 1593. —v. 1805, from the noun. —adj. 1641, striking, remarkable, notable (as in a signal achievement); borrowed from French signalé, past participle of signaler to distinguish, from Old French signaler, from signal, n.

signatory adj. 1647, used in sealing; borrowed from Latin signatōrius of sealing, from signāt-, past participle stem of signāre to SIGN; for suffix see -ORY. The meaning of signing, is first recorded in 1870. —n. 1866, from the adjective.

signature n. 1534, a writing presented to be signed, as for a royal grant; borrowed through Middle French signature, or directly from Medieval Latin signatura sign, from Latin signātūra the matrix of a seal, from signāre to mark, SIGN; for suffix see -URE. The meaning of a person's name written by himself is first recorded in 1580.

signet n. Probably about 1380 syngnette small seal; about 1384

signet; borrowing of Old French signet, diminutive form of signe SIGN; for suffix see -ET.

significant adj. 1579, full of meaning; formed in English as an adjective to significance on the model of Latin significātem (nominative significāns), present participle of significāre to indicate, mean, SIGNIFY; for suffix see -ANT. The meaning of important or notable is first recorded before 1761. —significance n. Before 1400, the meaning of something; borrowed from Latin significāntia meaning, force, energy, from significāns, present participle of significāre SIGNIFY; for suffix see -ANCE. The meaning of importance or consequence, is first recorded in 1725.

signify v. About 1275 signefien be a sign of, indicate, mean; probably before 1300 signifier; borrowed from Old French signifier, and directly from Latin significāre to show by signs, mean, signify, from significus, adj. (not attested until Late Latin), from signum SIGN + the root of facere to make; for suffix see -FY. —signification n. Before 1325 significacioun symbolization, representation; borrowed from Old French signification, and directly from Latin significātiōnem (nominative significātiō) a signifying, indication, expression, sign, meaning, from significāre to signify, mean; for suffix see -ATION.

silage n. 1884, alteration (probably influenced by silo) of earlier ensilage (1881); borrowing of French ensilage, from ensiler put in a silo, from Spanish ensilar (en- *en-*¹ + silo SILO); for suffix see -AGE.

silence n. Probably before 1200; borrowed from Old French silence absence of sound, state of being silent, from Latin silentium a being silent, from silēns, present participle of silēre be quiet or still, be silent; for suffix see -ENCE. —v. 1560, become silent or still; from the noun. The sense of make silent, is first recorded in 1597. —silencer n. 1600, person or thing that silences; later, mechanism that quiets the sound of a motor or firearm (1898). —silent adj. Before 1500, borrowed from Latin silentem (nominative silēns), present participle; for suffix see -ENT.

silhouette n. 1798, borrowing of French silhouette, in allusion to Étienne de Silhouette, French minister of finance in 1759. The name (because it was an inexpensive way of making a likeness of someone) was probably intended to ridicule the petty economies of Silhouette to finance the Seven Years' War. Another explanation involves the amateurish outline portraits made by him to decorate the walls of his château. —v. 1876, from the noun.

silica n. 1801, New Latin, from Latin silex (genitive silicis, from earlier stem scelic-*) flint, pebble; see SHELL. —silicate n. 1811, formed from New Latin silica + English suffix -ate².

silicon n. 1817, from New Latin silica, patterned on boron, carbon, etc.

silk n. Probably before 1200 seolke; later selk (about 1250), silk (about 1300); developed from Old English (before 899) sioloc, seoloc, seolk silk; cognate with Old Icelandic silki silk (modern Icelandic silki, Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish silke), and Old High German silecho. The ultimate source is a Far Eastern word, which was also borrowed into Greek as sērikós silken, sērikón silk (which probably gave rise to the back formation Sēres an Asian people who originated the making of silk, thought to be the Chinese). The use of l in Old English sioloc, and in the corresponding word in other languages along this northern route, may reflect borrowing from a Chinese dialect form with the sound of l instead of r. Compare SERGE. —adj. Before 1375, from the noun. —silken adj. Probably before 1200 sulkene; later selkene (probably before 1300), silken (about 1353); developed from Old English seolcen made of silk (before 899); formed from seolc silk + *-en*². —silkworm n. Old English seolcwyrn (about 1000). —silky adj. 1611, made of silk, formed from English silk, n. + *-y*¹.

sill n. Probably about 1390 sille; developed from Old English syll (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic suljō*; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sulle, sille beam, threshold, Old High German swelli (modern German Schwelle), from Proto-Germanic swalja-*, Old Icelandic svill (from Proto-Germanic swelja-*), also syll (Norwegian svill, Swedish syll, and Danish syld).

silly adj. Probably before 1200 selie spiritually favored, blessed; developed from Old English gesælig happy (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian selich happy, Old Saxon sālig, Middle Dutch sālich (modern Dutch zalig), and Old High German sālīg (modern German selig), from Proto-Germanic sælizās*; for suffix see *-y*¹. Old English gesælig is derived from sæl happiness, noun use of an adjective represented by Old Icelandic sæll happy, Gothic sels good, fit (from Proto-Germanic sælaz*). Silly has undergone considerable sense development from the original meaning of happy. From the sense of innocent (1200), weak (about 1300), and unfortunate, pitiable (about 1280) developed the meaning of simple, rustic, ignorant (before 1547), and lacking in reason or sense, foolish (1576). —n. 1858, from the adjective.

silo n. 1835, borrowing of Spanish silo, probably of pre-Roman origin from the source of Basque zilo, zulo dugout, a cave or shelter for keeping grain.

Traditionally said to have developed through Latin sīrus from Greek sīrós, seirós a pit for storing grain, the change from r to l in Spanish is abnormal and Greek sīrós was a rare foreign term peculiar to regions of Asia Minor and not likely to emerge in Castilian Spain. —v. 1883 from the noun.

silt n. 1440 cylte; later silt (before 1500); probably borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch silte, sulte salt marsh, brine (modern Dutch zult); cognate with Danish sylt-lage pickle, brine, Old High German sulza salt marsh, brine (modern German Sülze brine), and more distantly with Old English sealt SALT. —v. 1799, from the noun.

silver n. Before 1121 silver, seolfre; developed from Old English (before 830) seolfor, siolfor; cognate with Old Frisian selover, silver silver, Old Saxon silubar, Middle Dutch silver (modern Dutch zilver), Old High German silabar, silbar (modern German Silber), Old Icelandic silfr (Swedish silver, Icelandic silfur Danish and Norwegian sølv), and Gothic silubr, from Proto-Germanic silubra-*. —adj. About 1303, made of silver; developed from Old English seolfor (1032); from the noun. —v. About 1350 selveren; later sylveren (1440); from the noun. —silversmith n. Old English seolforsmith (before 1000). —silvery adj. Before 1398, formed from Middle English silver, n. + *-y*¹.

simian adj. 1607, formed from Latin sīmia, sīmius ape + English -an. Latin sīmia, sīmius derive from sīmus snub-nosed, from Greek sīmós snub-nosed, bent upwards; for suffix see -AN. —n. 1880, from the adjective.

similar adj. 1611, borrowed from French similaire, and perhaps directly from Medieval Latin similaris* like, an extended form of Latin similis like (originally semalis*); for suffix see -AR. An earlier form similarie (1564), later spelled similary, was common in the 1600's. —similarity n. 1664, likeness, resemblance; formed from English similar + -ity.

simile n. Probably before 1387, borrowed from Latin simile a like thing, neuter of similis like.

similitude n. About 1380, a sign or symbol; later, similarity, likeness (about 1385); borrowed from Old French similitude, and directly from Latin similitūdō likeness, from similis like; for suffix see -TUDE.

simmer v. 1653 simber; later simmer (1684); alteration of simperen to simmer (1477), possibly of imitative origin. —n. 1809, condition of simmering; from the verb. The opposite sense of cool off or calm down (as in simmer down) is first recorded in 1871.

simonize v. 1934, from Simoniz a trademark for a type of car polish.

simon-pure adj. 1840, from the true Simon Pure the genuine person or thing (1795), from Simon Pure, the name of a Quaker who is impersonated by another character in the comedy A Bold Stroke for a Wife (1717) by Susannah Centlivre, English dramatist and actress.

simony n. Probably before 1200 symonie the sin of buying or selling an ecclesiastical office; borrowed from Old French simonie, from Late Latin simōnia, from Simon Magus, a Samaritan who tried to buy the power of conferring the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:9–24); for suffix see *-Y*³.

simp n. 1903, circus dialect, shortened from SIMPLETON.

simpatico adj. 1888, borrowed from Spanish simpático, from simpatía sympathy, or borrowed from Italian simpatico, from simpatia sympathy; both ultimately from Latin sympathia SYMPATHY. The feminine form simpatica is recorded earlier in English, in 1864; borrowed from Spanish simpática, feminine of simpático, or borrowed from Italian simpatica, feminine of simpatico.

simper v. About 1563, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source; (compare Norwegian semper fine, smart, and dialectal Danish semper, simper affected, coy, prudish, both cognate with Middle Dutch zimperljk affected, coy, prim). —n. 1599, from the verb.

simple adj. Probably before 1200, humble, ignorant; borrowed from Old French simple, from Latin simplus (in Classical Latin only in neuter simpulum) or simplex (genitive simplicis). From the sense of lowly, common (about 1280), and mere, pure (about 1303). The sense of single, not composite, developed before 1398, and that of not complicated, not difficult, about 1555. —n. Before 1375, person of humble birth, from the adjective. —simply adv. About 1300 simpleliche sincerely, without duplicity; formed from simple + -liche *-ly*².

simpleton n. 1650, from simple + -ton, as in the surnames Appleton, Chesterton, and Wellington.

simplex adj. 1594, borrowed from Latin simplex single, simple. —n. 1892, a simple, uncompounded word; from the adjective. The mathematical sense is recorded since 1914.

simplicity n. About 1380 simplicite singleness of nature, unity; borrowed from Old French simplicité, from Latin simplicitatem (nominative simplicitās) the state of being simple, from simplex (genitive simplicis) simple; for suffix see -ity. The sense of ignorance, is first recorded in 1514, and that of plainness, lack of artificiality, in 1526.

simplify v. 1653, borrowed from French simplifier to make simpler, from Medieval Latin simplificare to simplify, from a lost Latin adjective simplificus*, formed from Latin simplex simple + the root of facere to make; for suffix see -fy. —simplification n. 1688, borrowed from French simplification act or process of simplifying, from simplifier; for suffix see -FICATION.

simplistic adj. Before 1881, trying to explain too much by a single principle; earlier, of or pertaining to simples (herbs used in medicine) or to a simplist (one who studies such herbs), 1860; formed from simplist (1597) + -ic.

simulate v. 1652, developed from the past participle simulate (1435), and probably as a back formation from simulation, on the model of Latin simulātus, past participle of simulāre imitate, formed from the stem semal-* of similis like; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —simulation n. 1340 simulacioun; borrowed from Old French simulation, and directly from Latin simulātiōnem (nominative simulātiō) an imitating, feigning, from simulāre imitate; for suffix see -ATION.

simulcast v. 1948, formed from simul(taneous) + (broad)cast. —n. 1952, from the verb.

simultaneous adj. Before 1660, probably formed in English from Latin simul at the same time + English -taneous as abstracted from instantaneous, spontaneous.

sin n. About 1125 synne sinfulness, wickedness; later sinne a wrongful act, sin (probably before 1160); developed from Old English (before 830) synn wrongdoing, offense, misdeed; cognate with several Germanic words having an extended form in -d or -t, including Old Frisian sende sin, Old Saxon sundia, Middle Dutch sonde (modern Dutch zonde), Old High German sunta, suntea (modern German Sünde), and Old Icelandic synd, from Proto-Germanic sundjō*. —v. Probably about 1175 sungen; probably before 1200 sinen; developed from Old English (before 830) syngian to commit sin; cognate with Old Frisian sendigia to sin, Old Saxon sundion, Middle Dutch sondigen (modern Dutch zondigen), Old High German sunteōn (modern German sündigen), all derived from the same Germanic source as Old English synn, n. —sinful adj. Probably about 1200 sinfull; developed from Old English (before 830) synnfull; formed from synn sin + -full -ful. —sinner n. About 1350, formed from Middle English sinne sin + *-er*¹.

since adv. Before 1425 synnes afterwards, from then till now, before now; later syns (about 1450); reduced form of sithenes since (sithen since + the adverbial ending -es) which developed from Old English siththan then, later, after that (about 725, in Beowulf), originally sith than after that (sith after + than, weakened form of thām, dative of thæt THAT). Old English sith is cognate with Old Saxon sith since, Old High German sīd (modern German seit), Old Icelandic síðr less, scarcely (from Proto-Germanic sīthiz* later, after), and Gothic seithus late.

The spelling since replaced syns, synnes in the 1500's to indicate the final sound is a voiceless s, as ice replaced is, twice replaced twies, etc. —conj. Probably before 1387 synnes after the time that; from the adverb. The sense of because, inasmuch as, is first recorded in about 1450. —prep. 1515, between (a specified time) and now; from the adverb.

sincere adj. 1533, honest, straightforward; borrowed from Middle French sincere, and probably directly from Latin sincērus sound, whole, pure, genuine, perhaps originally "of one growth," not hybrid, unmixed (dissimilated by loss of r after c in earlier sincēros*), from sem-, sin- one + the root of crēscere to grow. —sincerity n. Probably before 1425 sinceritie honesty; borrowed from Middle French sincérité, and probably directly from Latin sincēritatem (nominative sincēritās), from sincērus sincere; for suffix see -ity.

sine n. 1593, the length of the side opposite an acute angle in a right triangle divided by the length of the hypotenuse; borrowed from Medieval Latin sinus, from Latin, fold in a garment, bend, curve. The medieval translators of Arabic geometrical texts confused Arabic jiba chord of an arc, sine (borrowed from Sanskrit jīvā bowstring) with Arabic jaib bundle, bosom, fold in a garment; hence the use of Latin sinus.

sinecure n. 1662, a church benefice without parish duties; borrowed from Medieval Latin beneficium sine cura benefice without care (of souls); Latin sine without and cūrā, ablative singular of cūra care. The extended sense of any paying job or position with little or no work is first recorded in 1676.

sinew n. Probably before 1200 senuwe; later sinu (before 1325), synew (before 1398); developed from Old English seonowe, sionwe (about 725, in Beowulf) oblique form from the nominative sionu, sinu; cognate with Old Frisian sine sinew, Old Saxon sinewa, Middle Dutch sēnuwe, sēnewe (modern Dutch zenuw), Old High German senawa (modern German Sehne), and Old Icelandic sin (Swedish sena, Danish and Norwegian sene), from Proto-Germanic senawō*. —sinewy adj. Before 1382 senewy made of sinews; formed from senewe, senuwe sinew, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of tough, stringy, is first recorded in 1578.

sing v. Probably before 1200 singen; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) singan to chant, sing, tell in song (past tense sang, past participle sungen); cognate with Old Frisian sionga, siunga to sing, Old Saxon singan, Middle Dutch singhen (modern Dutch zingen), Old High German singan (modern German singen), Old Icelandic syngva (Norwegian and Danish syng, modern Icelandic syngja, and Swedish sjunga), Gothic siggwan (for singwan*) to sing, from Proto-Germanic sengwanan*. —n. 1871, a ringing sound; 1884, act of singing; from the verb. —singer n. About 1303; earlier as a surname Le Singere (1268); formed from Middle English singen to sing + -er. —singsong adj. 1734, of or like singsong; 1825, monotonous in rhythm; from the earlier noun (1609).

singe v. 1340 zengen to burn, scorch; later sengen (about 1350); developed from Old English (about 1000) sengan to burn lightly, burn the edges of (hair, wings, etc.); cognate with Old Frisian sandza, sendaza to singe, Middle Low German sengen, Middle Dutch senghen (modern Dutch zengen), Old High German bisengan (modern German sengen), from Proto-Germanic sangjanan*, Middle High German senge dryness, dialectal Swedish sjängla to singe, dialectal Norwegian sengra, modern Icelandic sangur singed, burnt, sengja singed taste. —n. 1658, from the verb.

single adj. Probably before 1300 sengle without armor; later, unmarried, celibate (about 1303); borrowed from Old French sengle, single being one, separate, from Latin singulus one, individual, separate (usually pl., singuli one by one). The sense of individual is first recorded in Middle English before 1387. —n. Before 1376 sengle unmarried person; from the adjective. The sense of a single thing is first recorded in 1646. —v. 1570–76, to part, separate; from the adjective. The sense of pick from among others is first recorded in 1588. —singly adv. Before 1338 senglely separately; formed from Middle English sengle single, adj. + -ly.

singular adj. About 1340 syngulere, synguler living alone, unique, special, unsurpassed; borrowed from Old French singuler single, separate, singular, and directly from Latin singularis single, solitary, singular, from singulus single. The formation of singular in English was probably influenced by earlier singularity, especially in the sense of unique. —n. Probably about 1378 synguler particular thing. —singularity n. About 1230 singularite unusual behavior; borrowed from Old French singularité, learned borrowing from Late Latin singularitatem (nominative singularitās), from Latin singularis singular; for suffix see -ITY.

sinister adj. 1411 sinistre deceptive, false, dishonest; later, evil, corrupt (1474); borrowed through Old French sinistre contrary, unfavorable, on the left, or directly from Latin sinister left, on the left side, whose ending -ter (from earlier -teros*) is the same contrastive suffix found in Latin dexter, meaning right, on the right. Latin sinister while used in augury in the sense of lucky, favorable, also had the meaning of harmful, unfavorably situated, adverse, which came from Greek influence, reflecting the early Greek practice of facing north when observing omens. The sense of evil or being underhanded is first found in English in 1474.

sink v. Probably before 1200 sinken; developed from Old English (about 950) sincan become submerged, go under (past tense sanc, past participle suncen); cognate with Old Saxon sinkan to sink, Middle Dutch sincken (modern Dutch zinken), Old High German sinkan (modern German sinken), Old Icelandic sökva, (modern Icelandic sökkva), Norwegian sökke, Swedish sjunka, Danish synke, and Gothic singan to sink, from Proto-Germanic senkwanan*. —n. 1413–14, pool or pit for waste water or sewage; implied earlier in the compound sin-creste, the rim of a privy (1346); from the verb. The sense of a shallow basin with a drainpipe is found in 1566. —sinkhole n. (1456)

Sino- a combining form meaning China or Chinese, as in Sinology = the study of China; Sino-Japanese = Chinese and Japanese. Adapted from Late Latin Sinae, pl., the Chinese, from Greek Sínai, from Arabic Sin China, probably from Chinese Ch'in, name of the fourth dynasty in China.

sinuous adj. 1578, borrowed from Latin sinuōsus full of folds or bendings, from sinus curve, fold, bend; see SINUS; for suffix see -OUS.

sinus n. Probably before 1425, a hollow or cavity in the body; Medieval Latin sinus, from Latin sinus bend, fold, or curve.

-sion a suffix found in some words of Latin origin as a form of -tion added to and fusing with a final -d or -t of a verb stem, as in suspension from suspend and conversion from convert, and occasionally elsewhere, as in compulsion from compel. In the Latin originals of these words the suffix is -siō (nominative), -siōnem (accusative), -siōnis (genitive).

sip v. About 1395 sippen take a small drink; of uncertain origin; probably cognate with Low German sippen to sip, and perhaps related to Old English sūpan to take into the mouth a little at a time, taste, sip. —n. Before 1500 syype a small drink; from the verb.

siphon n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin siphō (genitive siphōnis), from Greek siphōn pipe. —v. 1859, from the noun.

sir n. Probably before 1300, title of honor of a knight or baronet, placed before his name; variant of SIRE. This reduced form of sire probably resulted from the absence of stress before the following name. By about 1350 sir was used as a respectful form of address, and by 1425 as a salutation at the beginning of letters.

sire n. Probably before 1200, a title of respect for a man; borrowed from Old French sire, from Vulgar Latin seior*, reduced from Latin senior older, elder. The meaning of father or male forebear is first recorded about 1250. —v. 1611, be the father of (a person), from the noun.

siren n. Before 1393, female creature in Classical mythology who lured sailors to their destruction by her singing; borrowed from Old French sereine, and directly from Latin srēn, from Greek seirēn. An earlier sense of a mythical serpent is recorded in Middle English in 1340. The device that makes a signal of warning (as from an ambulance, and, originally, steamboat) is first recorded in 1879, borrowed from French sirène siren, from Old French sereine.

sirloin n. Before 1425 surloyne; borrowed from Middle French surloigne*, surlonge (sur over, above + longe loin, from Old French loigne LOIN). The spelling with sir- first appeared in English in the 1600's, from an alleged story that this cut of beef was "knighted" by an English king because of its superiority.

sisal n. 1843, in allusion to Sisal, a port in Yucatán, from which the fiber was exported.

sister n. About 1250, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic systir, Swedish syster, and Danish and Norwegian søster sister). Middle English sister was a replacement of suster (before 1121), developed from Old English (835) sweostor, swuster, cognate of Old Icelandic systir; other Germanic cognates are found in Old Frisian swester, suster, Old Saxon swestar, Middle Dutch suster (modern Dutch zuster), Old High German swester (modern German Schwester), and Gothic swistar, from Proto-Germanic swestr-*. The sense of closely related or like another (as in sister ships) is first recorded in 1641. The meaning of a nun is first recorded in English before 899. —sister-in-law n. (1440) —sisterly adj. (1570) sit v. About 1125 sitten, developed from Old English sittan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian sitta to sit, Old Saxon sittian, Middle Dutch sitten (modern Dutch zitten), Old High German sizzen (modern German sitzen), and Old Icelandic sitja (Swedish sitta, Danish sidde, Norwegian sitte), from Proto-Germanic setjanan*. —sitter n. Probably before 1300 sittere a hare; literally, one that sits; formed from Middle English sitten to sit + -ere *-er*¹. The sense of one who sits is found in 1440 and that one who baby-sits in 1937.

sitar n. 1845, borrowing of Hindi siṭār, from Persian siṭār three-stringed (si three, from Old Persian thri-, + tār string).

site n. About 1380, location (of a building) borrowed from Anglo-French site, and directly from Latin situs (genitive situs) place, position, from si-, root of sinere let, leave alone, permit.

situate v. Probably before 1425 situaten put into proper position, set; borrowed from Medieval Latin situatus, past participle of situare to place, locate, from Latin situs (genitive situs) place, position, SITE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —situation n. Probably before 1425 situacion act of setting, position; borrowed through Middle French situation, or directly from Medieval Latin situationem (nominative situatio) position, location, situation, from situare; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of a state or condition (as in an interesting situation) is first recorded in English in 1710, as is the related sense of a position in life, or in relation to others.

six adj. Old English siex, six (before 899); earlier sex (835); cognate with Old Frisian sex six, Old Saxon sehs, Middle Dutch ses (modern Dutch zes), Old High German sehs (modern German sechs), Old Icelandic sex (modern Icelandic and Swedish sex, Danish and Norwegian seks), and Gothic saḥs, from Proto-Germanic seHs*. —sixteen adj. Old English (before 900) sixtyne, sixtēne (six six + -tēne -teen, from tēn TEN).

—sixth adj. 1526, replacing earlier sixte (probably before 1200), developed from Old English syxte (before 899); for suffix see -TH². —sixty adj. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 899) sixtig (six six + -tig group of ten, -TY¹).

size¹ n. extent, amount, magnitude. Probably before 1300 sise manner, style; about 1300, ordinance, law; borrowed from Old French sise, shortened from assise session, assessment, regulation, manner, ASSIZE. The sense of extent, amount, magnitude (about 1303) developed by influence of assise ordinance regulating weights. The spelling size appeared in the 1600's, its currency possibly influenced by assise being taken as a size. —v. Probably before 1400 sysen regulate according to a fixed standard; from the noun. The meaning of arrange according to size, is found before 1635.

size² n. sticky substance. About 1325 sise; probably borrowed from Middle French sise, special use of Old French sise a setting, fixing, shortened from assise ASSIZE. —v. 1633 from the noun.

sizzle v. 1603, to burn or scorch producing a hissing sound; perhaps a frequentative verb form of Middle English sissen hiss, buzz (before 1300), of imitative origin like Middle Dutch cissen, modern Dutch and Low German sissen to hiss, sizzle; for suffix see -LE³. The sense of hiss as fat does is found in English before 1825. —n. 1823, from the verb.

skald n. 1763, Scandinavian poet and singer of medieval times; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skáld, modern Icelandic skáld skald, poet, Swedish and Norwegian skald poet, skald, and Danish skjald skald; compare SCOLD).

skate¹ n. fish. About 1340 schat; later scate (about 1375); in the surname Scate (1202); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic and modern Icelandic skata, Norwegian skate, Danish skade, and Faeroese skøta).

skate² n. ice skate or roller skate. 1662 skeates ice skates; borrowed from Dutch schaats (a singular taken in English as plural) skate, stilt, from Middle Dutch schaetse, from Old North French escache a stilt, trestle, variant of Old French eschace stilt, from Frankish skakkeja* thing that shakes or moves fast, perhaps related to the root of Old English sceacan to vibrate, SHAKE. The application of the word to roller skates is found in 1876. —v. 1696, from the noun. —skateboard n. (1964) skein n. 1373 skeyne; borrowed from Middle French escaigne a hank of yarn, of uncertain origin (compare Medieval Latin scagna a skein).

skeleton n. 1578 sceleton, borrowed from New Latin sceleton, skeleton bones or bony framework of a body, from Greek skeletón dried-up, in skeletón sōma dried-up body, neuter of skeletós dried-up, from skéllein dry up. The meaning of a bare outline is first recorded in 1607, and formed the basis of skeleton crew, skeleton key. —adj. 1778, from the noun. —skeletal adj. 1854, formed from English skeleton, n. + *-al*¹.

skeptic or sceptic n. 1587, member of an ancient Greek school that doubted the possibility of real knowledge; borrowed through Middle French sceptique or Latin scepticus (plural Sceptici the Skeptics), from Greek skeptikós (plural Skeptikoi), literally, inquiring, reflective, assumed by the disciples of the ancient Greek philosopher Pyrrho as their distinctive name, from sképtesthai to reflect, look, view; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of one who has a doubting attitude, is first recorded in English in 1615.

The English spelling sk- influenced by the Greek form, is first recorded in English before 1631, and became the standard form in the United States. —skeptical adj. 1639, formed from English skeptic + -al. —skepticism n. 1646, borrowed from New Latin scepticismus, from Latin scepticus skeptic; for suffix see -ISM.

sketch n. 1668 scetch; borrowed from Dutch schets, from Italian schizzo sketch, drawing, special use of schizzo a splash, squirt, from schizzare to splash or squirt, of uncertain origin. The extended sense of a brief account is found in 1715. —v. 1694, from the noun. —sketchy adj. 1805, formed from English sketch, n. + *-y*¹.

skew v. About 1470 skewen to turn aside, move sideways, twist; borrowed from Old North French eskeuer, escuer shy away from, avoid, corresponding to Old French eschiver, eschever to ESCHEW. The meaning of depict or represent unfairly (that is in a slanted or twisted way) is first recorded in 1872. —adj. 1609, from the verb. —n. 1688, from the adjective or verb.

skewer n. 1411 skuer, later skueier (1458), skewer (1679); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skjifa disk, cut, slice, Swedish skiva, Danish skive). The Scandinavian words are cognate with Old High German scība disk. Related to SHIVER². —v. 1701, fasten (meat) with a skewer, from the noun.

ski n. 1755, borrowing of Norwegian ski, also skid, related to Old Icelandic skídh snowshoe, stick of wood; cognate with Old High German skīt stick, block, board, plank (modern German Scheit), Old Frisian skid, and Old English sād, from Proto-Germanic skīd-* to divide, split off; see SHED². —v. 1893, from the noun.

skid n. 1609–10, beam or plank on which something rests; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skídh stick of wood; see SKI). The sense of a sliding along developed from the verb skid in the 1890's. —v. 1674, apply a skid to (a wheel); from the noun. The sense of slide along without turning, is first recorded in 1838; the extended sense of slip sideways is first recorded in 1884.

skiff n. Before 1500 skif; borrowed from Middle French esquif, from Italian schifo, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skif boat; see SHIP).

skill n. About 1175 skil that which is reasonable or right, differentiation, distinction; later, the faculty of reason (probably before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skil distinction, discernment; related to the verb skilja distinguish, separate; cognate with Middle Low skillet n. 1404 skelett; as a surname Skelete (1332); of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from Middle French esculete, esculete, diminutive of escuele plate, from Latin scutella serving platter; see SCUTTLE¹ bucket; or formed in English from skele a wooden bucket or pail (about 1330) + -et. Middle English skele was a borrowing from a Scandinavian source (compare Old and modern Icelandic skjōla pail, bucket).

German schelen distinguish, separate; see SHELL). The sense of practical knowledge, ability, cleverness, is first recorded in Middle English before 1225. —skillful or skilful adj. Before 1325, formed from Middle English skil skill + -ful.

skim v. clear (a liquid) of fat or scum. 1373 skemmen to froth; later skymen to remove (floating matter) from a liquid (before 1398); as a surname Skym (1285); probably borrowed from Middle French escumer remove scum, from escume scum, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German scūm SCUM). The meaning of study in a superficial manner is first recorded before 1586.

skimp v. 1879, possibly developed by a back formation from skimpy and perhaps influenced by SCRIMP. —skimpy adj. 1842, from English skimp, adj., scanty, meager (1775), perhaps alteration of scrimp, adj. (1718), from the same source as scrimp, v.; for suffix see -Y¹.

skin n. Probably before 1200 skinn animal hide or pelt; later, skin of the body (probably before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skinn animal hide, Norwegian and Swedish skinn, Danish skind, from Proto-Germanic skintha-*). The Scandinavian words are cognate with Middle Low German schin scurf, Middle High German schint rind, Old High German scinten to flay, skin (modern German schinden), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch schinden. —v. 1392 (implied in yskynned) to circumcise; before 1400 remove the skin off; from the noun. —skinner n. (1398) —skinny adj. About 1400, formed from Middle English skin, n. + *-y*¹.

skinflint n. Before 1700, miser; literally, person who would skin a flint to save or gain something (skin, v. + flint, n.) skink n. 1590 scinc; 1591 skink; borrowed through Middle French scinc, and from Latin scincus, from Greek skinkos a kind of lizard common in Asia.

skip v. Probably before 1300 skippen jump over; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skoipa to skip, run, from Proto-Germanic skupanan*). The meaning of omitting intervening parts, is first recorded in English about 1386. —n. a leap. About 1422, from the verb.

skipper n. 1391; in the surname Scipre (1177); borrowed from Middle Dutch scipper, from scip SHIP; for suffix see -ER¹. —v. 1883, from the noun.

skirl v. About 1450 scrillen, skirlen shriek; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian skryla, skerella to shriek, or Swedish skerälla to crack, clap). The word was used in reference to the sound of bagpipes before 1665. —n. 1513; from the verb.

skirmish n. Probably about 1380 skarmoch; about 1385 skar-myssh; borrowed from Old French escarmouche skirmish, from Italian scaramuccia; borrowed from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skirmen to protect, defend, and skirm shield). Middle English skyrmiss (before 1400) was influenced by the verb skirmysshen to brandish a weapon. —v. Probably before 1200 sceremiggen engage in a skirmish; borrowed from Old French escarmouchier to skirmish, from Italian scaramucciare, from scaramuccia skirmish, n. The later form adopted the spelling of a separate verb skirmysshen, to brandish a weapon (1387), borrowed from Old French eskirmis-, stem of eskirmir to fence, ward off, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German skirmen to protect, defend); for suffix see -ISH².

The later verb and noun forms were also influenced by Middle English skirmen to fence, skirmish (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French eskirmir to fence, ward off.

skirt n. Before 1325 skirt lower part of a woman's dress; earlier as a surname (1224); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old and modern Icelandic skyrta shirt, Swedish skjorta, Danish and Norwegian skjorte; see SHIRT). The development in English of the lower part of a woman's dress from the meaning "a shirt" is unclear, but Middle Low German schörte apron, skirt, and the modern Low German schört a woman's gown, is a similar development and possibly the long shirt of peasant garb, was the source of the meaning that later referred to the lower part of shirt and thence a woman's dress. The sense of a border or edge is first recorded in Middle English about 1470. —v. 1602, to border, edge; later, to pass along the border or edge (1623); from the noun.

skit n. 1820, from the sense of whimsical notion or remark, caprice, whimsy (1727); perhaps noun use of verb skit be skittish, caper or frolic (1611), probably a back formation from SKITTISH.

skitter v. 1845, a frequentative verb form of skite to dart, run quickly (1721); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare modern Icelandic skjóta, Swedish skjuta to SHOOT, or dialectal Norwegian skutla glide rapidly); for suffix see -ER⁴.

skittish adj. About 1412, very lively, frivolous; perhaps formed by influence of a Scandinavian base skyt-* (represented by Old Icelandic skýtt-, stem of skjóta to SHOOT) + English suffix -ish¹. The sense of apt to start, or run, jump, is first recorded in English about 1510.

skittles n. 1634, plural of skittle one of the pins used in the game, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian and Swedish skytte shuttle).

skoal n., interj. 1600 scoll; borrowed from Danish skaal (now skål) corresponding to Norwegian and Swedish skål a toast; literally, bowl, cup.

skua n. 1678, alteration of Faeroese skúgvur (earlier skúvur*), related to Old Icelandic skúfr seagull, tuft, tassel, and possibly to skauf fox's tail.

skulduggery n. 1856 schulduggy, apparently alteration of Scottish sculdudrie adultery (1713), sculduddery obscenity (1821), a euphemism of uncertain origin.

skulk v. Probably before 1200 sculken move stealthily; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian skulke to shirk, maling, Danish skulke to spare oneself, shirk, and Swedish skolka play truant); possibly reborrowed in the 17th century.

skull n. Probably before 1200 sculle; of uncertain origin; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skalli bald head, skull, modern Icelandic skalli bald head, Norwegian and Swedish skalle skull). Old Icelandic skalli is probably related to Old English sealu husk, SHELL.

skunk n. 1634 squunck; later skunk (1701); borrowed from Algonquian (probably Abnaki) seganku. —v. 1831, to defeat (as in the game of checkers); from the noun.

sky n. Probably before 1200; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic ský cloud, modern Icelandic ský, Norwegian and Danish sky cloud, and Swedish sky heaven, sky, cloud); cognate with Old Saxon skion cloud cover, probably with Old English scēo cloud, and perhaps more distantly with Old English seau shadow, shade, Old High German sauwo, Old Icelandic skuggi shadow, Gothic skuggwa mirror). —skyscraper n. 1888, a very tall building (1883, ornament on top of a building and skyscraping building 1884). Skyscraper was used earlier in various other senses: a high-flying bird (1840), and a light sail at the top of a mast (1794); also found as the name of a horse, Skyscraper, 1789.

slab n. About 1300 slabbe; later slab (before 1325); of unknown origin (possibly borrowed from Old French esclape thin fragment of wood).

slack¹ adj. loose, careless. About 1250 slac lazy, lax, slow; later slak (about 1350); developed from Old English slæc (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon and Middle Low German slak slack, Old High German slah, Old Icelandic slakr (modern Icelandic slakur loose, slack, Swedish slak and Norwegian slakk loose, slack), from Proto-Germanic slakás*. The sense of not tight, loose, is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1300. —n. Before 1325 slak cessation of pain or grieving, relief; from the adjective. The sense of a quiet period, lull, is first recorded in 1851 and that of a loose part or end (as of a rope) is attested since 1794. The plural form slacks, loose trousers, is first recorded in 1824. —v. 1520, to moderate, make slack; from the adjective. —adv. 1392; from the adjective. —slacken v. Probably about 1425 slakenen to extinguish, abate; formed from Middle English slac, slak, adj. + -enen -en¹. The sense of delay, retard, is first recorded in 1580, and that of loosen, in 1611. —slacker n. person who shirks work (1898).

slack² n. small pieces left after coal is screened. About 1440 slecke; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch slacke, slecke; cognate with Middle Low German slecke slack, slag, perhaps related to slagge SLAG.

slag n. 1552, borrowed from Middle Low German slagge, related to modern German Schlacke slag, from Middle High German schlacken; also related to Old High German slahan to strike, SLAY, with reference to the fragments produced by hammering metal.

slake v. About 1175 slakien make slack or loose; later slaken (before 1250); developed from Old English (about 1000) slacian slacken an effort, from slæc lax. The sense of allay (thirst, revenge, etc.) is first recorded in Middle English about 1325.

slalom n. 1921, borrowed from Norwegian slalåm skiing race; literally, sloping track (sla slope + lām track).

slam¹ v. shut with force. 1691, to beat or slap; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish slämma to slam, bang, Norwegian slamre, and Icelandic slæma). The sense of shut with force is recorded in 1775. —n. 1672, impact, blow, probably borrowed from the same (Scandinavian) source as *slam*¹, v. and by accident of the record appearing before the verb in English.

slam² n. winning all tricks in a card game. 1621, the card game of ruff and honors; later, a slam, especially in whist (1660); of unknown origin. Reference to the game of bridge (grand slam) is first recorded in 1892.

slander n. About 1280 sclaundre disgrace; later, defamation (probably before 1300), and false statements meant to discredit (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French esclaundre, Old French esclandre scandalous statement, alteration of escandle, escandele scandal, from Latin scandalum cause of offense, stumbling block, temptation; see SCANDAL. The form slander (without c) is first recorded about 1340. —v. Probably about 1280 sclaundren; borrowed from Anglo-French esclaundrer, from esclaundre scandalous report or statement. —slanderous adj. 1397 sclaunderous insulting; later, defamatory (about 1425); formed from Middle English sclaundre slander + -ous.

slang n. 1756, special vocabulary of tramps or thieves; later, the jargon of a particular profession (1801); of uncertain origin. It has been suggested that slang was borrowed from a Scandinavian word; parallel forms exist in Norwegian: sleng peculiarity of style in speech and writing; literally, fling, toss, slengenavn nickname, and slengord gibe, jeer, taunt, related to Old Icelandic slyngva to SLING. The sense of very informal language characterized by vividness and novelty is first recorded in 1818. —adj. 1758, from the noun.

slant v. 1521, to strike obliquely, alteration of slenten slip sideways (probably about 1300), perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish slinta to slip, from Proto-Germanic slintanan*; more distantly related to Old Icelandic sletta to throw, spray from analogically created Proto-Germanic slantjanan*). The sense of slope, is first recorded in 1698. —n. 1655, from the verb; also found in Middle English on slent at an angle, obliquely (probably before 1350). —adj. About 1618, from the verb. —slantways adv. (1826) slap n. About 1450 slappe, probably of imitative origin, as in Low German slapp, slappe a slap. —v. Before 1470 slappen; from the noun. —adv. 1672, suddenly, probably from the verb; later, directly (1829).

slapstick n. 1926, so called from the slapstick, a device consisting of two sticks fastened so as to slap together loudly when a clown or actor hits somebody with it (1896, slap, v. + *stick*¹ piece of wood).

slash v. 1548, perhaps borrowed from Middle French esclachier to break, variant of esclater to break, splinter; see SLAT. —n. 1576, from the verb.

slat n. 1302–03 sclat slate; borrowed from Old French esclat split piece, splinter, from esclater to break, splinter, burst, probably from Frankish slaitan* to tear, slit, related to Old High German slizan to SLIT. Compare SLATE and ECLAT. The spelling slat appeared in Middle English before 1400. The sense of a long, thin, narrow piece of wood or metal, is found in 1764.

slate n. About 1340 sclate; borrowed from Old French esclate, feminine of esclat split piece, splinter; see SLAT; so called because slate splits easily into thin layers. The sense of a writing tablet of slate is found in Middle English probably 1397; the sense of a list of candidates is first recorded in 1842. —v. 1530, from the noun. The sense of nominate is found in 1804, and that of propose or schedule in 1904. —adj. 1531, made of slate; later, of a slate color (1796); from the noun.

slather n. Usually slathers pl. large amount. 1857, of uncertain (probably dialectal) origin. —v. 1866, spread liberally; of uncertain origin.

slattern n. 1639 slaterne, of uncertain origin; probably cognate with Low German Slattje slut, Dutch slodder, and dialectal Swedish slåta SLUT.

slaughter n. Probably before 1300 slauzter killing of large numbers of people, massacre; later slaghter (about 1303); borrowed from an early Scandinavian word slahtr* (compare Old Icelandic slátr a butchering, butcher meat, slátra to slaughter, and slátrr a mowing, related to slā SLAY); cognate with Gothic slauhts slaughter from Proto-Germanic sluhtis*, and with Old High German slahta (modern German Schlacht battle), slahōn to slaughter, butcher (modern German schlachten), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch slacht slaughter, slachten to kill, slaughter, Old Saxon slahta slaughter, and Old English slieht, sleht slaughter, from Proto-Germanic slahtiz* from slaHanan; see SLAY. —v. 1535, from the noun. —slaughter-house n. (about 1374)

Slav n. Before 1387 Sclave; borrowed from Medieval Latin Sclavus, from late Greek Skλάβos, alteration of Old Slavic Slověninŭ Slav, probably related to slovo word, speech, so that the name of the people meant originally a member of the speech community. The spelling Slav appeared in English in 1866 (in 1788 Slave), influenced by French or German Slave Slav, from Medieval Latin Sclavus. See SLAVE.

slave n. About 1300 sclave servant, slave; borrowed from Old French esclave, from Medieval Latin Sclavus slave, originally, SLAV; so called because many Slavs were sold into slavery by their conquerors. The spelling slave (without c, a reduction normal in English and most Germanic languages) is first recorded in Middle English about 1385. —v. 1559, to enslave (a person), from the noun. The sense of work like a slave is found in 1719. —slavery n. 1551, drudgery; formed from English slave, n. + -ery. The sense of the condition or fact of being a slave is first recorded in 1577. —slavish adj. 1565, servile; formed from English slave, n. + -ish. The figurative sense of lacking originality is first recorded in 1753.

slaver v. Before 1325 slaveren; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic slafra to slaver, and Norwegian slabbe to slop, eat noisily; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch slabben to eat or drink noisily; compare SLOBBER). —n. Before 1325, probably from the verb.

slay v. Probably about 1200 slan; 1307 slayen (past tense slow, slew, past participle slawen, slain), developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) slēan to strike, slay (past tense slōg, slōh, past participle slægen); cognate with Old Frisian slā to strike, beat, slay, Old Saxon slahan, Middle Low German slān, Middle Dutch slaen (modern Dutch slaan), Old High German slahan (modern German schlagen), Old Icelandic slā (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish slå), and Gothic slahan, from Proto-Germanic slahanan*.

slazy adj. About 1645, flimsy, unsubstantial; of unknown origin. The word is found with the sense of hairy, fuzzy, in 1644. The sense of shoddy, sordid, squalid, is first recorded in 1941. —sleaze n. 1961, back formation from slazy.

sled n. Probably before 1325 sledde vehicle for drawing loads over ground or ice; as a surname (1286); borrowed from Middle Dutch sledde sled, slēde (modern Dutch slede, slee), from Proto-Germanic slidō*. Middle Dutch sledde is cognate with Old Saxon slido sled, Old High German slito, slita (modern German Schlitten), and Old Icelandic sledhi (Swedish släde, Norwegian slede, Danish slæde), all from the same Germanic root as Old English slīdan SLIDE. —v. 1718, carry on a sled; later, ride on a sled (1780); from the noun.

sledge¹ n. heavy hammer. 1336 slegge; developed from Old English (before 1000) slegg (from Proto-Germanic slagj-*), related to slēan to strike, SLAY, and cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch slegge sledge, Old Icelandic sleggia, and Swedish slägga. —v. 1654, from the noun. —sledgehammer n. (1495) sledge² n. sled, sleigh. 1617, borrowed from dialectal Dutch sleedse, sleeds, related to modern Dutch slede, slee SLED. —v. 1708, from the noun.

sleek v. 1440 sleken; later variant of sliken to SLICK. —adj. 1589, later variant of Middle English slike SLICK.

sleep v. 1137 slepen be or fall asleep; developed from Old English (before 830) slæpan; cognate with Old Frisian slēpa to sleep, Old Saxon slāpan, Middle Dutch slāpen (modern Dutch slapen), Old High German slāfan (modern German schlafen), and Gothic slēpan, from Proto-Germanic slāpanan*. —n. 1135 sleep; developed from Old English slæp (about 725, in Beowulf), related to slæpan to sleep and cognate with Old Frisian slēp sleep, Old Saxon slāp, Middle Dutch slaep (modern Dutch slaap), Old High German slāf (modern German Schlaf), and Gothic slēps. —sleep² n. Probably before 1200, one who sleeps; 1607, strong horizontal beam; 1892, something whose importance proves to be greater than expected. —sleepy adj. Probably before 1200 sleepi; formed from Middle English slep, n., sleep + *-y*¹.

sleet n. Before 1300 slete; later sleet (about 1395) from Proto-Germanic slautjan-*; cognate with Middle High German slōz, slōze (modern German Schlosse) hailstone, Middle Low German slōten, pl., hail, slōt mud, puddle, pool, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch sloot ditch, and Old Frisian slāt ditch, from Proto-Germanic slaut-*. —v. Before 1325 sleten, from the noun.

sleeve n. Probably before 1200 sleve garment, or part of a garment, which covers the arm; developed from Old English slēfe (before 901, West Saxon), slēfe (before 971, Mercian), from Proto-Germanic slauþjōn*, and related to slīfan put on (clothes), and slūpan to slip, glide, which are cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch slūpen to slip (modern Dutch sluipen), Old High German slīfan (modern German schlafen), Gothic slīupan to slip in, from Proto-Germanic slūpanan*. —v. 1440 sleven, from the noun.

sleigh n. 1703 slay; borrowed from Dutch slee, slede SLED. The spelling sleigh first appeared in 1768, but an early form is found in Middle English scleye (about 1400), borrowed from Middle Dutch slēde sled. —v. 1728 slay; from the noun. The spelling sleigh for the verb is implied in sleighter one who drives a sleigh (1830).

sleight n. Before 1325 slight; later sleight (before 1338); alteration of sleahthe, sleththe strategy, wisdom, cleverness (probably before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic slægðh cleverness, cunning, slyness, from slægr SLY). The term sleight of hand is first found before 1460.

slender adj. Probably before 1400 slendre; earlier sclendir (about 1387–95); probably borrowed from Old French esclendre thin, slender, from Old Dutch slinder.

sleuth n. Probably about 1200 sloth track, trail of a person or animal; later sleuth (1375); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic slōðh trail, of uncertain origin). Sleuth a detective (1872) is a shortened form of sleuthhound keen investigator, tracker (1856), itself a figurative use of a kind of bloodhound for tracking game or fugitives (1375). —v. 1900, American English; from the noun.

slew¹ n. swampy place. 1708, variant of SLOUGH¹ muddy place.

slew² v. to turn, swing, twist. 1834, earlier slue (1769), a nautical word of uncertain origin.

slew³ n. large number or amount. 1840, borrowed from Irish sluagh a host, crowd, multitude.

slice n. Probably before 1300 slice splinter, sliver; borrowed from Old French esclis splinter, from esclier to splinter, from Frankish slītan* to split, related to Old High German slīzan to SLIT. —v. Before 1475 sklicen; borrowed from Middle French esclier to splinter.

slick v. Probably about 1200 sliken; probably developed from slide v. Probably about 1150 sliden; developed from Old English (before 950) slīdan move smoothly, glide; cognate with Middle High German slīten to slide, glide, and early Low German slīden, from Proto-Germanic slīdanan*. —n. 1570, from the verb. The smooth surface for sliding on (as at a playground) is first recorded in 1687 and that of mounting to examine under a microscope (1819).

Old English (before 900) -slician (attested in nīgslīcod newly made sleek), from Proto-Germanic slikōjanan*; cognate with Old High German slīhhan to glide (modern German schleichen), Middle Low German slīk mud, mire, Middle Dutch slīc (modern Dutch slīk), and Old Icelandic slīkr smooth, from Proto-Germanic slikaz*. Compare SLEEK. —adj. Before 1325 slike, and in the place name Slickeburn (181); related to slīken, v. The sense of clever in deception, smooth (1599), is from this sense in the adverb (about 1300). —n. 1626, ointment, from the adjective or verb. Slick place or spot is first recorded in 1849. —slicker n. 1884, waterproof raincoat.

slight adj. Before 1325, smooth, plain, slender, small, unimportant; probably developed from Old English -sliht level (attested in eorhtslihtes level with the ground), and cognate with Old Frisian slīucht smooth, even, Old Saxon sliht, Old Icelandic slētr (Norwegian slett, Swedish slät), Old High German slēht smooth, even, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch slēcht, slīcht smooth, simple, plain, Old High German slīhtan make smooth or level (modern German schlichten, whence schlicht simple, plain, smooth), and Gothic slaihts smooth, plain, from Proto-Germanic slihtaz*. —v. Before 1325 slīhten make oneself appear sleek; from the noun. The sense of treat with indifference or disdain, is first recorded in 1597, influenced by the adjective sense of having little worth, insignificant. —n. 1549–62, small amount, weight, or matter; from the adjective; indifference or disrespect is first recorded in 1701.

slim adj. 1657, thin or slight; later, sly (1674); borrowed from Dutch slim bad, sly, clever, from Middle Dutch slīm, slīmp bad, crooked, cognate with Middle Low German slīm bad, crooked, Middle High German slīmp slanting, awry (modern German schlimm bad), from Proto-Germanic slēmbaz*. —v. 1808, to do little or no (work); from the adjective; later, make slim (1862).

slime n. About 1300 shyme soft, sticky mud; developed from Old English (before 1000) slīm slime, probably related to līm sticky substance; see LIME¹; and cognate with Middle Low German slīm slime, Middle Dutch and Dutch slīm, Middle High German slīm (modern German Schleim), Old Icelandic slīm (Norwegian and Danish slim), from Proto-Germanic slīmaz*. —v. 1628, from the noun. —slimy adj. Probably before 1387 shymy covered with slime; formed from Middle English shyme n., slime + -y¹.

sling n. Probably before 1300 slynge implement for throwing stones; probably borrowed from Middle Low German slīnge sling, corresponding to Old Frisian slīnge sling, loop, and Old High German slīnga (modern German Schlinge); cognate with Old English slīngan to creep, twist, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch slīngen, Old High German slīngan (modern German schlingen), Old Icelandic slyngva to throw, sling (Norwegian slengje, Danish slynge, and Swedish slunga), from Proto-Germanic slenzanan*.

The sense of a loop for lifting or carrying heavy objects is first recorded in 1323–24. —v. Probably about 1200 slīngen strike down using a sling; later, to throw, hurl (about 1250); probably borrowed from Old Icelandic slyngva to throw, sling.

slink v. About 1385 slīnken move in a sneaking, guilty manner; developed from Old English slīncan to creep, crawl; cognate with Old Swedish slīnka to creep, cling to, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch slīnken to shrink, subside, from Proto-Germanic slenkanan*. —slinky adj. 1921, sinuous, slender; formed from slīnk + -y¹. The sense of stealthy, furtive, is first recorded in 1944.

slip¹ v. to glide, slide. Before 1325 slīppen get away, escape; later, slide out of place (about 1340); probably borrowed from Middle Low German slīppen to glide, slide; cognate with Middle Dutch slīpen to glide, slide (modern Dutch slīpen), Old High German slīfan (modern German schleifen to slide, grind, polish), from Proto-Germanic slīpanan* and Old Icelandic slīpari polisher, slīpr slippery (Norwegian slīp). —n. 1455–56 slīpe, 1467 slīppe landing place for ships; from the verb. The act of slipping is first recorded in 1596. A sleeveless garment worn by women is found in 1761. —slipper n. Before 1475, formed from Middle English slīppen slip + -ere -er¹; perhaps also influenced by earlier slīpper readily slipping (1377); see SLIPPERY. —slippery adj. Probably before 1500 slīpperie having a smooth surface; formed from Middle English slīpper readily slipping + -ie -y¹, perhaps by influence of Low German slīpperīg. Middle English slīpper readily slipping (1410; slīper, 1377) developed from Old English (before 1050) slīpor slippery; cognate with Middle Low German slīpper slippery, Old High German slēffar, and Old Icelandic slīpr; see SLIP¹. The sense of deceitful, is first recorded in English in 1555.

slip² n. narrow strip. 1440 slīp edge of a garment; later slīppe narrow piece or strip (1555); probably borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch slīppe cut, slit, lappet (modern Dutch slīp), related to Middle Low German slīppen to cut, possibly cognate with Old English -slīfan (as in tōslīfan) to split, cleave; see SLIVER. The sense of a slender sprig for planting is recorded in English in 1530, that of a young slender person (a slīp of a girl) in 1582 and a narrow piece of paper (as in a citation slīp) in 1687. —v. 1498, to cut off; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German slīppen to cut. The sense of cut slips from (a plant) is recorded in 1530.

slip³ n. potter's clay. 1440 slīp mud, slime; probably developed from Old English (about 1000) slīppe slime, related to slīpan to slip; see SLEEVE. The sense of potter's clay is first recorded in 1640.

slipshod adj. 1580, wearing slippers or loose shoes; formed from English *slīp*¹ to slide + shod wearing shoes, from past participle of shoe, v. The figurative sense of slovenly, careless, is found in 1815.

slit v. Probably before 1200 slīten cut, split, divide; related to Old English slītan cut or tear up, slit (which developed into Middle English sliten). Old English slītan is cognate with Old Frisian slīta to slit, tear, Old Saxon slītan, Middle Dutch slīten (modern Dutch slijten), Old High German slīzan split or tear off (modern German schleissen), and Old Icelandic slīta (Swedish slita pull, tear, rend, Norwegian slite), from Proto-Germanic slītanan*, earlier sklītanan*. —n. About 1250 slitte, from the verb.

slither v. Probably before 1200 slēthren to fall; later, to slip or slide (probably before 1425); variant of slideren, developed from Old English slīdrian, sliderian (before 899), a frequentative form of slīdan to SLIDE; for suffix see -ER⁴. For the change in spelling from d to th, see GATHER.

sliver n. About 1385 slyvere piece cut off, splinter; formed from earlier sliven to split, cleave (about 1300) + -*ere*¹. Middle English sliven developed from Old English -slīfan (as in tōslīfan) to split, cleave, from Proto-Germanic slīfanan*, earlier sklīfanan*.

slob n. 1780, mud, muddy land, ooze; borrowed from Irish slab mud, probably borrowed from English slab muddy place, puddle (1610), borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish slabb slime, mud, and Icelandic slabb sludge). The sense of an untidy person, careless worker, is first recorded in 1861.

slobber v. Probably about 1380 sloberen (implied in sloberande, present participle); probably cognate with Frisian slobberje to slurp, Middle Low German slubberen slurp, Middle Dutch ōverslubberen wade through a ditch, modern Dutch slobberen to lap up, eat noisily, related to Middle Dutch slabben to eat or drink noisily; see SLAVER. —n. Probably before 1400 slober mud, slime; related to the verb. The sense of saliva running from the mouth is first recorded in 1755.

sloe n. Probably before 1300 slo (plural slon); developed from Old English (before 800) slāh, plural slān; cognate with Frisian slē sloe, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch slee, Old High German slēha, slēwa (modern German Schlehe), Old Swedish slā (modern Swedish slän), from Proto-Germanic slaiHwōn*.

slog v. 1824, hit hard; probably variant of SLUG³ hit hard. The sense of walk dogged, as through snow, is first recorded in 1872, and work hard, plod, in 1888.

slogan n. 1513 slogorne battle cry used by Irish or Scottish Highland clans; borrowed from Gaelic sluagh-ghairm (sluagh army, host, slew + ghairm a cry). The spelling slogan appeared in 1680, and the sense of a distinctive word or phrase used by a political or other group in 1704.

sloop n. 1629, borrowed from Dutch sloep a sloop, earlier sloep, probably from French chaloupe, from Old French chalupe small sloop-rigged vessel, found also in English shallop.

slop n. Probably before 1400 sloppe muddy place; probably developed from Old English -sloppe dung (in cūsloppe cow dung), related to slippe slime; see SLIP³ potter's clay. The sense of a weak liquid or semiliquid food (usually slops) is first recorded in 1657. The meaning of an act of spilling is found in slope v. 1591, from slope, adj., slanting (1502), probably from Middle English aslope, adv., on the incline (before 1398), developed from Old English āslopan*, past participle of āslūpan to slip away (ā- away + slūpan to slip; see SLEEVE). —n. 1611, from the verb.

1727. —v. 1557, to spill; from the noun. —sloppy adj. 1727, very wet, muddy; formed from English slop, n. + -*y*¹. The sense of loose, ill-fitting, is first recorded in 1825, influenced by English slop loose outer garment (1376, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch slop).

slosh n. 1814, probably a blend of slop (muddy place) and slush. —v. 1844, from the noun.

slot n. Probably about 1390, the hollow at the base of the throat above the breastbone; borrowed from Old French esclot, of uncertain origin. The sense of a narrow opening or depression into which something can be fitted is first recorded in 1523. The sense of a position in a list, hierarchy, system, etc., is first recorded in 1942. —v. Probably before 1400 slotten stab through the hollow at the base of the throat; later, cut a slot or slots in (1747), and designate or appoint (1960's); from the noun.

sloth n. Before 1150 slauthe indolence, sluggishness; later slouthe (before 1300); formed from Middle English slou, slowe SLOW + -*th*¹. The sense of slowness, tardiness, is first recorded about 1380. Sloth a very slow-moving mammal is found in 1613.

slouch n. 1515, awkward, slovenly, or lazy man; variant of slouk (1570); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic slōkr lazy fellow, Swedish slōkr, probably related to slaker loose, careless, SLACK¹). The meaning of a stooping of the head and shoulders, is first recorded in 1725. —v. 1754, move or walk with a slouch; from the noun.

slough¹ n. muddy place. Before 1250 slo degraded condition; later, sloghe (about 1340), slough (about 1390, and as a surname, 1273); earlier in the place name Polsewe (1159); developed from Old English slōh muddy place (before 899); possibly cognate with Middle Low German slōch muddy place, and Middle High German sluoche ditch, from Proto-Germanic slōHaz*, earlier sklōHaz*.

slough² n. cast-off skin of a snake or other animal. Before 1325 slughe; possibly cognate with Middle High German sluch snakeskin (modern German Schlauch tube, pipe), Middle Low German slū husk, peel, skin, modern Dutch sluiken to smuggle, from Proto-Germanic slūk-*. —v. 1720, from the noun.

sloven n. Probably before 1475 slovey immoral woman; later sloven knave, rascal (before 1500); probably borrowed from Middle Flemish sloovin a scold, related to sloef untidy, shabby, Dutch slof careless, negligent, from Proto-Germanic slup-*. —slovenly adj. Before 1515, low, base, lewd; later, untidy, dirty (before 1568); formed from English sloven, n. + -*ly*².

slow adj. Probably before 1200 slou, slowe; developed from Old English slāw sluggish (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon slēu blunt, dull, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch slee, Middle Low German slē, Old High German slēo, Old Icelandic sljör, slær (Swedish slö, Danish and Norwegian sløv), from Proto-Germanic slāwaz*. —v. Probably about 1175 slawen be slow; later slouwen (before 1425); from the adjective. The meaning of go slower is found in 1594. —adv. Before 1500, from the adjective.

sludge n. 1649, of uncertain origin; possibly from earlier slutch mud, mire (implied in a past participle in the 1300's); or perhaps a variant of SLUSH. Other words for mud or mire, such as slitch (about 1400) and sleeche (1587), suggest possible sources for a variant form sludge.

slug¹ n. animal like a snail. 1408 slogge lazy person; later slugge (about 1425); borrowed, possibly by influence of Middle English sluggard lazy person (before 1398), from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish and Norwegian slugga be sluggish, and dialectal Norwegian slugge a heavy slow person).

slug² n. lead for firing from a gun. 1622, of uncertain origin; perhaps special use of SLUG¹, with reference to its shape. The token or counterfeit coin, is first recorded in 1881. The meaning of a strong drink, is first recorded in 1756. —v. 1856, in slug it up.

slug³ n. a hard blow. 1830, dialectal English, of uncertain origin. —v. 1862, probably from the noun. —slugger n. (1877) sluggard n. About 1386 (implied in sluggardy laziness, indolence), a surname Slogard (1275); formed from sluggi, sloggi sluggish, indolent (probably before 1200) + -ard. Middle English sluggi, sloggi was probably borrowed from a Scandinavian word related to the source of Middle English slugge, slogge lazy person; see SLUG¹. —adj. 1593, from the noun.

sluggish adj. Before 1450 sloggiſsh lazy; about 1450 slugiſsh slow, dull; formed from Middle English slugge lazy person (see SLUG¹) + -iſsh *-iſh*¹.

sluice n. About 1400 sluse, alteration of scuse (1340); borrowed from Old French escluse a sluice, floodgate, from Late Latin exclūsa barrier to shut out water, from feminine singular of Latin exclūsus, past participle of exclūdere shut out, EXCLUDE. The spelling sluice, paralleling juice, came into general use in the 1700's.

slum n. 1845, from earlier back slum back alley or street inhabited by poor people (1825), originally a slang word meaning a room, especially a back room (1812); of unknown origin. —v. 1884, from the noun. The meaning of live in a manner of indifference to appearance or surroundings is first recorded in 1928.

slumber v. Before 1376 slumberen, slomberen to sleep, especially to sleep lightly; alteration (by influence of noun spelling slomber) of slumeren (before 1250), frequentative verb form of slumen to doze, probably from Old English (before 1000) slūma light sleep; for suffix see *-ER*⁴ and cognate with Middle High German slumen, slummern to slumber (modern German schlummern), Middle Low German slummeren, Middle Dutch slūmen, slūmeren (modern Dutch sluimeren), and Norwegian slumre. The appearance of b between m and r parallels number, lumber, -cumber (in cucumber), etc. —n. Before 1338 slomber, from the verb.

slump v. Before 1677, fall or sink into a muddy place; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian and Danish slumpe fall upon, chance upon; cognate with Middle Low German slump lucky accident, modern German schlumpen hang loosely, be slovenly). —n. 1888, heavy decline in prices on the stock exchange; also sudden fall, collapse; from the verb. The sense of a sharp decline in trade or business, is attested since 1922.

slur v. 1602, to smear, stain, sully; possibly verb use of dialectal English slur thin or fluid mud, variant of Middle English sloor, slore (1440); cognate with Middle Low German slūren, Middle Dutch sloren, and Dutch slouren to drag, trail, and Middle High German slīer mud. The sense of insult, disparage, is first recorded in 1660, and that of blur (implied in slurred 1746). —n. 1609, insult, slight, from the verb.

slurp v. 1648, drink noisily; borrowed from Dutch slurpen, perhaps of imitative origin similar to Middle Low German slorpen, modern German schlürfen, and Norwegian slurpe to slurp. —n. a slurping sip or noise. 1949, from the verb.

slurry n. Before 1438 slory mud, slime; probably related to Middle English sloor, slore thin or fluid mud; see SLUR. —v. 1440 sloryen to dirty, soil, smear; probably from the noun.

slush n. 1641, perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian and Swedish slask slushy ground or weather, obsolete Danish slus sleet, and modern Danish slud). —slush fund 1839, money obtained from the sale of a ship's slush (1756, refuse fat) distributed among a ship's officers; later money collected to spread influence, bribes, etc. (1874). —slushy adj. (1791) slut n. 1402 slutte slovenly woman; later, woman of loose morals (probably before 1475), of uncertain origin; probably cognate with dialectal German Schlutt, Schlutte slovenly woman, dialectal Swedish slåta idle woman, slut, Dutch slodde, slodder slut.

sly adj. Probably about 1200 sleh clever, crafty, wily; later slye (about 1303); borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic slœgr (from Proto-Germanic slōȝis*), modern Icelandic slægur, Norwegian slog cunning, crafty, sly. —n. on the sly, in a sly way, secretly. 1812, from the adjective.

smack¹ n. taste or flavor. Probably about 1200 smacc; later smak (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 1000) smæc; cognate with Old Frisian smek, smaka taste or flavor, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch smāke (modern Dutch smak), Old High German smac, gismac (modern German Geschmack), and Old Icelandic smekker (Norwegian and Swedish smak, Danish smag), from Proto-Germanic smak-*. —v. Before 1250 smaken to smell (something); later, to taste (something), before 1333, and to have a taste (before 1398); from the noun. The figurative sense of have a trace or suggestion (as in a remark that smacks of sarcasm), is found in 1595.

smack² v. open (the lips) quickly to make a sharp sound. 1557, probably of imitative origin similar in formation to Middle Low German smacken to strike, throw, Low German and Dutch smakken to fling, dash, and German schmatzen to smack the lips. The sense of slap, appears in 1840. —n. 1570, from the noun.

smack³ n. sailboat. 1611, probably borrowed from Dutch or Low German smak sailboat, from smakken to fling, dash (see SMACK²).

small adj. Probably before 1200 smal; developed from Old English (before 800) smæl slender, narrow, small; cognate with Old Frisian smel narrow, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch smal, Old High German smal (modern German schmal), Old Icelandic smalr small (in compounds), smali small cattle, and Gothic smalista smallest, from Proto-Germanic smalaz*. —adv. About 1375, developed from Old English smale (before 899); from Old English smæl, adj. —n. Probably before 1200; from smal adj. —small fry (1697, small fish; 1885, insignificant people) —smallish adj. (about 1370) —smallpox n. (1518) smarmy adj. 1924, offensively flattering, formed in English from smarm to behave in a flattering way (1920), variant of smalm (1890) and smaum (1846) to smear, bedaub, of unknown origin; for suffix see -Y¹.

smart v. Probably about 1150 smerten cause (someone) to suffer grief or sorrow, distress; later smearthen ache, be painful (probably before 1200), and smarten (about 1303); developed from Old English smeortan be painful (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German smerten to be painful, Middle Dutch smerten, smarten (modern Dutch smarten), and Old High German smertzan (modern German schmerzen), from Proto-Germanic smertanan*. —adj. Probably before 1200 smarte, smerte sharp, severe, stinging; developed from Old English (before 1023) smear, related to smeortan to smart. The meaning of quick, active, prompt, is first recorded about 1303; and that of quick at learning, clever, in 1628. —n. Probably about 1175 smirte; later smerte (probably before 1300); cognate with Middle Dutch and Middle Low German smerte, smarte sharp pain, Old High German smertza, smertzo (modern German Schmerz), from the same Germanic source as Old English smeortan to smart. —adv. About 1300 smerte sharply, severely; from the adjective. —smarten v. (1815) —smarts n. pl. 1968, good sense, intelligence, from smart, adj.; for suffix see -s¹. —smarty n. (1861); adj. (1883) smart aleck 1865 smart Aleck, perhaps in allusion to Aleck Hoag, a notorious pimp, thief, and confidence man in New York City in the early 1840's.

smash v. 1778, break to pieces, crush, shatter; earlier, to kick downstairs (before 1700); probably of imitative origin, similar to clash, crash, etc. —n. 1725, hard blow; from the verb. The sense of a sound of smashing, crash, is first recorded in 1808.

smatter v. About 1410 smateren talk idly, chatter; of uncertain (perhaps imitative) origin. Similar forms occur in Middle High German smetern to chatter (modern German schmettern to dash, resound), and Swedish smattra to patter, rattle. —n. 1668, superficial knowledge, smattering; from the verb. —smattering n. 1538, formed from English smatter, v. + -ing¹.

smear n. Probably about 1200 smere fat, grease, ointment; developed from Old English (before 800) smeoru grease, from Proto-Germanic smerwan*; cognate with Old Saxon smero fat, grease, Middle Dutch smere (modern Dutch smeer), Old High German smero (modern German Schmer), Old Icelandic smjör, smjör butter (Swedish smör, Norwegian and Danish smør), and Gothic smairthr fat, from Proto-Germanic smerthran*. The meaning of a mark or stain left by smearing is first recorded in 1611. —v. About 1125 smeren rub or daub with a greasy substance, anoint; developed from Old English (before 830) smerian, smirian, related to smeoru grease, and cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and Dutch smeren to smear, Old High German smirwen (modern German schmieren), and Old Icelandic smyrva, smyrja (Swedish smörja, Norwegian and Danish smøre).

smell v. About 1175 smellen emit or perceive an odor, perhaps cognate with Middle Dutch smölen, smölen to SMOLDER. The Old English equivalent is stenc STENCH. —n. About 1175 smel; related to the verb.

smelt¹ v. melt (ore). 1543; implied in Middle English smeltar one who smelts ore (1455), as a surname Smelter (probably about 1382); borrowed from Dutch or Low German smelten, from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German; cognate with Old High German smelzan to melt (modern German schmelzen), Old Swedish smälta (modern Swedish smälta), Norwegian and Danish smelte, and Old English meltan to MELT.

smelt² n. sea fish. Old English (before 800) smelt; cognate with Dutch smelt sand eel, Norwegian smelte, and Danish smelt.

smidgen or smidgeon n. 1845 smitchin; later smidgeon (1878), and smidgen (1886), perhaps formed from Scottish smitch very small amount, small insignificant person (1822) + -in, dialectal variant of -ing¹.

smile v. About 1303 (implied in smylung pleasant); also as a surname Smyles (1301); of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from Middle Low German smilen*; or from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish smila smile); suggested as cognates with Old High German smilan to smile, Middle High German smielen. —n. 1562, from the verb.

smirch v. Before 1398 smorchen to discolor, soil; of uncertain origin; perhaps from Old French esmorcher to torture, with a lost meaning, such as befoul or stain (as also found later in English). Old French esmorcher is from es- out + morcher to bite. The altered spelling smirch is first recorded in 1599, and the sense of dishonor, disgrace, discredit, in 1820. —n. Before 1688, from the verb.

smirk v. Probably about 1200 smirken to smile; later, to smile in an affected, silly way (before 1500); developed from Old English smearcian to smile (before 899); related to smerian to laugh at. —n. About 1560, from the verb.

smite v. Probably before 1200 smiten to strike or hit hard; developed from Old English (before 800) smītan; cognate with Old Frisian smīta to throw, Old Saxon smītan, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch smīten to throw, strike (modern Dutch smijten), Old High German bismīzan to soil, stain, Middle High German smīzan to smear, strike (modern German schmeissen to throw, fling), Norwegian and Swedish smita, Danish smide, and Gothic bismēitan anoint, from Proto-Germanic smītanan*. The sense of to slay (originally Biblical) is found before 1325. The sense of inspire with love (in the past participle smitten) occurs in 1663.

smith n. Old English smith one who makes or shapes things out of metal, blacksmith (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon smith blacksmith, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch smid, Old High German smid (modern German Schmied, and the surname Schmidt), Old Icelandic smidhr (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish smed), and Gothic -smitha (in aizasmitha coppersmith), from Proto-Germanic smithaz*. —smithy n. Before 1250 smithie; probably a formation of smith + -ie *-y*³; influenced by Old Icelandic smidhja smithy, from smidhr SMITH, but based on Old English smiththe; cognate with Old High German smitta (modern German Schmiede) smithy, Middle Dutch smisse (modern Dutch smidse), and Old Frisian smithe, from Proto-Germanic smithjōn*.

smithereens n. pl. 1829 smiddereens, borrowed from Irish smidirín, diminutive of smiodar fragment; for suffix see *-s*¹.

smock n. About 1300 smoke, before 1325 smockwoman's undergarment, chemise; developed from Old English (before 1000) smoc; cognate with Old High German smoccho and Old Icelandic smokkr woman's garment, from Proto-Germanic smukkaz*, earlier smuznās*, and related to Middle High German gesmuc (modern German Schmuck adornment) and smiegen (modern German schmiegen creep close to), Old English smūgan to creep, modern Dutch smuigen to sneak, and Old Icelandic smjúga creep into.

smog n. 1905, blend of smoke and fog; reputedly coined in reference to the London fog. —v. 1966, from the noun. —smoggy adj. (1905) smoke n. 1137 smoke, developed from Old English (about 1000) smoca, related to smēocan give off smoke, from Proto-Germanic smeukanan*; cognate with Middle Dutch smieken give off smoke, smoock smoke (modern Dutch smook), Middle Low German smōk, and Middle High German smouch smoke (modern German Schmauch). —v. 1137 smoken give off smoke, expose to smoke; developed from Old English (about 1000) smocian, from smoca smoke, n. —smoker n. 1599, person who cures fish, bacon, etc., by means of smoke; formed from English smoke, v. + *-er*¹. A person who smokes tobacco is first recorded in 1617. —smoky adj. (about 1300) smolder v. Probably about 1380 smolderen (implied in smolderande, present participle) to smother, suffocate; from smolder, n., smoke (about 1378), and cognate with Middle Dutch smōlen, smōlen to smolder (modern Dutch smeulen), Low German smelen, smālen, and Flemish smoel hot, from Proto-Germanic smel-/smul-/smōl-*. The meaning of burn and smoke without flame is first recorded in English in 1529, fell into disuse, and was revived in the 1800's.

smooch v., n. 1932 v., 1942 n.; alteration of dialectal English smouch, noun (1578) and verb (1583), possibly imitative of the sound of kissing.

smooth adj. About 1330 smothe level, flat; developed from Old English (before 1050) smōth free from roughness, not harsh; cognate with Old Saxon smōthi smooth, and dialectal German smoje soft, supple. The sense of pleasant, polite, sincere, is first recorded probably about 1390. —v. 1340 smothen, from the adjective. —smoothen v. 1635, formed from English smooth, adj. + *-en*¹.

smorgasbord n. 1893, borrowing of Swedish smörgåsbord, formed from smörgås bread and butter (smör butter + dialectal Swedish gås lump of butter) + bord table.

smother v. Probably about 1200 smeorthren (implied in smeorthrinde, present participle) suffocate with smoke, from smorthre, n., dense, stifling smoke (probably before 1200); developed from the stem of Old English (before 800) smorian to suffocate, choke; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch smören to suffocate, stew (modern Dutch smoren), Flemish smoren, smooren to smoke, be smoky, and possibly with Middle Dutch smōlen, smōlen to SMOLDER. The spelling smother (without medial r) is recorded about 1300, perhaps from shortening of the initial vowel or by dissimilation. The sense of stifle, suppress, is first recorded in 1579.

smudge v. Probably before 1425 smogen (implied in smoginge, gerund) to soil, stain, blacken, smirch; later smodge (1624); see drudge for development. —n. 1768–74, from the verb.

smug adj. 1551 smugge trim, neat, spruce, smart; of uncertain origin, but possibly an alteration of smucke*, borrowed from Low German smuk trim, neat, from Middle Low German smucken to adorn, related to Middle High German smücken to adorn, and smiegen press close; see SMOCK. The meaning of having a self-satisfied air (1701) is an extension of smooth, sleek (1582).

smuggle v. Before 1687 smuckele; 1687 smuggle; borrowed from Low German smukkeln, smuggeln or Dutch smokkelen to transport (goods) illegally, apparently a frequentative formation; compare modern Dutch smuigen (from Proto-Germanic smūzanan*) to sneak; for suffix see *-LE*³. —smuggler n. 1661 smuckellor, borrowed from Low German smukkeler or Dutch smokkelaar. The later form smugler (1670), was probably borrowed from Low German smuggeler, variant of smukkeler; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

smut v. Probably before 1425 smutten debase, defile; probably variant of smotten (before 1387); cognate with Middle High German smotzen, smutzen (modern German schmutzen) make dirty, from Proto-Germanic smutt-* (earlier smuth-*). The sense of blacken, is first recorded in English in 1587. —n. 1664, black mark or stain; from the verb. Smut a plant disease is implied in smutty (1597). The sense of indecent or obscene language is first recorded in 1698.

snack v. About 1300 snaken (of a dog) to bite or snap; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch snacken to snatch, chatter; see SNATCH. The meaning of have a mere bite or morsel, eat a light meal, is first recorded in 1807; from the noun. —n. 1402 snak a bite, taste; from the verb. A mere bite or morsel, light meal, is recorded in 1757.

snaffle n. 1533, perhaps borrowed from Dutch snavel beak, bill; see NIB. —v. 1559, from the noun.

snafu n. 1941, American English (Army use) acronym formed from the initial letters of situation normal—all fouled (probably a euphemism for fucked) up. —adj. 1942, from the noun or acronym. —v. 1943, from the noun or acronym.

snag n. 1577–87, stump of a tree or of a branch; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian snage point of land, snag stump, spike, and Old Icelandic snagi clothes peg, snaga a kind of ax). The meaning of a sharp or jagged projection is first recorded in 1586, and that of an obstacle, impediment, in 1829. —v. 1807, be caught or damaged by a snag; from the noun (possibly influenced by snagged jagged, ragged, 1658).

snail n. Before 1250 snaille; developed (with i for g, as in nail) from Old English (before 800) snægl, a diminutive form (with g for ç) of snaca a snake; literally, creeping thing. Old English snægl is cognate with Old Saxon snegil snail, Middle Low German sneil, Middle High German sneigel (dialectal German Schnegel), from Proto-Germanic snaizilās*, and with Old Icelandic snigill (Swedish snigel, Danish and Norwegian snegl).

snake n. 1137 snāke, developed from Old English (about 1000) snaca, related to snægl SNAIL. Old English snaca (from Proto-Germanic snakon*), is cognate with Middle Low German snake; literally, creeper, Old Icelandic snāker, snōkr (modern Icelandic snákur) serpent. The sense of a treacherous person is first recorded in 1590. —v. 1653, to twist or wind; later, to move, wind, or curve like a snake (1848); from the noun. —snaky adj. (1567) snap n. 1495 snappe a quick, sudden bite or cut; probably borrowed from Dutch or Low German snappen to snap, snatch; cognate with Middle High German snappen to snap, snatch (modern German schnappen), Old Icelandic snapa, and probably related to Middle Low German and Middle Dutch snāvel beak, bill; see NIB. The sense of a quick movement or effort is first recorded in 1631; that of something easily done in 1877. —v. 1530 snappe to bite suddenly; probably from the noun. The meaning of catch or seize suddenly (snap up) appeared in 1550, followed by break suddenly or sharply, in 1602. —adv. 1583, quickly, smartly, with a snap; from the verb. —adj. 1790 quick, smart, sharp; from the verb.

snare¹ n. noose for catching animals and birds. Before 1100 snear; later snares (before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic snara noose, snare, related to sō ēnri twisted rope; and cognate with Old Saxon snari string, cord, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch snāre (modern Dutch snaar), and Old High German snaraha, snarha noose, snare, from Proto-Germanic snarHō*. —v. About 1395 snaren; from the noun.

snare² n. one of the strings stretched across a drum. 1688, probably borrowed from Dutch snaar string; see SNARE¹ noose.

snarl¹ v. to growl and bare the teeth. 1589 (snarle, frequentative verb with le, see -LE³) from earlier snar (1530); perhaps borrowed from Dutch or Low German snarren to rattle, probably of imitative origin. The sense of speak in a harsh manner is first recorded in 1693, from the earlier meaning of quarrel (1593). —n. 1613, probably in the sense of a harsh or rude answer; from the verb.

snarl² n. tangle. Before 1387, moral snare, temptation, trap; probably a diminutive formed from SNARE¹ noose, trap. The tangle or knot is first recorded in 1609. —v. Before 1387 snarlen to trick, ensnare; from the noun. The sense of tangle, twist, is first recorded in 1440.

snatch v. Probably before 1200 sneccen take a sudden snap or bite at something; later snacchen (about 1225); perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch snacken (modern Dutch snakken) to snatch, chatter; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle High German snacken to chatter, and Old Icelandic snaka to sniff about. The meaning of seize suddenly is first recorded before 1338. —n. Probably before 1300 snacche trap, snare; from the verb.

snazzy adj. 1932, of uncertain origin; perhaps a blend of snappy (stylish, elegant) and jazzy.

sneak v. 1596, move in a stealthy way; also found in sneakishly, adv., (1560); probably related to sniken to creep, crawl (probably about 1200), developed from Old English snician*, related to snīcan (before 899). The Old English form snīcan (from Proto-Germanic sneikanan*) is cognate with Old Icelandic sníkja to desire, reach for sneakily (Norwegian sniike, Swedish sniika, Danish snige to sneak). —n. Before 1643, from the verb. —sneaky adj. (1833) sneaker n. 1895, altered (by influence of sneaker one who sneaks, 1598) from earlier sneak rubber-soled shoe (1883); so called because the shoe was noiseless; for suffix see -ER¹.

sneer v. Before 1400 sneren mock, hold in derision, scoff; probably cognate with North Frisian sneere to scorn, and similar to Middle High German snerren to chatter, prate, snarren to rattle, and snurren to whirl, drone, hum. —n. 1707, from the verb.

sneeze v. Before 1333 sniesen, snesen; alteration of fnesan to sneeze (about 1150). The change fn- to sn- is likely due to the gradual loss of the initial sound of f, producing nesen in the early 1300's, and that, influenced by words such as snort and snore, s began to appear.

The original Middle English form fnesan developed from Old English (about 1000) fnēosan to snort, sneeze (Proto-Germanic fneusanan*); cognate with Middle Dutch fniesen to sneeze, Old High German fnehan to breathe, Old Icelandic fnýsa to snort. —n. 1632, powder for inducing sneezing; from the verb. The meaning of an act of sneezing is recorded in 1646, the earlier form being nesing (1382), neesing (1609).

snicker v. 1694, giggle; possibly of imitative origin, similar to Dutch snikken to gasp, sob, Low German snucken to sob; for suffix see -ER⁴. —n. 1836, from the verb.

snide adj. 1859 (thieves' slang) counterfeit, sham; of unknown origin. The sense of bad, contemptible, is found in 1903, that of sneering, in 1933.

sniff v. About 1350 sniffen draw air through the nose in short quick breaths; possibly related to snývelen SNIVEL. —n. 1767, from the verb.

sniffle v. 1819, frequentative form of SNIFF; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1880, sound of sniffing, from the verb. The plural form sniffles, meaning a slight head cold, is found in 1825.

snip v. 1578 (implied in snipped), to snap, snatch; later, to cut, cut off (1593); probably borrowed from Dutch or Low German snippen to snip, shred, of unknown origin. —n. 1558, small piece cut off; probably borrowed from Dutch or Low German snip and snippe a small piece, related to snippen to snip. —snippers n. pl. 1593, scissors. —snippy adj. 1727, mean, parsimonious; formed from English snip, v. + -y¹. The meaning of fault-finding, sharp, is recorded in 1848.

snipe n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic -snipa in mýrisnipa marsh snipe), Norwegian snipe, snipa; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch snippe (modern Dutch snip), and Old High German snepfa (modern German Schnepfe) snipe. —v. 1782, to shoot from a hidden place, from the noun; so called in allusion to the hunting of the snipe as game. —sniper n. (1824) snippet n. 1664, formed from English snip, v. + -et.

snitch¹ n. an informer. 1785, of unknown origin. A meaning "the nose" (1700) is preceded by a fillip on the nose (1676). —v. be an informer. 1801, from the noun.

snitch² v. to snatch, steal. 1904, to take stealthily; perhaps variant of SNATCH, v.

snivel v. About 1300 snývelen to run at the nose, sniffle; developed from Old English snýflan* (implied in early snýflung sniveling, before 1100); related to Old English snofl nasal mucus; cognate with Middle Low German snuve nasal mucus, Middle Dutch snūven to sniff (modern Dutch snuiven), Middle High German snūben to blow, snort (modern German schnauben), snupfe head cold (modern German Schnupfen), and probably Old Icelandic snoppa snout, Middle Low German snoppe nasal mucus. —n. About 1440, mucus running from the nose; from the verb. The meaning of a sniveling or sniffing is first recorded in 1848.

snob n. 1781, a shoemaker or his apprentice; of unknown origin. About 1796 (in Cambridge University slang) a townsman or local merchant. 1831, a person of the ordinary or lower classes. The meaning of a person who has pretensions to social importance, and wishes to associate with those who are socially prominent, was popularized in 1843, and especially after 1848. —snobbery n. 1833, the class of people belonging to ordinary classes; later, the character or quality of people having social pretensions, 1843. —snobbish adj. (1840)

snood n. Before 1225 snod ribbon for the hair; developed from Old English (before 800) snōd, from Proto-Germanic snōdō*. The spelling snood is first recorded (1643) is preceded by snude (1535). The net or bag worn over a woman's hair is first recorded in 1938. —v. 1725, bind (hair) with a snood; from the noun.

snooker n. 1889, of uncertain origin; perhaps an allusive use (with reference to the rawness of the play of a fellow officer) of earlier British slang snooker a newly joined cadet (1872). —v. 1889, to block (a player) in snooker; from the noun. The sense of baffle, stymie, fool, is first recorded in 1915.

snoop v. 1832 (probably take food on the sly); borrowed from Dutch snoepen eat in secret, eat sweets, sneak, probably related to snappen to bite, snatch, SNAP, and cognate with East Frisian snōpen eat in secret, and Norwegian snope to chew, munch. —n. 1891, from the verb. The sense of an act of snooping is first recorded in 1908. —snoopy adj. (1895) snoot n. 1861, originally a Scottish variant of SNOUT. —snooty adj. 1919, probably an alteration of snouty (1858), formed from English snout + -y¹; from the idea of looking down one's nose.

snooze v. 1789, of unknown origin (possibly in part influenced by the form of sneeze, and more distantly, doze). —n. 1793, from the verb.

snore v. 1440 snoren to snore; earlier, to snort (about 1400); probably related to SNORT, and both probably of imitative origin, similar to Middle Dutch and Middle Low German snorren to whir, drone, hum, Middle High German snurren (modern German schnurren) to rattle, snarchen (modern German schnarchen) to snore. —n. Before 1338, a snort, snorting; probably of imitative origin, similar to the verb.

snorkel n. 1944 Schnorkel, 1949 snorkel; borrowed from German navy slang Schnorchel nose, related to schnarchen to SNORE; so called from its resemblance to a nose, and its noise, when in operation. The curved tube used by a swimmer to breathe underwater is first recorded in 1953. —v. About 1950, to swim using a snorkel; from the noun.

snort v. About 1410 snorten to snore; probably related to snoren to snort, SNORE. The meaning of force the breath through the nose with a loud, harsh sound, is first recorded in 1530. The sense of turn up (the nose) is found probably before 1400. —n. 1619, a snore; from the verb.

snot n. About 1425 snot nasal mucus; earlier, snotte snuff of a candle (about 1395); probably developed from Old English gesnot nasal mucus, from Proto-Germanic snutnān*, earlier snutnān*; cognate with Old Frisian snotta nasal mucus, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch snotte (modern Dutch snot), Middle High German snuz, Old High German snuzza, Norwegian snottet snotty. —snotty adj. 1570, foul with snot; formed from English snot + *-y*¹. The meaning of impudent, curt, conceited, is found in 1870.

snout n. Probably about 1225 snute a person's nose (used derisively); possibly borrowed from, or cognate with, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch snūte (modern Dutch snuit) snout, modern German Schnauze, Norwegian snute snout, from Proto-Germanic snūt-* and related to Old English gesnot SNOT. Both the spelling snout and the sense of the projecting nose of a dog, pig, etc., are found probably before 1300, preceded by snute an elephant's trunk (before 1250).

snow n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 830) snāw; cognate with Old Frisian snē snow, Old Saxon snēo, Middle Low German snē, Middle Dutch snee (modern Dutch sneeuw), Old High German snēo (modern German Schnee), Old Icelandic snær, snjör (Norwegian sne, Swedish snö, Danish sne), and Gothic snaiwus, from Proto-Germanic snaiwaz*. —v. Probably before 1300 snowen; from the noun. —snowball n. (probably before 1200); v. (1684, form snowballs; 1855, throw snowballs at; 1929, grow like a rolling snowball) —snowdrift n. (before 1325) —snow-white adj. About 1386, developed from Old English snāwhwīt (about 1000).

snub v. Probably before 1250 snibben reprove, rebuke; later snubben (about 1340); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic snubba to curse, scold, reprove, dialectal Norwegian and Swedish snubba to cut short, reprove). The meaning of treat coldly or with contempt appeared in the 1700's. —n. 1537, act or instance of snubbing, sharp rebuke; from the verb. Middle English snibbe (about 1350), with the same meaning, was derived from snibben to snub. —adj. 1724, (of the nose) short and turned up; from the verb.

snuff¹ n. burned part of a candlewick. Before 1382 snoffe; later snuffe (probably before 1475); of unknown origin. —v. Before 1450 snuffen to cut or pinch off the snuff; from the noun. The meaning of extinguish, put out (a candle), is recorded in 1687.

snuff² v. draw in through the nose. Before 1477 snoffen clear one's nose, sniffle; later snuff to inhale (1527); borrowed from Dutch or Flemish snuffen to sniff, snuff, related to Dutch snuiuen to sniff; see SNIVEL. The meaning of inhale powdered tobacco, take snuff, first occurs in Scottish, in 1725, but was introduced by Scottish soldiers stationed in the Low Countries during the 1600's. —n. 1683, borrowed from Dutch or Flemish snuff, shortened from snufftabak snuff tobacco, from snuffen to sniff, snuff.

snuffle v. 1583, to sniff at contemptuously; probably borrowed from Dutch or Flemish snuffelen to sniff about, pry, related to Dutch and Flemish snuffen to sniff, SNUFF². The meaning of breathe noisily through the nose is first recorded about 1600. —n. Before 1764, act or sound of snuffing; from the verb. An earlier sense of a surge (of the sea) is found in 1630.

snug adj. About 1595, (of a ship) compact, trim; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Swedish snugg neat, trim, and Old Icelandic snoggr short-haired). The sense of in a state of ease or comfort is first recorded in 1630. The meaning of fitting closely is not found before 1838. —v. 1583, to nestle; later, to make comfortable and tidy, make snug (1787); probably from the adjective.

snuggle v. 1687, frequentative form of SNUG, v.; for suffix see -LE³.

so adv., conj. Probably about 1150, developed from Old English (about 700) swā, swā; cognate with Old Frisian sā, sō so, Old Saxon sō, Middle Dutch sō (modern Dutch zo), Old High German sō (modern German so), Old Icelandic svá, and Gothic swa so, swē as. Compare AS and ALSO. —so-and-so n. (1596, something unspecified; 1897, a euphemistic term of abuse) —so-so adv. indifferently (1530); adj. neither very good nor very bad (1542).

soak v. About 1340 soken wet through, saturate; developed from Old English (about 1000) socian, related to sūcan to SUCK. —n. About 1450 soke; from the verb.

soap n. Before 1250 sope; developed from Old English (about 1000) sāpe; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sēpe (modern Dutch zeep) soap, Old High German seifa (modern German Seife), and probably Old Icelandic sāpa (Swedish såpa, Norwegian såpe, Danish sæbe), though the Old Icelandic word might have been borrowed from Old English sāpe, from West Germanic saipō*. Late Latin sāpō soap, the source of French savon, Italian sapone, Spanish jabón, etc., is probably ultimately from Germanic. —v. 1585, from the noun.

soar v. About 1380 soren fly high; borrowed from Old French essorer fly up, soar, from Vulgar Latin exaurāre* rise into the air (Latin ex- out + aura breeze).

sob v. Before 1200 sobben to cry with short, quick breaths; probably of imitative origin. —n. a sobbing. About 1385 sobbe; from the verb.

sober adj. 1340 sobre moderate, temperate; borrowed from Old French sobre, and possibly directly from Latin sōbrius not drunk, temperate (sō-*, variant of sē- without + ēbrius drunk). The sense of not drunk is first recorded in English about 1384, and that of serious, solemn, before 1390. —v. About 1375 sobren to calm, appease; from the adjective. The sense of make sober is first recorded in 1726. —sobriety n. 1402 sobriete quality of being temperate or sober; borrowed from Middle French sobriété, from Latin sōbrietās moderation, temperance, from sōbrius sober, adj.; for suffix see -TY².

sobriquet n. 1646, borrowing of French sobriquet, from Middle French soubriquet a chuck under the chin, of unknown origin.

soccer n. 1889 socca; later, socker (1891), soccer (1895); originally university slang, from a shortened form of assoc., abbreviation of association (football); for suffix see -ER⁵.

sociable adj. 1553, liking society, friendly; borrowing of Middle French sociable, and directly from Latin sociābilis close, intimate, from sociāre to join, unite, from socius companion; see SOCIAL; for suffix see -ABLE. —sociability n. Before 1471 sociability friendly discourse, formed from Latin sociābilis close, intimate + Middle English -itee, -ite -ity.

social adj. Before 1387 social domestic; borrowing of Middle French social, and borrowed directly from Latin sociālis united, living with others, from socius companion, from earlier soqwyos*, related to Latin sequi to follow; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of marked by companionship or friendliness is first recorded in 1667, and that of living or liking to live with others, in 1722. —n. 1870, from the adjective. An earlier sense of companion, associate, is found in 1632. —socialization n. 1841, process of making social; formed from English socialize + -ation. The sense of a process of making socialistic is first recorded in 1884. —socialize v. 1828, to make social, borrowed from French socialiser, formed from social, adj., social + -iser -ize. The meaning of make socialistic (as in to socialize medicine) is first recorded in 1846.

socialism n. 1837, formed from English social + -ism, perhaps after earlier socialist; apparently first used in English with reference to Robert Owen's efforts to achieve social reform through small experimental communities. French socialisme was probably first used in 1831 with reference to the teachings of Comte de Saint-Simon, founder of French socialism. —socialist n. 1827, borrowed from French socialiste or formed independently from English social, adj. + -ist. —socialistic adj. 1848, formed from English socialist + -ic.

socialite n. 1928, (probably a coinage among writers and editors at Time magazine); formed from social, adj. + *-ite*¹.

society n. 1531, companionship, fellowship; borrowed from Middle French société, and probably directly from Latin societas, from socius companion; see SOCIAL; for suffix see -TY². The meaning of an organized group, club, association, is first recorded before 1548, and that of a system or condition of living with others as a community, in 1553. The sense of fashionable people or their doings is first recorded in 1823.

socio- a combining form meaning: 1 of society, social, as in sociopath = person lacking social sense, antisocial person (1930). 2 social and —, as in socioeconomic = involving social and economic factors (1883). 3 of or having to do with sociology, sociological, as in sociography = sociological analysis or description (1881). Borrowed from French socio-, combining form of Latin socius companion, associate, on the analogy of similar combining forms derived from Greek, such as psycho-.

sociology n. 1843, borrowed from French sociologie, from socio- (from Latin socius associate) + -logie -logy. —sociological adj. 1843, formed from English sociology + -ical. —sociologist n. 1843, formed from English sociology + -ist.

sock¹ n. short stocking. About 1330, developed from Old English (before 800) soc light slipper; an early borrowing from Latin soccus light low-heeled shoe. Also borrowed from Latin are Middle Dutch socke, soc (modern Dutch sok) sock, Old High German soc (modern German Socke), and Old Icelandic sokkr. Latin soccus is borrowed from Greek sókchos*, variant of sykchos, sykchás a kind of shoe.

sock² v. strike or hit hard. Before 1700, of uncertain origin.

—n. Before 1700, from the same (uncertain) source as the verb.

sockdolager n. 1830, a decisive blow; fanciful formation from SOCK² to hit hard. The sense of something exceptional is first recorded in 1838.

socket n. Probably before 1300 soket spearhead (originally, such a weapon shaped like a plowshare); borrowed from Anglo-French soket, diminutive formed from Old French soc plowshare, from Vulgar Latin soccus*, probably from a Gaulish source (compare Welsh swch plowshare, Middle Irish soc plowshare, hog's snout, and Old Irish soc hog; see SOW²); for suffix see -ET. The meaning of a hollow part or piece for receiving and holding something is first recorded in Middle English before 1425.

sod n. Before 1450, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch sode (modern Dutch zode) turf, or Middle Low German sode, sade, corresponding to Old Frisian sātha sod, all of uncertain origin. —v. Probably about 1400 sodden bury, cover with sod (implied in i-sod, past participle); possibly from the noun.

soda n. 1471 sode sodium carbonate; later soda saltwort (before 1500); borrowed from Italian soda a kind of saltwort from which sodium is obtained, soda, from Arabic suwwād the name of a variety of saltwort exported from North Africa to Sicily in the Middle Ages, and related to sawād black, the color of the plant. The explanation that soda came from Medieval Latin soda* is no longer valid.

The meaning of carbonated water (originally, water containing a solution of sodium bicarbonate) is first recorded in English in 1834, shortened from soda water (1802).

sodality n. 1600, friendship; borrowed from Middle French sodalité, or directly from Latin sodalitatem (nominative sodalitās) companionship, a brotherhood, from sodālis companion; for suffix see -ITY.

sodden adj. About 1390 soden boiled (earlier sothen, alteration influenced by sethen to seethe, before 1325); developed from Old English soden, past participle of sēothan to cook, boil; see SEETHE. The meaning of soaked through is first recorded in 1820, preceded by the sense of resembling one that has been soaked or steeped in water (1599).

sodium n. 1807, New Latin, from English soda; for suffix see -IUM; so named because this element was isolated from caustic soda (sodium hydroxide).

sodomy n. Probably about 1280 sodomye, borrowed from Old French sodomie, from Sodome Sodom, from Latin Sodoma, ultimately from Hebrew s'dōm Sodom, a morally corrupt city in ancient Palestine destroyed, together with Gomorrah, by fire from heaven; for suffix see -Y³. —sodomite n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French sodomite, from Late Latin sodomīta inhabitant of Sodom, from Latin Sodoma Sodom. —sodomize v. 1868, formed from English sodomy + -ize.

sofa n. 1625, cushioned dais for reclining; borrowed from Arabic suffah bench.

soffit n. 1613–39, soffita, borrowed from Italian soffitta, feminine of soffitto ceiling, (originally) fixed beneath, past participle (sof- under, from Latin sub- + fitto, past participle of figgere to fix, fasten, from Latin figere); and later (1725) borrowed from French soffite, from Italian.

soft adj. Before 1114 softe meek, mild; developed from Old English sōfte (about 1000); later, alteration (influenced by sōfte, adv., soft) of sēfte gentle, easy, comfortable, agreeable; cognate with Old Saxon sāfti soft, Middle Dutch sachte (modern Dutch zacht), Middle High German senfte, and Old High German semfti (modern German sanft), from West Germanic samfti*, Proto-Germanic samftijaz* (earlier samptijaz*). These adjectives are probably cognate with Old Icelandic semja to arrange, settle, Gothic samjan to please, the semantic connection between these words being (approximately): level, even, smooth, gentle, soft. The sense of yielding to the touch, not hard, is found in Middle English before 1200. —adv. Probably before 1200 softe; developed from Old English sōfte (before 1000); cognate with Old Saxon sāfto, Middle High German sanfte, and Old High German samfto (modern German sanft) in a soft manner. —soften v. About 1386 softnen, formed from Middle English softe, adj., soft + -enen *-en*¹.

soggy adj. Before 1722, perhaps formed from dialectal English sog bog, swamp (1538, of unknown origin) + *-y*¹; or sog become soaked (1440 soggon, past participle; of unknown origin) + *-y*¹.

soil¹ v. make dirty. Before 1250 soillen; borrowed from Old French soillier to soil, make dirty; originally, to wallow, from soil, soil tub, wild boar's wallow, pigsty, from Latin solum tub for bathing, seat.

soil² n. earth, dirt. Probably before 1300 sol land, area, place; later soyle dirt, the ground (probably about 1380); borrowed from Anglo-French soil piece of ground, place, from Latin solum seat, influenced in meaning by Latin solum soil, ground.

soiree n. 1793, a French word from soir evening, from Old French soir, variant of seir, from Latin sēro, adv., late, at a late hour, from sērum late hour, neuter of sērus late.

sojourn v. Probably before 1300 soiournen stay for a time; borrowed from Old French sojorner stay or dwell for a time, from Vulgar Latin subdiurnare* to spend the day (Latin sub- under, until + diurnus of a day). —n. About 1250 suriurn; later soiourne (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French sojorn, from sojorner v.

sol¹ n. fifth note of the musical scale. Before 1380, borrowed from Medieval Latin sol, from the initial syllable of Latin solve purge, the word sung to this note in the Hymn for St. John the Baptist's day; see GAMUT.

sol² n. colloidal solution. 1899, shortened form of SOLUTION.

Sol n. sun. 1392, borrowed from Latin sōl the sun.

solace n. Probably before 1300 solas joy, comfort, relief; borrowed from Old French solas, from Latin sōlācium, from sōlari to console, soothe. —v. Probably about 1280 solacen; borrowed from Old French solacier, solasier to console, from solas solace, n.

solar adj. About 1450, borrowed from Latin sōlāris of the sun, from sōl sun; for suffix see -AR.

solarium n. 1891, borrowing of Latin sōlārium sundial, solarium, from sōl sun. An earlier sense of a sundial is found in English in 1842.

solder n. About 1320 soudour; borrowed from Old French soldure, from solder to join with solder, from Latin solidāre to make solid, from solidus SOLID. The spelling with l (1428) Middle English souldour parallels the pronunciation retained in Great Britain. —v. Before 1450 soudren; from the noun.

soldier n. Probably before 1300 souder; borrowed from Old French soudier, soldeer one who serves in an army for pay, soldier, from Medieval Latin soldarius a soldier; literally, one having pay; from Late Latin soldum, from the accusative of Latin solidus a Roman gold coin, SOLIDUS. The spelling with l appears before 1350 as soldeyour in imitation of the Latin. —v. 1647, from the noun.

sole¹ n. bottom of the foot. About 1325, borrowing of Old French sole, from Latin solea sandal, bottom of a shoe, from solum bottom, ground, soil. The bottom of a shoe or boot is found in Middle English in 1378–79. —v. 1570, from the noun.

sole² adj. single. About 1395 soul single, unmarried; borrowed from Old French soul, sol (feminine soule, sole), from Latin sōlus alone. The sense of one and only (as in one's sole support) is found before 1398.

sole³ n. flatfish. 1252, borrowed from Old French sole, from Latin solea a kind of flatfish; originally, sandal (see *SOLE*¹); so called from the resemblance of the fish to a sandal.

solecism n. 1577, borrowed from Middle French solécisme, and directly from Latin soloecismus mistake in speaking or writing, from Greek soloikismós, from soloikos speaking incorrectly (said to refer to Sóloi, an Athenian colony in Cilicia, whose dialect the Athenians considered barbarous); for suffix see -ISM.

solemn adj. Before 1333 solempne connected with religion, formal, ceremonial; later solemne (1340); and in the sense of serious, grave, earnest (before 1375), borrowed from Old French solempne, solemne, from Latin sollemnis formal, ceremonial, traditional. The explanation that Latin sollemnis was formed from sollus whole + annus year is not considered valid.

—solemnity n. About 1300 solempnete; about 1303 solemnyte; borrowed from Old French solempnité, and directly from Latin sollemnitas a solemnity, from Latin sollemnis solemn; for suffix see -ITY. —solemnize v. Before 1382 solempnysen; borrowed from Old French solempniser, (solempne sollemn + -iser -ize).

sol-fa n. 1548, borrowed from Italian solfa, from Medieval Latin solfa (sol SOL¹ + fa FA). In Middle English there was a verb solfen, to sing the notes of the scale (about 1380).

solicit v. About 1422 soliciten to disturb, trouble; 1450, to further (business affairs); borrowed from Middle French soliciter, soliciter, from Latin solicitare to disturb, rouse, from solicitus restless, uneasy (sollus whole, entire + citus aroused, past participle of ciere shake, excite). The sense of make requests or appeals is first recorded in English in 1509. —solicitation n. 1492, management; later, act of soliciting (1500–20); borrowed from Middle French solicitation, and directly from Latin solicitationem (nominative solicitationē) vexation, disturbance, from solicitare disturb; for suffix see -ATION. —solicitor n. Before 1420 solicitor instigator; later, agent, representative (about 1449); borrowed from Middle French soliciteur, soliciteur, from soliciter, soliciter to solicit; for suffix see -OR².

solicitous adj. 1563, showing care or concern, borrowed from Latin solicitus restless, uneasy, careful (see SOLICIT); for suffix see -OUS. —solicitude n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French solicitude, and directly from Latin solicitudō anxiety, from solicitus restless, uneasy; for suffix see -TUDE.

solid adj. 1391 solide not hollow; perhaps, firm, hard (before 1450); borrowed from Old French solide firm, dense, compact, and directly from Latin solidus firm, whole, entire, related to salvus SAFE. —n. Before 1398, a body that has length, breadth, and thickness; from the adjective. The sense of a solid substance, is first recorded in 1698. —solidify v. 1799, to make solid; borrowed from French solidifier, from solide solid, from Old French; for suffix see -FY. —solidity n. 1392 silidite (error for solidite) quality of being solid; later solidite (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French solidité, from Latin soliditas solidness, from solidus solid; for suffix see -ITY.

solidarity n. 1841, borrowed from French solidarité mutual responsibility, from solidaire interdependent, complete, entire, from solide SOLID; for suffix see -ITY.

solidus n. Before 1387 solidy English shilling and Roman gold coin; later solidus (before 1398); borrowed from Late Latin solidus an imperial Roman coin; see SOLID. The sloping line used to separate related thing is first recorded in 1891.

soliloquy n. 1613, monologue; borrowed from Late Latin soliloquium a talking to oneself (from Latin solus alone, + loqui speak); also in the title Bok Soliloquijs (about 1380), translation of Latin Liber Soliloquiorum, treatise by Saint Augustine.

solitaire n. Before 1500 solitère widow; later solitaire solitary person, recluse (1716); borrowed from French solitaire, from Latin solitarius SOLITARY. The card game played by one person is found in English in 1746.

solitary adj. About 1340, alone; borrowed from Old French solitaire, and directly from Latin solitarius alone, lonely, from solitās loneliness, solitude, from solus alone; for suffix see -ARY. —n. Before 1396, from the adjective.

solitude n. Probably 1348, state of being alone; borrowing of Old French solitude loneliness, and probably directly from Latin solitūdō loneliness, from solus alone; for suffix see -TUDE.

solmization n. = sol-fa. 1730 solmisation, borrowing of

French solmisation, from solmiser to sing to the sol-fa syllables (sol SOL¹ + mi MI); for suffix see -ATION.

solo n. 1695, borrowed from Italian solo piece of music for one voice or instrument; literally, alone, from Latin solus alone. —adj. 1776, from the noun. The sense of alone, unassisted (as in a solo flight) is first recorded in 1909. —adv. 1712, from the noun. —v. 1858, perform a musical solo; from the noun; later fly solo (1917). —soloist n. (1864)

solstice n. About 1250, borrowed from Old French solstice, from Latin solstitium a point at which the sun seems to stand still (sol sun; see SOLAR + -stitium, from earlier statyom*, as if formed from the past participle statum of sistere to come to a stop, make stand still).

soluble adj. 1373 solabill relaxed, unconspicuous; later soluble capable of being dissolved (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French soluble, from Late Latin solubilis that may be loosened or dissolved, from Latin solvere loosen, dissolve.

solution n. 1375, a solving or being solved, clarification, explanation; borrowed from Old French solution, from Latin solūtōnem (nominative solūtio) a loosening or unfastening, a solving, from solūt-, past participle stem of solvere loosen, untie, solve, dissolve; for suffix see -TION. The act or process of dissolving is first recorded before 1393. The sense of a liquid containing a dissolved substance is found in 1594.

solve v. Before 1398 solven to disperse, dissipate, loosen; borrowed from Latin solvere to loosen, dissolve. The meaning of explain, answer (about 1533), is found in the corresponding noun solution in 1375.

solvent adj. 1653, able to pay all one owes; borrowed from French solvent, from Latin solventem (nominative solvens), present participle of solvere loosen, dissolve; for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of able to dissolve substances is first recorded in 1686. —n. 1671, probably borrowed from Latin solventem (nominative solvens), present participle of solvere to loosen, dissolve. —solvency n. 1717, formed from English solvent, adj. + -ency.

somatic adj. 1775, borrowed from French somatique, and probably directly from Greek sōmatikós of the body, from sōma (genitive sōματος) body; for suffix see -IC.

somber adj. 1760 sombre, borrowed from French sombre dark, gloomy, from Old French sombre, from a lost verb sombrer*, from Late Latin subumbrāre to shadow (from sub umbrā; Latin sub under; umbrā, ablative of umbra shade, shadow).

sombrero n. 1770, borrowing of Spanish sombrero a broad-brimmed hat; originally, umbrella or parasol, from sombra shade, alteration of Latin umbra shade by influence of Spanish sol sun; or from sombrar to shade, from Late Latin subumbrāre to shadow. An earlier meaning of an Oriental umbrella appeared in English in 1598.

some adj., 1106, pron. 1102 sumne; later some (adj. 1340, pron. about 1300); developed from Old English sum (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon sum some, Middle

Low German and Middle Dutch som, Old High German sum, Old Icelandic sumr, and Gothic sums, from Proto-Germanic sumás*. —adv. to some degree. About 1280, from the adjective. —somebody pron. (about 1303) —someone pron. (about 1305) —something pron. (about 1000) —sometime adv., adj. (1279) —sometimes adv. (1526) —somewhat adv. (probably about 1200) —somewhere adv. (probably about 1200)

—some¹ a suffix forming adjectives: 1 (added to verbs) tending to, as in meddlesome = tending to meddle. 2 (added to nouns) causing, as in troublesome = causing trouble. 3 (added to adjectives) to a considerable degree, as in lonesome = lone to a considerable degree. Middle English -som, developed from Old English -sum; cognate with Old Frisian -sum -some, Old Saxon -sam, Middle Dutch -sam, -saem (modern Dutch -zaam), Old High German and modern German -sam, Old Icelandic -samr, and Gothic -sams -some, related to sama SAME.

—some² a suffix added to a number, meaning a group of that number, as in twosome = a group of two. Middle English -sum, developed from Old English sum SOME, pron. Old English sum was used after the genitive plural of a numeral as in sixa sum six-some; the inflection disappeared in Middle English and the pronoun was suffixed to the numeral.

—some³ a combining form meaning body, as in chromosome = color body. Borrowed from New Latin -soma, from Greek sōma body.

somersault n. 1530, borrowed from Middle French sombresault, from Old Provençal sobresaut (sobre over, from Latin suprā over + saut a jump, from Latin salvus, from the root of salire to leap). —v. 1858, from the noun.

somnambulism n. 1797, formed from New Latin somnambul sleepwalker (Latin somnus sleep + ambulāre to walk) + English -ism. —somnambulant adj. 1866, formed from New Latin somnambulus + English -ant. —somnambulist n. 1794, formed from New Latin somnambulus + English -ist.

somnolent adj. About 1460 sompnolente; later somnolent (1615); probably formed in English as an adjective to somnolence on the model of Middle French sompnolent, somnolent, from Latin somnolentus, from somnus sleep; for suffix see -ENT. —somnolence n. About 1390, sompnolence, borrowed from Old French sompnolence, somnolence, from Latin somnolentia sleepiness, from somnolentus somnolent; for suffix see -ENCE.

son n. Probably before 1150 sone; developed from Old English sunu (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon sunu son, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sone (modern Dutch zoon), Old High German sun (modern German Sohn), Old Icelandic sonr (Norwegian son, sønn, Swedish son, Danish son), and Gothic sunus, from Proto-Germanic sunuz*.

sonant adj. 1846, voiced, borrowed from Latin sonantem (nominative sonāns), present participle of sonāre make a noise; for suffix see -ANT. —n. 1849, from the adjective.

sonar n. 1946, acronym formed from so(und) na(vigation) r(ang)ing, on the pattern of radar.

sonata n. 1694, borrowing of Italian sonata piece of instrumental music having three or four movements; literally, sounded (played on an instrument, in contrast to cantata sung), feminine past participle of sonare to sound, from Latin sonāre to sound.

song n. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English sang (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon sang song, Middle Dutch sanc (modern Dutch gezang), Old High German sang (modern German Gesang), Old Icelandic songr (modern Icelandic söngur, Swedish sång, Danish and Norwegian sang), and Gothic sangus; from Proto-Germanic sangwaz*; from the root of the Germanic verb singwan* to SING. —songbook n. 1489; found in Old English (about 1000) sangbōc (sang song + bōc book). —songster n. 1382, singer, in the Wycliffe Bible; developed from Old English (about 1000) sangystre (sang song + -estre -ster).

sonic adj. 1923, formed from Latin sonus sound + English -ic; perhaps patterned on phonic, conic, tonic.

sonnet n. 1557, borrowed from Middle French sonnet, and probably directly from Italian sonetto, from Old Provençal sonet song, diminutive of son song, sound, from Latin sonus sound; for suffix see -ET.

sonorous adj. 1611, borrowed from Latin sonōrus, from sonor (genitive sonōris) sound, noise, from sonāre to sound; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of having a full, rich sound, is first recorded in 1693. Modern English sonorous replaced sonouse sonorous (attested before 1500; borrowed from Medieval Latin sonosus, from Latin sonus sound), and sonoure possessing a pleasant voice (attested about 1400; from sonōrus + -e -y³). —sonority n. 1623, borrowed from French sonorité, and directly from Latin sonōritās, from sonōrus sonorous; for suffix see -ITY.

soon adv. Before 1121 sone; later soon (about 1250); developed from Old English (before 830) sōna at once, immediately; cognate with Old Frisian sōn at once, Old Saxon sān, sāna, sāno, Middle Low German sān, Old High German sān, sāno (from Proto-Germanic sānō*).

soot n. Before 1200 soṭ; later soot (about 1385); developed from Old English (before 800) sōt; cognate with Middle Low German sōt soot, Middle Dutch soet, and Old Icelandic sōt (Norwegian and Swedish soṭ, Danish sod), from Proto-Germanic sōtan* what settles. —sooty adj. (before 1250) sooth n. About 1380, truth; developed from Old English sōth (about 725, in Beowulf), noun use of sōth, adj., true; cognate with Old Saxon sōth true, Old High German sand, Old Icelandic sannr (Norwegian and Swedish sann, Danish sand), from Proto-Germanic santhaz*, and Gothic sunja truth, sunjis* true (Proto-Germanic sundjās*). —soothsayer n. 1340 zoth ziggere truth sayer, truthful person; later sothseiere (before 1393). The meaning of a person who makes prophecies is first recorded in 1381.

soothe v. Probably before 1200 sothien to prove to be true, verify; developed from Old English (about 950) sōthian, from sōth true, SOOTH. The sense of to quiet, comfort, mollify (1697), developed from confirm or encourage (1568), and corroborate, support (before 1553).

sop n. Before 1338, developed from Old English (before 1000) sopp- (in soppcuppe sopcup, cup into which sops are put); cognate with Middle Low German soppe broth, Middle Dutch sop, Old High German sopfa sop, and Old Icelandic soppa soup, from Proto-Germanic suppō*.

The meaning of something given to appease (1665), is in allusion to sop given by the Sibyl to Cerberus, the three-headed dog guarding the entrance to Hades, in Vergil's Aeneid. —v. Old English (about 1000) soppian; from the noun. This verb is not recorded in Middle English, but reappears in modern English before 1529. —sopping adj. 1877, from the present participle of sop, v. The use sopping wet is first recorded in 1897. —soppy adj. 1611, full of sops; formed from English sop, n. or v. + *-y*¹. The meaning very wet, soaked, is first recorded in 1823, and that of sentimental in 1918.

sophism n. Probably before 1430 sophisme; borrowed from Latin sophisma; replacement of earlier Middle English sophyme (about 1383); borrowed from Old French sophime a fallacy, false argument, from Latin sophisma, from Greek sōphisma sophism, clever device, from sophizesthai become wise, from sophós wise, clever; for suffix see -ISM. —sophist n. 1440 sophiste, borrowed from Late Latin sophista a sophist, from Greek sophistēs a wise man, master, teacher, from sophizesthai become wise; for suffix see -IST. —sophistic adj. 1549, shortened form of sophistical 1382 (implied in sophistically); borrowed from Latin sophisticus of sophists, from Greek sophistikós of or pertaining to a sophist, from sophistēs SOPHIST; for suffix see -IC. —sophistry n. 1340, unsound and misleading reasoning; borrowed from Old French sophistrie, from sophistre sophist, from late Latin sophista; for suffix see -RY.

sophisticate v. About 1400 sophisticaten adulterate, make impure, and directly from Medieval Latin sophisticatus, past participle of sophisticare to adulterate, cheat, quibble, from Latin sophisticus of sophists, from Greek sophistikós of or pertaining to a sophist, from sophistēs SOPHIST; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning of make less genuine or honest, corrupt, is first recorded in English in 1604, and that of make artificial, deprive of simplicity, in 1796. —n. 1923, from the verb. —sophistication n. Probably about 1400 sophisticacioun the use of sophistry, falsification; later, adulteration (1423); borrowed from Middle French sophistication, and directly from Medieval Latin sophisticationem (nominative sophisticatio), from sophisticare adulterate; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of worldliness, urbanity, is first recorded in 1850.

sophomore n. 1688; earlier sophumer student in the second year of university study (1653); originally, one taking part in dialectic exercises; formed from earlier sophom (before 1603), variant of Middle English sophime SOPHISM + *-or*². The later form sophomore was probably influenced by Greek sophós wise, and mōrós foolish, dull. —sophomoric adj. (1813)

soporific adj. 1690, borrowed from French soporifique, formed from Latin sopor (genitive sopōris) deep sleep + French suffix -fique -fic. —n. 1722–27, from the adjective.

soprano adj. 1730, borrowing of Italian soprano the treble in music; literally, high, from sopra above, from Latin suprā SUPRA. —n. 1738, from the adjective.

sorb v. 1909, to absorb or adsorb; abstracted from absorb and adsorb on the pattern of sorption. —sorption n. 1909, abstracted from absorption and adsorption.

sorbet n. 1585, a cooling drink of fruit juice and water; later, a frozen dessert, sherbet (1864); borrowing of French sorbet, probably from Italian sorbetto, from Turkish serbet, from Arabic sharbat a drink.

sorcery n. Probably before 1300 sorcerie; borrowing of Old French sorcerie, from sorcier sorcerer, from Vulgar Latin sortiārius*, literally, one who influences, fate, fortune, from Latin sors (genitive sortis) lot, fate, fortune; for suffix see *-Y*³. —sorcerer n. Probably about 1425 sorcerour; later sorcerer (probably before 1475); formed in English from earlier sorser sorcerer (probably about 1380) + -our *-or*², -er *-er*¹. Middle English sorser was borrowed from Old French sorcier. —sorceress n. About 1380 sorceresse; formed in English from sorser sorcerer + -esse -ESS.

sordid adj. Probably before 1425 sordide festering; later, dirty, foul, low, mean (1611); borrowed from Latin sordidus dirty, from sordere be dirty, be shabby, related to sordēs dirt.

sore adj. Probably about 1175 sare; later sore (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sār painful, grievous, aching (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon sēr sore, Middle Low German sēr, Middle Dutch seer (modern Dutch zeer), Old High German sēr (modern German sehr very), and Old Icelandic sárr sore, wounded (modern Icelandic sár, Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish sår), from Proto-Germanic sairaz*. —n. About 1150 sor; developed from Old English sār pain, injury, suffering, grief (before 830), related to sār, adj., painful. The Old English noun is cognate with Old Saxon sēr pain, wound, Middle Dutch seer (modern Dutch zeer), Old High German sēr, Old Icelandic sár, and Gothic sair.

sorghum n. 1597, New Latin Sorghum, the genus name, from Italian sorgo a tall cereal grass, probably from Medieval Latin surgum, perhaps a variant of Latin syricum Syrian, from (the Greek name) Syriá Syria, possibly a source of this plant or its grain.

sorority n. 1532, a society of women; borrowed from Medieval Latin sororitas of or pertaining to sisters, from Latin soror SISTER; for suffix see -ITY.

sorrel¹ adj. reddish-brown. 1397 sorell; earlier in sorelborgh name of a horse (1340); borrowed from Middle French sorel, from sor yellowish-brown, probably from a Frankish word (compare Middle Dutch soor and Middle Low German sōn dry). If Middle French sorel is a diminutive form (unexplained) of sor, then the suffix is -el, form of *-LE*². —n. 1397 sorell horse of a sorrel color; borrowed from Middle French sorel, from sorel, adj.

sorrel² n. plant with sour leaves. 1373 sorell; borrowed from Old French surele, from sur sour, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German sūr SOUR); for suffix see -LE¹.

sorrow n. Probably about 1150 sorege grief, emotional distress; later sonve (probably before 1200), and sorrowe (about 1400); developed from Old English sorg, grief, regret, trouble, care (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon sorga sorrow, care, Middle Dutch sorghe (modern Dutch zorg), Old High German sorga (modern German Sorge), Old Icelandic sorg (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish sorg), and Gothic sairga, from Proto-Germanic surgō*. —v. Probably before 1200 sorhin, sorgeden; later sorowen (probably before 1300), developed from Old English sorgian to feel sorrow (about 725, in Beowulf), from sorg, n., and corresponding to Old Saxon sorgōn to sorrow, Middle Dutch sorghen (modern Dutch zorgen), Old High German sorgēn (modern German sorgen), Old Icelandic syrja (Swedish sörja, Norwegian and Danish sørge), and Gothic sairgan.

sorry adj. 1114 sari; later sori (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sārig distressed, full of sorrow (about 725, in Beowulf), from sār SORE; for suffix see -Y¹. The meaning of wretched, worthless, poor, is first recorded in Middle English about 1250. The shift in spelling from a to o represents the semantic connection with sorrow.

sort n. About 1390, borrowed from Old French sorte class, kind; earlier sort, from Latin sortem (nominative sors) lot, fate, share, portion, rank, category. —v. 1358 sorten (implied in sortinge verbal noun) to allot, arrange, sort; borrowed from Old French sortir allot, sort, assort, from Latin sortiri draw lots, divide, choose, from sors lot, fate, share. Some senses of the English verb derive from the noun, and some senses are perhaps a shortened form of assort.

sortie n. 1778, borrowing of French sortie, from feminine past participle of sortir to go out, from Old French, to go out, escape, from Vulgar Latin surctire*, from surctum*, past participle (replacing surrectum) of Latin surgere rise up; see SURGE.

SOS n. 1910, from the letters s o s of the International Morse code, arbitrarily chosen as being easy to transmit and distinguish, and not, as has been mistakenly averred, an acronym for “save our ship,” “save our souls,” etc. —v. 1918, from the noun.

sot n. Old English (about 1000) sott stupid person, fool; borrowed from Old French sot, from Gallo-Romance sott-*, of uncertain origin, represented Spanish and Portuguese zote fool, Calabrian ciotu foolish, and in Medieval Latin sottua (about 800); also borrowed into Middle Dutch sot (modern Dutch sot) fool, foolish, Middle High German sot, and Middle Low German sot, sotte.

The meaning of English sot one who is stupefied by drink, drunkard, is first recorded in 1592. —v. Probably before 1200 sotten delude, confuse; later, become stupid or foolish (before 1415); from the noun. The more common intensive verb, besot affect with a foolish infatuation (1580, be- + sot, v.) is later found in the sense of make mentally or morally stupid or blind (1615).

soufflé n. 1813, a French word, from the past participle of souffler puff up, from Latin sufflāre (suf- under, up + flāre to blow²).

sough v. About 1380 souzen; make a rustling or murmuring sound; earlier swowen (probably before 1300), and suhhzhenn (probably before 1200); developed from Old English swōgan (about 750); cognate with Old Saxon swōgan to rustle, Old Icelandic sægr noise, commotion, and Gothic gaswōgjan to sigh, from Proto-Germanic swōzanan*. —n. About 1380 swogh, swough, from the verb.

soul n. Before 1121 sawle, later sowle, soule (probably before 1200); developed from Old English sāwol the spiritual and emotional part of a person, animate existence (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian sēle soul, Old Saxon seola, siola, Middle Low German sēle, Old Low Franconian sēla, sīla, Middle Dutch siele (modern Dutch ziel), Old High German sēula, sēla (modern German Seele), and Gothic saiwala, from Proto-Germanic saiwalō* coming from or belonging to the sea, so related because that was supposed to be a stopping place of the soul before birth and after death. The meaning of a spirit of a (deceased) person is first recorded in Old English in 971, and that of a person, individual (as in every living soul aboard ship), about 1000.

sound¹ n. what is heard. About 1280 soun, borrowed from Old French son, from Latin sonus sound. The spelling with final -d (about 1350), was not the established spelling until the 1500's. This spelling shows a tendency from the 1300's on to add the sound d after n (as is often heard in drownd). —v. Probably about 1225 sunen, later sownen (probably about 1343); borrowed from Old French soner, from Latin sonāre, related to sonus sound, n.

sound² adj. free from injury or defect. Probably before 1200 sund, sunde, developed from Old English gesund sound, safe, healthy (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian sund healthy, sound, Old Saxon gisund, Middle Dutch ghesont (modern Dutch gezond), and Old High German gisunt (modern German gesund), from Proto-Germanic sundās*. —adv. About 1330 sounde, from the adjective.

sound³ v. to measure the depth (of water), fathom, probe. About 1385 sounden sink in, penetrate; later, measure the depth of water (before 1460); borrowed from Old French sonder, from sonde sounding line, probably from a Germanic source (compare Old English sund water, sea, and sundline sounding line, sundgyrd sounding pole, sundrāp sounding rope, and Old Icelandic sund strait, SOUND⁴). It was earlier held that Old French sonder developed from Vulgar Latin subundāre* submerge (Latin sub- under + unda wave).

sound⁴ n. narrow channel of water, strait. Before 1300; developed from Old English sund power of swimming, water, sea, and probably influenced by, if not borrowed from, a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sund a strait, swimming, Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish sund channel, strait, sound, from Proto-Germanic sumdān*.

soup¹ n. liquid food. 1653, borrowed from French soupe soup, broth, from Late Latin suppa bread soaked in broth, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch sop sop, broth, and Old High German sopfa sop).

soup² v. increase the horsepower of (an engine). 1921 soup up, probably from *soup*¹ a narcotic injected into horses to make them run faster; perhaps also influenced by sup(er)charge, v., 1876.

soupcon n. 1766, slight trace or flavor, a French word from Old French sospeçon, from Late Latin suspectiōnem (nominative suspectiō) SUSPICION.

sour adj. Probably 1303 sour tart, acid, bitter (implied in soure dogh sourdough); developed from Old English (about 1000) sūr; cognate with Middle Dutch suur (modern Dutch zuur) sour, Old High German sūr (modern German sauer), and Old Icelandic súrr (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish sur), from Proto-Germanic sūraz*. —v. Probably before 1300 souren to become sour, spoil; from the adjective. —adv. About 1300, bitterly or severely; later, crossly, disagreeably (as in to look sour, 1500–20); from the adjective. —n. Before 1325 sure; later soure (about 1333–52); developed from Old English (about 1000) sūr; from the adjective.

source n. 1346, a support or base; later sours main cause, origin (about 1385), and source (before 1393); borrowed from Old French source rise, beginning, spring, feminine noun use of the past participle of sourdre to rise, spring up, from Latin urgere to rise, SURGE.

sourdough n. 1898, prospector or pioneer in Alaska or Canada; so called from the practice of the early prospectors in the Yukon of saving a lump of fermented dough as leaven for raising bread baked during the winter. The compound sour-dough, sour dough, fermented dough, is first recorded in Middle English probably in 1303.

souse v. Before 1387 sousen to pickle, steep in vinegar; probably borrowed from Old French souser*, from sous, souci, adj., preserved in salt and vinegar, pickled, from Frankish sultia*; cognate with Old High German sulza saltwater, pickled meat (modern German Sülze brine, jellied meat), and Old Saxon sultia saltwater. The participial adjective soused steeped in alcoholic liquor, drunk, is found in 1613. —n. 1391 sous liquid used for pickling; borrowed from Old French sous, variant of souci pickle. The act of drenching with water (from the verb) is first recorded in 1741.

south adv. Before 1300, developed from Old English sūth southward, in the south (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon sūthar southward, south, Middle Low German sūt, Old High German sund- (modern German süd), and Old Icelandic sudhr, from Proto-Germanic sunthaz*. —adj. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English (before 800) sūth- (as in sūthdæl the southern region, the south), adjective use of sūth, adv. —n. Probably before 1300; from the adverb. —southerly adj. 1551, situated toward the south, formed from south, adj. + *-ly*², on the pattern of westerly, easterly. —adv. 1577, in a southern position or direction; for suffix see *-ly*¹. —southern adj. About 1300, developed from Old English (before 899) sūtherne (sūth south + -erne, suffix denoting direction); cognate with Old High German sundrōni and Old Icelandic sudhrœnn southern, from Proto-Germanic sunthronijaz*. —southward adj. About 1290, developed from Old English (before 899) sūthweard (sūth south + -weard -ward).

souvenir n. 1775, remembrance, memory; borrowing of French souvenir, noun use of souvenir, v., to remember, come to mind, from Latin subvenire come to mind (sub- up + venire come). The meaning of a token of remembrance, memento, is first recorded in English in 1782.

sovereign n. About 1280 sovereyn a superior, ruler, or master; borrowed from Old French soverain, from Vulgar Latin super-ānus*, from Latin super over. The spelling sovereign (with g) is found about 1378, and earlier as soveraigne (1357), probably by influence of reign. —adj. Before 1338 sovereigne great, superior, supreme; borrowed from Old French soverain, adj. and n. —sovereignty n. About 1340 soveraynte; later sovereignete (about 1385); borrowed through Anglo-French sovereyneté, soverentee, from Old French soveraineté quality or condition of being sovereign, from soverain; for suffix see *-ty*².

soviet n. 1917, borrowed from Russian sovét governing council; literally, council, from Old Russian sūvētū (sū with + vētū counsel); loan translation of Greek symbolion council of advisors. —adj. 1918, from the noun.

sow¹ v. to plant, seed. Probably about 1150 sowen; developed from Old English (before 830) sāwan; cognate with Old Saxon sāian to sow, Middle Dutch sayen (modern Dutch zaaien), Old High German sāwen, sājen (modern German säen), Old Icelandic sā (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish så), and Gothic saian, from Proto-Germanic sājanan*. Related to SEED.

sow² n. female pig. Probably before 1200 suhe; later souwe (about 1300), sowe (before 1325); developed from a blend of Old English (before 800) sugu, and sū sow. Old English sugu (from Proto-Germanic su3ō*) is cognate with Old Saxon suga sow, Middle Low German soge, Middle Dutch sōghe (modern Dutch zeug). Old English sū sow, is cognate with Old High German sū (modern German Sau) and Old Icelandic sýr, accusative sū (Swedish and Danish so). Related to SWINE.

soy n. 1696 soy; earlier saio (1679); borrowed from Dutch soya, soja, from Japanese sōyu, variant of shōyu soy, from Chinese shi-yu (shi fermented soybeans + yu oil). Soy passed into English through Dutch, since the Dutch had trade relations with Japan before any other European nation and continued to trade with the Japanese throughout the period in which the English had no contact with Japan (1624–1868).

spa n. 1626, mineral spring, from earlier (1565) Spa, health resort in Belgium, known for the curative properties of its mineral springs.

space n. Probably before 1300, an area, extent, expanse; borrowed from Old French espace, from Latin spatium room, area, distance, stretch of time. The sense of the great expanse in which the stars and planets are situated is first recorded in 1667. —v. 1548, to separate by a space or spaces; from the noun. An earlier use, walk or pace, is found about 1385. —adj. 1600, of or involving space; from the noun. The meaning of having to do with travel in outer space appeared about 1894. Many compounds incorporating this sense first appeared in science fiction or other speculative writing: spaceship (1942), spaceship (1894), space station (1936), spacesuit (1920), space travel (1931). —spacious adj. Before 1382, wide, extensive; borrowed from Old French spacieux, and directly from Latin spatiōsus, from spatium space, n.; for suffix see -OUS.

spacy or spacey adj. 1971, dazed or stupefied; also eccentric; formed from earlier space(d) or space(d-out) dazed or stupefied (1965) + *-y*¹; probably so called from the behavior of people under the influence of hallucinogenic drugs.

spade¹ n. tool for digging. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English (before 800) spadu; cognate with Old Frisian spada spade, shovel, Old Saxon spado, Middle Dutch and Dutch spade, Middle High German spat, spate (modern German Spaten), Icelandic spadhi, and Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian spade, from Proto-Germanic spadōn*.

spade² n. leaf-shaped figure on playing cards. 1598, probably a borrowing of Italian spade, plural of spada sword, *spade*¹, from Latin spatha broad, flat weapon or tool, from Greek spáthē broad blade.

spadix n. 1760, spike composed of minute flowers, New Latin, from Latin spādix branch broken off a date-palm tree; from Greek spādix, from spān tear away, pull.

spaghetti n. 1849 spaghetti; later spaghetti (1888); borrowing of Italian spaghetti, plural of spaghetto string, twine, diminutive of spago cord, of uncertain origin.

span¹ n. distance between two objects. Old English span, spann distance between the thumb and little finger of an extended hand (before 899); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch spanne span, Old High German spanna (modern German Spanne), Old Icelandic spönn (Norwegian and Swedish spann, Danish spand), and is probably related to Old English spannan to join, fasten; see SPAN². The meaning of a length of time is found in 1599. —v. Before 1398 spannen to twist around; about 1420, to grasp, take hold of; from the noun.

span² n. pair of animals driven together. 1769, borrowed from Dutch span, from spannen to stretch or yoke, from Middle Dutch spannen; cognate with Old English spannan to join, fasten, clasp, Old Frisian spanna, Old Icelandic spenna to fasten (Norwegian and Swedish spanna), and Old High German spannan to fasten, yoke (modern German spannen), from Proto-Germanic spanwanan*.

spangle n. 1440 spangele, spangyl small piece of glittering metal; diminutive of spang glittering ornament, spangle (1406); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch spange brooch, clasp (for suffix see -LE¹); cognate with Old English spang buckle, clasp, Old High German spanga (modern German Spange), and Old Icelandic spōng (Norwegian spōng), from Proto-Germanic spanzō*, from an extension of the root of SPAN². —v. Probably before 1450 spanglen (implied in spangled, participial adjective); from the noun.

Spaniard n. Before 1400 Spainard; later Spaniard (1443); as surnames Spainard (1318), Spaniard (1379); borrowed from Old French Espaignart, Espaniard, from Espaigne Spain, from Latin Hispānia, from Greek Hispāniā; for suffix see -ARD.

spaniel n. About 1350 spaynel; as a surname (with the original sense of Spaniard) Spaynel (1275); borrowed from Old French espagneul, literally, Spanish (dog), from Vulgar Latin Hispāniolus* of Spain, diminutive of Latin Hispānus Spanish, Hispanic, from Greek Hispānós, from Hispāniā Spain.

Spanish adj. Probably before 1200 Spainisc; formed from Spaine Spain (borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French Espaigne; see SPANIARD) + -isc *-ish*¹; replacing Old English Speonisc. The spelling Spanish is (before 1533) an alteration through influence of Latin Hispānia (compare SPANIARD).

spank¹ v. to strike with the open hand. 1727, possibly imitative in origin, in reference to the sound of spanking. —n. 1785, from the verb.

spank² v. to move quickly and vigorously. 1807–10, probably a back formation from SPANKING.

spanker n. 1794, fore-and-aft sail nearest the stern; probably formed from English spank(ing) + *-er*¹. An earlier sense of anything fine or unusual is found in 1751.

spanking adj. Before 1666, very big or fine; later, moving at a lively pace (1738); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish spanke to strut); for suffix see -ING².

spar¹ n. stout pole. Before 1325 spar rafter, beam, stout pole; cognate with Old Saxon sparro rafter, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sparre (modern Dutch spar), Old High German sparro (modern German Sparren), Old Icelandic sparri (Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian sparre), from Proto-Germanic sparrōn*; related to Old English spere SPEAR¹ lance.

spar² v. to box. Probably before 1300 sparden go quickly, rush; later sparren (probably about 1380); perhaps borrowed from Middle French esparer to kick, from Italian sparare to fling (s- as an intensive form from Latin ex- + parare ward off, parry). The meaning of attack with the arms and fists, box, is recorded in 1755, and that of dispute, bandy words, in 1698. —n. Probably about 1400, a thrust or blow; from the verb.

spar³ n. shiny mineral that splits easily. 1581, borrowed from Low German Spar, from Middle Low German spar, sper; cognate with Old English spær- (in spærstān sparstone, gypsum), and spæren, adj., of gypsum or plaster. Compare FELDSPAR.

spare v. Probably about 1150 sparen; developed from Old English (before 830) sparian to refrain from harming, go free; cognate with Old Frisian sparia to spare, Old Saxon sparon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch sparen, Old High German sparōn, sparēn (modern German sparen), and Old Icelandic spara (Norwegian and Danish spare, Swedish spara); from the source of Old English spær sparing, frugal, Old High German spar, and Old Icelandic sparr sparing, frugal, from Proto-Germanic sparaz*. —adj. Probably about 1380, free for other use, additional, extra; related to Old English spær sparing, frugal, and sparian to spare. —n. Before 1325, a sparing, leniency, mercy; from the verb. The meaning of a spare thing or part is first recorded in 1642.

spark n. Probably before 1200 sperke, sparke, spær; developed from Old English (before 800) spearca; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sparke spark, Old Icelandic sparkr lively, from Proto-Germanic spark-*. —v. Probably about 1200 sparken; cognate with or possibly borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch sparken to spark, related to the noun; also cognate with Old Icelandic spraka to crackle, spark (Norwegian sprake, Swedish spraka, Danish sprage).

sparkle v. Probably before 1200 sperclen, sparklen* (not recorded before 1338) send out little sparks; frequentative verb form of Middle English sparke, v.; see SPARK; for suffix see -LE³. —n. About 1300, either a diminutive form of Middle English sparke SPARK, n.; for suffix see -LE¹; or from the verb sparklen; perhaps formed on analogy of the verb.

sparrow n. Probably before 1200 sparewe, sparwe; developed from Old English (before 800) spearwa; cognate with Gothic sparwa, Middle High German sparwe, and older Danish sparve (Swedish sparv, Danish and Norwegian spurv), from Proto-Germanic sparwōn*. The original w of the stem is reflected in the ending of Old High German sparo and in the vocalism of Old Icelandic sporr (from Proto-Germanic sparwaz*).

spare adj. 1727, widely spaced or spread out; borrowed from Latin sparsus scattered, past participle of spargere to scatter, spread.

spasm n. 1373 spasom, spasum; later spasme (1392); borrowed from Old French spasme, and from Latin spasmus a spasm, from Greek spasmós a spasm, convulsion, from spân draw up, tear away, contract violently, pull. —spasmodic adj. 1681 (earlier spasmodic, 1603, borrowed from French spasmatique); borrowed from New Latin spasmodicus convulsive, from Greek spasmódēs of the nature of a spasm, from spasmós; for suffix see -IC.

spastic adj. 1753, borrowed from Latin spasticus, from Greek spastikós afflicted with spasms; literally, drawing, pulling, from spân draw up; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1896, from the adjective.

spat¹ n. petty quarrel. 1804, of unknown origin. —v. 1809, probably from the noun.

spat² n. short gaiter covering the ankle. 1779 spatts, shortened form of spatterdash long gaiter to keep trousers or stockings from being spattered with mud (1687, formed from English spatter, v. + dash, v.) spate n. About 1425, flood, inundation; of unknown origin. A sudden or violent outpouring (of words, anger, etc.) is first recorded about 1614.

spathe n. 1785, bract that encloses a flower cluster; borrowed from Latin spatha spathe of a palm tree, broad, flat weapon or tool, from Greek spáthē broad blade.

spatial adj. 1847, occupying space; later, of or relating to space (1857); formed in English as an adjective to space, n., from Latin spatium SPACE + English -al¹.

spatter v. 1576 (implied in spattering) to scatter in drops or particles; possibly a frequentative verb form of the stem spat-, found in Dutch or Low German spatten to spout, burst, or the extended form spatter-, in Frisian spatterje and spetter-, in Flemish spetteren to spatter; for suffix in English see -ER⁴. —n. 1797, from the verb.

spatula n. 1525, borrowing of Latin spatula, spatula broad piece, spatula, diminutive of spatha broad, flat tool or weapon, from Greek spáthē broad blade. The Latin word was also borrowed into Middle English as spatule a medical instrument used to spread salve or clean wounds (about 1425).

spavin n. Probably before 1430 spaven; borrowed from Middle French espavain, esparvain, probably from Frankish spanvan* sparrow, related to Middle High German spanve SPARROW. The disease was perhaps so called from a comparison between a sparrow's ungainly gait and that of a horse affected with spavin. —spavined adj. Probably before 1430 spaveyned affected with spavin; formed from spaveyne, spaven spavin + -ed².

spawn v. 1413 spawnen (of fish) to reproduce; borrowed through Anglo-French espaundre, or Old French espaudre to spread out, pour out, from Latin expandere EXPAND. The meaning of give birth to, produce, is first recorded in 1594. —n. Before 1450 spawne the male reproductive glands of a fish; later, tiny eggs of fishes, etc. (1491); from the verb.

spay v. About 1410 spaien stab with a sword, kill; also, remove the ovaries of; borrowed from Anglo-French espeier cut with a sword, from Middle French espeer, from Old French espee sword, from Latin spatha broad, flat weapon or tool, from Greek spáthē broad blade.

speak v. Probably before 1200 speken; developed from Old English (about 1000) specan, variant of earlier sprecan to speak (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian spreka to speak, Old Saxon sprecan, Middle Dutch speken, spreken (modern Dutch spreken), Old High German spehhan, sprehhan (modern German sprechen), from Proto-Germanic sprekanan*. —n. Scottish and dialectal English. talk, speech. About 1300 speke, from the verb. 1949, in the compound Newspeak, in Orwell's novel Nineteen Eighty-Four, and later as a combining form to coin ad hoc compounds such as artspeak, videospoke, etc. —speaker n. 1303, a person who speaks; formed from English speak, v. + -er¹. The word was first applied to a person who presides over a legislative assembly about 1400.

speakeasy n. 1889, an unlicensed saloon; formed from speak, v. + easy softly; so called from the practice of speaking quietly about such an establishment in public, or speaking softly to avoid attracting undue attention, as by neighbors or the police. Speakeasy gained wide currency during the period of Prohibition (1920–1932).

spear¹ n. long thrusting weapon, lance. Old English (before 800) spere; cognate with Old Frisian spere, spiri spear, Old Saxon sper, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch speer, Old High German sper (modern German Speer), and Old Icelandic spjör, pl., spears, from Proto-Germanic speri*. —v. 1755, from the noun. —spearhead n. pointed head of a spear (about 1400); later, the leading part of an attack, undertaking, etc. (1929). —v. to lead. 1938, from the noun.

spear² n. sprout or shoot of a plant. 1509 speere church spire, variant of SPIRE. The sprout or shoot of a plant is first recorded in 1647.

special adj. Probably before 1200 spetiale uncommon, exceptional; later speciale (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French especial, and directly from Latin specialis individual, particular, from speciēs appearance, kind, sort; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Probably before 1300 speciale special person or thing; from the adjective. —specialist n. 1856, borrowed from French spécialiste, and formed in English from special, adj. + -ist. —speciality n. Probably before 1425 specialite, borrowed from Middle French specialité, specialité, and probably directly from Late Latin specialitās particularity, peculiarity, from Latin specialis special, adj.; for suffix see -ITY. —specialize v. 1613, to mention specially, formed from English special, adj. + -ize. The meaning of engage in a special study, some special line of business, etc., appeared in 1881. —specially adv. 1297, in a special manner; formed from English special + -*ly*¹. The sense of for a special purpose, expressly, is first recorded about 1315. —specialty n. About 1303 specialte special affection; borrowed from Old French especialté, from Late Latin specialitās speciality; for suffix see -TY². The meaning of special line of work is first recorded in 1860.

specie n. 1615, coin, money in the form of coins; from earlier in specie in the real or actual form (1551), from Latin in speciē in kind, ablative case of speciēs kind, form, sort.

species n. Before 1398, a classification in logic; borrowed from Latin speciēs kind, sort; originally, appearance. The sense in biology of a group of animals or plants that have common characteristics is first recorded in 1608.

specific adj. Before 1631, having a special quality; borrowed from French spécifique, and directly from Late Latin specificus constituting a species, from Latin speciēs kind, sort; for suffix see -FIC. The meaning of definite, precise, is first recorded in English in 1740. —n. 1661, specific remedy or cure; from the adjective. The sense of a specific quality, detail, etc., (as in the specifics of the accident), is first recorded in 1697. —specification n. 1615, conversion to something specific; borrowed from Medieval Latin specificationem (nominative specificatio), from Late Latin specificāre to specify; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of detailed statement, is first recorded in 1642. —specificity n. 1876, borrowed from French spécificité, or formed from English specific, adj. + -ity. —specify v. Before 1325 specifien speak of something in detail; borrowed from Old French spécifier, learned borrowing from Late Latin specificāre mention particularly, from specificus specific; for suffix see -FY.

specimen n. 1619, a pattern, model, borrowing of Latin specimen appearance, model, from specere to look at. The meaning of a single thing regarded as typical of its kind is first recorded in English in 1654. An earlier sense of a means of finding out, is found in 1610.

specious adj. About 1390 speciose pleasing to the sight, fair; borrowed from Latin speciōsus, from speciēs appearance; for suffix see -IOUS. The meaning of seemingly desirable, reasonable, or probable, but not really so, is first found in 1611.

speck n. Before 1398 spekke; developed from Old English (before 800) specca small spot, stain. The sense of tiny bit, particle, is first recorded in the early 1400's. —v. 1580, from the noun.

speckle n. 1440 spakle; later speckle (1495); probably related to Old English specca small spot, speck, and corresponding to Middle Dutch speckel speckle (modern Dutch spikkel), by loss of r from earlier sprekel*, as found in Middle High German sprekel a spot or speck; originally, an eruption on the skin. —v. 1570, from the noun, or back formation from earlier speckled, adj., marked with speckles or specks (1440 spaklyd; before 1387 splekked).

spectacle n. About 1340 spectakil public entertainment or display; borrowed from Old French spectacle, from Latin spectāculum a show, spectacle, from spectāre to view, watch, frequentative verb form of specere to look at. The sense of a glass lens to help a person's sight (usually spectacles) is first recorded in 1415. —spectacular adj. 1682, striking or imposing as a display; formed from Latin spectāculum spectacle + English suffix -ar. —n. 1890, a show or display; from the adjective.

spectator n. Before 1586, onlooker, observer; borrowed from Latin spectātor viewer, watcher, from spectāt-, past participle stem of spectāre to view, watch; for suffix see -OR².

specter n. 1605, borrowed from French spectre an image, figure, ghost, from Latin spectrum appearance, vision, apparition; see SPECTRUM.

spectro- a combining form meaning having to do with the spectrum of colors, as in spectroscope = an instrument for spectrum analysis. Formed by abstraction from spectrology, etc., and from English spectrum + the connective vowel -o-.

spectroscope n. 1861, formed from English spectro- + -scope. —spectroscopic adj. (1864) —spectroscopy n. (1870) spectrum n. 1611, apparition, specter; borrowed from Latin spectrum appearance, image, apparition, from specere to look at, view. The band of colors formed when a beam of light is broken up is first recorded in 1671.

speculate v. 1599, think carefully, consider; back formation from speculation or speculator, modeled on Latin speculātus, past participle of speculārī to watch, observe, from specula watchtower, from specere to look at; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of conjecture is first recorded in English before 1677, and the commercial sense of buy or sell hoping for profit, in 1785. —speculation n. About 1380 speculacioun careful thought; borrowed from Old French speculation, and directly from Late Latin speculatiōnem (nominative speculatiō) contemplation, observation, from Latin speculārī observe; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of financial speculation is first recorded in 1774. —speculative adj. About 1380 speculatif, borrowed from Old French speculatif (feminine speculative), and directly from Late Latin speculativus, from speculāt-, past participle stem of speculārī observe; for suffix see -IVE. —speculator n. 1555, person who engages in mental speculation; borrowed from Latin speculātor scout, sentinel, from speculāt-, past participle stem of speculārī observe; for suffix see -OR². The sense of a person who engages in financial speculation is first recorded in 1778.

speech n. Probably about 1150 speche; developed from Old English spæc act of speaking, manner of speaking, utterance (before 1050), variant of spæc (before 800), related to sprecan, specan to SPEAK and cognate with Old Frisian spreke, spreze speech, Old Saxon spraka, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sprake (modern Dutch spraak), Old High German sprāha (modern German Sprache), and Old Icelandic spraki rumor, report, from Proto-Germanic sprækijō*.

speed n. Probably about 1200 sped swiftness, quickness; developed from Old English (before 800) spēd success, prosperity, advancement, swiftness; cognate with Old Saxon spōd success, prosperity, speed, Middle Dutch spoed (modern Dutch spoed speed), and Old High German spuot, from Proto-Germanic spōdōs*. —v. Probably before 1200 speden to travel swiftly; developed from Old English (993) spēdan to succeed, prosper, advance, from spēd success, speed, and cognate with Old Saxon spōdian to prosper, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch spoeden to speed, and Old High German spuoten to succeed, prosper (modern German sputen make haste, hurry). —speedy adj. 1375 spedy moving with speed, swift; formed from sped speed, n. + *-y*¹.

speleology n. 1895, borrowed from French spéléologie, from Latin spelaeum cave (from Greek spēlaion) + French -logie -logy. Greek spēlaion is related to spēos cave, grotto, and spēlynx (genitive spēlyngos) cave; compare SPELUNKING.

spell¹ v. name the letters of. Before 1325 spellen to read letter by letter, read with difficulty; probably developed from Old English spellian to tell, speak, and borrowed from Old French espeller declare, spell, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German spellōn to tell, Old Icelandic spjalla to talk, converse, and Gothic spillōn, from the same root as Old English spell story, discourse; see SPELL²). The meaning of write or say the letters of a word is first recorded before 1400.

spell² n. incantation, charm. Old English spell story, speech (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon spell story, Old High German spel, Old Icelandic spjall, and Gothic spill, from Proto-Germanic spellan*, earlier spelman*. The meaning of a set of words with magical powers, incantation, charm, is first recorded in English in 1579; the word is also a part of the compound GOSPEL.

spell³ v. work in place of (another) for a time. 1595, developed from Old English (about 960) spelian to take the place of, represent, related to gespelia, spala substitute, of uncertain origin. —n. Before 1625, turn of work taken to relieve another; earlier, relay, shift of workers (1593); related to the verb, and perhaps directly representing Old English gespelia substitute. The meaning of a period of some work or occupation is first recorded in 1706, and that of an indefinite period of time, in 1728.

spellbound adj. 1799, formed from English *spell*² charm + *bound*¹ fastened. —spellbind v. 1808, formed from *spell*² charm + bind, as a verb to spellbound.

spelt n. Old English (before 1000) spelt, corresponding to Old Saxon spelta spelt, Middle Dutch spelte, spelt (modern Dutch spelt), Old High German spelza (modern German Spelz, Spelt); an early borrowing from Late Latin spelta spelt.

spelunking n. 1946, formed from obsolete English spelunk cave or cavern + -ing. Spelunk is first recorded as spelunke, about 1378; borrowed from Old French spelunke, from Latin spēlunca a cave, cavern, grotto, from Greek spēlynx (genitive spēlyngos); compare SPELEOLOGY. —spelunker n. 1942, formed from spelunk, n. + *-er*¹.

spend v. About 1175 spenden pay out, expend; developed from Old English -spendan (as in forspendan use up); borrowed from Latin expendere to expend, and cognate with Old High German spendōn (modern German spenden) to give, present, bestow, and Middle Low German and Middle Dutch spenden, also borrowed from Latin expendere. —spendthrift n. 1601, formed from English spend, v. + thrift, n., savings, profits, wealth.

sperm¹ n. male reproductive cell. About 1375 sperme semen; borrowed probably from Old French esperme, and directly from Late Latin sperma seed, semen, from Greek spérma seed, from spérein to sow, scatter. —spermatic adj. 1392 spermatik containing, conveying, or producing sperm; borrowed from Middle French spermatique, and directly from Late Latin spermatikus of sperm, from Greek spermatikós, from spérma (genitive spérmatos) seed; for suffix see -IC.

sperm² n. = spermaceti. 1839, shortened form of SPERMACEITI. The term sperm whale (1839) is a shortening of spermaceti whale; so called because the waxy substance in its head was erroneously identified with animal sperm.

spermaceti n. Probably 1471, borrowed from Medieval Latin sperma ceti sperm of a whale (Late Latin sperma seed; and Medieval Latin ceti, genitive of Latin cetus large sea animal).

spermato- a combining form meaning seed, sperm, as in spermatocyte = a germ cell that produces sperms. Borrowing of Greek spermato-, combining form of spérma (genitive spérmatos) seed, semen, SPERM¹.

spermatozoon n., pl. -zoa 1836–39, New Latin, formed from spermato- + -zoon, from Greek zōion animal.

spew v. Probably before 1200 spewen; developed from Old English spīwan (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian spīa to

spew, spit, Old Saxon spūwan, Middle Dutch spūwen (modern Dutch spuwen), Old High German spūwan (modern German speien), Old Icelandic spýja (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish spy), and Gothic speiwan, from Proto-Germanic spīwanan*.

sphagnum n. 1741, New Latin, from Latin sphagnos a kind of lichen, from Greek sphágnos a spiny shrub.

sphere n. Before 1450 sphere hollow globe containing the stars and planets; alteration (influenced by Latin sphaera) of spere the cosmos (probably before 1300), and globe, ball (before 1382); borrowed from Old French espere, and probably directly from Latin sphaera globe, ball, celestial sphere, from Greek sphaíra globe, ball. A sense of place is recorded in 1601, and that of the whole range of something in 1602. —spherical adj. (1523) —spheroid n. (1570) sphincter n. 1578, borrowed from Middle French sphincter, and directly from Late Latin sphinctēr contractile muscle, from Greek sphinkteír band, anything that binds tight, from sphíngein to squeeze, bind.

sphinx n. Probably about 1421 Spynx; later Sphinx (1579–80); borrowed from Latin Sphinx monster having a lion's body with a woman's head, from Greek Sphínx (genitive Sphingós), back formation from sphíngein to squeeze, bind, with reference to the monster in Greek mythology that strangled everyone who could not solve the riddle it posed.

spice n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French espice, from Late Latin speciēs (plural) spices, goods, wares, from Latin, kind, sort. —v. Before 1325 spicen (implied in spiced) prepare with a spice or spices, season; from the noun. —spicy adj. 1562, like a spice, sharp and fragrant; formed from English spice, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of racy, salacious, is first recorded in 1844.

spick-and-span or spic-and-span adj. 1665, shortened form of spick-and-span-new new as a recently made spike and chip of wood (1579–80, from spick SPIKE¹ nail + span-new very new, borrowed from Old Icelandic spān-nýr, from spānn chip + nýr new).

spicule n. 1785, borrowed from Latin spīculum, diminutive of spīca ear of grain, SPIKE².

spider n. 1440 spyde (error for spyder), alteration of earlier spithre (1340); developed from Old English spīthra, earlier spīnthra*, from Proto-Germanic spenthro*, formed from spenwanan* to SPIN. —spiderweb n. (before 1649; earlier spiders webbe, 1539) —spidery adj. (1825) spiel v. 1894, to speak in a glib manner; earlier, to play circus music (1870); borrowed from German spielen to play, from Old High German spīlōn; cognate with Old English spīlian to play, Old Frisian spīlia, Old Saxon spīlōn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch spelen. —n. 1896, glib speech, pitch; probably from the verb, though with influence of German Spiel play, game.

spiffy adj. 1853, smart, neat, trim, of uncertain origin.

spigot n. Before 1382, plug used to stop the hole of a cask; probably borrowed from Old French espigot*, represented by dialectal (Gascony) espigot core of a fruit, small ear of grain, Old French espigeot badly-threshed ear of grain, diminutive forms from Old Provençal espiga ear of grain, from Latin spīca ear of grain. The valve for controlling the flow of a liquid, faucet, appeared about 1530.

spike¹ n. large nail. 1345–46, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic spik splinter, spiker nail, from Proto-Germanic spīkaz*, and Middle Swedish spike, spijk nail, Norwegian and Swedish spik, Danish spig; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch spiker nail [modern Dutch spijker], Middle High German spīcher, Old English spīcing large nail). —v. 1624, from the noun.

spike² n. ear of grain. Probably before 1300 spyc, borrowed from Latin spīca ear of grain.

spill v. Probably before 1200 spillen to waste; before 1325, to shed (blood); about 1340, let (liquid) fall or run out; developed from Old English (about 950) spīllan destroy, kill, variant of spīldan, from Proto-Germanic spēlthijanan*, and corresponding to Old Saxon spīldian destroy, kill, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch spīlden, spīllen to waste, squander, spīll (modern Dutch spillen), Old High German spīldan destroy, waste, and Old Icelandic spīlla destroy, kill (Swedish spīlla to shed, waste, spill, Norwegian spille, Danish spilde). —n. Before 1845, a fall or tumble; from the verb. The spilling of liquid is first recorded about 1848.

spin v. Before 1250 spinnen (implied in sponnen spun); developed from Old English (before 800) spinnan draw out and twist fibers into thread; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch spinnen to spin, Old High German spinnan (modern German spinnen), Old Icelandic spinna (Swedish spinna, Norwegian spinne, Danish spinde), and Gothic spinnan, from Proto-Germanic spenwanan*. The meaning of revolve, turn around rapidly, is first recorded in 1667. —n. a spinning. 1831, from the verb. —spinner n. Before 1250 spinnere; probably formed in English from spinnen + -ere *-er*¹. —spinning wheel (1404) spinach n. Before 1399 spynoch; as a surname Spinach (1267); borrowed from Old French espinache, from Old Provençal espinarc, spinarch, from Catalan espinac or Spanish espinaca, from Spanish-Arabic ispīnākh, variant of Arabic isbānākh, isfānākh, from Persian aspanākh spinach.

spindle n. Before 1225, alteration (with added d after n, as in sound and thunder) of Old English (before 800) spīnel, related to spinnan to SPIN; for suffix see *-LE*¹. Old English spīnel is cognate with Old Frisian spīndel spindle, Old Saxon spīnīla, and Old High German spīnīla (modern German Spindel). —v. 1441–42 (of plants, etc. implied in spīndling grow tall and slender); from the noun in the sense of a stalk, stem, or shoot. —spīndly adj. 1651, formed from spīndle, n. + *-y*¹.

spindrift n. 1600 spenedrift; Scottish; formed from spene, alteration of spoon to sail before the wind (1576, of uncertain origin) + drift, n.

spine n. About 1400, backbone; later, pointed, thornlike part (probably before 1422); borrowed from Old French espine, and directly from Latin spīna backbone; originally, thorn or prick. —spinal adj. 1578, of or having to do with the backbone; borrowed from Late Latin spinālis of or pertaining to the spine or a thorn, from Latin spīna spine; for suffix see -AL¹. —spiny adj. 1586, like a spine; later, covered with spines (1604); formed from English spine + -y¹.

spinet n. 1936, a small upright piano; earlier spinette small harpsichord (1664); borrowed from earlier French espinette (now épinette), from Middle French, from Italian spinetta, perhaps diminutive of spina thorn, spine, from Latin spīna thorn, SPINE; so called because the strings of the spinet were plucked with quills; for suffix see -ET; or possibly named in allusion to the inventor, Giovanni Spinetti.

spinnaker n. 1866 spinniker, of uncertain origin; perhaps derived from spin in the sense of go rapidly; or possibly a formation of spinx, mispronunciation of Sphinx, the name of the first yacht known to carry this type of sail.

spinster n. Before 1376 spinster female spinner of thread; formed from Middle English spinnen to SPIN + -ster -ster. Since spinning was commonly done by women, the term spinster was often used with the names of women to denote their occupation, and was later used (from the 1600's to the early 1900's) in the legal documents for an unmarried woman.

spiral adj. 1551, borrowed from Middle French spiral, and directly from Medieval Latin spirālis winding, coiling, from Latin spīra coil, from Greek spētra coil, twist, wreath; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. 1656, from the adjective. —v. 1834, from the noun.

spirant n. = fricative. 1862, borrowed from Latin spīrantem (nominative spīrāns) breathing, present participle of spīrāre to breathe; for suffix see -ANT.

spire n. About 1250, sprout, shoot; developed from Old English (before 1000) spīr; cognate with Middle Low German spīr small point or top, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch spier shoot, blade of grass, and Old Icelandic spīra reed, slender tree (Swedish spira, Norwegian and Danish spire sprout, spire), from Proto-Germanic spīraz*. The extended meaning of the tapering top part of a tower or steeple is first recorded in 1596. —v. Before 1325 spiren to send forth or develop shoots, sprout; from the noun.

spirit n. About 1250, animating or vital principle, breath of life; borrowed from Old French esprit, and directly from Latin spīritus (genitive spīritūs) soul, courage, vigor, breath, related to spīrāre to breathe.

The original English uses of spirit are mainly derived from passages in the Vulgate, in which Latin spīritus is used to translate Greek pneūma and Hebrew rūah. The meaning of a supernatural being, is first recorded probably before 1350, and the sense of the essential principle (as in the spirit of independence), before 1382. The plural spirits volatile substance is first recorded in 1610; and strong alcoholic liquor, in 1678. —v. 1592, make more lively; from the noun. The meaning of carry off or away secretly is first recorded in 1666. —spiritual adj. About 1303 spirituele of, relating to, or consisting of spirit, relating to sacred or religious matters; borrowed from Old French spirituel, and directly from Medieval Latin spiritualis of or pertaining to breath, wind, air, or spirit, from Latin spīritus spirit; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. Probably before 1400, the church; later, a spiritual person (1532); from the adjective. A spiritual song, is first recorded in 1870. —spiritualism n. 1796, tendency towards a spiritual view of things; formed in English from spiritual, adj. + -ism, perhaps on the model of French spiritualisme. —spiritualist n. 1649, formed from English spiritual, adj. + -ist, perhaps on the model of French spiritualiste.

spirochete or spirochaete n. 1877, borrowed from New Latin Spirochaeta, the genus name; formed from Greek spētra a coil + chaltē hair.

spit¹ v. expel saliva. Probably before 1200 spitten, developed from Old English spittan (about 950, Anglian), probably a dialectal variant of spētan (West Saxon), of imitative origin, and found in dialectal German spitzen to spit, Danish and Norwegian spytte, Swedish spotta, and Icelandic spýta; compare SPITTLE. —n. Before 1325, from the verb.

spit² n. sharp-pointed rod on which meat is roasted. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English spitu (about 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch spit, spet spit (modern Dutch spit), Old High German spiz spit (modern German Spieß), spizzi pointed (modern German spitz), Swedish spett spit, and Danish spid, from Proto-Germanic spituz*. —v. Probably before 1200 spiten to put on a spit, thrust through with a spit; from the noun.

spite n. Probably before 1300, contempt, disdain, ill will; shortened form of despit malice, DESPITE. —v. Probably before 1400 spiten to regard with spite; from the noun.

spittle n. 1481, probably alteration (influenced by SPIT¹) of earlier spatel saliva (before 1250); developed from Old English spætl, spātl (before 899), from Proto-Germanic spætan*, related to spētan to SPIT¹.

spittoon n. 1823, formed from spit¹, v. + -oon.

spitz n. 1842, borrowing of German Spitz (also, rarely, Spitzhund), from spitz pointed.

splash v. 1715, probably alteration of PLASH, with initial s regarded as intensive to the meaning. —n. 1736, from the verb. —slashy adj. 1834, sounding like a splash; 1836, attracting attention, sensational; formed from English splash + -y¹.

splatter v. 1784–85 (found earlier in splatterdash, 1772, variant of spatterdash leggings 1687), perhaps a blend of spatter and splash. —n. 1819, from the verb.

splay v. Before 1338 splayen to unfold, unfurl; shortened form of desplayen to DISPLAY. The meaning of spread out, extend, is first recorded probably before 1405.

spleen n. Probably before 1300 splen; borrowed through Old French esplen, espien, or directly from Latin splēn, from Greek splēn.

In the Middle Ages and even into the 1700's the spleen was believed to be the seat of emotions, especially of low spirits, found in 1393. The meaning of bad temper, is found in 1594, and in vent one's spleen (1885). —splenetic adj. 1544, borrowed from Late Latin splēneticus, from Latin splēn SPLEEN; for suffix see -IC. The word is also found as a noun splenetik a person afflicted with a disorder of the spleen (before 1398). The meaning of irascible, is found in 1592.

splendid adj. 1624, sumptuous, grand, magnificent; perhaps a shortened form of earlier splendidus (probably before 1425), on the model of, and probably borrowed directly from, French splendide, and borrowed directly from Latin splendidus resplendent, brilliant, from splendēre be bright, shine. —splendiferous adj. About 1460; borrowed from Medieval Latin splendifer*, Late Latin splendōrifer (splendor + ferre to bear); reformed 1843 from Medieval Latin splendifer*, for suffix see -OUS. The latter formation is considered a playful usage, similar to splendacious (1843, formed in English from splend(id) + -acious).

splendor n. Probably before 1475 splendure great brightness, brilliant light; borrowed from Middle French esplendour, and directly from Latin splendor, from splendēre be bright; for suffix see -OR¹. —splendorous adj. (1591) splice v. Before 1625 (nautical use) join together by weaving; back formation from earlier splicing act of joining together ropes, etc., by weaving (1524–25); borrowed from Middle Dutch splicinge, verbal noun of splicen to splice. The general sense of fasten together is first recorded in 1626, later in reference to a motion picture film in 1912, and to genetic materials, such as DNA, in 1975. —n. act or result of splicing. 1627, from the verb.

splint n. Probably before 1300 splente flexible strip of wood or metal; earlier in splente strip of wood (1267), later splynte (1376–78); probably borrowed from Middle Low German splinte, splente thin piece of iron, related to Middle Dutch splint splint (modern Dutch splint), and cognate with Norwegian and Swedish splint pin, wedge, splinter. The meaning of a piece of wood, etc., to hold a broken bone in place appeared before 1400. —v. 1392, bind with a splint; from the noun.

splinter n. Before 1325 splentre; later splintre (before 1398); borrowed from Middle Dutch splinter, splenter a splinter, related to splinte SPLINT. —adj. 1935, (as in splinter party), from the noun. —v. 1582, from the noun.

split v. 1590, to break up; 1593, to divide, cleave, rend; borrowed from middle Dutch splicen; cognate with Middle Low German splicen to split, Middle High German spliczen (modern German spalten), and Old Frisian splic to split, from Proto-Germanic spleit-/split-*. —n. 1597, from the verb. —adj. 1648, from the past participle of the verb.

plotch n. 1601, perhaps a blend of spot, blot, and botch; compare later blotch. —v. 1654, from the noun. —plotchy adj. (1863) splurge n. 1830, ostentatious display; perhaps a blend of splash and surge. The sense of an extravagant indulgence in spending is found in 1928. —v. 1843, to show off, from the noun. The sense of spend extravagantly, is first recorded in 1934.

splutter n. 1677, noise or fuss; later, violent and confused talk (1688); perhaps variant of SPUTTER, intensified by substitution of the prefixal spl- as in splash and splatter. —v. 1728, from the noun.

spoil v. Probably about 1300 spoulen undress (someone), strip (an enemy) of arms and armor; later spoulen (about 1330); borrowed from Old French espoillier to strip, plunder, from Latin spoliare to strip of clothing, rob, from spolium armor stripped from an enemy, booty. Middle English spoulen may be in some uses a shortened form of despoilen DESPOIL. —n. Often, spoils. About 1340; borrowed from Old French espoille, espoille, from Latin spolium booty.

spoke n. Probably before 1300 (of a wheel), developed from Old English spāca spoke (before 899), related to spicing large nail, SPIKE¹. Old English spāca is cognate with Old Frisian spēke spoke, Old Saxon spēka, Middle Dutch speke, speec, and Old High German speicha (modern German Speiche), from Proto-Germanic spaikōn*. —v. 1720, from the noun.

spokesman n. 1519, an interpreter; later, a person who speaks for another or others (1540); irregularly formed from English spoke (past participle of speak) + man, on analogy of craftsman, landsman, etc. —spokesperson n. 1972, coined to avoid reference to the subject's sex. —spokeswoman n. (1654) spoliation n. Probably about 1400 spoliacion; borrowed from Latin spoliatiōnem (nominative spoliatiō), from spoliare to plunder, rob; see SPOIL; for suffix see -ATION.

spondee n. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French spondee, from Latin spondēus, from Greek spondēos the meter originally used in chants accompanying libations, from spondē libation, related to spondein make a drink offering.

spondulicks n. 1856, money, cash, of unknown origin, used by Mark Twain and by O. Henry and since then adopted in British English.

sponge n. Old English (about 1000) sponge, borrowed from Latin spongia, spongia a sponge or the sea animal from which it comes, from Greek spongiā, related to spóngos sponge. —v. 1393 spongen (implied in spongyng, verbal noun) wipe or clean with a sponge; from the noun. The meaning of live on others in a dependent or parasitic manner is found in 1673.

sponson n. 1835 sponcing; 1838 sponson; nautical use, of unknown origin.

sponsor n. 1651, godfather or godmother; borrowing of Late Latin spōnsor sponsor in baptism, Latin, a surety guaranty, from spōns-, past participle stem of spondere give assurance, promise solemnly; for suffix see -OR². The sense of a person who makes a pledge on behalf of another, is first recorded in 1677 and that of a person who pays for a radio (or, after 1947, television) program in order to advertise, in 1931. —v. 1884, from the noun.

spontaneous adj. Probably about 1200 sponntaneuss acting of one's own accord; borrowed from Late Latin spontāneus willing, from Latin (suā) sponte of one's own accord, willingly; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of occurring without external stimulus, is first recorded in 1656. —spontaneity n. 1651, formed as a noun to English spontaneous; for suffix see -ITY.

spoof n. 1889, a hoax, deception; extended sense of earlier Sponf, a game involving hoaxing (1884). The sense of a parody is first recorded in 1914. —v. 1889, to hoax or deceive, from the noun.

spook n. 1801, borrowed from Dutch spook, from Middle Dutch spooc spook, ghost, related to Middle Low German spōk spook, of unknown origin. —v. 1867, haunt, scare; from the noun. —spooky adj. (1854) spool n. Before 1325, borrowed from Old North French spole a spool, and directly from Middle Dutch spoel a spool; cognate with Middle Low German spōle and Old High German spuola spool (modern German Spule), from Proto-Germanic spōlōn*. —v. 1603, from the noun.

spoon n. About 1300 spōn eating utensil (implied in sponeful spoonful); also, chip of wood (probably before 1300); found in Old English (before 800) spōn chip, shaving; cognate with Middle Low German spōn wooden spatula, Middle Dutch spaen chip, splinter (modern Dutch spaen), Old High German spān (modern German Span), and Old Icelandic spānn, spōnn chip, tile, spoon, from Proto-Germanic spānuz*. The sense of an eating utensil was perhaps borrowed from Old Icelandic spōnn. —v. 1715, from the noun. The meaning of court or flirt is first recorded in 1831.

spoonerism n. 1900 (perhaps about 1885), accidental transposition of sounds of two or more words, such as "a well-boiled icicle" for "a well-oiled bicycle;" 1900, formed in allusion to W. A. Spooner, who was famous for such mistakes +English -ism.

spoor n. 1823, borrowed from Afrikaans spoor, from Middle Dutch spor, spoor; cognate with Old English, Old High German, and Old Icelandic spor footprint, track, trace, modern German Spur, Danish and Norwegian spor, and Swedish spår. —v. 1850, borrowed from Afrikaans, from Middle Dutch sporen, from spor, spoor, n.

sporadic adj. Before 1689, (of diseases) occurring in scattered instances; shortened form of sporadical (1654); borrowed from Medieval Latin sporadicus scattered, from Greek sporadikós scattered, from sporás (genitive sporádos) scattered, from spōrā a sowing; see SPORE; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL. The meaning of happening at intervals, occasional, is first recorded in 1847.

sporangium n. 1821, New Latin, formed from Greek spōrā seed, SPORE + angēon vessel, from ángos vessel, pail.

spore n. 1836, borrowed from New Latin spora, from Greek spōrā seed, a sowing, related to spōros sowing, and spērein to sow.

sporo- a combining form meaning spore, as in sporogenesis = the formation of spores. Formed in English from New Latin spora SPORE + English connective -o-.

sporran n. 1818, borrowed from Gaelic sporan, Irish sparan purse, of uncertain origin. An earlier Scottish form sparren appeared in 1752.

sport n. About 1400 sporte pleasant pastime, amusement, diversion; shortened from earlier dysporte (about 1303); borrowed from Anglo-French disport, from Old French desport pastime, recreation, pleasure, sport, from desporter to divert, amuse, please, play; see DISPORT. The sense of a game involving physical exercise, is first recorded in English in 1523. —v. Probably before 1400 sporten to amuse; shortened from disporten to DISPORT. The meaning of display, show off, is found in 1712. —adj. 1582, from the noun. —sporting adj. (1653) —sports adj. (1897); —n. (1594). —sportsman n. (1706–07) —sportsmanship n. (1745) spot n. Probably before 1200 spot small mark, blot, stain; as a surname Spotte (1194); perhaps, in part, developed from Old English splot a spot, and borrowed from the same Germanic source as the cognate forms Middle Dutch spotte, spot speck, spot, East Frisian spot speck, North Frisian spōt speck, piece of ground, and Old Icelandic spotti small piece, bit. The sense of a particular place or site, is first recorded probably about 1380. —v. About 1250 spotten; from the noun. The sense of note or recognize was originally applied to a criminal or suspected person (1718), and later, used generally (1860). —spotless adj. (probably about 1380) —spotty adj. 1340, speckled; formed from spot, spotte, n. + -y¹. The sense of lacking in uniformity, is first recorded in 1812.

spouse n. Probably before 1200 spuse married woman, wife; also, a betrothed man, bridegroom (probably about 1225), and spouse (about 1280); borrowed from Old French spus (feminine spuse), also espus (feminine espuse), and espouse from Latin spōsus bridegroom (feminine spōnsa bride), from the masculine and feminine past participles of spondere to bind oneself, promise solemnly.

spout v. Before 1325 sputen discharge (a liquid), gush with water, blood, etc.; later spouten (before 1338); cognate with Middle Dutch spuiten to spout (modern Dutch spuiten), North Frisian spūtji spout, squirt, and probably with Middle Dutch spūwen to spit, SPEW. —n. 1392–93 spowte pipe for carrying off water; in the place name Sputekelde (about 1200); cognate with Middle Dutch spoite spout, North Frisian spūtj spout, squirt. The sense of a forceful discharge of water, stream, jet, is first recorded in English in 1500–20.

sprain n. 1601, of uncertain origin. —v. 1622, probably from the noun.

sprat n. 1469 spratte, variant of sprotte (1309–10); developed from Old English (about 1000) sprot a small herring; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch sprot, modern German Sprotte, all meaning a sprat.

sprawl v. About 1300 spraulen move convulsively, writhe, spread oneself out; developed from Old English (about 1000) spræawlian move convulsively; of unknown origin. —n. 1719, from the verb.

spray¹ n. liquid in drops, sprinkle. Before 1621, noun use of obsolete spray to sprinkle (1527); borrowed from Middle Dutch sprayen, spraeyen (from Proto-Germanic spræwjanan*); cognate with Middle High German spræjen, spræwen to squirt, spray, modern German sprühen, and modern Dutch sproeien. —v. 1829, from the noun.

spray² n. small branch. About 1250, leafy branches and twigs collectively; as a place name Spray (1179); possibly related to Old English spræc shoot, twig; see SPRIG.

spread v. Probably before 1200 spreaden, spradden extend over an area; developed from Old English -sprædan (especially in tōsprædan to spread out, and sprædung spreading); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sprēden, spreiden to spread (modern Dutch spreiden), Old High German and modern German spreiten, and Old Swedish sprēdha, from Proto-Germanic spraidijanan*. —adj. About 1511, from the past participle of the verb. —n. 1626, act of spreading; from the verb. The meaning of the extent or expanse of something is found in 1691, and that of food for spreading, as butter or jam since 1812. —spreadsheet n. (1982) spre n. 1804, perhaps alteration of French esprit lively wit, from Middle French; see ESPRIT.

sprig n. Before 1398 sprigge shoot or twig; probably related to Old English spræc shoot, twig; cognate with Middle Low German sprīk, sprok dry twig, Middle Dutch sproc, modern Dutch sprokkel, Old High German sprahhula splinter, chaff, and Old Icelandic sprek dry wood.

sprightly adj. 1596, formed from English spright (before 1533, variant of SPRITE spirit) + *-ly*². —adv. 1604, from the adjective; for suffix see *-ly*¹.

spring v. Probably before 1200 springen move suddenly, leap, jump; developed from Old English springan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian springa to spring, Middle Dutch springhen (modern Dutch springen), Old High German springan (modern German springen), and Old Icelandic springa spring up, burst through (Swedish springa, Danish and Norwegian springe), from Proto-Germanic sprengjanan*. —n. Old English (816) spring source of a stream or river, wellspring, related to springan to spring, and cognate with Middle Low German spring spring, Old Frisian spring leap, Old Saxon and Old High German gispring spring. The elastic device that returns to its own shape, is found in 1428, and that of the season of the year after winter (when plants spring up) before 1398.

springbok n. 1775, borrowed from Afrikaans (spring to leap, from Middle Dutch springhen to SPRING + bok antelope, from Middle Dutch boc BUCK¹).

sprinkle v. Before 1382 sprynkelen (implied in sprynkklyd, participial adjective) mark with spots, scatter in drops; cognate with Dutch sprengelen to sprinkle, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and Middle High German sprengel, sprinkel spot, speck, Swedish spräcklig speckled, Old Icelandic sprækr lively, nimble. The meaning of rain lightly is first recorded in 1778. —n. Before 1382 sprynkill device for sprinkling holy water; related to the verb. —sprinkling n. About 1450, action of someone who sprinkles; later, small amount (1594); formed from English sprinkle, v. + *-ing*¹.

sprint v. 1566, to spring, dart; probably alteration of sprenten to leap, spring (before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic spretta to jump up, and dialectal Swedish sprinta to jump, hop, related to Old Icelandic spradhka to wriggle).

The meaning of run at full speed for a short distance, is first recorded in English in 1871 (implied in sprinting). —n. Before 1790, from the verb.

sprit n. Probably before 1300 spreet pole used for propelling a boat; later spryt (probably before 1400); developed from Old English (before 800) sprēot pole; originally, a sprout, shoot, branch, which is cognate with Middle Low German sprēt pole, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch spriet, and North Frisian sprit, spret.

sprite n. About 1303 spryt spirit, sprite; borrowed from Old French esprit, esprit spirit, from Latin spīritus SPRIT.

sprocket n. 1536, piece of timber used in framing; of unknown origin. The sense of a projection from the rim of a wheel, engaging the links of a chain, is first recorded in 1750.

sprout v. Probably before 1200 spruten to shoot forth, bud; later sprouten (before 1400); developed from Old English -sprūtan, as in āsprūtan to sprout; cognate with Old Frisian sprūta to sprout, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sprūten (modern Dutch spruiten), Old High German sprūozan (modern German sprießen), from Proto-Germanic spreutanan*, Middle High German sprützen to squirt, sprout (modern German spritzen to squirt), and Gothic sprautō, adv., quickly, soon. —n. Before 1400 sproute; from the verb.

spruce¹ n. evergreen tree. 1670, from spruse, adj. made of spruce wood (1412); literally, Prussian, from Spruce, Sprus, Pruce Prussia (about 1378); borrowed from Anglo-French Prus, Prus Prussia; probably the tree was so called because it was grown widely in Prussia.

spruce² adj. neat, trim. 1589, brisk, smart, lively, perhaps a special use of Spruce Prussian (as in jerkins of spruce leather 1466, a popular style in the 1400's made in Prussia and considered smart-looking); see SPRUCE¹. The meaning of neat, trim, is first recorded in 1599. —v. 1594, from the adjective.

spry adj. 1746, dialectal English, perhaps shortened and altered form of SPRIGHTLY; or borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish sprygg lively).

spud n. 1440 spudde small or poor knife; of uncertain origin. The sense of a spade is found in 1667. The sense of a potato is first recorded in 1845 as a New Zealand usage.

spume n. Before 1393, foam, froth; borrowed from Old French spume, espume, from Latin spūma FOAM.

spumone or spumoni n. 1929, borrowing of Italian spumone (singular), spumoni (plural), from spuma foam, from Latin spūma FOAM.

spunk n. 1536 spunk a spark; Scottish, from Gaelic spung tinder, pith, sponge; compare Middle Irish spunge tinder (modern Irish spunc sponge, tinder, spark, courage, spunk); borrowed from Latin spongia SPONGE. The sense of courage, pluck, mettle, first appeared in 1773. —spunky adj. 1786, formed from English spunk + *-y*¹.

spur n. Probably before 1200 spure device for poking the side of a horse; developed from Old English spura, spora (before 800), related to spurnan to kick, SPURN. Old English spura, spora (from Proto-Germanic spurōn*) are cognate with Middle Dutch spōre spur (modern Dutch spoor), Old High German sporo (modern German Sporn), and Old Icelandic spori (Danish and Norwegian spore, Swedish sporre). The sense of anything that urges on or stimulus is first recorded about 1390, and is from the verb. —v. Probably before 1200 spuren; from the noun. The sense of urge or prompt is first recorded about 1200.

spurge n. plant with an acrid milky juice. 1373 sporge; later spurge (before 1400); borrowed from Old French espurge, from espurgier to purge, from Latin expūrgāre (ex- out + pūrgāre to PURGE); so called from the plant's purgative properties.

spurious adj. 1598, born out of wedlock; borrowed from Latin spurius illegitimate, from spurius, n., illegitimate child, probably from Etruscan; for suffix see -IOUS. The sense of having an irregular origin, not properly constituted, is first recorded in 1601, and that of false, sham, in 1615.

spurn v. Probably before 1200 spurnen to kick, trip, stumble; later, to reject, despise (before 1382); developed from Old English (about 1000) spurnan to kick, reject, scorn, despise; cognate with Old Frisian spurna to kick, Old Saxon and Old High German spurnan, and Old Icelandic sporna, spyrna, sperna (Swedish spjärna to spurn), from Proto-Germanic spurnanan*. Related to SPUR.

spurt¹ v. gush out, squirt. 1570, variant of spirt; perhaps cognate with Middle High German spürzen, spürzen to spit, and sprützen to squirt, SPROUT. —n. 1716 spirt, from the verb, and probably from *spurt*² in by spurts flowing intermittent (1644).

spurt² n. brief burst of effort or activity. Before 1566, a short spell or period of time; variant of spirt brief period of time (about 1550); of uncertain origin. The sense of a brief burst of effort or activity is first recorded before 1591. —v. 1559 spirt, from the noun.

sputnik n. 1957, borrowing of Russian spútnik satellite; literally, traveling companion, from Old Slavic sŭpŭtníkŭ (from sŭ together, with + pŭtŭ way, journey + -nik).

sputter v. 1598 (implied in sputtering), to spit out saliva, etc., with explosive sounds; cognate with Dutch sputteren to sputter, and sputten to SPOUT; for suffix see -ER⁴. The meaning of utter in an explosive manner is found before 1677, and that of make spitting sounds, as hot fat, in 1692. —n. 1673, from the verb.

sputum n. 1693, borrowing of Latin spūtum, noun use of neuter past participle of spuere to spit.

spy v. About 1250 spien to watch in a secret manner; borrowed from Old French espier to spy, from a probable Frankish word cognate with Old High German spehōn to look out for, scout, spy (modern German spähen), Middle Low German spēen, Middle Dutch spien (modern Dutch spieden), and Old Icelandic spā to foretell, predict (Norwegian and Swedish spå, Danish spaa), from Proto-Germanic speH-*.

The sense of catch sight of, notice, observe, is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1300. —n. About 1250 spie one who spies on others; borrowed from Old French espier a spy, from espier to spy.

squab n. 1682, very young bird (in 1640, unformed, lumpish person); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian word (compare dialectal Swedish skvabb loose or fat flesh, skvabba fat woman, and dialectal Norwegian skvabb soft wet mass), from Proto-Germanic (s)kwab-*. These Scandinavian words are probably cognate with Old Saxon quappa eelpout (a fish).

squabble n. 1602, probably of imitative origin; similar to dialectal Swedish skvabbel quarrel, and dialectal German schwabbeln to babble, prattle. —v. 1604, probably from the noun.

squad n. 1649, borrowed from French esquade, from Middle French escadre, from Spanish escuadra or Italian squadra battalion; literally, square, both from Vulgar Latin exquadra* SQUARE; so called because troops were commonly arranged in a square formation to repel cavalry or superior forces, especially prior to large-scale use of automatic weapons in the American Civil War.

squadron n. 1562, a body of soldiers arranged in square formation; borrowed from Italian squadrone, augmentative form of squadra battalion, SQUAD. The sense of a division of a naval fleet, is first recorded in 1588, and that of a unit of an air force in 1913.

squalid adj. 1591, filthy, degraded; borrowed from Middle French squalide, and directly from Latin squalidus rough, coated with dirt, filthy, related to squālēs filth, squālis filthy, squālēre be covered with a rough or scaly layer, be coated with dirt, be filthy.

squall¹ n. sudden, violent gust of wind. 1719, originally nautical use; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian skval sudden rush of water, splash, and Swedish skvala to gush, pour down).

squall² v. cry out loudly. Before 1631, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic skvala to cry out). —n. 1709, from the verb.

squalor n. 1621, misery and dirt, filth; borrowed from Latin squālor, related to squālēre be filthy; see SQUALID; for suffix see -OR¹.

squamous adj. 1547, borrowed from Latin squāmōsus covered with scales, scaly, from squāma scale; for suffix see -OUS. An earlier English spelling scamous (1541) was probably borrowed from Middle French scamoux scaly, from Latin squāmōsus.

squander v. 1593, to spend (money, goods, etc.) wastefully; of unknown origin.

square n. About 1250 squire tool for measuring right angles; later square rectangular area or shape (before 1382); borrowed from Old French esquire, esquarre, esquerre a square, squareness, from Vulgar Latin exquadra*, from exquadrāre* to square (Latin ex- out + quadrāre make square, from quadrus square; related to quattuor FOUR). The meaning of an open space (square in shape) in a town or city, used as a park, etc., is first recorded in 1687. —adj. Before 1325, borrowed from Old French esquarré, past participle of esquarrer to square, from Vulgar Latin exquadrāre* to square; see the noun. The sense of honest, fair, is first recorded in 1591, and that of being old-fashioned, or too conventional in 1946. —v. Before 1382 squaren to make square or rectangular; borrowed from Old French esquarrer, from Vulgar Latin exquadrāre* to square; see noun. —adv. 1557, so as to be squared (by multiplication); from the adjective. The meaning of in a square form or position is first recorded in 1631.

squash¹ v. to crush. Before 1325 squachen annul, shoot, destroy, crush; borrowed from Old French esquasser to crush, from Vulgar Latin exquassāre* (Latin ex- out + quassāre to shatter; see QUASH¹ to crush). —n. 1590, unripe pod of a pea; from the verb. The sense of something squashed (as in lemon squash) is found in 1888.

squash² n. fruit. 1643, shortened form of isquountersquash, borrowed from Algonquian (Narraganset) askūtasquash, literally, the green things that may be eaten raw.

squat v. Before 1349 squatten to thrust, crush; borrowed from Old French esquatir press down, lay flat, crush, (es- out, from Latin ex- + Old French quatir press down, flatten, from Vulgar Latin coāctire* press together, force, from Latin coāctus, past participle of cōgere compel). The meaning of to crouch on the heels is first recorded about 1410. —adj. About 1410, (of a hare) seated in a squatting posture, from the past participle of squatten to squat. The meaning of short and thick, like the figure of an animal squatting, is first recorded in 1630. —n. Before 1400, heavy fall or bump; from the verb. The meaning of an act of squatting is first recorded in 1584. —squatter n. 1788, settler who occupies land or property without legal title to it.

squaw n. 1634, borrowed from Algonquian (Massachuset) squa woman (compare Narraganset squaws and related forms in other Algonquian languages).

squawk v. 1821 (implied in squawking), probably of imitative origin. —n. 1850, from the verb.

squeak v. Before 1387 squeken make a short, sharp, shrill sound; probably of imitative origin, similar to Middle Swedish skvåka to squeak, croak. —n. 1664, act of squeaking; from the verb.

squeal v. About 1300 suelen; later squelen (before 1325); probably of imitative origin, similar to Old Icelandic skvala to cry out. The sense of inform on another is first recorded in 1865. —n. 1747, from the verb.

squeamish adj. Before 1398 squaymisch readily affected with nausea; variant of squeymous disdainful, fastidious (about 1330); borrowed from Anglo-French escoymous, of unknown origin; the suffix -OUS was replaced by -ISH¹. The sense of easily shocked, prudish, is first recorded in 1567.

squeegee n. 1844, nautical use, perhaps formed from squeege to press (1782, alteration of SQUEEZE, v.) + the suffix -ee.

squeeze v. Before 1601 squease, probably an alteration of quease (about 1550), from Middle English quysen to squeeze (before 1450); developed from Old English cwysan, cwiesan to squeeze, of unknown origin. —n. 1611, act of squeezing; from the verb.

squelch n. 1620, a heavy, crushing fall or blow onto soft matter, possibly imitative of the sound made. The sense of a squashing or complete suppression, is first recorded in 1685. —v. 1624, to press on or strike with crushing force; from the noun. The sense of squash or suppress completely, is first recorded in 1864.

squib n. About 1525, of unknown origin. The sense of a small firework that burns with a hissing noise is found before 1530; if this is the earliest sense, the word is perhaps imitative. —v. 1579–80, from the noun.

squid n. 1613, of unknown origin.

squiggle v. 1804 (implied in squiggling), suggesting a blend of squirm, v. and wriggle, v. The meaning of writhe, squirm, wriggle, is first recorded in 1816, and that of write or draw in a twisty manner in 1942, from the noun. —n. 1902, wriggly twist; from the verb. The sense of a twisty drawing or wavy writing is found in 1928. —squiggly adj. (1902) squint v. 1599, have an indirect aim, reference, etc.; shortened form of asquint, adv., obliquely, with a sidelong glance (before 1200); probably formed from *a-*¹ + -squint, of unknown origin, but related to quin, skwyn, (about 1440, found in ofskwyn obliquely). —n. Before 1652, cross-eyed condition; from the verb.

squire n. Probably about 1225 squier young man who attended a knight; later, member of the landowning class ranking below a knight (about 1300); borrowed from Old French esquier, escuier squire; literally, shield carrier, from Late Latin scūtārius guardsman, from Latin scūtum shield, perhaps from earlier scoitom*. —v. escort. About 1395 squieren; from the noun.

squirm v. 1691, originally referring to eels; of unknown origin, sometimes associated with worm or swarm.

squirrel n. 1327 scurelle; about 1330 squirel; borrowed through Anglo-French esquirel, Old French escurel, from Vulgar Latin scūriolus*, diminutive form of scūrius* squirrel, variant of Latin sciūrus, from Greek skelouros a squirrel; literally, shadow-tailed, (probably skia shadow + oura tail).

squirt v. Before 1475 squyrtten eject water in a jet, of uncertain origin (compare Low German swirtjen to squirt, dart). —n. Before 1398 squirtte diarrhea; from the same source as the verb. The meaning of a jet of liquid is first recorded in 1626.

squish v. 1647, to squeeze, squash; probably a variant of squash, perhaps formed by influence of earlier squiss to squeeze or crush (1558). The meaning of make a splashing sound when walked on appeared before 1825. —n. 1902, from the verb. An earlier sense of marmalade is recorded in 1874. —squishy adj. (1847) stab v. 1375 staben to thrust with a pointed weapon; Scottish, of uncertain origin. Connection with stob to stab, is doubtful, since stob is not attested before 1529. —n. 1440, wound produced by stabbing; from the verb. The meaning of act of stabbing is first recorded in 1530 and that of an attempt at something in 1908.

stability n. Probably before 1349 stabylyte firmness, steadfastness; borrowed from Old French stabilit  , establi  , from Latin stabilit  s firmness, steadfastness, from stabilis steadfast, firm, STABLE²; for suffix see -ITY. —stabilize v. 1861, borrowed from French stabiliser, from Latin stabilis stable; for suffix see -IZE.

stable¹ n. building where horses or cattle are kept. Probably about 1225, borrowed from Old French estable a stable, stall, from Latin stabulum a stall, fold, aviary, etc.; literally, a standing place, from st  re to STAND. —v. About 1330 stabilen, from the noun.

stable² adj. steadfast, firm. Probably about 1150; borrowed from Old French estable, stable, from Latin stabilis firm, steadfast; literally, able to stand, from st  re to STAND.

staccato adj. 1724, borrowing of Italian staccato, literally, detached, from past participle of staccare to detach, shortened form of distaccare separate, detach, from Middle French destacher, from Old French destachier to DETACH. —adv. in a staccato manner. 1844, from the adjective.

stack n. About 1300 stac pile, heap; earlier as the surname Stac (1199); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic stakker haystack, Norwegian stakke, Danish stak, and Swedish stake); cognate with Middle Low German stak barrier of stakes, and Old English staca stick, STAKE¹. The sense of chimneys, flues, or pipes standing together is first recorded in 1667, and that of a chimney or funnel of a factory, locomotive, or steamship, in 1825. —v. Before 1325 stacken, from the noun. The meaning of arrange unfairly (as in stack the cards) is first recorded in 1825.

stadium n. About 1380, a foot race; before 1398, measure of length; borrowed from Latin stadium a measure of length, a race course, from Greek st  dion a measure of length, a running track (the track at Olympia, which was one stadium in length). Greek st  dion may be, literally, a fixed standard of length, or from sp  dion (from sp  n to draw up, pull; see SPASM) by influence of Greek st  dios firm, fixed.

The sense of a running track, recorded in English in 1603, was used to mean a large, open, oval structure with tiers of seats, used for sports events.

staff n. Before 1102 staf a bishop's staff; also, a stick carried to aid in walking or climbing (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 800) st  f stick, staff; cognate with Old Frisian stef staff, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch staf, Old High German stab (modern German Stab), Old Icelandic stafr (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian stav), from Proto-Germanic stabaz*, and Gothic stabeis (nominative plural). The sense of a group of military officers that assists a commanding officer is first recorded in 1779, and that of a group of employees (as at an office or in a hospital) in 1837. —v. 1859, provide with a staff of assistants, from the noun. —staffer n. (1949) stag n. 1318, stagge young male horse; 1346, male deer; developed from Old English stagg stag; cognate with Old Icelandic andarsteggi drake (modern Icelandic steggi male bird), (earlier) tomtat, male fox, from Proto-Germanic staz-*. The word probably originally meant a male animal in its prime. —adj. 1843, from the sense of male (1606), as in stag bird, stag horse.

stage n. About 1250, a story or floor of a building; later, raised platform for public performance (before 1325); borrowed from Old French estage a story, floor, stage for performance, from Vulgar Latin staticum* a place for standing, from Latin statum, past participle of st  re to STAND. The sense of period of development or time in life is first recorded in 1608. —v. Before 1338 stagen to erect, build; from the noun. The meaning of put into a play is first recorded in 1601.

stagger v. About 1434 stageren; variant of stakeren to stagger (before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic stakra to push, stagger, Old Danish stagna, modern Danish stavre, and Old Icelandic staka to push, stagger; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch st  ken to push, fix in the ground, and st  ke post, STAKE¹). The sense of bewilder, amaze, is first recorded in English in 1556 and that of arrange in a zigzag pattern in 1856. —n. 1577 the staggers disease of domestic animals; from the verb.

stagnant adj. 1666, probably formed as an adjective to stagnancy, n. (1659); and borrowed from French stagnant, and directly from Latin stagnantem (nominative stagn  ns), present participle of stagn  re STAGNATE; for suffix see -ANT.

stagnate v. 1669, probably formed as a verb to stagnancy, stagnant, and in part borrowed from Latin stagn  tum, past participle of stagn  re to stagnate, from stagnum standing water; for suffix see -ATE¹.

staid adj. 1541, fixed, permanent, adjective use of stayed, past participle of STAY¹. The meaning sober, sedate, is first recorded in 1557.

stain v. Before 1382 steynen to discolor or dye, probably formed by fusion of a Scandinavian form (compare Old Icelandic steina to paint), and by shortening from Middle English disteynen to discolor or stain; borrowed from Old French desteyn-, stem of desteyndre to remove the color (des-, from Latin dis- remove + Old French teindre to dye, from Latin tingere to TINGE). The sense of taint, blemish is found in Middle English in 1446. —n. 1563, act of staining; from the verb.

stair n. Probably before 1200 steire flight of steps; also, a single stair step; later staire (about 1385); developed from Old English stæger (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic staigrī*, related to Old English stigan to climb, go, and stīg narrow path; cognate with Old Frisian stiga to rise, climb, Old Saxon stigan, Middle Dutch stighen (modern Dutch stijgen), Old High German stigan (modern German steigen), Old Icelandic stiga, and Gothic steigan, from Proto-Germanic stīžanan*. —staircase n. (1624) stake¹ n. pointed stick or post. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English staca (before 899), from Proto-Germanic stakōn*; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stāke stake (modern Dutch staak), and Old Icelandic lysistaki candlestick. —v. Before 1338 staken mark with stakes; from the noun.

stake² v. to risk, wager. 1530, probably from Middle English stake post on which a gambling wager was placed (before 1300); see STAKE¹. —n. 1540, from the verb, or from stake post on which a gambling wager is placed. The plural stakes, as in horse racing, is first recorded in 1696. stalactite n. 1677, borrowed from New Latin stalactites, from Greek stalaktōs dripping, from stalassein to trickle; for suffix see -ITE¹. Compare STALAGMITE.

stalagmite n. 1681, borrowed from New Latin stalagmites, from Greek stalagmōs a dropping, or stálagma a drop, drip, from stalassein to trickle; see STALACTITE; for suffix see -ITE¹.

stale adj. Probably about 1225 (of ale, wine, etc.) freed from dregs or lees; cognate with Middle Dutch stel (of beer, etc.) stale, and probably ultimately from the same Germanic source as Old English standan to STAND. The meaning of not fresh is first recorded in Middle English in 1475. —v. 1440 stalen; from the adjective.

stalemate n. 1765, position of complete standstill in chess; formed from stale stalemate (probably before 1437) + *mate*² checkmate. Middle English stale was probably borrowed from Anglo-French estale standstill, from Old French estal place, stand, stall, from a Frankish word (compare Old High German stal stand, place, STALL¹). —v. 1765, from the noun.

stalk¹ n. stem of a plant. Before 1325, probably a diminutive with k suffix of stale one of the uprights of a ladder, handle, stalk (probably before 1200); developed from Old English stalu wooden part (as of a harp), from Proto-Germanic stalō*, related to stela stalk, support (from Proto-Germanic stelōn*), and steall place, STALL¹. Parallels are found in Swedish stjälk stalk, Norwegian and Danish stilk. Old English stela is cognate with Middle Dutch stale handle, and Old Icelandic stjqlr rump, coccyx, stäl haystack, pile.

stalk² v. pursue stealthily. Probably before 1300 stalken to walk stealthily or cautiously; developed from Old English -stealcian, as in bestalcian to steal along (about 1000, from Proto-Germanic stalkōjanan*), and from Old English stealcung a stalking, related to stealc steep, lofty; cognates with Middle Low German stolkeren strut about, flaunt, Old Swedish stjælke stalk, stem, Old Icelandic stelkr pewit (bird). —n. Before 1470 stalke act of stalking game; from the verb.

stall¹ n. place in a stable for one animal. Probably before 1200 stalle; developed from Old English (before 800) steall place where cattle are kept, place, position; cognate with Old Frisian stal stall, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stal, Old High German stal (modern German Stall), Old High German and modern German stellen to place, and Old Icelandic stallr pedestal, stall (Swedish and Norwegian stall, Danish stald stable), from Proto-Germanic stallaz*, earlier stalnaz*.

Several meanings having to do with the sense of seat or chair and that of a stand for selling were probably influenced by Old French estal place, stand, stall, from a Germanic source related to English *stall*¹. —v. Before 1333 stallen be situated, dwell; from the noun in English, and as a borrowing from Old French estaller. The meaning of come to a (forced) stop, is first recorded about 1410.

stall² n. pretense to avoid doing something. Probably before 1500, bird used as a decoy, variant of earlier stale decoy (before 1425); borrowed from Anglo-French estale decoy, probably from a Germanic source (compare Old English stælhrian decoy reindeer, related to stæl place, position, and steall place, STALL¹). An evasive trick or story, pretext, excuse, is first recorded in 1812. —v. 1592, from the noun. The meaning of put off or prevent by evasive tactics is first recorded in 1812.

stallion n. 1440 stalyone, alteration of staloun, stalun (before 1300); in the place name Stalnesbusc (1218); borrowed from Old French estalon a stallion, from Frankish stal*, cognate with Old High German stal stable, STALL¹; perhaps developed from stall, stable, because such horses were kept there to service mares.

stalwart adj. 1375, Scottish variant of stealewurthe (probably before 1200); developed from Old English stælwierthe, stælwyrthe the good, serviceable (896), probably a contraction of statholwierthe* steadfast, well-based; literally, having a worthy foundation (stathol foundation, support + wierthe the good, excellent, worthy, WORTH). Old English stathol is related to standan to STAND, and cognate with Old Frisian stathul foundation, Old High German stadal barn, shed, and Old Icelandic stodhull milking shed, from Proto-Germanic stathlaz*. Alternatively, Old English stælwierthe, stælwyrthe the good, serviceable; literally, worthy of place (stæl place + wierthe the worth, worthy). Old English stæl derives from Proto-Germanic stælaz*. —n. About 1470, stalwart person; from the adjective.

stamen n. 1668, borrowed from Latin stāmen warp, thread, stamen, related to stāre to STAND. An earlier sense of warp (of cloth) is first recorded in English in 1650.

stamina n. Before 1676, rudiments or original elements of something; borrowed from Latin stāmina threads, plural of stāmen (genitive stāminis) thread, warp, STAMEN. The sense of power to resist or recover, strength, endurance, is first recorded in 1726, deriving partly from the Latin application to the threads spun by the Fates that determine how long one will live, and partly from a figurative use of Latin stāmen the warp (of cloth), since the warp provides the underlying foundation of a fabric.

stammer v. Before 1200 stameren to stutter; developed from Old English (about 1000) stamerian; cognate with Old Saxon stamarōn to stammer, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stameren, stamelen (modern Dutch stamelen), Old High German stamalōn (modern German stammeln), Old Icelandic adjective stammr stammering (Norwegian and Swedish stamm, Danish stam), and Gothic adjective stamms stammering. —n. 1773, from the verb.

stamp v. About 1200 stampen pound, beat, crush, mash, probably an alteration (by Scandinavian influence) of earlier stempen*; developed from Old English stempan to pound in a mortar, stamp; cognate with Middle Low German stempen to stamp, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stampen to pound, Old High German stampfōn (modern German stampfen to stamp with the foot, pound), Old Icelandic stappa, Swedish stampa, Norwegian and Danish stampe to stamp, from Proto-Germanic stampōjanan*.

The meaning of impress or mark (something) with a die is first recorded in English in 1560. The Germanic root stamp-* is the source of the verb in several Romance languages, as represented by Italian stampare to stamp, press, print, Provençal, Spanish, and Portuguese estampar, Old French estamper. —n. 1465 stampe a stamping tool; from the verb. The sense of an official mark or imprint is first recorded in 1542. This sense, after adhesive labels were issued by the government to serve the same purpose as impressed stamps (about 1840), is found in adhesive postage stamps.

stampede n. 1844 (1838 stomped; 1826 stompado); borrowed from Mexican Spanish estampida, from Spanish, an uproar, from estampar to stamp, press, pound, from Germanic (see Germanic root under STAMP). —v. 1823, from the noun.

stance n. 1532, standing place, station, position; probably borrowed from Middle French stance resting place, harbor, from Italian stanza stopping place, station, from Vulgar Latin stantia*, from Latin stāns (genitive stantis), present participle of stāre to STAND; for suffix see -ANCE. The sense of position of the feet is first recorded in 1897 and that of a manner of standing, posture in 1929, and attitude, point of view, in 1956.

stanch¹ v. to stop the flow. Probably before 1325 staunchen to stanch, quench, allay; before 1333 stanchen; borrowed from Old French estanchier to stop, hinder, from Vulgar Latin stanchicāre*, probably from Latin stāns (genitive stantis), present participle of stāre to STAND.

stanch² n. See STAUNCH.

stanchion n. 1321 staunson; later stanchon (1343); borrowed from Middle French estanchon prop, brace, support, probably from estant upright, from present participle of ester be upright, stand, from Latin stāre to STAND.

stand v. Before 1121 standen, developed from Old English standan (from Proto-Germanic present stem sta-n-d-*), also found in Old English past participle gestanden (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English standan is cognate with Old Frisian standa, stān to stand, Old Saxon standan, stān, Middle Dutch standen, staen (modern Dutch staan), Old High German stantan, stān (modern German stehen), Old Icelandic standa, and Gothic standan. —n. Before 1325, place, position; from the verb. The noun is recorded in Old English (about 950) in the sense of a pause or delay. —standing n. 1382, act of a person who stands; formed from English stand, v. + *-ing*¹. The sense of rank or status is first recorded in 1580.

standard n. 1138, a flag or banner raised on a pole to indicate the rallying point of an army; borrowed from Old French estandard, probably developed from a Frankish compound standhard*, literally, stand fast or firm! (represented by Old High German stantan and Gothic standan to stand + Old High German hart and Gothic hardus hard); the flag or banner so called because the pole or spear bearing it was fixed in the ground so as to stand upright. Middle High German stanthart and Middle Dutch standaert, are cited as evidence of the compound in Germanic.

Others maintain Old French estandard was derived from estendre to stretch out, from Latin extendere EXTEND, and that Middle High German stanthart and Middle Dutch standaert were borrowed from Old French estandard; see -ARD.

The sense development is somewhat obscure. The meaning of an authorized unit of measure (1327) is recorded in Anglo-French estaundart in the 1200's. The sense of an authoritative or recognized model, as of correctness or quality, is first recorded about 1445. —adj. 1538, upright; later, serving as a standard of measure, weight, or value (1622); from the noun. —standardize v. 1873, to bring to a standard or uniform size, strength, shape, etc.; formed from English standard, n. or adj. + -ize.

stannic adj. 1790, formed from New Latin stannum, Late Latin stannum tin; scribal alteration of Latin stagnum, probably from a Celtic source (compare Irish stān tin, Welsh ystaen, Cornish and Breton stēn) + English -ic. —stannous adj. 1849, formed from New Latin stannum + English -ous.

stanza n. 1588 stanze, borrowed from Italian stanza verse of a poem; originally, standing, stopping place, from Vulgar Latin stantia* a stanza of verse (so called from the stop at the end of it); from Latin stāns (genitive stantis), present participle of stāre to STAND.

stapes n. 1670, New Latin, special use of Medieval Latin stapes stirrup, probably an alteration of Late Latin stapia (so called because the bone is shaped like a stirrup).

staphylococcus n. 1887, New Latin, the genus name, from Greek staphylē bunch of grapes + New Latin coccus spherical bacterium (from Greek kókkos berry, grain); so called because these bacteria usually bunch together in irregular masses.

staple¹ n. U-shaped piece of metal with pointed ends. 1289 stapel post, stake; 1295 staple fastener; developed from Old English stapol post, pillar (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian stapul, stapel tooth stem, Old Saxon stapal, stapel candle, Middle Low German stāpel pillar, platform, heap, Middle Dutch stāpel foundation, heap (modern Dutch stapel heap), Old High German staffel step (modern German Staffel rung), and Old Icelandic stǫpull post, tower, from Proto-Germanic stapulaz*. —v. Probably about 1390 staplen to fasten with a staple; from the noun.

staple² n. principal article grown or made in a place. Before 1400, official market; borrowed from Anglo-French estaple, Old French estaple market, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch stāpel market; see STAPLE¹). The sense of a principal article grown or made in a place (1616) is a shortened form of staple ware (1432), staple gude (1455, Scottish), wares or goods from a staple (market). —adj. 1615, having a foremost place; from the noun. The sense of most important, chief, is first recorded in 1715.

star n. 1135 sterre; developed from Old English (before 830) steorra (from Proto-Germanic stersōn*); cognate with Old Frisian stēra star, Old Saxon sterro, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sterre (modern Dutch ster), Old High German sterro, sterno (modern German Stern), Old Icelandic stjarna (Swedish stjärna, Danish and Norwegian stjerne), and Gothic stairnō (from Proto-Germanic sternō*). —v. 1592, to mark with a star; from the noun. The sense of appear as a star, perform the leading part (said of an actor, singer, etc.), is first recorded in 1824. —starlight n. (about 1380) —starry adj. (about 1380)

starboard n. Probably before 1400 stere-bourde; developed from Old English (before 899) stēorbord side on which a vessel was steered (stēor- rudder, steering paddle + bord ship's side). —adj. 1495, from the noun.

starch v. 1390–91, (implied in starchying) to stiffen, make rigid; probably developed from Old English (Mercian) stercan* make rigid, (West Saxon) stiercan*, and found in stercedferth fixed, hard, or resolute (from Proto-Germanic starkijanan*), from stearc stiff, strong; see STARK. Cognates of the Old English verb include Old Frisian sterka to stiffen, strengthen, Old Saxon sterkian, Middle Dutch and Dutch sterken, Old High German sterchan (modern German stärken), and Swedish stärka. —n. 1440 starche pasty substance obtained from flour and used to stiffen cloth; from the verb. —starchy adj. (1802) stare v. About 1250 staren to gaze fixedly, be wide-eyed; developed from Old English starian (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stāren to stare (modern Dutch staren), Old High German stārēn to stare, starrēn, be rigid (modern German starren to gaze fixedly, stare), and Old Icelandic stara to stare (Norwegian stare), from Proto-Germanic star-*. —n. Probably about 1380, power of sight; from the verb. The sense of an act of gazing, fixed gaze, is first recorded in 1700.

stark adj. Probably before 1200 stark, sterc firm, steadfast, powerful, severe; developed from Old English stearc stiff, strong (about 750), from Proto-Germanic starkaz*, and related to Old English starian to STARE. Old English stearc is cognate with Old Frisian sterk strong, Old Saxon and Middle Low German stark, Middle Dutch starc, staerc (modern Dutch sterk), Old High German starc (modern German stark), gistorchanēn become stiff, Old Icelandic sterkr strong, storkna coagulate, and Gothic gastairknan become stiff.

The meaning of utter, complete, sheer, absolute, is first recorded in Middle English, probably before 1400, and that of bare, barren, desolate, in 1833. —adv. Probably before 1200, in a stark manner, firmly, strongly; from the adjective. The sense of utterly, quite (as in stark mad) is found in 1489.

starling n. Before 1325 sterling; as the surname Starling (1165–66); developed from Old English (before 1050) stærling (stær starling + -ling). Old English (before 800) stær (from Proto-Germanic staraz*) is related to stearn a kind of bird, and cognate with Old High German stara (modern German Star starling), from Proto-Germanic starōn*, Old Icelandic stari (Norwegian and Danish stær, Swedish stare).

start v. Probably before 1200 sterten move or spring suddenly; later starten (before 1325); perhaps developed from Old English steortian* or stiertan*, variants of styrtan to leap up (about 1000); related to starian to STARE. Old English styrtan is cognate with Old Frisian sterta to overturn or overthrow, Middle Low German storten to overthrow or fall, Middle Dutch and Dutch storten to spill or throw, Old High German sturzen to fall or throw (modern German stürzen), Middle High German sterzen stand stiffly or move briskly, and Old Icelandic sterta to stiffen or strengthen.

The sense of awaken suddenly is first recorded about 1386, and that of flinch or recoil in alarm, before 1325. The meaning of cause to begin acting or operating is first recorded in 1666, and the specific sense of begin to move, leave, depart, in 1821. —n. Probably before 1200 stert sudden movement, short space of time; from the verb. The act or fact of beginning to move, go, or act, is first recorded in 1566, and that of a sudden jump of the body in reaction to surprise, fear, etc., about 1385.

startle v. Probably before 1300 startlen, stertlen run to and fro; developed as a frequentative verb form of sterten to START; for suffix see -LE³. The sense of move suddenly in fear or surprise is first recorded in 1530, and the meaning of frighten suddenly, cause to start, in 1595.

starve v. Before 1225 sterven to die, kill; developed from Old English steorfan to die (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian sterva to die, Old Saxon sterban, Middle Dutch and Dutch sterven, Old High German sterban (modern German sterben), from Proto-Germanic sterbanan*. The meaning of kill with hunger is first recorded in English in 1530. —starvation n. 1778, act of starving; formed from English starve + -ation.

stash v. 1797, hide or put away, of unknown origin. An earlier sense of stop, desist from, is found in 1794. —n. 1914, something hidden away; from the verb.

stat adv. Before 1970, immediately; shortened form of Latin statim, an adverb originally meaning to a standstill, a vestigial accusative of a lost noun statis* a standing still; see STATION.

—stat a combining form used in naming devices for stabilizing, regulating, or controlling, as in gyrostat, rheostat, thermostat. Borrowed from New Latin -stata, and French -stat, from Greek statós standing, stationary, or -státēs, suffix forming agent nouns, from histánai to cause to stand.

state n. Probably before 1200 stat position in society, station; later, condition or fact of being (about 1280); borrowed from Latin status (genitive statūs) manner of standing, position, condition, from stāre to stand. Some of the senses in Middle English were borrowed from Old French estat, from Latin status. The sense of government of a nation, territory, etc., is found about 1300. The sense of one of a number of governments united under one federal government is first recorded in 1774. —v. About 1590, to place, station; from the noun. The meaning of set forth in proper form is recorded before 1641, and the sense of declare in words, in 1647. —stately adj. About 1386 statly befitting or indicating high estate, noble; formed from stat, n., state + *-ly*². The meaning of magnificent, splendid, is first recorded before 1420. —statement n. (1775) static adj. 1638, relating to the effects of weight; shortened form of earlier statistical (1570); from the noun and modeled on New Latin staticus, from Greek statikós causing to stand, skilled in weighing (sta-, stem of histánai to cause to stand, weigh); for suffix see -ic. The sense of having to do with bodies at rest or with forces that balance each other is first recorded in statistical 1802. The meaning of in a fixed or stable condition is first recorded in statistical, adj. 1855. The sense in reference to electricity is first recorded in 1837 in statistical. —n. 1570, science relating to weight and its mechanical effects; borrowed from New Latin statica, from Greek statikē (téchnē) (science) of weighing. The sense of electrical disturbances in the air is first recorded in 1913.

The plural form statics is first recorded in 1656, in the sense of the science relating to weight. The branch of physics concerned with the action of forces is found by 1867.

station n. About 1280 stacioun place which one normally occupies; borrowed from Old French station, from Latin stationem (nominative statiō) a standing, post, dwelling, position, a pre-Latin extension of a lost noun statis*, from stāre to stand; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of a place of special purpose (police station) is first recorded in 1823; and in the sense radio station (1912). The meaning of a regular stopping place (a bus station) is first recorded in 1797, from the stopping place on a journey (1585). The meaning of a person's rank or position in the world is first recorded in 1675. —v. 1748, from the noun. —stationary adj. Probably before 1430 stacionarye (of planets, etc.) having no apparent motion; borrowed through Middle French stationnaire motionless, and directly from Medieval Latin stationarius, from Latin stationārius of or belonging to a military station, from stationem (nominative statiō) station, post; for suffix see -ARY. The meaning of not movable, remaining unchanged, is first recorded in English in 1628.

stationer n. 1311 stacioner book dealer; borrowed from Medieval Latin stationarius, originally, stationary seller, as distinct from a roving peddler, from Latin stationem (nominative statiō)

STATION; for suffix see *-ER*¹. The distinction between a bookseller and a stationer was not established until the 1700's, although the current sense of stationer is recorded in 1656.

—stationery n. 1727 stationary; earlier in stationery wares articles sold by a stationer (1679–88); formed from stationer + *-y*³.

statistics n. 1770, science dealing with data about the condition of a state or community; borrowed from German Statistik, probably from New Latin statisticum (collegium) (lecture course on) state affairs, from Italian statista one skilled in statecraft, from Latin status STATE; for suffix see -ICS. The sense of numerical data collected and classified is found in medical statistics (1829). —statistical adj. 1787, formed from English statistics + *-al*¹. —statistician n. 1825, formed from obsolete English statistic of or relating to statistics (1789) + -ian.

statue n. About 1375, statue, image, borrowing of Old French statue, from Latin statua, back formation from statuere to cause to stand, set up, from status (genitive statūs) a standing, position, from stāre to stand. —statuary n. 1563, art of making statues, sculpture, borrowed from Middle French statuaire, and directly from Latin statuāria, noun use of feminine of statuārius of a statue, from statua statue; for suffix see -ARY. —adj. 1627, from the noun, possibly influenced by Latin statuārius of a statue. —statuesque adj. Before 1834, like a statue; formed from English statue + -esque, patterned on picturesque.

stature n. Before 1325 statur height, borrowed from Old French stature, estature, from statūra height or size of a body, size, growth, from stāre to stand; for suffix see -URE. The figurative sense of quality, worth, status, is first recorded in English in 1834.

status n. 1671, height; later, legal standing of a person (1791); borrowing of Latin status (genitive statūs) condition, position, state, from stāre to stand. The sense of social or professional standing is first recorded in 1820. —status quo 1833, borrowing of Latin status quo the state in which; see STATE.

statute n. Probably before 1300 statout decree; also a law of the land (about 1300); borrowed from Old French statut, estatut, from Late Latin statūtum a law, decree, noun use of neuter past participle of Latin statuere enact, establish, from status (genitive statūs) condition, position, from stāre to stand. —statutory adj. 1717, (of a clause in a statute) enacting; formed from English statute + -ory. The meaning of having to do with or consisting of statutes is first recorded in 1766.

staunch or stanch adj. Before 1393 staunche firm, intact, certain; borrowed from Middle French estanche firm, watertight, feminine of estanc, from Old French, dried, exhausted, wearied, vanquished, from estanchier cause to cease flowing, stop; see *STANCH*¹. The sense of strong, substantial, is first recorded in 1455–56.

stave n. Before 1398 staves, plural of STAFF, found earlier as stafas rungs of a ladder (possibly Old English, but recorded about 1175), and staves (before 1325). The singular stave is a back formation from the plural (1750). —v. 1542, to fit with staves, from the noun.

stay¹ v. to remain. 1440 steyen to halt, come to a stop; borrowed from Middle French stai-, estai-, and stei-, estei-, stem of ester to stay or stand, from Old French, from Latin stāre to stand. The sense of continue or remain is first recorded in 1573–80. —n. 1523–34, appliance for stopping; from the verb. The sense of a halt, a stop, is first recorded in 1537, and that of a suspension of a judicial proceeding in 1542. The meaning of an act or period of remaining in a place, is first recorded in 1538.

stay² n. support, prop, brace. About 1515, borrowed from Middle French estaie piece of wood used as a support, from Frankish staka* support (compare Middle Dutch stāke stick, STAKE¹). —v. 1423 staien; borrowed from Middle French estayer, from estaie support, prop.

stay³ n. strong rope which supports a ship's mast. 1294–95 stei; developed from Late Old English (before 1100) stæg; cognate with Middle Low German stach stay, rope, Dutch stag, dialectal German stagen become stiff, and Old Icelandic stag stay, from Proto-Germanic stazán*. —v. Before 1613, (of a ship) to change to the other tack; from the noun. The meaning of secure or steady with stays is first recorded in 1627.

stead n. Probably before 1200, place or function (of another); about 1450 steade; developed from Old English stede place, position, standing, delay (before 899), related to standan to stand; cognate with Old Frisian stede, stidi stead, Old Saxon stedi, Middle Low German stede place, abode, Middle Dutch stat, stēde town (modern Dutch stad), Old High German stat place (modern German Statt stead, Stätte place, abode, Stadt town), Old Icelandic stadr place, and Gothic staths, from Proto-Germanic stadi-*. —steadfast adj. Probably before 1200 studevest firmly fixed, unchangeable, loyal; also stedefast (about 1200); developed from Old English (993) stedefæst secure in position (stede stead + fæst firmly fixed; see FAST¹, adj.).

steady adj. Probably about 1200 stidiz stubborn; later studi not deviating from course (about 1300), and stedye fixed, immovable (1530); formed from Middle English stude, stede stead, place + *-y*¹. The sense of regular, uniform, is recorded in 1548, and that of firm, not shaking, in 1574. —adv. Before 1605, from the adjective. —v. 1530, from the adjective.

steak n. 1440 steyke thick slice of meat cut for roasting; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic steik roast meat).

steal v. Probably about 1150 stelen take dishonestly; later, to go away stealthily (probably before 1160); developed from Old English (before 800) stelan to commit theft (past tense stael, past participle stolen); cognate with Old Frisian stela to steal, Old Saxon stelan, Middle Dutch stēlen (modern Dutch stelen), Old High German stelan (modern German stehlen), Old Icelandic stela (Swedish stjåla, Norwegian stjæle, Danish stjæle), and Gothic stilan, from Proto-Germanic stelanan*. —n. 1825, a theft, the thing stolen; from the verb. An earlier sense of an act of going secretly is found in 1590, and in Middle English as stele a theft, probably before 1200.

stealth n. About 1250 stalt theft; later, secret action (about 1300), and stelh (before 1325, from Old English stælh*, Proto-Germanic stælihō*); related to stelen to STEAL; for suffix see -TH¹. —stealthy adj. 1605, moving or acting by stealth; formed from English stealth + *-y*¹.

steam n. Old English (before 1000) stēam vapor, fume; cognate with West Frisian, Low German, and Dutch stoom steam (from Proto-Germanic staumaz*). —v. About 1387–95 stemmen to emit flame, glow; developed from Old English (before 1000) stēmen, stýman to emit a scent or odor, related to stēam vapor, fume. The meaning of emit steam or vapor is first recorded in 1614, influenced by the noun. —steamy adj. 1644, emitting steam; formed from English steam, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of erotic, sexy, is first recorded in 1952.

stearin n. 1817, borrowed from French stéarine, formed from Greek stēār (genitive stēātos) tallow, fat (see STONE) + French -ine -INE². —stearic acid 1831, partial translation of French acide stéarique (Greek stēār fat + French -ique -IC).

steed n. horse. Probably about 1150 stede; developed from Old English stēda stallion (before 899), related to stōd STUD².

steel n. Probably before 1200 stel, steele; developed from Old English stýle (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English stýle (Old Mercian dialect stēle) and Old Saxon stehli were derived from a Proto-Germanic adjective staHlijan* made of steel. The related noun is represented by Middle Low German stāl steel, Middle Dutch stael (modern Dutch staal), Old High German stahal (modern German Stahl), and Old Icelandic stāl (Swedish and Norwegian stål, Danish staal), from Proto-Germanic staHla-* standing fast. —adj. Probably before 1200 steele; from the noun. —v. Probably about 1200 stelen harden (iron); developed from Old English stýlan (about 750), from stýle, n. The sense of make hard or strong like steel is first recorded in 1581. —steely adj. 1509, hard as steel; formed from English steel, n. + *-y*¹.

steenbok n. 1775, borrowing of Afrikaans steenbok, from Middle Dutch steenboc (steen stone + boc buck¹); cognates with Old English stānbucca mountain goat, and Old High German steinboc ibex (modern German Steinbock).

steep¹ adj. having a sharp slope. Probably about 1200 stepe high, elevated; developed from Old English stēap (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian stāp high, lofty, Old High German stouf cliff, and Old Icelandic staup hole in a road, from Proto-Germanic staupaz*. The sense of precipitous, is first recorded probably before 1300. —n. steep slope. 1555; from the adjective.

steep² v. to soak in a liquid. Before 1325 stepen; of uncertain origin; probably cognate with Old Icelandic steypa to pour out, throw (from Proto-Germanic staupijanan*), Norwegian støppe to pour, cast, and Swedish stöpa; perhaps from Proto-Germanic staupaz*. —n. About 1430 stipe; later stepe (about 1450); from the verb.

steeple n. Before 1121 stepel high tower, usually with a spire; developed from Old English stēpel (Mercian), stīpel (West Saxon, before 1050), from Proto-Germanic staupilaz*, related to stēap high, lofty; see STEEP¹. —steeplechase n. 1793, formed from English steeple + *chase*¹ to hunt; so called because formerly it was a race with a church steeple in view as a goal.

steer¹ v. guide the course of a vehicle, etc. Before 1150 steren; developed from Old English stēran (Mercian), stieran (West Saxon, before 899); cognates of Old Frisian stiōra to steer, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stūren (modern Dutch sturen), Old High German stiuren (modern German steuern), Old Icelandic stýra (Swedish styra, Norwegian and Danish styre), and probably Gothic stiurjan establish, affirm; from the Proto-Germanic steurijanan*, which probably derived from steurō* rudder, represented by Old English stēor helm, rudder (as in stēoresman steersman), Old Frisian stiure, Old High German stiura (modern German Steuer), Middle Dutch stiure (modern Dutch stuur), and Old Icelandic stýri rudder. —steerage n. 1399–1401 sterage steering apparatus of a ship; formed from Middle English steren to steer + -age. The meaning of section of a ship with the cheapest accommodations is first recorded in 1804. —steersman n. About 1330 steres man, developed from Old English stēoresman (about 1000), formed from stēores-, genitive of stēor helm, rudder + man person.

steer² n. young ox. About 1250 stere young bull; developed from Old English (before 800) stēor; cognate with Middle Low German stēr young ox, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stier, Old High German stior (modern German Stier), Old Icelandic stjórr, thjórr (Swedish tjur, Norwegian tjor, tyr, Danish tyr bull), and Gothic stiur, from Proto-Germanic steuraz*.

stein n. 1855, borrowing of German Stein, shortened form of Steinkrug stone jug (Stein stone + Krug jug, pitcher).

stellar adj. of or like a star. 1656, borrowed from Latin stellāris pertaining to a star, starry, from stēlla STAR; for suffix see -AR.

stellate adj. About 1500, starry; later, star-shaped (1661); borrowed from Latin stellātus covered with stars, from stēlla STAR; for suffix see -ATE¹.

stem¹ n. main part of a plant above the ground. 1294–95 stemme sternpost of a ship; later stem trunk of a tree (before 1338); developed from Old English stemn, stefn stem of a plant, also either end of a ship (before 899), from Proto-Germanic stamniz*; cognate with Old Saxon stamn stem of a ship, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stēvene (modern Dutch steven), Old High German stam stem of a plant (modern German Stamm trunk or stem of a tree), and Old Icelandic stafn stem of a ship, from Proto-Germanic stamnaz*. —v. 1577, to rise erect; from the noun. The meaning of remove the stem from is first recorded in 1724. The phrase stem from develop from (as from a stem), spring from, is first recorded in 1932, as a translation of German stammen aus. . .

stem² v. to stop. Before 1325 stemmen to delay, hesitate, stop; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic stemma to stop; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stemmen to stop, and Middle High German and German stemmen). The sense of stop, check, dam up, is first recorded probably before 1350.

stench n. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English stenc pleasant or unpleasant smell (before 899), related to stincan emit a smell, STINK. Old English stenc (from Proto-Germanic stankwiz*) is cognate with Old Saxon stank stench, Middle Dutch stanc (modern Dutch stank), and Old High German stank (modern German Gestank).

stencil n. 1707 stanesile; later stencil (1848); probably developed from Middle English stencellen to ornament, color (before 1400); borrowed from Middle French estenceler cover with sparkles or stars, powder with color, from estenceler spark, spangle, from Vulgar Latin stincilla*, alteration (by metathesis of t and c) of Latin scintilla spark. —v. Before 1400 stencellen to ornament, color; see noun; later, to produce (a design, etc.) with a stencil (1861); from the noun.

stenography n. 1602, shorthand; formed from Greek stenós narrow + English -graphy. —stenographer n. 1809, a shorthand writer; formed from English stenography + *-er*¹. —stenographic adj. 1681, formed from English stenography + -ic.

stentorian adj. 1605, formed in allusion to Stentor (1600, in Greek, Sténtōr), a legendary Greek herald in the Trojan War, whose voice (as described in the Iliad) was as loud as the voices of fifty men; for suffix see -IAN. An earlier form stentorious (Stentor + -ious) appeared in the 1500's.

step v. Probably before 1200 steppen to walk, go, move; later, take a step (before 1250); developed from Old English steppan (before 1000, Anglian), stæppan (before 899, West Saxon); forms cognate with Old Frisian stapa, steppa to step, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stappen, Old High German stapfōn, stapfen (modern German stapfen), and Old Icelandic stappa (Norwegian and Danish stappe, Swedish stappa); probably related to stampfōn to pound, STAMP. —n. Before 1225 steepe; developed from Old English steppa (Mercian), stæpe, stepe (before 830, West Saxon); cognate with Old Frisian stap step, pace, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stap, and Old High German stapf, stapfo (modern German Stapfen); related to the verb. —stepping stone (about 1325, stone used in crossing a stream; 1653, means of advancing) step- a combining form meaning related by remarriage of a parent rather than by blood, as in stepfather, stepsister. Middle English, developed from Old English stēop-; cognate with Old Frisian stiāp- step-, Middle Low German stēf-, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stief-, Old High German stiof- (modern German stief-), and Old Icelandic stjúp- (Swedish stiv-, Old Danish stiúp-, Norwegian ste-). The original sense is indicated in Old English stēopcild stepchild, for "orphan," and by the cognates, Old English āstiepan, bestiepan to bereave, Old High German arstiufen, bestiufen to bereave. Etymologically, stepfather or stepmother (before 800) means "one who becomes a father (or mother) to an orphan," and stepson (before 800) or stepdaughter (before 850) "an orphan who becomes a son (or daughter) by the remarriage of a parent."

The combining form, going back to the Germanic base stepa-*, is anomalously represented by f, probably from assimilation to the following f-sound in the compounds of stepfather steppe n. 1671 step; borrowed from Russian step'. The form steppe (1762) was borrowed from German Steppe, from Russian step'.

(Middle Low German stēfvadere, Middle Dutch stiefvader, as well as the early Middle English variant steffader).

-ster a suffix forming nouns meaning: 1 a person who _____s, as in trickster = a person who tricks. 2 a person who makes or handles, as in rhymester = a person who makes rhymes. 3 a person who is, as in youngster = a person who is young. 4 also with special meanings, as in gangster, roadster, teamster.

Middle English -estre, -ester, -ster, developed from Old English -istre, -estre, (from Proto-Germanic -istrijōn and -astrijōn) a feminine agent suffix used exactly as masculine -ere (*-er*¹); cognate with Middle Low German -ester, -ster, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch -ster, modern Frisian -ster, and probably from Germanic suffix -stra-* forming nouns of action, as in Old Icelandic bakstr act of baking.

In Middle English the suffix was broadened in use, perhaps due to the frequent adoption by men of trades like weaving, baking, etc., and the suffix came to be used interchangeably with *-er*¹ irrespective of gender, which gave rise to feminines in -ess: seamstress, songstress.

In modern English the suffix became very productive in forming derivatives of existing nouns, such as gamester, rhymester, jokester, punster and of an occasional adjective as in youngster (1589), suggested by the earlier youunker, borrowed from Middle Dutch and oldster (1818) patterned on youngster.

stere n. 1798, unit of volume equal to one cubic meter; borrowing of French stère, from Greek steréōs solid.

stereo n. 1823, shortened from stereotype; 1876, from stereoscope; 1954, from stereophonic.

stereo- a combining form meaning: 1 hard, firm, or solid, as in stereotype (a solid printing block). 2 three-dimensional, as in stereoscope and stereophonic. Borrowed from Greek stereo-, combining form of steréōs solid.

stereophonic adj. 1927, formed from English stereo- + -phonic.

stereoscope n. 1838, formed from English stereo- + -scope. 1855, formed from English stereoscope + -ic.

stereotype n. 1798, method of printing from a plate; formed from a mold of composed type; borrowed from French stéréotype, adj., printed by means of a solid plate of type (*stéréo-*stereo-, solid + type type). The sense of an image, phrase, etc., perpetuated without change, is first recorded in English in 1850, from the verb in this sense. —v. 1804, to print from stereotype plates; borrowed from French stéréotyper, from stéréotype, adj. The sense of perpetuate in an unchanging form, standardize, is first recorded in English before 1819.

sterile adj. About 1450, (of a tree) producing no fruit, barren; borrowed from Middle French stérile not producing fruit or offspring, and directly from Latin sterilis barren, unproductive; cognate with Greek stérēsthai be deprived of, stérēa sterile. The sense of free from microorganisms, sterilized, is first recorded in 1877. —sterility n. Probably before 1425 sterilitēe infertility; borrowed from Middle French sterilité, from Latin sterilitās unfruitfulness, barrenness, from sterilis sterile; for suffix see -ITY. —sterilize v. 1695, destroy the fertility of; formed from English sterile + -ize; possibly also influenced by, or borrowed from, French stériliser, from Middle French steriliser to make or become impotent. The meaning of make incapable of reproducing is first recorded in 1828, and that of render free of microorganisms is first recorded in 1878. —sterilizer n. 1839, substance that makes soil unproductive; later, apparatus for destroying microorganisms (1891).

sterling n. 1299, the English silver penny; probably formed from Middle English sterre STAR (which appeared on certain Norman coins) + -ling; known on the Continent in Old French esterlin (perhaps before 1104), later in Anglo-Latin sterlingus 1180, possibly from Old English steorling* coin with a star, from steorra star. Money having the quality of the sterling is first recorded in 1565, and English money as distinguished from foreign money, in 1601. —adj. 1425, of English money; from the noun. The sense of having a fixed standard of purity for silver (sterling silver) is first recorded in 1551, and the figurative sense of excellent, dependable, about 1645.

stern¹ adj. severe, strict. About 1250 sterne; developed from Old English (before 1000) styrne, stierne- (as in sternlice sternly), from Proto-Germanic sternijaz*.

stern² n. hind part of a ship. Probably about 1225 sterne; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic stjörn a steering, related to stýra to guide, STEER¹); alternatively the word may have come into Middle English through Old Frisian stiārne rudder, related to stiōra to STEER¹.

sternum n. 1667, New Latin, from Greek stérnon man's chest, related to stornýnai to spread out, STREW, emphasizing the chest as broad and flat, as opposed to the neck.

steroid n. 1936, any of a class of compounds including the sterols and various hormones; formed from English ster(ol) + -oid.

sterol n. 1913, any of a group of solid, chiefly unsaturated alcohols; abstracted from (chole)sterol.

stet n. 1821, borrowing of Latin stet let it stand, third person singular present subjunctive of stāre to stand. —v. About 1875; from the noun.

stethoscope n. 1820, borrowed from French stéthoscope (Greek stēthos chest, breast + French -scope).

Stetson n. 1902, trademark of a type of high-crowned hat, worn especially in the western United States; named after John B. Stetson, an American hat manufacturer.

stevedore n. 1828 (in 1788 stowadore); borrowed from Spanish estibador one who loads cargo, from estibar to stow cargo, from Latin stipāre pack down, press.

stew v. Before 1399 stewen to cook by slow boiling; earlier styven bathe in a steam bath (1373); borrowed from Old French estuver bathe, stew; of uncertain origin, possibly from steward n. Probably before 1300, manager of a household or estate; developed from Old English (probably about 900) steward, stigeard house guardian (stig hall, pen + ward guard). The officer on a ship in charge of provisions and meals is first recorded about 1450. —stewardess n. 1631, formed from English steward + -ess. The woman employed on a ship to wait on passengers is first recorded in 1837, and extended to airplanes (now replaced by flight attendant, 1956).

Vulgar Latin extūfare* evaporate (Latin ex- out + Vulgar Latin tūfus* vapor, steam, from Greek tūphos smoke). —n. Before 1300 stu caldron, cooking pot; borrowed from Old French estuve heated room, hothouse, bathing room; of uncertain origin, possibly from Vulgar Latin extūfa*, from extūfare* evaporate. The sense of stewed meat is first recorded in English in 1756.

stick¹ n. short piece of wood. Probably about 1150 sticke; developed from Old English (about 1000) sticca rod, twig, spoon; cognate with Middle Dutch stecke stick (modern Dutch stek slip, cutting), Old High German stehho, stecko stick (dialectal German Stecken), and Old Icelandic stik, stika stick, yardstick, from a Proto-Germanic form derived from the root stik-* pierce, prick; see STICK².

stick² v. pierce, stab; fasten. Probably before 1200 stiken pierce; later, to attach or fasten (about 1250); developed from Old English stician to pierce, stab; also, remain imbedded, be fastened (before 899). Old English stician is cognate with Old Frisian steka to pierce, Old Saxon stekan, Middle Dutch stēken (modern Dutch steken), Old High German stehhan (modern German stechen), and Old Icelandic stika to dam, measure; derived from Proto-Germanic stik-* pierce, prick, be sharp. —n. 1633, a stab; from the verb. —sticker n. Before 1585, person who sticks or stabs; formed from English *stick*², v. + *-er*¹. The meaning of a gummed adhesive label is first recorded in 1871. —sticky adj. that sticks. 1735, formed from English *stick*², v. + *-y*¹. stickle v. 1530, act as umpire, mediate; probably a variant of Middle English stichtelen, steghtelen to regulate, control (before 1350), frequentative form of stihthen to arrange, place (before 1121); developed from Old English (before 830) stihthan to arrange, order; for suffix see *-LE*³. Old English stihthan is cognate with Old Icelandic stétta to support, establish, stét stair, step, rank, and stiga to rise, climb. The meaning of make objections about trifles, insist stubbornly, is first recorded in 1819, influenced by stickler. —stickler n. 1538, moderator, umpire; formed from stickle + *-er*¹. The person who contends or insists stubbornly is first recorded in 1644.

stiff adj. Probably before 1200 stif not flexible, rigid; developed from Old English (1000) stif (from Proto-Germanic stifaz*), cognate with Middle Low German stif stiff, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stijf, and Old Icelandic stifla to dam up. —stiffen v. Probably before 1425 stiffnen make more steadfast or unyielding; formed from stif, adj. + -enen *-en*¹.

stifle v. Before 1387 stuflen to choke, suffocate, drown; later stiflen (about 1495), of uncertain origin; possibly an alteration (influenced by Old Icelandic stifla dam up) of Old French estouffer to stifle, smother, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German stopfōn to plug, stop up, stuff). The sense of suppress (a cry, cough, etc.) is first recorded about 1495 and that of suppress (a fact, truth, etc.) in 1577.

stigma n. 1596, special mark burned on the skin of a slave, criminal, etc.; earlier in the Anglicized form stigne (probably about 1400); borrowed from Latin stigma, from Greek stigma (genitive stigmatos) mark, puncture, especially one made by a pointed instrument, from stig-, root of stizein to mark, tattoo. A mark of disgrace is first recorded in English before 1619. The part of the pistil in flowering plants that receives the pollen is first recorded in 1753. —stigmatize v. 1585, to brand, tattoo; borrowed from Middle French stigmatiser, and directly from Medieval Latin stigmatizare, from Greek stigmatizein mark, brand, from stigma; for suffix see -IZE. The sense of set a mark of disgrace on, is first recorded in 1619.

stile n. 1333–52, developed from Old English (about 779) stigel; cognate with Old High German stigilla stile, and related to Old English stigen to climb; see STAIR.

stiletto n. 1611, borrowing of Italian stiletto, diminutive of stilo dagger, from Latin stilus pointed writing instrument, STYLE.

still¹ adj. quiet, tranquil. Old English stille motionless, stationary (about 725, in Beowulf); later, (before 1000) quiet, silent; cognate with Old Frisian stille still, Old Saxon stilli, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stille (modern Dutch stil), and Old High German stilli (modern German still), from Proto-Germanic steljaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 stillen, developed from Old English (before 900) stillan to make or become still, related to the adjective, and cognate with Old Saxon stillian to make quiet, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stillen, Old High German and modern German stillen, and Old Icelandic stilla. —n. Probably before 1200, a calm; from the adjective. —adv. Probably before 1200 stille without moving, quietly (as in stand still); found in Old English stille (from Proto-Germanic steljaz*), with cognates in Old Saxon and Old High German stillo, Middle Dutch and modern German stille, modern Dutch stil, Swedish stilla, and Danish stille. The meaning of even now or even then, yet (as in to still smell of skunk) is first found in 1535, and the sense of even, yet (as in still more) in 1730. —conj. 1722, nevertheless, notwithstanding; from the adjective.

still² n. apparatus for distilling. 1562, noun use of Middle English stillen to distill (probably about 1225), subsequently a variant of distillen to DISTILL.

stilt n. Probably before 1300, crutch; later, one of two poles used in walking above the ground (before 1425); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stelte stilt (modern Dutch stelt), Old High German stelza (modern German Stelze), Swedish stylta, and Danish stylte, from Proto-Germanic steltijōn*. —stilted adj. 1615, furnished with or having stilts; formed from English stilt + *-ed*². The sense of pompous, stiffy, is first recorded in 1820.

stimulate v. 1619, spur on, stir up; earlier, to prick, sting (before 1548); probably a back formation from stimulation, and perhaps in part borrowed from Latin stimulātus, past participle of stimulāre prick, goad, urge, from stimulus spur, goad; for suffix see -ATE¹. —stimulant n. 1728, borrowed from Latin stimulāntem (nominative stimulāns), present participle of stimulāre stimulate; for suffix see -ANT. —stimulating adj. (1684) —stimulation n. 1526, act of pricking or spurring to action; borrowed from Latin stimulātiōnem (nominative stimulātiō), from stimulāre stimulate; for suffix see -ATION. —stimulative adj. 1791, formed from English stimulate, v. + -ive. —stimulus n. 1684, borrowing of Latin stimulus spur, goad.

sting v. Probably before 1200 stingen; developed from Old English stingan to prick with a small point (before 899), from Proto-Germanic stenganan*; cognate with Old High German stungen to sting, Old Icelandic stinga, and Gothic usstangan to pluck out. —n. Old English sting act of stinging, wound (before 899); from the verb. —stinger n. 1552, one who goads or instigates; later, part of an insect or animal that stings (before 1889, earlier sting, 1398), formed from English sting, v. + -er¹. —stinging adj. Probably before 1200, that causes hurt feelings or irritation, biting.

stingy adj. 1659, of uncertain origin; possibly a dialectal use (with altered pronunciation and meaning) of earlier stingy biting, sharp, stinging (about 1615), formed from English sting, n. or v. + adjective suffix -y¹.

stink v. Probably before 1200 stinken emit a strong offensive smell; developed from Old English (before 800) stincan emit a smell of any kind; cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stinken to stink, Old High German stinkan (modern German stinken), from Proto-Germanic stinkwanan*. —n. About 1250 stinc offensive quality or odor; from the verb. —stinker n. (1607) —stinky adj. (1888) stint v. be sparing. Probably about 1200 stinten to cease, cause to stop; developed from Old English styntan to blunt, make dull; cognate with Old Icelandic styttan to shorten, from Proto-Germanic stuntjanan*. The meaning of limit or confine is first recorded in 1513. —n. Before 1325, cessation; from the verb. The meaning of an allotted amount, is found about 1485, and that of an allotted portion of work, before 1530.

stipend n. 1444–46, shortened form of earlier stipendy (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin stipendium, shortened form of stipendium* (stips alms, small payment + pendere weigh).

stipple v. 1760–62; borrowed from Dutch stippelen, frequentative form of stippen to prick, speckle, from stip a point; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1837, from the verb. The plural stipples, dots used in shading a design, is recorded earlier (1669), probably borrowed from Dutch stippel, diminutive of stip a point.

stipulate v. Before 1624, make a bargain or contract; probably a back formation from stipulation, and in part borrowed from Latin stipulātus, past participle of stipulārī to exact a promise; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of demand as a condition of agreement is first recorded in English about 1645. —stipulation n. 1552, engagement or undertaking to do something; borrowed from Latin stipulātiōnem (nominative stipulātiō), from stipulārī exact a promise; for suffix see -ATION. The act of specifying one of the terms of an agreement, condition in an agreement, is first recorded in 1750.

stipule n. 1793, borrowed from French stipule, from Latin stipula stalk (of hay), straw; for suffix see -ULE.

stir v. Probably before 1160 styren to trouble, disquiet, set in motion; developed from Old English styrian (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic sturjanan*; cognate with Old Frisian stēra to disturb, Old Saxon stōrian, Middle Low German storen, Middle Dutch stören (modern Dutch storen), Old High German stōran, stōren (modern German stören), from Proto-Germanic staurijanan*, and Middle High German stürn to stir, poke, Old Icelandic styr disturbance, tumult, struggle, and Norwegian styrje cause a disturbance. —n. 1375 stir commotion, disturbance, tumult; about 1375 stere; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic styr disturbance, tumult). The sense of movement, bustle, activity (about 1586) represents a noun use of English stir, v.

stir-crazy adj. 1908, dazed, disturbed, or upset, usually because of long confinement; formed with English crazy, from the word stir prison (1851, probably an alteration of Start Newgate prison in London, 1747; later any prison, 1823; probably borrowed from Romyan stardo imprisoned, related to staripen a prison).

stirrup n. About 1225 stirope; developed from Old English (about 1000) stigrāp stirrup; literally, climbing rope; formed from stige a climbing, ascent (from Proto-Germanic stijiz*) + rāp rope. The Old English compound corresponds to Old Saxon stigerēp stirrup, Middle Dutch stegereep, Old High German stegareif, and Old Icelandic stigreip.

stitch n. Probably before 1200 stiche sudden stabbing pain in the side; developed from Old English stice a prick, puncture (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian steke prick, stab, Old Saxon stiki point, thrust, Middle Low German steke prick, sting, stab, Old High German stih (modern German Stich), and Gothic stiks point of time, from Proto-Germanic stikiz*.

The senses in sewing or shoemaking and that of a complete stitch, are first recorded about 1300. —v. Probably before 1200 stichen fasten with stitches; from the noun.

stoa n. 1603, borrowed from Greek stoá portico.

stoat n. Before 1475 stote, ermine in its summer coat of brown; of uncertain origin.

stochastic adj. 1662, pertaining to conjecture; borrowed from Greek stochastikós able to guess, conjecturing, from stocházesthai guess, from stóchos guess; for suffix see -IC. The sense of randomly determined, involving chance or probability, is first recorded in English in 1934, borrowed through German Stochastik.

stock n. Probably before 1200 stocke tree trunk; developed from Old English stoc stump, post, stake; cognate with Old Frisian stok tree trunk, stump, Old Saxon stok stick, Middle Low German stok stick, stump, Middle Dutch stoc (modern Dutch stok stick, cane), Old High German stoc stick, stump (modern German Stock stick, cane), and Old Icelandic stokkr block of wood, tree trunk, from Proto-Germanic stukkaz*.

The meaning of ancestry, family (before 1200), is a figurative use of tree trunk, from which came the meaning of the heavy part of a tool, later extended to the part of a rifle or musket held against the shoulder (1541).

The plural stocks wooden frame, used for punishment (before 1325) is a special use of post, stake (Old English about 1000). The meaning of a supply for future use (1428), and that of a sum or fund of money (probably 1419) gave rise to the sense of a company's capital worth divided into shares, before 1692. These senses occur originally only in English and their ultimate origin is uncertain. —v. Before 1325 stocken to place in the stocks, imprison; from the noun. The meaning of furnish, supply, is first recorded in 1622. —adj. Before 1625, kept regularly in stock; from the noun. The figurative sense of commonly used, conventional, trite, is first recorded in 1738. —stock-still adj. About 1470, literally, as still as a tree trunk; formed from stocke tree trunk + still. —stocky adj. About 1300 stokki made of wood; formed from stocke stock + -y. The meaning of having a sturdy build, thick-set, is first recorded in 1676.

stockade n. 1614 (in 1612, staccado); borrowed from Spanish estacada, from estaca stake, from a Germanic source (compare Old English staca STAKE); for suffix see -ADE. The meaning of prison, especially on a military post, is first recorded in 1882. —v. 1755, protect or fortify with a stockade; from the noun.

stocking n. 1583, formed in English from stocka leg covering, sock (1457) + -ing; probably so called in reference to a log or trunk.

stodgy adj. 1823, of a thick, semi-solid consistency; formed from English stodge to stuff (1674), + -y. The meaning of dull, heavy, developed by 1874 from the senses of the noun stodge (1825) applied to food: as heavy, solid (1841), and of the adjective thick, glutinous (1858).

stogie or stogy n. 1847 stoga rough, heavy kind of shoe; later stogie long, cheap cigar (1873); both shortened from Conestoga, a town in Pennsylvania (supposed to be so called because drivers of Conestoga covered wagons, first built in Conestoga, were associated with the use of such shoes and cigars).

Stoic or stoic n. About 1384, borrowed from Latin stōicus, from Greek stōikós pertaining to a member or the teachings of an ancient Greek school (founded by Zeno) characterized by austere ethical doctrines; literally, pertaining to a portico, from stoá portico, porch, specifically the portico in Athens where Zeno taught; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of a person who represses feelings or practices patient endurance, is first recorded in English in 1579. —adj. 1596, like a Stoic in character, practicing patient endurance; borrowed from Latin stōicus, adj. and n. —stoical adj. = Stoic. Probably before 1425 stociale; formed from Latin stōicus, adj. and n. + Middle English -al. —stoicism n. 1626, borrowed from New Latin stoicismus, from Latin stōicus; for suffix see -ISM.

stoke v. 1683 (implied in stoking-hole), back formation from earlier English stoker person who tends a furnace (1660); borrowed from Dutch stoker, from stoken to stoke, from Middle Dutch stōken to poke, thrust, related to stoc stick, stump, STOCK. The sense of stir up or excite (hate, lust, etc.) is found in 1837.

stole n. Old English stole long robe, scarflike garment worn by clergymen (about 950); an early borrowing from Latin stola robe, vestment, from Greek stolē a long robe; originally, garment, equipment.

stolid adj. About 1600, perhaps a back formation from earlier stolidity; also borrowed from Middle French stolide, and directly from Latin stolidus insensible, dull, unmovable, brutish. —stolidity n. 1563–83, borrowed from Middle French stolidité, and directly from Latin stoliditās dullness, stupidity, from stolidus; for suffix see -ITY.

stolon n. 1601, borrowed from Latin stolōnem (nominative stolō) a shoot, branch, sucker.

stoma n. 1684, small opening, New Latin, from Greek stōma mouth.

stomach n. Before 1325 stomak; later stomach (before 1393); borrowed from Old French estomac, stomaque, from Latin stomachus stomach, throat; also, taste, liking, and distaste, irritation, from Greek stómachos throat, stomach; literally, mouth, opening, from stōma mouth. The figurative senses of Latin are first recorded in English in the sense of appetite (about 1386), taste, liking (1513), and irritation (about 1540). —v. 1523, to be offended at, resent; from the noun. The sense of put up with, endure, is found in 1677.

stomp v. 1803, variant of STAMP. —n. 1912, a social dance with heavy stamping; later, a heavy walking gait (1971). —stomping n. (1819) stone n. Probably before 1200 ston; developed from Old English (before 830) stān; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon stēn stone, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch steen, Old High German stein (modern German Stein), Old Icelandic steinn, and Gothic stains, from Proto-Germanic stainaz*. —v. Probably about 1200 stanen to throw stones at; from the noun. —adv. totally, completely (as in stone broke). About 1290, from the noun, with reference to hardness, etc. —stonewall n. 1876, also stone wall an act or instance of obstruction; found in Old English (before 830), wall built of stone. —v. 1880, to adopt tactics of obstruction. —stonny adj. Probably about 1200 stani hard, insensible; developed from Old English (about 950) stānig, from stān stone + -ig -Y. stooge n. 1913, stage assistant, of uncertain origin. The sense of a lackey, or person used for another purpose, is first recorded in 1937.

stool n. Old English stōl seat (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon stōl seat, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stoel, Old High German stuol (modern German Stuhl), Old Icelandic stōll, Gothic stōls throne (from Proto-Germanic stōlaz*). The meaning of bowel movement (1533) derived from the sense of privy (1410). The term stool pigeon, one fastened to a stool to lure other pigeons, is first recorded in 1836, and the person used as a decoy in 1830.

stoop¹ v. bend forward. Probably before 1200 stūpen; later stoupen (about 1280); developed from Old English stūpian (before 899); cognate with Middle Dutch stūpen to bow, bend, and Old Icelandic stūpa to stand upright (Norwegian and Swedish stupa fall, plunge). —n. About 1300 stoupe; from the verb.

stoop² n. porch. 1755, borrowed from Dutch stoep flight of steps, doorstep, stoop, from Middle Dutch (from Proto-Germanic stōpō*); cognate with Middle Low German stope step, flight of steps, and Old High German stuofa, stuoffa step (modern German Stufe).

stop v. Probably before 1200 stoppen to plug or block; developed from Old English -stopian (in forstopian to stop up, stuff); cognate with Old Frisian stoppia to plug, stop up, stuff, Old Low Franconian stuppōn, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stoppen, and Old High German stopfōn (modern German stopfen); either: 1) a common West Germanic adoption of Vulgar Latin stuppāre* to stop or stuff with tow or oakum (as found in Italian stappare, Provençal and Spanish estopar, and Old French estoper), from Latin stappa coarse flax or hemp, tow, from Greek stýppē; or 2) the Germanic group of words derives from a base stoppōn*, and by tracing Germanic -pp- (before an accented syllable) to Indo-European -pn-, the group is related to Latin stupēre to be stunned, dazed, paralyzed; see STUPID, with German stopfōn and its cognates influenced by Vulgar Latin stuppāre* both in form and meaning. This influence spread from the Lower Rhine valley, where plugs made of tow were used from ancient times. Compare STUFF.

English stop to bring or come to a halt (1440) was a specially English development, though the English word has been widely adopted in other languages, as French stopper, German stoppen, etc. —n. 1385–86, a plug, something that stops; from the verb. The sense of a cessation or stopping is first recorded about 1450. —stopgap n. (1684) —stoppage n. 1540, obstruction; earlier deduction from payments (1465) an act of stopping (1657). —stopper n. (1480) store v. 1264 storen to supply or stock; borrowed from Old French estorer erect, furnish, store, from Latin instaurāre restore (in- + -staurāre, from a lost noun stauros*; cognate with Greek staurós pole, stake). The meaning of put away for future use is first recorded in 1600. —n. Probably before 1300, supply, stock; borrowed from Old French estor, from estorer erect, furnish. The meaning of a place where goods are kept for sale is first recorded in 1721. —storage n. 1612–13, space for storing; formed from English store, v. + -age. The sense of an act of storing is first recorded in 1828. —storehouse n. (1348) stork n. Old English (before 850) storc, related to stearc stiff, strong (see STARK); so called with reference to the bird's stiff or rigid posture, and cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch storc stork, Old High German stora (modern German Storch), and Old Icelandic storkr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish stork), from Proto-Germanic sturkaz*.

storm n. Old English storm (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon storm storm, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch storm, Old High German sturm (modern German Sturm), and Old Icelandic stormr, from Proto-Germanic sturmaz*. —v. About 1380 stormen to rage, be violent; from the Middle English noun. —stormy adj. Before 1325 stormi characterized by storm, subject to storms; developed from Late Old English storemig (before 1150); formed from Old English storm, n. + -ig -y¹.

story¹ n. account of some happening. Probably before 1200 storie historical narrative or writing; borrowed from Old French estorie, from Late Latin storia, and Latin historia history, account, tale, story, from Greek historiā history, record, inquiry, from historeîn inquire, from hístōr wise man, judge.

story² n. floor of a building. Before 1384, borrowed from Anglo-Latin historia picture, floor of a building, from Latin historia HISTORY; perhaps so called because the front of buildings in the Middle Ages often were decorated with rows of painted windows; -story is found in early use in the term clerestory (1412).

stoup n. 1397 stoup jug, jar; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic and modern Norwegian stau cup).

stout adj. Probably before 1300 stout proud, brave, strong; borrowed from Old French estout, earlier estolt strong, from a Germanic source (compare Old Frisian stult proud, stately, arrogant, Middle Low German stolt, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stout, Middle High German and modern German stolz, and Norwegian staut stately, fine); possibly related to STILT, from the notion of rising above others. Middle English stout also meaning physically strong, having a powerful build, developed the meaning thick-bodied, fat and large, first recorded in 1804. —n. strong, dark-brown beer. 1677, from the adjective.

stove n. 1456, heated room, room filled with steam for sweating; probably borrowed from Middle Low German stove a heated room or Middle Dutch stove a heated room, a foot warmer (modern Dutch stoof stove, furnace); both cognate with Old English stofa steam or bath, Old High German stuba heated room (modern German Stube room), Old Icelandic stofa house, bathing room with a stove, Norwegian stove, stue cottage, cabin, Swedish stuga cottage, and Danish stue room. The device for heating is first recorded in English before 1618.

The relation between the West Germanic group of words listed above and Romance words, including Old French estuve heated room, hothouse, caldron (modern French étuve steam room), Spanish estufa stove, and Italian stufa is uncertain.

stow v. Probably about 1380 stowen to put in a certain place or position; verb use of stowe a place (before 1200); developed from Old English stōw a place (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian stō a place, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch stouwen to stow, Middle High German stouwen (modern German stauen) to stow (from Proto-Germanic stōwījanan*), and Old Icelandic -sto in eldstō fireplace.

The meaning of put away to be stored, pack, is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1400. The phrase stow away, to conceal, is first found in 1795. —stowage n. 1391, act of packing cargo, formed from stowen to stow + -age. The sense of a place to stow occurs before 1641. —stowaway n. 1850, from the verb phrase stow away.

strabismus n. 1684, also Anglicized strabism (1656); New Latin strabismus, borrowed from Greek strabismós, from strabízein to squint, from strabós squinting, squint-eyed; for suffix see -ISM.

straddle v. 1565, probably an alteration of Middle English (about 1450) stridlen, frequentative form of striden to STRIDE; for suffix see *-LE*³.

strafe v. 1915, originally punish, attack; borrowed from the German slogan Gott strafe England may God punish England, current in Germany about 1914–16. Middle High German strāfen punish (modern German strafen) is from Proto-Germanic strāf-*. —n. 1916 (in 1915, straff), from the verb.

straggle v. Before 1425 straglen move about aimlessly, wander; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian stragla to walk laboriously); or an altered frequentative form of straken to move, go (probably before 1325); for suffix see *-LE*³.

straight adj. Probably before 1325 streyt not bent or curved; later streight (1369); adjective use of Old English streht (altered, by analogy with streccan, from earlier streaht), past participle of streccan to STRETCH. —adv. Probably before 1300 streite closely, carefully; later streight immediately, directly (probably before 1325); adverb use of Old English streht, past participle of streccan to STRETCH. —n. 1645, from the adjective. —straighten v. 1542, to make straight; formed from straight, adj. + *-en*¹. —straightforward adj. (1806) strain¹ v. to stretch, draw tight. About 1300 streinen draw tight, stretch; later strainen (1432); borrowed from Old French estreindre bind tightly, clasp, squeeze, from Latin stringere bind or draw tight. The sense of press through a filter is first recorded before 1325 and that of lay undue stress on, make a forced interpretation of (1449, and the adjective form strained, about 1600). —n. 1432 straine filter, strainer, from the verb. The sense of injury caused by straining is first recorded about 1400 (implied in straining), and that of strong muscular effort, in 1590. The passage of song or music, melody, probably developed from the verb meaning (before 1387) to tighten (the strings of a musical instrument). —strainer n. (1326–27) strain² n. line of descent. Probably before 1200 strene offspring, line of descent, stock; developed from Old English (about 950) strion, strion gain, begetting (from Proto-Germanic streun-*); shortened form of gestreōn, gestrion, related to striēnan to gain, and cognate with Old High German striunan to gain; originally, to pile up. The sense of variety of an animal species is first recorded in 1607.

strait n. Often, straits. About 1390 straite; noun use of adjective strait narrow, strict (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French estreit tight, close, narrow, from Latin strictus, past participle of stringere bind or draw tight. The sense of difficulty, plight (usually straits) is first recorded in 1544. —straiten v. 1523, to restrict, narrow; formed from English strait, adj. + *-en*¹.

strand¹ n. shore. Old English (about 1000) strand; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strant shore, beach (modern Dutch strand), Old Icelandic strönd border, edge, coast (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish strand), from Proto-Germanic strandās*. —v. 1621, from the noun. The sense of leave helpless is first recorded in 1837.

strand² n. one of the fibers of a rope, string, etc. 1497 strond; perhaps cognate with Old High German strēno (modern German Strähne) lock, tress, strand of hair (compare dialectal English stran), of unknown origin.

strange adj. About 1280 stroung from elsewhere, foreign, unknown, unfamiliar; later straunge (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French estranger foreign, alien, from Latin extrāneus foreign, external, from extrā outside of; see EXTRA-. —stranger n. 1375, unknown person, foreigner; borrowed from Old French estranger foreigner, alien, from estranger strange; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

strangle v. Probably about 1280 stranglen to kill; later, to choke, smother (about 1300); borrowed from Old French estrangler, from Latin strangulāre to choke, stifle, check, constrain, from Greek strangālān choke, twist, from strangālē a halter, cord, lace, related to strangós twisted.

strangulate v. 1665, to choke, stifle; probably a back formation from strangulation, influenced by Latin strangulātus, past participle of strangulāre to choke, STRANGLE; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —strangulation n. 1542; borrowed from Latin strangulationem (nominative strangulatiō), from strangulāre STRANGLE; for suffix see -ATION.

strap n. 1620, loop or band for fastening things together, variant of strobe loop or strap on a harness (1345–49); probably borrowed from Old French estrop strap, from Latin stroppus strap, band, perhaps from Etruscan, ultimately from Greek stróphos twisted band, from stréphein to turn; see STROPHE. Late Old English strop (about 1050) from Latin stroppus, is probably not continuous with the Middle English word. —v. 1711, from the noun. —strapping adj. 1657, tall and sturdy (applied originally to a woman), formed from English strap, v. + *-ing*².

stratagem n. 1489, trick for deceiving an enemy; borrowed from Middle French stratagème trick, especially to outwit an enemy, borrowed from Italian stratagemma (with vowel assimilation of e to a), from Latin stratēgēma, from Greek stratēgēma the act of a general, military stratagem, from stratēgēs to be a general, command, from stratēgós general; see STRATEGY.

strategy n. 1810, art of planning military operations; borrowed from French stratégie, and probably directly from Greek stratēgiā office or command of a general, from stratēgós general (stratós army + agós leader, from ágein to lead); for suffix see *-Y*³. —strategic adj. 1825 (implied earlier in strategically 1810); borrowed from French stratégique, and probably directly from stratify v. 1661, back formation from stratification; for suffix see -FY. —stratification n. 1617, borrowed from New Latin stratificationem (nominative stratificatio), from stratificare (stratum thing spread out, STRATUM + the root of Latin facere to make); for suffix see -FICATION.

Greek stratēgikós of a general, from stratēgós general; for suffix see -IC. —strategist n. 1838, person skilled in strategy; borrowed from French stratégiste, from stratégie strategy; for suffix see -IST.

stratosphere n. 1908, borrowed from French stratosphère, formed from Latin strātus (genitive strātūs) a spreading out (from the root of sternere to spread out) + French -sphère, as in atmosphère.

stratum n. 1599, New Latin, special use of Latin strātum thing spread out, coverlet, pavement, from neuter past participle of sternere to spread out.

straw n. About 1200 strawe stalk or stem, piece of straw; developed from Old English (about 950) strēaw, related to strēowian to STREW, and cognate with Old Frisian strē straw, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strō (modern Dutch stroo), Old High German strō (modern German Stroh), and Old Icelandic strā (Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish strå), from Proto-Germanic strāwān*.

strawberry n. Probably about 1200 streaberie the plant, 1328–29 the fruit; later strawbery (1373); developed from Old English (about 1000) strēawberige (strēaw STRAW + berige, berie BERRY). No corresponding compound is found in other Germanic languages and the reason for the name is uncertain.

stray v. About 1300 strayen wander from a path; borrowed from Old French estraier wander about; literally, go about the streets or highways, from estree route, highway, from Late Latin via strāta paved road; see STREET. —n. 1228 strai domestic animal found wandering; borrowed from Anglo-French stray, estrai, from Old French estraié strayed, past participle of estraier to stray. The act of straying (probably 1404) from the verb.

streak n. Before 1387 strike line, mark, stroke; later streke (1440); developed from Old English strica (about 1000), from Proto-Germanic striukōn*, related to strīcan pass over lightly; see STRIKE and cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strēke line, stroke (modern Dutch streek), Old High German strich (modern German Strich), and Gothic striks. The sense of thin irregular lines of contrasting color or texture is found in English in 1567. —v. 1440 streken to cancel by drawing a line or lines across; from the noun.

stream n. Old English (before 850) strēam a course of water forming a river, brook, etc.; cognate with Old Frisian strām stream, Old Saxon strōm, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch stroom, Old High German stroum (modern German Strom), and Old Icelandic straumur (Swedish ström, Norwegian strøm, Danish strøm), from Proto-Germanic straumaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 stremen; from the noun. —streamer n. 1292 stremer flag waving in the air; formed from stremen to stream + -*er*¹. —streamline adj. 1898, free from turbulence; from noun meaning the path traced by a flowing fluid (1868).

—v. (1913, implied in streamlined) give a streamline form to; from the adjective. The sense of simplify, organize, appeared in 1936.

street n. Probably about 1175 strate, stret; later strete (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (Mercian) strēt paved road, highway, (West Saxon) stræt (about 725, in Beowulf); an early borrowing from Late Latin strāta, used elliptically for via strāta paved road, from past participle of Latin sternere lay down, spread out, pave. The borrowing of Late Latin strāta was common to many West Germanic languages including Old Frisian strēte street, Old Saxon strāta, Middle Dutch strāte (modern Dutch straat), Old High German straza, strazza (modern German Strasse), and in the Romance languages the word is represented by Provençal, Spanish, and Portuguese estrada, Old French estree, and Italian strada.

strength n. 1106 strengthe; developed from Old English strengthu power, force, vigor, moral resistance (before 899), from strang STRONG; for suffix see -TH¹. Old English strengthu is cognate with Old High German strengida strength, from Proto-Germanic stranzīthō*. —strengthen v. Probably about 1378 strengthenen give support to, abet; formed from strengthe strength + -nen -*en*¹.

strenuous adj. Before 1460 (implied in strenuously) vigorous, energetic; borrowed from Latin strenuus active, vigorous, keen; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of requiring much energy, arduous, is first recorded in 1671.

strep n. 1927 strep throat; shortened form of STREPTOCOCCUS.

streptococcus n. 1877, New Latin; formed from Greek streptós twisted + New Latin coccus spherical bacterium, from Greek kókkos berry; so called because these bacteria usually form chains.

streptomycin n. 1944, formed from New Latin Streptomyces, genus name of the soil bacterium from which the antibiotic was obtained, from Greek streptós twisted + mýkēs fungus; for suffix see -IN².

stress n. About 1303 stres, stresse hardship, coercion, pressure; in part developed as a shortened form of Middle English destresse DISTRESS, and borrowed from Old French estrece narrowness, oppression, from Vulgar Latin strictia*, from Latin strictus compressed, past participle of stringere draw tight. The sense of great strain, anguish, is first recorded probably about 1380, and the phonetic sense in pronunciation in 1749. —v. About 1303 stressen restrain, confine; borrowed from Old French estrecier straighten, contract, from Vulgar Latin strictiāre*, from strictia* narrowness, oppression. The sense of put emphasis on, attach importance to (1896), derives from the noun.

stretch v. Probably before 1200 strecchen to extend; developed from Old English streccan (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian strekka to stretch, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strecken (modern Dutch strekken), and Old High German strecchan (modern German strecken), from Proto-Germanic strekjanan*. —n. Probably about 1175 strecche expanse of land; from the verb. The act of stretching or straining is first recorded in 1541, and an uninterrupted continuance (as in at one stretch) in 1661. —stretcher n. (about 1420, person who stretches; 1845, canvas stretched on a frame for carrying the sick or wounded)

strew v. Probably before 1300 strewen to scatter, sprinkle; developed from Old English (about 971) strēowian; cognate with Old Frisian strēwa to strew, Old Saxon strōian, Middle Dutch strōien (modern Dutch strooien), Old High German streuen (modern German streuen), Old Icelandic strā (Norwegian and Danish strø, Swedish strö), and Gothic straujan, from Proto-Germanic straujanan*.

striated adj. 1646, formed from New Latin striatus striped, streaked + English *-ed*². New Latin striatus is a special use of Latin striātus, a participle-like formation, developed directly from the noun stria furrow, channel; for suffix see *-ATE*³. —striation n. 1849, one of a number of parallel streaks; formed from New Latin stria stripe, streak + English -ation.

stricken adj. 1513, wounded, affected (by disease, trouble, etc.), adjective use of the past participle of STRIKE, v. An early adjective use of the past participle is found in the phrase striken in elde advanced in years (before 1300).

strict adj. Probably before 1425 stricte narrow, drawn in, small; perhaps influenced by stricture, but also a borrowing from Latin strictus drawn together, tight, rigid, past participle of stringere draw or bind tight. The sense of stringent (as a law, rule, etc.) is first recorded in English in 1578, as is the sense of stern in matters of morality and conscience (implied in strictness, 1578). The meaning of characterized by unrelaxing effort (as in a strict examination) is first recorded in 1596.

stricture n. Before 1400, an abnormal narrowing or contraction in a bodily part; borrowed from Late Latin strictūra contraction, constriction, from strict-, past participle stem of stringere to bind or draw tight; for suffix see -URE. The sense of criticism, critical remark, is first recorded in English about 1779.

stride v. Probably before 1200 striden to walk with long steps; developed from Old English (before 800) strīdan to straddle; cognate with Middle Low German striden to straddle, take long steps. The verb is not found with a similar sense in other Germanic languages, but it is similar in form to a verb meaning strive, quarrel, found in Old Saxon strīdian and Old Frisian strīda, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch strijden to fight, struggle, Old High German strītan (modern German streiten), and Old Icelandic strīdha (Swedish strida, Danish and Norwegian stride), from Proto-Germanic strīdanan*. Thus the primary meaning of Proto-Germanic strīd-* to strive, make a strong effort, might account for the development of the English and Low German sense of move or walk with long steps. See also STRIFE, STRIVE. —n. Old English (before 800) strīde distance covered by a long step, related to strīdan to stride.

strident adj. 1656, borrowed from French strident, and directly from Latin stridentem (nominative strīdēns), present participle of strīdere, strīdēre utter an inarticulate sound, grate, screech; possibly of imitative origin; for suffix see -ENT.

stridulous adj. 1611, borrowed from Latin stridulus giving a shrill sound, creaking, from strīdere to utter an inarticulate sound, grate, creak; for suffix see -OUS. —stridulate v. 1838, formed either from Latin stridulus giving a shrill sound + English *-ate*¹, or by back formation from stridulation. —stridulation n. 1838, borrowed from French stridulation, or formed directly from Latin stridulus giving a shrill sound, creaking + English -ation.

strife n. Probably before 1200 strif quarrel, fighting, discord; borrowed from Old French estrif, accusative of estris* (formed by analogy with such pairs as baillif, baillis), variant of estrif quarrel, dispute, impetuosity, from Frankish strīd* (compare Old High German strīt quarrel, dispute, related to strītan to fight; see STRIDE). Related to STRIVE.

strike v. Before 1325 striken to deal a blow, hit with force (past tense stroke, strak, past participle striken); developed from Old English (before 1000) strīcan pass over lightly, stroke, smooth, rub, go, proceed (past tense strāc, past participle strīcen). Old English strīcan is cognate with Old Frisian strika pass over lightly, stroke, rub, move, go, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch striken (modern Dutch strijken), and Old High German strīhhan (modern German streichen), from Proto-Germanic strih-*.

Related to STREAK and STROKE in form and meaning by the Proto-Germanic forms straike-* (stroke) and strike-* (streak), and perhaps influenced in the development of the sense of stroke, rub; later, hit, by the Old Icelandic striuka (Swedish stryka, Danish stryge), from Proto-Germanic streuk-*.

The meaning of cancel with the stroke of a pen is first recorded about 1395. The sense of refuse to continue work as a group to force an employer to meet demands is first recorded in 1768, perhaps from the sailors' practice of striking or lowering a ship's sail as a symbol of their refusal to go to sea (1768). The meaning in baseball of fail to hit a ball pitched in the strike zone is first recorded in 1853. —n. 1587, act of striking, from the verb. Some Middle English uses of the noun strike, such as the sense of a bundle or hank of flax, hemp, etc., were probably borrowed from Middle Low German derivatives of the same root as English strike. The meaning in baseball is first recorded in 1841. —striker n. Probably before 1387, a vagrant; 1850, a worker on strike. —striking adj. About 1611, that strikes; 1752, remarkable, impressive.

string n. About 1175 stringe; developed from Old English streng line, cord, thread (about 725, in Beowulf, from Proto-Germanic stranziz*); cognate with Middle Low German strenk string, Middle Dutch strenc, streng (modern Dutch streng), Old High German strang (modern German Strang), and Old Icelandic strengr (Swedish sträng, Norwegian and Danish streng). The sense of a number of objects arranged in a line, series, file, is first recorded in 1488–92. —v. About 1400 strengen to fit (a bow) with its string; from the noun. The sense of thread or hang on a string, appeared in 1612, and that of extend or stretch (as in debris strung out along the shore) before 1670. —string bean (1759) —stringy adj. (1669) stringent adj. 1605, astringent, constrictive; borrowed from Latin stringentem (nominative stringēns), present participle of stringere to compress, contract, bind or draw tight; see STRAIN¹ stretch; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of strict, rigorous, binding, severe, is first recorded in 1846. —stringency n. 1844, formed from English stringent + -cy.

strip¹ v. make bare. Probably about 1200 strūpen remove the clothes of; later, remove the bark of a tree (about 1225), and stripen (before 1387); developed from Old English -striēpan, -strypan, as in West Saxon bestrypan to plunder; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strōpen to plunder, strip (modern Dutch stroopen), and Old High German stroufen to plunder (modern German streifen strip off), from Proto-Germanic straupijanan*. —stripper n. 1581, person who strips off something, as bark off a tree; 1835. The sense of a woman who performs in a striptease act is implied in *strip*¹, v. 1929.

strip² n. long, narrow, flat piece. 1459, narrow piece of cloth; probably borrowed from Middle Low German strippe strap, thong, related to stripe STRIPE¹. The sense of a long narrow tract of land, piece of wood, etc., is first recorded in 1638. —v. 1885, cut into strips; from the noun.

stripe¹ v. to ornament or mark with long, narrow bands of color. 1415 stripen; probably borrowed from Middle Flemish stripen to form a narrow band; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stripen to strip off, stripe stripe, streak (modern Dutch streep), Middle High German strīfe stripe (modern German Streifen), Norwegian stripe, Swedish stripa, and Danish strobe, from Proto-Germanic striþanan*. —n. 1415, a line or band in cloth, of different material, color, etc., from the rest; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German stripe stripe, streak; see the verb.

stripe² n. a stroke or lash. Before 1420 strype mark of a lash, scar; later, a stroke (before 1481); probably a special use of STRIPE¹, n.

stripling n. Before 1398, of uncertain origin, but possibly formed from *strip*² long narrow piece (though unrecorded before 1459) + -ling. The underlying sense would be that of one who is slender as a strip, and whose figure is not yet filled out.

strive v. Probably before 1200 striven to quarrel, contend; later, to try hard, endeavor (before 1325); borrowed from Old French estriver to quarrel, dispute, from estrif, estrit quarrel, STRIFE.

strobe n. 1942, shortened form of earlier stroboscope instrument for studying motion by periodically interrupted light (1896); formed from Greek strōbos act of whirling + English -scope.

stroke¹ n. act of striking, blow. Before 1300 stroke; probably from Old English strāc* (from Proto-Germanic straikaz*), the source of the verb strācian STROKE², and cognate with Middle Low German streke blow, stroke, Middle High German streich (modern German Streich), and Old High German strihhan pass over lightly, stroke. Related to STREAK and STRIKE. The sense of a mark made by a pen, etc., is first recorded in 1567. The striking of a clock is first recorded in 1436; a feat or achievement (as in a stroke of genius) in 1672; a single pull of an oar, in 1583, and a single movement of machinery (as in the stroke of a piston) in 1731. The sense of an apoplectic seizure is first recorded in 1599. —v. 1597, to mark with strokes; from the noun.

stroke² v. pass the hand gently over. About 1300 stroken; developed from Old English strācian (before 899), formed from Old English strāc* stroke; related to strācan pass over lightly; see STRIKE; also related to STREAK. Old English strācian is cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch strēken to stroke (modern Dutch streeken), and Old High German streichhōn (modern German streichen), from Proto-Germanic straikō-janan*. —n. 1631, from *stroke*², v. and related to *stroke*¹, v.

stroll v. 1603, to roam, wander; perhaps borrowed from dialectal German strollen, variant of German strolchen to stroll, loaf, from strolch vagabond, vagrant; also fortuneteller; perhaps from Italian astrologo astrologer. —n. 1814, a leisurely walk; from the verb. An earlier sense of itinerant actor is found in 1623. —stroller n. (1608) strong adj. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English strang (about 725, in Beowulf, from Proto-Germanic stranzaz*), cognate with Old Saxon strang strong, bold, severe, Middle Dutch strenge (modern Dutch streng strict), Middle Low German strenge, Old High German strango strongly, severely, strenge strong, severe, strict (modern German streng), and Old Icelandic strangr strong, hard, severe; related to Old English strenge cord, rope, sinew; see STRING. —stronghold n. Before 1325, formed from strong strong + hold fortified place, refuge.

strontium n. 1808, New Latin, from Strontian, in allusion to a parish in Argyllshire, Scotland, location of the lead mines where strontium was first found; for suffix see -IUM.

strap n. 1345–49 strope loop or strap on a harness; probably borrowed from Old French estrop; see STRAP. The leather strap used for sharpening razors is first recorded in 1702. —v. 1841, from the noun.

strophe n. 1603, borrowed from Greek strophē stanza; originally, a turning, referring to a section of an ancient Greek ode sung by the chorus while turning in one direction, from strophēin to turn.

structure n. Probably 1440, building materials; borrowed from Latin strūctūra a fitting together, adjustment, building, from strūct-, past participle stem of struere to pile, build, assemble, related to struēs heap; for suffix see -URE. The sense of something built, a building, is first recorded in 1615, and that of the manner of construction, in 1650. —v. Before 1693, from the noun. —structural adj. (1835) struggle v. About 1395 struglen to contend physically, grapple; probably a frequentative formation of uncertain origin; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1692, from the verb.

strum v. 1775, play on a musical instrument by running the fingers across the strings, possibly imitative of the sound so made. —n. About 1793, from the verb.

strumpet n. About 1325, of uncertain origin. A supposed connection (through Medieval Latin) with Latin stuprāta, feminine past participle of stuprāre have illicit sexual relations with, has not been established.

strut¹ v. walk in vain, important manner. Before 1300 strouten stick out, protrude; later, to bluster, threaten (about 1300), and struten (before 1325); developed from Old English strūtian to stand out stiffly (about 1000, from Proto-Germanic strūt-*); cognate with Middle High German striuzen to contend, Middle High German and modern German strotzen to bulge, swell, Norwegian and Danish strutte to swell, and Swedish strutta to strut, trip. The sense of display one's clothes proudly or vainly is found about 1399. —n. 1607, from the verb.

strut² n. supporting piece, brace. 1587, of uncertain origin; perhaps related to STRUT¹ (compare Old Icelandic strútr horn-like headdress, Norwegian strut a spout, nozzle, Low German strutt stiff, rigid, ultimately from Proto-Germanic strūt-* probably in the sense of to stand out, protrude).

strychnine n. 1819, borrowing of French strychnine, from New Latin Strychnos, the genus name of a plant (nux vomica) from which the poison is obtained, from Greek strychnon a kind of nightshade; for suffix see -INE².

stub n. About 1250 stubbe stalk of grain or flax; later, stump of a tree (1324); developed from Old English (967) stybb stump of a tree, from Proto-Germanic stubbjaz*; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch stubbe stump, and Old Icelandic stúfr stub, piece, stubbi, stubbr stump (Norwegian and Swedish stubb, stubbe, Danish stub, stubbe), from Proto-Germanic stubbjaz*. —v. About 1450 stubben to dig up stumps and trees; from the noun. The sense of strike (one's toe) against something is first recorded in 1848. —stubby adj. 1572, short and thick or broad; earlier, ground covered with stubble (about 1410).

stubble n. About 1300 stouple stalk of grain; later stubil the ends of grain stalks after reaping (about 1340), and stuble (about 1350); borrowed from Old French estuble stubble, from Latin stupla, reduced form of stupula, variant of stipula stem, stalk (of hay), related to stipes trunk, stick; see STIPULE. The sense of bristle, is first recorded before 1596.

stubborn adj. About 1395 stibourne unyielding, obstinate; later styborne, stuborn (about 1449); of uncertain origin.

stucco n. 1598, borrowing of Italian stucco, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German stukki crust, piece, fragment; see STOCK). —v. 1726, from the noun.

stud¹ n. nailhead, knob, etc. 1277 stude upright piece of timber (in studewerk); developed from Old English (about 850) studu pillar, prop, post; cognate with Middle High German stud post, prop, and Old Icelandic stodh (Swedish stöd), from Proto-Germanic stud-*. —v. 1505–06, set with studs; from the noun.

stud² n. horses used for breeding. Probably before 1200 stod meare mare kept for breeding; later stode place where horses are kept for breeding (before 1250); developed from Old English stōd place where horses are kept for breeding (about 1000, from Proto-Germanic stōdō*); cognate with Middle Low German stōt collection of horses, Old High German stuot (modern German Stute mare), and Old Icelandic stōdh stud of mares (Danish stod stud of 12 horses); related to Old English standan STAND. The spelling stud is found in 1252–53. The sense of a male horse kept for breeding, is first recorded in 1803, and that of any young man, in 1929.

student n. Probably before 1425, one who pursues knowledge, scholar; alteration (influenced by Latin studēre to study) of studient (before 1398); borrowed from Old French estudiant, estudiant one who is studying; also, present participle of estudier to study, from Medieval Latin studiare to study, from Latin studium STUDY; for suffix see -ENT.

studio n. 1819, borrowing of Italian studio room for study, study, from Latin studium STUDY. The meaning of a room or building for the filming of motion pictures is first recorded in 1911, and that of a place for radio broadcasting in 1922, for television broadcasting in 1938.

study n. About 1300 studie pursuit of knowledge, effort to learn; also, room in which to read or study (about 1303); borrowed from Old French estudie application to learn, study, from Latin studium study, application; originally, eagerness, related to studēre to study, be eager, apply oneself; for suffix see -Y³. The sense of a subject of study, is first recorded in 1477. —v. About 1125 studien devote oneself to something; later, apply oneself to learning (about 1303); borrowed from Old French estudier to study, from Medieval Latin studiare, from Latin studium STUDY. —studious adj. Before 1349 studiouse zealous, later studious eager to learn (before 1382); borrowed from Latin studiosus eager, assiduous, from studium eagerness, zeal, study; for suffix see -OUS.

stuff n. Before 1338 stof quilted material worn under chain mail; later stoffe material, cloth (1345–49); household goods, equipment (1395); borrowed from Old French estoffe quilted material, furniture, provisions, from estoffer to equip or stock, probably from Old High German stopfōn to plug, stuff, or from a Frankish word related to Old High German stopfōn; see STOP. The spelling stuffe is first recorded probably about 1390. —v. Probably about 1350 stuffen to furnish, supply, fill, cram; borrowed from Old French estoffer to equip, stock. —stuffing n. (1530, material used to fill or pack something; 1538, seasoned mixture used to stuff fowl before cooking) —stuffy adj. 1551–52, full of stuff; 1831, poorly ventilated (as in a stuffy little room); 1895, pompous, smug.

stultify v. 1766, (in law) allege to be of unsound mind; borrowed from Late Latin stultificāre turn into foolishness, from a lost adjective stultificus* rendering foolish, from Latin stultus foolish + the root of facere to make; for suffix see -FY. The meaning of cause to appear foolish or absurd, is first recorded in 1809. —stultification n. 1832, formed from English stultify, on analogy of mortify, mortification, etc.; for suffix see -FICATION.

stumble v. About 1303 stomblen to lose one's footing morally; in part possibly influenced by stumpen to stumble, but probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian stumla, dialectal Swedish stambla to stumble), probably from a variant of the Germanic base stam-*, the source of Old English stamerian to STAMMER. The literal sense of miss one's footing, trip, is first recorded about 1325. —n. 1547, from the verb.

stump n. Probably about 1350 stompe remaining part of a severed arm, leg, etc., stump of a limb; later stumpe tree stump (1440); cognate with Middle Low German stump and Middle Dutch stomp stump, Old High German stumpf stump (modern German Stumpf), and Old High German stumpf mutilated (modern German stumpf blunt, dull), from Proto-Germanic stump-*. —v. Before 1250 stumpen to stumble over a tree stump or other obstacle; perhaps from stomp as a variant of stamp. The sense of walk clumsily or heavily is recorded in 1600, and the sense of cause to be at a loss, baffle, in 1812.

stun v. Before 1325 stunen to daze, knock unconscious; probably borrowed from Old French estoner, estuner to stun, see ASTONISH. —stunning adj. 1667, dazing, astounding; later, splendid (1849–50); from the present participle of stun.

stunt v. 1659, to check in growth, dwarf, from bring to an abrupt stand, nonplus (1603), and to irritate, provoke (1583); verb use of Middle English adjective stunnt foolish (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (about 960) stunt short-witted, stupid, foolish, from Proto-Germanic stuntaz*. The Old English word is cognate with Middle High German stunz short, blunt, Old Icelandic stuttr scanty, short, and more distantly with Old Icelandic stinnr stiff, hard, and Old English stith, from Proto-Germanic stenthaz*.

stunt n. 1878, feat to attract attention; originally college athletics slang, of uncertain origin. —v. perform a stunt or stunts. 1914 (implied in stunting), from the noun.

stupefy v. Probably before 1425 stupifien make senseless, deaden; also stupefien; borrowed from Middle French stupéfier, from Latin stupefacere make stupid or senseless, from stupere be stunned + facere to make; for suffix see -FY. —stupefaction n. Probably before 1425 stupefaccioun property of making senseless; borrowed from French stupéfaction act or condition of stupefying, or directly from New Latin stupefactionem (nominative stupefactio), from Latin stupefact-, past participle stem of stupefacere stupefy; for suffix see -TION. The sense of astonishment is found in 1597.

stupendous adj. 1666, amazing, marvelous, from earlier stupendous (1547); borrowed from Late Latin stupendus to be wondered at, gerundive form of Latin stupere be stunned; for suffix see -OUS, -IOUS.

stupid adj. 1541, slow or dull in thinking; borrowed from Middle French stupide and directly from Latin stupidus struck senseless, amazed, confounded, stupid, from stupere be stunned, amazed, confounded. The sense of characterized by stupidity or dullness is first recorded in English in 1621. —stupidity n. 1541, borrowed from Latin stupiditas senselessness, dullness, from stupidus stupid; for suffix see -ITY. A stupid idea or action is first recorded in 1633.

stupor n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin stupor insensibility, numbness, dullness, from stupere be stunned; for suffix see -OR¹.

sturdy adj. Probably before 1300 stourdi hard to manage, reckless, violent; borrowed from Old French estourdi violent; originally, dazed, past participle of estourdir to daze, from Vulgar Latin exturdire*, conjectured as if from Latin ex- + turdus a thrush (characterized as dizzy: compare Italian tordo thrush, simpleton, or French soûl comme une grive drunk as a thrush). The sense of solidly built, strong, hardy, is first recorded about 1386.

sturgeon n. About 1300 sturgiun, borrowed through Anglo-French sturgeon, esturgeoun, from Old French esturjon, esturjon, esturion, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German sturio sturgeon, modern German Stör, modern Dutch steur, Old English styria, and Old Icelandic styrja).

stutter v. 1570, frequentative verb form of stutt (before 1500), from Middle English stutten to stutter, stammer (about 1395); cognate with Middle Low German stōten to knock, strike against, collide, Old High German stōzan to push, shove (modern German stossen), and Norwegian and dialectal Swedish stotre to stammer, from Proto-Germanic staut-* push, thrust. —n. 1854, from the verb.

sty n. pen for pigs. Before 1200 sti; developed from Old English stī, stīg hall, pen, as in stī-fearh sty-pig (from Proto-Germanic stijan*); cognate with Middle Low German stege and Middle Dutch stije sty (modern Dutch stijg), and Old Icelandic -stī, as in svīn-stī swine-sty, stīa pen, fold (Danish and Norwegian sti, Swedish stia).

sty n. inflamed swelling on the eyelid. 1617 stye, probably shortened from styan (1601), from styanne, literally, sty-eye (1440); developed from Old English stīgend sty; literally, riser, from present participle of stīgan go up, rise.

style n. Before 1325 stīle designation, title; later, manner or mode of expression (before 1338); borrowed from Old French estīle a stake, pale, from Latin stilus stake, instrument for writing, manner of writing, mode of expression.

The spelling style (with y), in English and French, is by association with Greek stýlos pillar. The meaning of mode or fashion of life, is first recorded in 1770, and mode of dress, in 1814. The botanical sense is first recorded in 1682. —v. 1508, to address with a title; from the noun. The sense of design in a fashionable style appears in 1934. —stylish adj. (1797) —stylist n. 1795, writer as characterized by his style; 1937, person who styles hair. —stylize v. (1898) stylus n. 1728, stemlike part of a flower pistil; New Latin, alteration of Latin stilus stake, stylus. The spelling with y was influenced by Greek stýlos pillar. The meaning of instrument for writing appeared in 1807.

stymie n. 1857, condition in which an opponent's golf ball blocks the hole; perhaps from earlier Scottish stymie person who sees poorly (1616); formed from stīme the least bit (before 1325) + -ie. —v. 1857, (in golf) to block with a stymie; from the same source as the noun. The general sense of block, hinder, thwart, is first recorded in 1902.

styptic adj. Before 1400 stiptik astringent, acidic, styptic; borrowed from Old French stiptique, or directly from Latin styp-ticus astringent, from Greek stýptikós, from stýphein to constrict, draw together; for suffix see -IC. The spelling styptic (with y) was influenced by the Latin and Greek forms. —n. 1392 stiptice, borrowed from Late Latin stypticum an astringent, from Greek stýptikón, neuter of stýptikós, adj.

su- a form of the prefix sub- before sp-, in some words of Latin origin, as in suspect; see SUB-.

suasion n. persuasion. About 1380 suasioun, borrowed probably from Old French suasion, and directly from Latin suasiōnem (nominative suasiō) an advising, a counseling, from suās-, past participle stem of suādere to urge, persuade; for suffix see -SION. —suasive adj. 1601, borrowed from Middle French suasif (feminine suasive), and perhaps formed in English from Latin suāsus, past participle + English -ive.

suave adj. About 1501, gracious, kindly; borrowed from Middle French suave, from Latin suāvis agreeable. The sense of smoothly agreeable or polite is first recorded in 1831.

sub¹ prep. the Latin preposition for “under,” used in various phrases, such as: —sub rosa 1654, privately, secretly; literally, under the rose; so called because the rose was regarded as a symbol of secrecy. —sub voce 1859, under the word or heading.

sub² v. 1853, shortened form of substitute, v. —n. 1830, shortened form of substitute, n.

sub- a prefix acquired in numerous words of Latin origin and productive in English, meaning: 1 under, below, as in substandard = belowstandard. 2 down, further, again, as in subdivide = divide again. 3a near, nearly, less than, as in subtropical = nearly tropical. b incompletely, partially, as in subconscious = incompletely conscious. 4a lower, subordinate, as in sublease = subordinate lease. b resulting from further division, as in subsection = a section resulting from further division of something. 5 slightly, somewhat, as in subacid = slightly acid. Borrowed from Latin sub-, from sub, prep., under, up to, towards; see UP. Assimilations or changes in the final consonant of the prefix that took place in Latin survive in English in the forms suc-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sup-, and sur-; an assumed early variant sup- remained in Latin and in English as sus- before some words beginning with the consonants c, p, or t, and simply su- before sp-, as in suspect.

subaltern adj. 1581, borrowed from Middle French subalterne, and probably directly from Late Latin subalternus (Latin sub- under + alternus every other, as in every other one; ALTER-NATE). —n. 1605, subordinate officer, from the adjective.

subconscious adj. 1823, (implied in subconsciously) not wholly conscious; formed from English sub- incompletely + conscious. —n. the subconscious. 1890, from the adjective.

subdivision n. 1553, one of the parts into which something is divided; formed from English sub- + division.

subdue v. Before 1387 sodewen, sudewen conquer, overcome; later subdewen (probably before 1475); borrowed from Old French souduire deceive, seduce, from Latin subducere draw, lead away, withdraw (sub- from under + ducere to lead). Latin influence is probably found in the English meaning, altered by Latin subdere to subdue (sub- under + -dere to put).

subject n. Before 1333 sugge person under the rule of another, subordinate; later subgit (about 1380), subiecte (before 1398); borrowed from Old French suget, subject, later subject a subject person or thing, representing various stages of borrowing from Latin subjectus noun use of the past participle of subicere to place under (sub- under + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw).

Some of the specific senses as in logic and philosophy, are early borrowings in Middle English from Latin subjectum foundation or subject of a proposition, from neuter of subjectus, past participle, and eventually this spelling replaced the Middle English spelling from French in all uses. The Latin is a loan translation of Greek tò hypokείμενον, literally, that which lies beneath. —adj. Before 1338 suget owing allegiance or obedience (to); later subgit (before 1393), and subject (about 1386); borrowed from Old French suget, subgiest, subject, from Latin subjectus inferior in status, subject, from past participle of subicere to place under. The meaning of prone (to), likely to have, is first recorded in Middle English about 1380. —v. before 1382 subjecten to subjugate; borrowed from Old French subjecter to subject, subjugate, from Latin subjectare throw under, subjugate, frequentative form of subicere to place under. The meaning of expose, lay open (to), is first recorded in 1549. —subjection n. About 1375 subieccioun dominion, control, domination; borrowed from Old French subjection, from Latin subjectionem (nominative subiectiō) a placing under, reducing to obedience, from subject-, past participle stem of subicere to place under; for suffix see -TION. —subjective adj. Probably before 1450 subiective submissive, obedient; borrowed from Latin subjectivus, from subjectus subject, n.; for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of existing in the mind is first recorded in English in 1707.

subjugate v. Probably before 1425 subiugaten; possibly a back formation from subjugation (Middle English subiugacioun), influenced by Latin subjugātus, past participle of subjugāre subdue; literally, bring under a yoke (sub- under + jugum YOKE); for suffix see -ATE. —subjugation n. 1373 subiugacion act of subjugating, subjection; borrowed from Late Latin subjugātiōnem (nominative subjugātiō), from Latin subjugāre; for suffix see -ATION.

subjunctive adj. 1530, borrowed from Late Latin subjunctivus serving to join, connecting, (in grammar) subjunctive, from Latin subjunct-, past participle stem of subjungere to append, add at the end, place under (sub- under + ungere to join; see YOKE); for suffix see -IVE. Late Latin subjunctivus is probably a loan translation of Greek hypotaktikós subordinated, so called because in Greek the subjunctive mood is used almost exclusively in subordinate clauses. —n. 1622, from the adjective.

sublet v. 1766, to lease to a subtenant; formed from English sub- + let, v.

sublimation n. Before 1393 sublimacion, process of purifying by heating into a vapor; borrowed from Old French sublimation, or directly from Medieval Latin sublimationem (nominative sublimatio) refinement; literally, a lifting up, deliverance, from sublimare refine or purify by sublimation, from Latin sublimāre to raise, elevate, from sublimis lofty, SUBLIME; for suffix see -ATION. The sense in psychology of changing an undesirable impulse into a form acceptable to the conscious mind, is first recorded in 1910; probably influenced by subliminal. —sublimate n. 1543, substance obtained by sublimation; borrowed from Medieval Latin sublimatum, from neuter past participle of sublimare refine or purify by sublimation. —v. 1591, purify, refine, from the adjective (1562) with the meaning purified or refined by sublimation; probably borrowed from Medieval Latin sublimatus, past participle of sublimare; or the verb may be a back formation in English of sublimation.

sublime adj. 1586, lofty, noble; borrowed from Middle French sublime, or directly from Latin sublimis uplifted, high, lofty; possibly originally, sloping up to the lintel (sub- up to + līmen lintel). —v. About 1395 sublimen to subject (a substance) to sublimation; borrowed from Old French sublimier, from Medieval Latin sublimare refine or purify by sublimation. The sense of exalt or elevate is first recorded in 1609. —sublimity n. Probably about 1425 sublimitee worthiness, nobility; borrowed from Latin sublimitās loftiness, elevation, from sublimis lofty, sublime; for suffix see -ITY.

subliminal adj. 1886, below the threshold of consciousness; formed from English sub- + Latin līmen (genitive līminis) threshold + English *-al*¹, apparently as a loan translation of the German unter der Schwelle (des Bewusstseins) beneath the threshold (of consciousness).

submarine adj. 1648, formed from English sub- + marine. —n. 1703, organism that lives under water; from the adjective. Mention of a boat that can go under water is first found in 1648, later recorded as submarine boat (1807), and in the noun use submarine (1899).

submerge v. 1606, borrowed from French submerger, or possibly directly from Latin submergere (sub- under + mergere to plunge, immerse).

submerge v. 1727, (implied in submersed), probably a back formation from earlier submersion, influenced by Latin submersus, past participle of submergere SUBMERGE. —submersible adj. 1866, that may be submerged, borrowed from French submersible, and formed from English submerge + -ible. —n. 1900, submersible boat, from the adjective. —submersion n. 1611, act of submerging; borrowed from French submersion, and directly from Late Latin submersiōnem (nominative submersiō), from Latin submers-, past participle stem of submergere to sink, SUBMERGE; for suffix see -SION.

submission n. About 1390 submissioun act of submitting; borrowed from Old French submission, or directly from Latin submissiōnem (nominative submissiō) a lowering, sinking, yielding, from submiss-, past participle stem of submittere lower, reduce, yield; see SUBMIT; for suffix see -SION. The sense of humble obedience, is first recorded about 1449. —sub- missive adj. Before 1586, yielding, obedient; formed from Latin submitissus, past participle + English -ive.

submit v. About 1380 submitten to yield or surrender; borrowed from Latin submittere to yield, lower, let down, put under, reduce (sub- under + mittere let go, send). The sense of refer to another for consideration, etc., is first recorded in 1560.

subordinate adj. About 1449 subordinat inferior, lower, secondary; borrowed from Medieval Latin subordinatus placed in a lower order, made subject, past participle of subordinare place in a lower order (Latin sub- under + ordināre arrange, ORDAIN); for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1640, from the adjective. —v. 1597, borrowed from Medieval Latin subordinatus, past participle of subordinare place in a lower order. —subordination n. Before 1600, condition of being subordinate; probably formed in English from subordinate, v. + -ion, on the model of Medieval Latin subordinationem (nominative subordinatio).

suborn v. 1534, borrowed from Middle French suborner, or directly from Latin subornāre suborn; originally, equip (sub- under, secretly + ornāre equip, related to ordō ORDER). The sense of persuade someone to commit perjury is first recorded in 1557.

subpoena or subpena n. 1422–61 sub pena; borrowing of Medieval Latin sub poena under penalty, the first words of the writ (Latin sub under + poenā, ablative of poena penalty). —v. 1640, from the noun.

subscribe v. 1425 subscriben to sign at the bottom of a document; borrowed from Latin subscribere write underneath, sign one's name (sub- underneath + scribere write). The meaning of give one's consent, agree to, is first recorded in 1549; that of contribute money to (a fund, society, etc.) in 1640; and put one's name down as a regular buyer of a publication, in 1711, from the noun subscription. —subscriber n. (1599) subscript n. Before 1704, something written underneath; borrowed from Latin subscriptus, past participle of subscribere write underneath; see SUBSCRIBE. —adj. written underneath. 1871, from the noun.

subscription n. 1409 subscripcion; borrowed from Middle French subscription, and directly from Latin subscriptiōnem (nominative subscriptiō) anything written underneath, a signature, from subscript-, past participle stem of subscribere SUBSCRIBE; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of subscribing to a periodic publication is first recorded in 1679.

subsequent adj. About 1450, coming after, following; borrowed from Middle French subséquent, and directly from Latin subsequentem (nominative subsequēns), present participle of subsequi to follow closely (sub- closely, up to + sequi follow); for suffix see -ENT.

subservient adj. 1632, useful, serviceable; borrowed from Latin subservientem (nominative subserviēns), present participle of subservire assist, lend support (sub- under + servire SERVE); for suffix see -ENT. The meaning of slavishly obedient, servile, is first recorded in 1794.

subside v. 1681, to sink or fall to the bottom; possibly a back formation from subsidence, influenced by Latin subsidiere settle, sink, sit down, or remain (sub- down + sidere to settle, related to sedere SIT). The meaning of abate, is first recorded before 1700. —subsidence n. 1646, sediment; later, a settling to the bottom (1656); borrowed through French subsidence, and directly from Latin subsidentia sediment, from subsīdēs, present participle of subsidiere settle or sink down; for suffix see -ENCE.

subsidiary adj. 1543, supplementary; borrowed, through Middle French subsidaire, and directly from Latin subsidiarius serving to assist or supplement, from subsidium help, aid; see SUBSIDY; for suffix see -ARY. The sense of subordinate, secondary, is first recorded in 1831. —n. 1603, from the adjective.

subsidy n. Before 1387 subsidie, borrowed through Anglo-French subsidie, subside, from Old French subside help, aid, contribution, from Latin subsidiū help, aid, assistance, (military) reinforcements, from subsidiere* (sub- behind, near + sedere to SIT). The sense of a contribution of money is first recorded in 1421. —subsidize v. (1795) subsist v. 1549, to have real existence; borrowed from Middle French subsister continue to exist, and directly from Latin subsistere stand firm, take a stand, support, continue (sub- under, up to + sistere to assume a standing position, from stare to stand). In some senses the word is probably a back formation from English subsistence, but in the meaning of continue to exist, remain in use or force (about 1600), the word is most likely a borrowing from French. The sense of support oneself, make a living, is first attested in 1646. —subsistence n. Probably before 1425, real existence; borrowed from Late Latin subsistentia substance, reality, from Latin subsistēs, present participle of subsistere stand still or firm; for suffix see -ENCE. Late Latin subsistentia is a loan translation of Greek hypóstasis substance, foundation, support. The sense of means of livelihood is first recorded in 1639.

subsonic adj. 1937, formed from English sub- below + sonic. Compare SUPERSONIC.

substance n. Probably before 1300 substaunce essential nature, matter, material; borrowed from Old French substance, from Latin substantia being, essence, material, from substāns, present participle of substāre stand firm, be under or present (sub- up to, under + stāre to stand); for suffix see -ANCE. The sense of possessions, means, wealth (as in a person of substance) is first recorded before 1325. The sense of any particular kind of matter is found before 1393.

substantial adj. 1340 substancel ample, abundant; borrowed from Old French substancel, and directly from Latin substantialis having substance or reality, material, from substantia SUBSTANCE; for suffix see -AL¹.

substantiate v. 1657, give substance to, make real or substantial; borrowed from New Latin substantiatus, past participle of substantiare, from Latin substantia SUBSTANCE; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of establish by evidence, prove, is first recorded in 1803. —substantiation n. 1760–72, embodiment; formed from English substantiate + -ion. The sense of act of substantiating or proving is first recorded in 1861.

substantive n. Probably before 1378 substantif; borrowed from Old French substantif (feminine substantive), from Late Latin substantivum, as used in nōmen substantivum name or word of substance, neuter of Latin substantivus of substance or being, from substantia SUBSTANCE; for suffix see -IVE. —adj. About 1450, independent, self-sufficient, self-existent; borrowed from Middle French substantif (feminine substantive) expressing existence, from Latin substantivus of substance. The meaning in grammar “acting as a noun” is first recorded in 1509.

substitute n. 1413, person acting in place of another, deputy; in part perhaps a back formation from substitution, and in part borrowed from Middle French substitut, and directly from Latin substitūtus, past participle of substituere put in place of another, place under or next to (sub- under + statuere set up). —adj. Before 1425, borrowed from Latin substitūtus, past participle; see noun. —v. 1532, probably a verb use of substitute, n., modeled on Latin substitūtus, past participle. —substitution n. Before 1393 substitution appointment of a deputy, delegation; borrowed from Old French substitution, and from Late Latin substitutiōnem (nominative substitutiō) a putting in place of another, from Latin substitūt-, past participle stem of substituere put in place of another; for suffix see -TION. An act of substituting, is first recorded in English in 1612.

subsume v. 1535, bring under, append; borrowed from New Latin subsumere (Latin sub- under + sūmere to take). The sense of bring under a larger classification is first recorded in 1812.

subtend v. 1570, borrowed from Latin subtendere (sub- under + tendere to stretch).

subter- a prefix meaning beneath, as in subterposition, or secretly, as in subterfuge. Borrowed from Latin subter beneath, secretly, related to sub under, beneath.

subterfuge n. 1573, borrowed from Middle French subterfuge, or directly from Late Latin subterfugium an evasion, from Latin subterfugere to evade, escape, flee by stealth (subter- beneath, secretly + fugere flee).

subterranean adj. 1603, formed from Latin subterrāneus underground (sub- under + terra earth) + English -an.

subtle adj. About 1375 subtile delicate, elusive, crafty; borrowed from Old French subtil, from Latin subtilis fine, thin, delicate; see SUBTLE. The sense of not dense, is first recorded in Middle English before 1393. —subtlety n. 1375 subtilite skill, cleverness, cunning; borrowed from Old French subtilite skill, cleverness, sutelite acuteness, from Latin subtilitās fineness, slenderness, acuteness, from subtilis subtle; for suffix see -ITY. Subtile is a form that developed in Middle English and remained as a parallel form to subtle into the 1600's, and in some instances (such as fine, delicate, thin, and acute, keen) into the 20th century.

subtitle n. 1825, subordinate or additional title; formed from English sub- + title. The sense of a caption on a motion-picture screen is found in 1909. —v. provide with a subtitle. 1891, from the noun.

subtle adj. Before 1325 sutile clever, ingenious, crafty, also sotil; borrowed from Old French soutil, sutil, from Latin subtilis fine, thin, delicate, finely woven (sub- under + -tilis, from tēla web and texere to weave). The spelling subtle (with b) attests to confusion with subtile and influence of the Latin form. —subtlety n. About 1330 sutelte subtle quality; borrowed from Old French sutilté, soutilté, from Latin subtilitās fineness, slenderness, acuteness, from subtilis subtle; for suffix see *-TY*². —subtly adv. Before 1333, in a subtle manner; formed in Middle English from sutile + -lich *-ly*¹.

subtraction n. About 1400 subtraction withdrawal, removal; borrowed from Late Latin subtractionem (nominative subtractio) a drawing back, taking away, from subtract-, past participle stem of subtrahere take away, draw off (sub- from under + trahere to pull, draw); for suffix see -TION. The mathematical sense is first recorded about 1425. —subtract v. 1533, withdraw, remove, probably a back formation from subtraction, by influence of Latin subtract-, past participle stem of subtrahere take away. The mathematical sense is first recorded in 1557 from the use in English of subtraction.

subtrahend n. 1674, borrowed from Latin subtrahendus numerus number to be subtracted, gerundive form of subtrahere SUBTRACT.

suburb n. Before 1325 suburbe residential area outside a town or city; borrowed from Old French suburbe, from Latin suburbium an outlying part of a city (sub- below, near + urbs, genitive urbis, city). —suburban adj. Before 1625, borrowed from Latin suburbānus near a city (sub- + urbānus urban). —suburbanite n. 1890, formed from English suburban + *-ite*¹. —suburbia n. 1896, formed from English suburb + Latin -ia *-y*³; probably influenced by utopia.

subvention n. Probably before 1430 subvencion subsidy levied by the state; borrowed from Middle French subvention, or directly from Late Latin subventionem (nominative subventio) assistance, from Latin subvent-, past participle stem of subvenire come to one's aid (sub- up to + venire come); for suffix see -TION. The sense of money granted to support an institution, cause, or undertaking, is found in 1851.

subversion n. Before 1382 subversioun overthrow, destruction; borrowed from Old French subversion, from Late Latin subversionem (nominative subversio) an overthrow, ruin, destruction, from Latin subvers-, past participle stem of subvertere SUBVERT; for suffix see -SION. The sense of overthrow of a law, rule, system, etc., is found in Middle English in 1399. —subversive adj. 1644, probably formed from Latin subvers-, past participle stem of subvertere SUBVERT + English -ive; or possibly formed from English subversion + -ive. —n. 1887, from the adjective.

subvert v. About 1375 subverten to overthrow, ruin, destroy, undermine; borrowed from Latin subvertere (sub- under + vertere to turn).

subway n. 1825, underground passage; formed from English sub- + way. The underground railway in a city is first recorded in 1893.

suc- a form of the prefix sub- before c in some words of Latin origin, as in succeed. Formed in Latin by assimilation of b to the following consonant (c).

succeed v. 1375 succeden come next after, take the place of another; borrowed from Old French succeder, and directly from Latin succedere come after, go near to (suc- up, near + cedere go). The sense of turn out well, have a favorable result, is first recorded in Middle English before 1475.

success n. 1537, result, outcome; borrowed from Latin successus (genitive successus) an advance, succession, happy outcome, from succedere come after, SUCCEED. The meaning of accomplishment of a desired end is first recorded before 1586.

succession n. Before 1325, act, right, or process of succeeding to an office, property, or rank; borrowed through Old French succession, and directly from Latin successionem (nominative successio) a following after, a coming into another's place, result, from success-, past participle stem of succedere SUCCEED; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a regular sequence is first recorded in Middle English about 1449. —successive adj. Before 1425, borrowed from Medieval Latin successivus coming one after another, from Latin succedere SUCCEED; for suffix see -IVE. —successor n. About 1300 successour, borrowed through Anglo-French successor and Old French successour, from Latin successor a follower, one who succeeds another, from success-, past participle stem of succedere SUCCEED; for suffix see *-OR*².

succinct adj. Probably before 1425 succincte girt, engirdled; borrowed from Middle French succincte, and probably directly from Latin succinctus, past participle of succingere tuck up (clothes for action), gird from below (suc- up + cingere to gird). The sense of compressed, expressed concisely, brief, is implied in succinctly (about 1537).

succor n. Probably before 1200 sucurs; borrowed through Anglo-French succors help, aid and Old French sucurres, socorres, secors, from Medieval Latin succursus help, assistance, from past participle of Latin succurrere run to help (suc- up to + currere to run). The final -s of sucurs was taken as a plural suffix and a new singular form sucur came into use about 1290. —v. About 1275 sucuren; borrowed from Old French sucurre, from Latin succurrere run to help.

succotash n. 1751 suckatash, borrowed from Algonquian (Narragansett) misickqatash ear of corn.

succulent adj. 1601, borrowed from French succulent, and directly from Latin succulentus having juice, from succus, sūcus juice. —n. 1825, plant with fleshy and juicy tissues, from the adjective.

succumb v. About 1489 succumben bring down, overwhelm; borrowed from Middle French succomber, and directly from Latin succumbere submit, sink down, lie under (sub- down + cumbere take a lying position, related to cubare lie down). The sense of sink under pressure, give way, yield, is first recorded in English in 1604.

such adj. Probably about 1175 swich of that kind, of the same kind; probably before 1200 swuch; developed from Old English swylc (about 725, in Beowulf), swilc (before 800), swelc (before 900); cognate with Old Frisian sēlik, selk such, Old Saxon sulik, Middle Dutch sulc (modern Dutch zulk), Old High German sulih, solih (modern German solch), Old Icelandic slikr (Swedish and Norwegian slik, Danish slig), and Gothic swaleiks; from a Proto-Germanic compound swalikaz*, meaning “so formed” (swa SO + likan* form, the source of Old-English gelic similar, LIKE¹).

Modern such came about by a series of changes in the word's pronunciation. Old English swilc and swylc developed a sporadic form swulc (from about 1000), and swylc and swulc became swulch in Middle English, which, by the absorption of w and loss of l, gave such. Compare EACH and WHICH for parallel development. —pron. Probably before 1200 swuch; developed from Old English swylc (about 725, in Beowulf); from the adjective.

suck v. Probably about 1150 suken to draw into the mouth (especially milk from the breast or udder); also souken (about 1280); developed from Old English (before 830) sūcan, corresponding to Latin sūgere to suck, from Indo-European sūg-, root and by a parallel Indo-European root sūk-, to Old English and Old Saxon sūgan to suck, Middle Dutch sūghen (modern Dutch zuigen), Old High German sūgan (modern German saugen), and Old Icelandic sūga. The verb is related to English SOAK which in Middle English was confused with suck. —n. About 1300 souke; from the verb. —sucker n. About 1384 souker young mammal before it is weaned; formed from Middle English suken, souken to suck + *-er*¹. The organ for holding fast is attested in 1681, and a shoot growing from a plant in 1577–82. The person who is easily deceived appears in 1836, and a lollipop in 1907. —v. 1661, to remove young shoots from; from the noun. The sense of hoodwink is first recorded in 1948. —suckling n. Before 1225 suceling; formed from Middle English suken to suck + -ling. Compare Middle Dutch sōghelinc (modern Dutch zuigeling), Middle High German sūgelinc (modern German Säugling).

suckle v. Before 1425 suclen to nurse at the breast or udder; perhaps a causative form of suken to SUCK; or a back formation from earlier suckling, as the suffix *-LE*³ does not fit with suck to make suckle semantically.

sucrose n. 1857, formed from French sucre SUGAR + English *-ose*². suction n. 1626, act of sucking, borrowed from Late Latin sūctionem (nominative sūctiō), from Latin sūct-, past participle stem of sūgere to SUCK; for suffix see -TION.

sudden adj. Probably about 1300 soden happening unexpectedly; borrowed through Anglo-French sodein, sudein, from Old French subdain immediate, sudden; from Vulgar Latin subitānus*, variant of Latin subitāneus sudden, from subitus appearing unexpectedly, sudden, from past participle of subire come or go up stealthily (sub- up to + ire come, go). —n. 1558 upon the soden in a sudden manner; 1596 of a sudayn; from Middle English soden sudden. The phrase all of a sudden is first found in 1681.

suds n. pl. 1548 suddes dregs, leavings, muck, of uncertain origin; perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch sudse, sudde (early modern Dutch zudse) marsh, bog, cognate with Old-English soden, past participle of sēothan to SEETHE. The meaning of soapy water is found in 1581. —sudsy adj. (1884) sue v. Probably before 1200 sewen continue, persevere; borrowed through Anglo-French suer, siwer follow after, continue, from Old French sivre, siivre, later suivre pursue, follow after, from Vulgar Latin sequere* follow, from Latin sequi follow. The sense of start a lawsuit against, is first recorded about 1300.

suede or suède n. 1884, borrowing of French Suède Sweden, in partial translation of French gants de Suède gloves of Sweden.

suet n. Before 1325 swete; later suet (1375); probably borrowed from Anglo-French suet*, a diminutive formed to suis, the nominative of sue, seu tallow, grease, variant of Old French sieu tallow (modern French suif), from Latin sēbum tallow, grease.

suf- a form of the prefix sub- before f in some words of Latin origin, as in suffix, suffuse. Formed in Latin by assimilation of b to the following consonant (f).

suffer v. Probably before 1200 suffren to undergo or endure (pain, death, etc.); borrowed through Anglo-French suffrir, from Old French sufrire, soffrire, from Vulgar Latin sufferire*, variant of Latin sufferre to bear, undergo, endure, carry or put under (suf- up, under + ferre to carry). The sense of allow, permit, tolerate, is first recorded about 1300. —sufferance n. Probably before 1300 suffraunce patient endurance, forbearance; borrowed through Anglo-French suffrance, soffrance, from Old French sufiance, from Late Latin sufferentia endurance, toleration, from Latin sufferens, present participle of sufferre to suffer; for suffix see -ANCE. The meaning of consent implied by lack of interference is recorded as early as 1303.

suffice v. Before 1325 suffisen to be enough; borrowed from Old French suffis-, stem of suffire be sufficient, from Latin sufficere supply, suffice (suf- up to + the root of facere to make). —sufficiency n. 1495, sufficient wealth; 1565, condition of being sufficient; borrowed from Latin sufficiētia adequacy, from sufficiēns, present participle of sufficere supply, SUFFICE; for suffix see -ENCY. —sufficient adj. 1322, legally satisfactory; later, enough (about 1380); borrowed through Old French sufficient, and directly from Latin sufficiētem (nominative sufficiēns), present participle of sufficere suffice; for suffix see -ENT.

suffix n. 1778, borrowed from New Latin suffixum, noun use of neuter of Latin suffixus fastened, past participle of suffigere fasten, fix on (suf- upon + figere fasten). —v. 1604, to fix or place under; borrowed from Latin suffixus, past participle of suffigere. The meaning of add as a suffix is first recorded in 1778; from the noun.

suffocate v. 1599, choke, stifle; probably a back formation from suffocation, modeled on Latin suffocātus, past participle of suffocāre, originally, to narrow up (suf- up + faucēs, pl., throat, narrow entrance); for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —suffocation n. Before 1400 suffocacioun, borrowed from Old French suffocation, and directly from Latin suffocātiōnem (nominative suffocātiō) a choking, stifling, from suffocāre suffocate; for suffix see -ATION.

suffragan n. Before 1387, bishop who assists another bishop; borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French suffragan, from Medieval Latin suffraganeus assisting, supporting, from Latin suffrāgium support, SUFFRAGE; for suffix see -AN.

suffrage n. Probably before 1200 suffragie prayers or pleas on behalf of another; later suffrage (before 1400); borrowed from Old French suffrage, and directly from Medieval Latin suffrāgium, from Latin suffrāgium support, vote, right of voting, from suffrāgari lend support, vote for someone (suf- under, near + fragor crash, din, shouts, as of approval, related to frangere to BREAK). English acquired the Latin meaning of a vote of approval by 1534, and the phrase universal suffrage (1798). The meaning of the right to vote is first found in the United States Constitution (1787). —suffragette n. (1906) suffuse v. 1590 (implied in suffused); probably a back formation from earlier suffusion, and borrowed from Latin suffusus, past participle of suffundere pour upon, overspread, suffuse (suf- under + fundere pour). —suffusion n. Before 1398 suffusioun, borrowed from Latin suffusiōnem (nominative suffusiō) a pouring over, from suffūs-, past participle stem of suffundere suffuse; for suffix see -SION.

sug- a form of the prefix sub- before g in some words of Latin origin, as in suggest. Formed in Latin by assimilation of b to the following consonant (g).

sugar n. About 1325 sucre; later sugure (1381), sugre (1393); borrowed from Old French sucre, sukere sugar, from Medieval Latin saccarum, from Arabic sukkar, from Persian shakar, from Sanskrit śárkarā ground or candied sugar.

The sound represented by g in the spelling of sugar cannot be accounted for by any known Old French form though similar change is found in Middle English flagon and Old French flacon. The shift from a sound represented by s to sh, apparently resulted from an original initial long vowel sound syū- like that of the original vowel in sure and assure. —v. About 1385 sugren, to make pleasing; from the noun. The sense of add sugar is found before 1475.

suggest v. 1526, bring to mind (originally, something bad or evil), put forward the notion or opinion; back formation from suggestion, modeled on Latin suggestus, past participle of suggerere suggest, supply, bring up (sug- up + gerere bring, carry). —suggestible adj. (1890) —suggestion n. About 1340 sugestyn a prompting to evil; later sugestyoun act of prompting, proposal (before 1382); borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French suggestioun, and borrowed directly from Latin suggestiōnem (nominative suggestiō) an addition, intimation, suggestion, from suggerere suggest, supply; for suffix see -TION. —suggestive adj. (1631)

suicide¹ n. deliberate killing of oneself. 1651, borrowed from New Latin suicidium suicide (Latin suī of oneself, genitive of sē self + -cidium a killing; see -CIDE²). —suicidal adj. 1777, formed from English *suicide*¹ + *-al*¹.

suicide² n. person who kills himself deliberately. 1728, borrowed from New Latin suicida a suicide (Latin suī of oneself + -cida killer, *-cide*¹); see SUICIDE¹.

suit n. Probably before 1300 sout attendance at a court or the company attending; also, their livery or uniform, and siute (about 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French siute, suite, from Old French suite, sieute attendance, act of following, from Gallo-Romance sequita*, feminine of sequitus*, replacing Latin secūtus, past participle of sequi to attend, follow. The meaning of an application to a court for justice, lawsuit, appeared about 1412. The sense of a set of clothes to be worn together (before 1400), developed from court clothes that are a livery or uniform, and is related to a set of playing cards bearing the same symbol (1529). —v. Probably about 1450 suften do attendance at court, from the noun. The meaning of be agreeable or convenient to (before 1578) is probably from the sense of provide with a suit of clothes (1577, now found usually in suit up). —suitable adj. 1577, (implied in suitably) matching; later fitting, appropriate (1607). —sutor n. About 1290 syutor frequent visitor; later suter adherent, follower (before 1382); borrowed from Anglo-French seutor, suitour, suter, from Latin secūtōrem (nominative secūtōr) attendant, follower, from secūt-, past participle stem of sequi to attend, follow; for suffix see -OR². A man who is courting a woman is attested before 1586.

suite n. 1673, train of followers or attendants; borrowing of French suite, from Old French suite, sieute act of following, attendance, SUIT. The connected series of rooms (1716) is borrowed from French. A set of furniture (1622), and a set of instrumental compositions (1682), are first found as suit.

sulfate or sulphate n. 1790 sulphat, borrowed from French sulphate, from New Latin sulphatum acidum, from Latin sulpur, sulphur SULFUR; for suffix see -ATE².

sulfur or sulphur n. About 1380 soulfre; later sulfur (probably before 1425); borrowed through Old French soufre and Anglo-French sulfre, from Late Latin sulfur, from Latin sulpur, sulphur. —sulfuric or sulphuric adj. 1790 sulphuric; formed from English sulphur + -ic, after French sulfurique, from Late Latin sulfur + French -ique -ic. —sulfurous or sulphurous adj. 1530 sulpherus of sulfur; formed from English sulphur + ous, after Middle French sulphureux, or after Latin sulphurōsus.

sulk v. 1781, back formation from SULKY¹. —n. 1792, from the verb.

sulky¹ adj. sullen. 1744, possibly an alteration of earlier sulke sluggish (1636); probably developed from Old English āsolcen idle, lazy, slow, from past participle of āseolcan become sluggish, be weak or idle; for suffix see -Y¹. Old English āseolcan is related to besylcan be languid, and cognate with Middle High German selken to drip, drop, sink (from Proto-Germanic selkanan*).

sulky² n. light carriage with two wheels. 1756, apparently a noun use of SULKY¹; so called because the carriage has room for only one person.

sullen adj. 1577, unsociable, gloomy, morose; earlier sollen

(1573), alteration of Middle English soleyn unique, singular (1369); borrowed from Anglo-French solein*, solain*, formed on the pattern of Old French soltain, soutain (Vulgar Latin sōlitānus*) from Old French soul, sol single, *SOLE*² + -ein, -ain -an. About 1380 soleyn meant solitary, and by about 1399 averse to society, unfriendly, morose.

sully v. 1591, probably borrowed from Middle French souiller, from Old French souillier make dirty, *SOIL*¹.

sultan n. 1555, borrowed from Middle French sultan ruler of Turkey, from Arabic sultān ruler, power. —sultanate n. 1822 sultanat territory of a sultan; later, office of a sultan (1884); formed from English sultan + *-ate*³.

sultry adj. 1594, oppressively hot, close, and moist; developed from sulter to swelter (1581), alteration of SWELTER; for suffix see *-y*¹.

sum n. About 1300 summe quantity, amount; borrowed through Anglo-French and Old French summe, somme, from Latin summa total number whole, essence, gist, noun use of the feminine form of summus highest (earlier supmos*), related to super OVER. The use in Latin of a word meaning “highest” to mean “sum” probably derived from the Roman practice of writing the sum of a column of figures at the top rather than the bottom; compare the English expression the bottom line. —v. Before 1325 sumen to count up, find the sum of; borrowed from Old French summer, sommer, from Late Latin summāre sum up, from Latin summa sum. The sense of summarize, epitomize, is found in Middle English before 1398.

sum- a form of the prefix sub- before m in some words of Latin origin, as in summon. Formed in Latin by assimilation of b to the following consonant (m).

sumac or sumach n. Before 1400 sumac preparation made from the dried leaves and shoots of the sumac; borrowed from Old French sumac, from Medieval Latin sumach, from Arabic summāq. The shrub itself was first called sumac in 1548.

summary adj. Probably before 1425; borrowed from Medieval Latin summarius of or pertaining to the sum or substance, from Latin summa whole, gist, SUM; for suffix see -ARY. The sense of done without delay, direct, prompt, is first found in 1713. —n. 1509, borrowed from Latin summārium an epitome, abstract, summary, from summa totality, gist, SUM; for suffix see -ARY. —summarize v. 1871, formed from English summary + -ize.

summation n. 1760, process of finding the sum of; borrowed from New Latin summationem (nominative summatio) an adding up, from Late Latin summāre to sum up, from Latin summa SUM; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of a summing up is first recorded in English in 1836.

summer¹ n. warmest season of the year. Before 1121 sumer, developed from Old English (before 830) sumor, cognate with Old Frisian sumur summer, Old Saxon sumar, somer (modern Dutch zomer), Old High German sumar (modern German Sommer), and Old Icelandic sumar (Swedish sommar, Norwegian and Danish sommer), from Proto-Germanic sumur-*

—v. 1440 somoren, from the noun. —summertime n. (about 1378)

summer² n. horizontal bearing beam. 1288, stone support; later, pack horse (probably before 1300); main beam (1324); borrowed through Anglo-French sumer, somer, Old French somer, somier main beam, originally pack horse, from Vulgar Latin saumārius*, for Late Latin sagmārius pack horse, from sagma packsaddle; see SUMPTER.

summit n. Before 1400 somet highest point, peak; borrowed from Middle French somete, from Old French sommette, diminutive of som, sum highest part, top of a hill, from Latin sum-mum, noun use of neuter of summus highest, related to super OVER. —adj. 1955, from the noun.

summon v. Probably before 1200 sumunen; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French sumundre, somondre summon, from Vulgar Latin summonere* to call, cite, variant of Latin summonere hint to (sum- under + monere warn, advise). —summons n. Probably about 1280 somnes; later somunce, somounz (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French sumunse, somounse, noun use of feminine past participle of somondre to SUMMON.

sump n. Before 1450 sompe marsh, morass; earlier in the place name Brunes Sumpe (1241); borrowed from Middle Dutch somp or Middle Low German sump, from Proto-Germanic sum-paz*, and cognate with Middle High German sumpf swamp (modern German Sumpf). The sense of a pit to collect water is found in English in 1653.

sumpter n. Probably before 1300 sumter driver of a pack horse; also, sompterhors (about 1450); borrowed from Old French sommetier, from Vulgar Latin sagmārius* a pack horse driver, from Late Latin sagmat- a pack, burden, stem of sagma packsaddle, from Greek ságma, probably related to sáttein to pack, press, stuff; for suffix see *-ER*¹. The sense of a horse or mule for carrying loads or packs appeared about 1450.

sumptuary adj. 1600, borrowed from Latin sūmptuārius relating to expenses, from sūmptus expense; see SUMPTUOUS; for suffix see -ARY.

sumptuous adj. About 1410 sumptous; later sumptuous (1472–73); borrowed probably by influence of Middle French sumptueux, from Latin sūmptuōsus costly, expensive, from sūmptus (genitive sūmptūs) cost, expense, from sūmere spend, procure, take; for suffix see -OUS.

sun n. Before 1325 sun, developed from Old English sunne (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian sunne, sonne sun, Old Saxon sunna, Middle Dutch sonne (modern Dutch zon), Old High German sunna (modern German Sonne), Old Icelandic sunna, and Gothic sunnō, from Proto-Germanic sunnōn*; possibly related to SOUTH. —v. 1519 (implied in sunning); from the noun. —sunbeam n. (about 1000) —sunburn n. (1652); v. 1530, back formation from sunburnt (about 1400 sunne y-brent). —sunlight n. (probably before 1200) —sunny adj. (before 1325) —sunrise n. (1440) —sunset n. (before 1393) —sunshine n. (about 1250) sundae n. 1897, thought to be an alteration of SUNDAY; the reason for the name is uncertain; perhaps so called because the spelling was altered out of deference to religious people's feelings about the word Sunday.

Sunday n. About 1250 sunedai, developed from Old English (before 700) Sunnandæg, literally, day of the sun (sunnan, oblique case of sunne sun + dæg day) and corresponding to Old Frisian sunmandei Sunday, Old Saxon sunundag, Middle Dutch sonnendach (modern Dutch zondag), Old High German sunniun tag (modern German Sonntag), and Old Icelandic sunudagr (Norwegian and Danish søndag, Swedish söndag) all loan translations of Latin diēs sōlis day of the sun, which in turn was a loan translation of Greek hēméra hēliou.

sunder v. Probably before 1200 sundren separate, sever, split; developed from Old English sundrian (about 950), earlier ās-yndrian, gesyndrian, āsundrian (ā- intensive prefix, ge- perfective prefix + sundor separately, apart). Old English sundor is cognate with Old Frisian sunder apart, Old Saxon sundar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch zonder without, Old High German suntar aside, apart (archaic German sonder without), Old Icelandic sundr (Danish sønder, Swedish sönder, Norwegian sund), from Proto-Germanic sundēr*, and Gothic sundrō.

sundry adj. Probably before 1200 sundri distinct, separate, several; developed from Old English syndrig separate, special (before 899), related to sundor separately, apart; see SUNDER; for suffix see -Y¹. Old English syndrig corresponds to Middle Low German sunderich single, special, and Old High German suntarig. —n. About 1250 sundri various ones; from the adjective. The expression all and sundry is first recorded in 1389. The plural sundries sundry things, odds and ends, is found in 1755; formed from English sundry, adj. (taken as a noun) + -s¹.

sup¹ v. eat the evening meal. About 1300 supen, soupen; borrowed from Old French super, soper, souper, from soupe broth, *SOUP*¹.

sup² v. to sip. Probably before 1300 soupen; later suppen (before 1325); developed from Old English sūpan to sip, swallow (West Saxon, before 899), suppan, sūpian (Northumbrian). Old English sūpan is cognate with Middle Low German sūpen to sup, Middle Dutch zūpen (modern Dutch zuipen drink too much), Old High German sūfan (modern German saufen drink like an animal), and Old Icelandic sūpa to drink, from Proto-Germanic sūpanan*.

sup- a form of the prefix sub- before p in words of Latin origin, as in suppress. Formed in Latin by assimilation of b to the following consonant (p).

super¹ n. 1857, shortened form of SUPERINTENDENT an overseer, especially on a sheep ranch or station in Australia.

super² adj. first-rate, excellent. 1837, of superlative quality (implied in extra-super, 1837); developed after SUPER-.

super- a prefix meaning: 1 over; above, as in superimpose = impose over or above. 2 besides; further, as in superadd = to add besides or further. 3 in high proportion; to excess; exceedingly, as in superabundant = abundant to excess. 4 surpassing, as in supernatural = surpassing the natural. Borrowed from Latin super-, from adverb and preposition super above, over.

superable adj. 1629, borrowed from Latin superābilis that may be overcome, from superāre to overcome, from super over; for suffix see -ABLE. The word's use was probably influenced by, or perhaps a back formation of INSUPERABLE.

superannuate v. 1649, render old or obsolete; back formation from superannuated obsolete, out of date (before 1633), formed from Medieval Latin superannuatus (of cattle) more than a year old + English suffix -ed². Medieval Latin superannuatus is formed from Latin super beyond, over + annus year; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of dismissal on account of age, cause to retire, is found in English in 1692. —superannuation n. 1658, condition of being obsolete; later, act of retiring (before 1704); formed from English superannuate + -ation.

superb adj. 1549, imposing, of magnificent proportions; borrowed from Latin superbus grand, proud, sumptuous, from super above, over.

supercilious adj. Before 1529 (implied in superciliously); borrowed from Latin superciliōsus haughty, arrogant, from supercilium haughty demeanor, pride; originally, eyebrow, as used to express haughtiness (super- above + celōm* a cover, related to cēlāre to cover, hide); for suffix see -OUS.

superego n. 1924, formed from English super- + ego, as a translation of German Über-Ich.

supererogation n. 1526, the doing of more than duty requires; borrowed from Late Latin supererogātiōnem (nominative supererogātiō) a payment in addition, from supererogāre pay or do additionally, formed from Latin super- above, over + erogāre pay out (ē- out + rogāre ask, request); for suffix see -ATION.

superficial adj. 1392, of or relating to a surface, external; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Old French superficiel, from Latin superficiālis of or pertaining to the surface, from superficiēs surface (super- above, over + faciēs form, face); for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of not deep or thorough, is first recorded in Middle English about 1456. —superficiality n. 1530, superficial condition or quality; formed from English superficial + -ity.

superfluous adj. Before 1398 superfluous; later superfluous; borrowed, probably by influence of Old French superflueux, from Latin superfluus overflowing, unnecessary, from superfluere to overflow (super- over + fluere to flow); for suffix see -OUS. —superfluity n. Before 1387 superfluyte excess, overflowing supply; borrowed from Old French superfluite, and directly from Late Latin superfluitās that which is superfluous, from Latin superfluus superfluous; for suffix see -ITY.

superintend v. About 1615, borrowed from Late Latin superintendere oversee (Latin super- above + intendere turn one's attention, direct), and probably a back formation of earlier superintendent. —superintendent n. 1554, bishop; 1560, minister who supervises churches within a district; borrowed from Medieval Latin superintendentem (nominative superintendens), from present participle of Late Latin superintendere to superintend; for suffix see -ENT. The ecclesiastical sense is a loan translation of Greek episkopos overseer; see BISHOP. The general sense of a person who superintends is first recorded in 1588, and that of a janitor or custodian about 1935.

superior adj. Before 1393 superiour, borrowed from Old French superior, superiour, from Latin superior higher, comparative form of superus situated above, upper, from super above, over. —n. Probably before 1425, from the adjective. —superiority n. About 1475 superioryte superior rank, dignity, or status; probably formed in English from superior + -ity, and borrowed from Middle French superiorité, from Medieval Latin superioritas, from Latin superior superior; for suffix see -ITY.

superlative adj. About 1395 superlatyf of the highest degree or quality described; borrowed from Old French superlatif (feminine superlative), and probably directly from Late Latin superlativus exaggerated, superlative, from Latin superlatus, used as past participle of superferre carry over or beyond (super- beyond + ferre carry); for suffix see -IVE. The meaning of supreme is first recorded about 1408. —n. 1530, from the adjective.

superman n. 1903 Superman; loan translation of German Übermensch, literally, overman, coined by Nietzsche, in Thus Spake Zarathustra (1883–91); also translated into English as overman (1895).

supermarket n. 1933, formed from English super- + market.

supernal adj. 1447, heavenly, divine; borrowing of Middle French supernal, formed from Latin supernus situated above, celestial (from super above, over) + -al -al¹; formed to contrast with infernal.

supernatural adj. Probably before 1425 supernaturel; later supernatural (about 1443); borrowed from Medieval Latin supernaturalis above or beyond nature (Latin super- above + nātūra nature); for suffix see -AL¹.

supernumerary adj. 1605, borrowed from Late Latin supernumerarius excessive in number (of soldiers added to a full legion), from Latin super numerum beyond the number (super- beyond, over + numerus, accusative of numerus number); for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1639, from the adjective.

superpower n. 1922, superior or extraordinary power; formed from English super- + power. The nation having an extremely powerful or dominant position in world politics is first recorded in 1944.

superscript n. 1588, address or direction on a letter; borrowed from Middle French superscript, and directly from Latin superscriptus, past participle of superscribere write over or above something as a correction (super- above + scribere write). A number, letter, etc., written above something, is first recorded in 1901. —adj. 1882, from the noun.

supersede v. 1456 supceden to postpone, defer; Scottish, borrowed from Middle French supceder, later superseder desist, delay, defer, from Latin supersedere sit on top of, stay clear of, abstain from, forbear, refrain from (super- above + sedere sit).

The meaning of displace, replace, is first recorded in English in 1642.

supersonic adj. 1919, of or having to do with sound waves beyond the limit of human hearing; formed from English super- + Latin sonus sound + English -ic. The sense of exceeding the speed of sound as a measure of aircraft speed, is first recorded in 1945. —n. 1962, a supersonic aircraft; from the adjective. —supersonics n. 1928, formed from English supersonic + *-s*¹; see also -ICS.

superstition n. Probably before 1200 supersticiun a false or irrational religious belief or practice; borrowed from Middle French superstition, from Latin superstitiōnem (nominative superstitiō) excessive fear of the gods, perhaps originally, a state of religious exaltation; related to superstes (genitive superstitis), earlier superstats*, standing over or above; also, standing by, surviving, from superstare stand on or over, survive (super above + stare stand); for suffix see -TION. —superstitious adj. About 1395 supersticious; borrowed, probably by influence of Old French superstitieux, from Latin superstitiosus full of superstition, from superstitiō superstition; for suffix see -OUS.

supervene v. 1647–48, come as something additional or extraneous; borrowed, perhaps by influence of French survenir, from Latin supervenire come on top of (super- upon, over + venire come). —supervention n. 1649, borrowed from Late Latin superventiōnem (nominative superventiō) a coming up, from Latin supervent-, past participle stem of supervenire supervene; for suffix see -TION.

supervise v. Probably before 1475 supervisen oversee, inspect (implied in supervysinge, verbal noun); possibly a back formation from supervisor, and probably borrowed from Medieval Latin supervis-, past participle stem of supervidere oversee, inspect (Latin super- over + videre see). —supervision n. 1623, probably formed from English supervise + -ion, on the model of Medieval Latin supervisionem (nominative supervisiō), from supervis-, past participle stem of supervidere supervise. —supervisor n. About 1454, borrowed from Medieval Latin supervisor, from supervis-, past participle stem of supervidere supervise; for suffix see -OR².

supine adj. About 1500, borrowed from Latin supīnus turned or thrown backward, inactive, indolent, related to sub under. —n. About 1450 suppyn, supyn, Latin verbal noun formed from the past participle stem; borrowed from Late Latin supinum verbum supine verb, noun use of neuter of supīnus, adj., supine; in reference to either verbal noun, in -um or -ū, that was called supinum, perhaps because, although furnished with a noun case-ending, it rests or falls back on the verb.

supper n. About 1250 sopere the evening meal; later supere, sopper (before 1300); borrowed from Old French super, soper supper, noun use of super, soper to eat the evening meal; see SUP¹; for suffix see -ER³. —suppertime n. (before 1376) supplant v. Before 1325 (implied in supplanter) supplanten to trip up, overthrow, defeat, dispossess; borrowed from Old French supplanter to trip up, overthrow, from Latin supplantāre trip up, overthrow (sup- under + planta sole of the foot). The meaning of replace one thing with another, is first recorded in English in 1671, but the sense is found as early as 1608 in supplantation.

supple adj. About 1300 souple soft, not rigid; borrowed from Old French souple, suple pliant, flexible, from Gallo-Romance supples*, from Latin supplex submissive, bending, thought to be an altered form of supplicios* humbly pleading or appealing (sup- under + plācare appease). —v. Before 1349 souplen soften, cause to yield; from the adjective.

supplement n. About 1384, that which is added, addition; borrowed from Old French supplement, and directly from Latin supplementum something added to supply a deficiency, from supplere to SUPPLY; for suffix see -MENT. —v. 1829, furnish a supplement to; from the noun. —supplemental adj. (1605) —supplementary adj. (1667) suppliant n. 1429 suppliaunt petitioner at law; borrowed from Middle French suppliant, originally, present participle of supplier to plead humbly, entreat, beg, pray, from Latin supplicare beg, beseech; see SUPPLICATE; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of a humble petitioner is first recorded in English in 1549–62. —adj. Before 1586, borrowed from Middle French suppliant, present participle of supplier to plead humbly. —suppliance n. 1611, formed from English suppliant, adj. + -ance.

supplicant n. 1597, borrowed from Latin supplicantem (nominative supplicāns), present participle of supplicare plead humbly; see SUPPLICATE; for suffix see -ANT. —adj. 1597, borrowed from Latin supplicantem (nominative supplicāns), present participle of supplicare to plead humbly.

supplicate v. 1417, probably a back formation from supplication, and borrowed from Latin supplicatus, past participle of supplicare plead humbly, beseech, beg, from supplex (genitive supplicis) submissive, bending, kneeling down; see SUPPLE; for suffix see -ATE¹. —supplication n. About 1380 supplicacion prayer; also, an entreaty, plea (before 1393); borrowed from Old French supplication, from Latin supplicatōnem (nominative supplicatīō), from supplicare plead humbly; see SUPPLE; for suffix see -ATION.

supply v. 1375 supplien to help, support, maintain; later, fill up, make up for (before 1398); borrowed from Old French supplier, soupleier, supleer fill up, make full, and directly from Latin supplere fill up, complete (sup- up + plere to fill). The meaning of furnish, provide, is first recorded in English about 1520. —n. 1423 supplye support, assistance; from the verb. The sense of an act of fulfilling a need or demand is first recorded in 1500–20. A quantity or amount of something supplied is first found in 1607.

support v. About 1384 supporten to put up with, tolerate; borrowed from Old French supporter, and probably directly from Latin supportare convey, carry, bring up (sup- up + portare carry). The meaning of sustain, supply with food or other necessities of life, is first recorded in Middle English before 1393, and that of hold up, prop up, probably before 1396. —n. About 1391, from the verb. —supporter n. (probably before 1425) —supportive adj. (1593) suppose v. About 1303 supposen hold an opinion, assume, incline to think; borrowed from Old French supposer to assume (from Medieval Latin, to assume), probably a replacement of suppondre* (by influence of Old French poser put or place), from Latin supponere put or place under (sup- under + ponere put, place). —supposedly adv. 1611, formed from earlier supposed, adj. + -ly¹. The adjective supposed (as in The supposed beggar was really a prince) is first recorded in 1582. —supposition n. 1410 supposicioun assumption, hypothesis; borrowed probably from Middle French, and directly from Late Latin suppositiōnem (nominative suppositiō), from Latin, act of putting under, from supposit-, past participle stem of supponere put under; for suffix see -TION. The sense of Late Latin suppositiō assumption, hypothesis, was influenced by Greek hypóthesis hypothesis.

suppository n. 1392, rectal suppository; borrowed perhaps by influence of Old French suppositoire, from Medieval Latin suppositorium, noun use of neuter of Late Latin suppositōrius placed underneath or up, from Latin supposit-, past participle stem of supponere put or place under; see SUPPOSE; for suffix see -ORY.

suppress v. Probably about 1400 suppressen be burdensome, oppress; borrowed from Latin suppress-, past participle stem of supprimere press down, stop, check, stifle (sup- down, under + primere push against, PRESS¹). The meaning of subdue (as a feeling, thought, or habit) is first recorded in English in 1526 and that of keep secret in 1533. —suppression n. 1528, borrowed perhaps from Middle French, and directly from Latin suppressionem (nominative suppressiō) a pressing down or keeping back, from suppress-, past participle stem of supprimere press down; for suffix see -SION.

suppurate v. Probably before 1425 suppuraten; borrowed from Latin suppuratum, past participle of suppurare form or discharge pus (sup- under + pū-, stem of pūs pus); for suffix see -ATE¹. —suppuration n. Probably about 1425 suppuracioun process or condition of suppurating; borrowed from Latin suppuratōnem (nominative suppuratīō) a suppurating, from suppurare SUPPURATE; for suffix see -ATION.

supra adv. 1463, borrowing of Latin suprā, adv., above, before, beyond, old feminine ablative singular of superus, adj., above, related to super above, over.

supra- a prefix meaning above, over, beyond, as in supranational = above or beyond national boundaries. Borrowed from Latin suprā above, before, beyond, related to super above, over.

suprarenal adj. 1828, formed in English from supra- above + renal, after New Latin suprarenalis (Latin suprā above + Late Latin rēnalis renal), in reference to the adrenal or suprarenal capsules or glands.

supreme adj. 1523, highest, loftiest, topmost; borrowed from Middle French suprême, and directly from Latin supremus highest, superlative of superus situated above, from super above, over. —supremacy n. (1547) —Supreme Being (1699) —Supreme Court (1709) sur-¹ a prefix meaning over, above, beyond, in addition, found particularly in words borrowed from older French (including some words from Anglo-French), such as surcharge, surpass, surtax, survey. The Old French forms were sour-, sor-, sur- (from Latin super- SUPER-).

sur-² a form of the prefix sus- before r in words of Latin origin, as in surreptitious, surrogate. Formed in Latin by assimilation of s to the following consonant (r).

surcease v. 1428 surcesen, borrowed through Anglo-French surceser, from Old French sursis, past participle of surseoir to refrain, delay, from Latin supersedere; see SUPERSEDE. The English spelling with c was influenced by the unrelated verb cease. —n. 1586, from the verb.

surcharge v. 1429 surchargen to subject to an additional tax, overtax; borrowed from Middle French surcharger, from Old French (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + chargier to load, CHARGE). —n. 1429, from the verb.

surcingle n. 1469 sursengle strap around a horse's body to keep a saddle or pack in place; borrowed from Middle French surcengle, from Old French (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + cengle a girdle, from Latin cingulum, cingulus, girth).

surd adj. 1551, (of numbers) irrational; borrowed from Latin surdus deaf, unheard, silent, dull, possibly related to susurrus a muttering, whispering. The sense in mathematics developed from the use of Latin surdus to translate Arabic (jadhr) asamm deaf (root), itself a loan translation of Greek álogos, literally, speechless, without reason. —n. 1557, from the adjective.

sure adj. About 1250, safe, secure; later, having certainty, certain (about 1330); borrowed from Old French sur, seür safe, secure, from Latin sēcūrus free from care, untroubled, heedless, safe. For development of pronunciation see SUGAR. —adv. Before 1325, assuredly, undoubtedly; from the adjective.

surety n. Probably about 1300 surte guarantee, assurance, security against loss, damage, etc.; borrowed from Old French seürte, from Latin sēcūritātem (nominative sēcūritās) freedom from care or danger, safety, security, from sēcūrus SECURE; for suffix see -TY².

surf n. 1685, probably an alteration (with possible influence of surge) of earlier suffe (1599); of uncertain origin. Both surf and suffe (or suff, 1687) were originally used especially in reference to the coast of India, which suggests an Indic origin for the words; also suff(e) may be a phonetic respelling of sough, originally a rushing sound. —v. 1917, ride on the crest of a wave; from the noun; earlier form surf or foam in 1831.

surface n. 1611, borrowed from French surface outermost boundary of anything, outside part (Old French sur- above, *sur-*¹ + face FACE), patterned on Latin superficiēs surface; see SUPERFICIAL. —adj. 1664, from the noun. —v. 1778, put a surface on, make smooth; from the noun. The meaning of bring to the surface is first recorded in 1885, and that of come to the surface, in 1898.

surfeit n. Before 1325 surfait too much, excess; borrowed from Old French surfet, surfait excess, noun use of past participle of surfaire overdo (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + faire do, from Latin facere make). —v. Probably before 1387 surfeten indulge to excess; from the noun. The sense of fill or supply to excess (as in surfeited with office work) is first recorded in 1592.

surge n. 1490 sourge fountain, stream; probably borrowed from Middle French sourge-, stem of sourdre to rise, swell, from Latin surgere to rise, contraction of surgere to rise (sus- up + -rigere, from regere to keep straight, guide). The meaning of a high, rolling swell of water (1530), is found earlier in the figurative sense of excited rising up, as of feelings (1520). —v. 1511, toss or ride on the waves (as at anchor); borrowed from Middle French surgir to rise, ride (as a ship) near the shore, from Catalan sorgir or Spanish surgir, from Latin surgere to rise; also borrowed, in part from Middle French sourge-, stem of sourdre and directly from Latin surgere to rise; see SURGE, n. The meaning of rise in great waves (1566 implied in surging), probably derived from the noun in English.

surgeon n. Probably about 1300 sorgien person who heals by manual operation; later surgen (before 1375), surgeon (before 1400); borrowed through Anglo-French surgien, variant of Old French serurgien, cirurgien, from cirurgie surgery, and directly from Latin chīrūrgia, from Greek cheirourgia, from cheirourgós working or doing by hand (cheir hand + érgon work). —surgery n. Probably about 1300 sirgirie the surgeon's art; later surgerye (about 1387–95); borrowed from Old French surgerie, cirurgerie, from cirurgie surgery (also borrowed into English); for suffix see -Y³. —surgical adj. 1770, pertaining to surgery, used in surgery; formed from English surgeon + -ical. The early form cinurgiale (probably before 1425) was borrowed from Middle French, from cinurgie surgery.

surly adj. 1566, lordly, majestic; later, imperious, haughty (about 1572); alteration of Middle English sirly lordly, imperious (before 1375), formed from sir lord + *-ly*². The sense of rude, gruff, is recorded in 1670.

surmise v. Probably about 1400 surmysen to charge, allege; borrowed from Old French surmis (feminine surmise), past participle of surmettre to accuse (sur- upon, *sur-*¹ + mettre put, from Latin mittere send). The meaning of infer, guess, is found in English in 1700, probably derived from the noun meaning. —n. 1419 surmys charge, accusation; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French surmise accusation, from surmettre to accuse. The meaning of inference, guess, is first recorded in 1590.

surmount v. Before 1325 surmonten rise above, rule or prevail over; later surmount be superior to, exceed, transcend (about 1380); borrowed from Old French surmonter rise above, surmount (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + monter to go up).

surname n. Probably before 1300, a name, title, or epithet added to a person's name; formed in Middle English from *sur-*¹ above + name, modeled on Anglo-French surmoun surname, variant of Old French surnom (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + nom name). The sense of family name is found in Middle English in 1375.

surpass v. 1555, do better than, excel; borrowed from Middle

French surpasser go beyond, exceed, excel (Old French sur- beyond, *sur-*¹ + passer to go by, *PASS*¹).

surplice n. Probably before 1200 surpliz; borrowed from Old French surpeliz, from Medieval Latin superpellicium a surplice (Latin super- over + Medieval Latin pellicium fur garment, tunic of skins, from Latin pellis skin); so called because the surplice was formerly put on over fur garments worn by clergymen to keep warm.

surplus n. About 1385, remainder or excess; borrowed from Old French surplus, from Medieval Latin superplus excess, surplus (Latin super- over + plūs more). —adj. Before 1382 soyrpluse more than is needed, excess; from the noun.

surprise n. About 1457, sudden, unexpected attack or capture; differentiated in meaning from and replacing by the early 1600's, earlier supprise (about 1425). Middle English supprise, (borrowed from Middle French suprise, variant of surprise, sourprise) and Middle English suprise (borrowed from Middle French surprise a taking unawares) are both from the noun use of the past participle of Old French surprendre to overtake (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + prendre to take, from Latin prēndere, contracted form of prehendere to grasp, seize).

The meaning of something unexpected is first recorded in 1592, and that of a feeling caused by something unexpected in 1608. —v. About 1390 surprisen overcome, overpower, take hold of (replacing earlier supprisen, 1375); borrowed from Old French surprise, feminine past participle of surprendre to overtake. The meaning of come upon unexpectedly, take unawares, is first recorded in 1592, probably from the noun in English.

surrealism n. 1927 surrealisme; later surrealism (1931); borrowed from French surréalisme (sur- beyond, *sur-*¹ + réalisme realism). The term was coined about 1917, and adopted about 1924. —surreal adj. 1937, back formation from surrealism. —surrealist adj., n. 1918 surrealiste; later surrealist (1925); borrowed from French surréaliste. —surrealistic adj. 1930, formed from English surrealist, n. + -ic.

surrender v. 1441 surrendouren give up (something) to another; borrowed from Old French surrendre give up (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + rendre give back). The spelling surrender is first recorded in 1473. —n. 1423 surrendre act of surrendering, borrowed from Old French surrendre, noun use of surrendre v.

surreptitious adj. 1443 surrepticious fraudulently obtained; borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French surreptice, from Latin surrepticius, from surreptus, past participle of surripere seize secretly (sur- from under + -ripere, from rapere to snatch); for suffix see -IOUS. The sense of acting by stealth, crafty, sly, is first recorded in 1615.

surrey n. 1895, from Surrey cart an English pleasure cart, named after Surrey, England where the cart was first made.

surrogate n. 1430 surrogat substitute, representative; later surrogate (1465); borrowed from Latin surrogāt-, past participle stem of surrogāre put in another's place, substitute (*sur-*² in the place of, under, + rogāre to ask, propose); for suffix see *-ATE*¹.

—v. 1533, borrowed from Latin surrogāt-, past participle stem of surrogāre substitute.

surround v. 1423 surrounden to flood, overflow; borrowed from Middle French soronder, souronder to overflow, abound, surpass, dominate, from Late Latin superundāre overflow (Latin super- over + undāre to flow in waves, from unda wave). The sense of shut in on all sides, enclose, encompass, is first recorded in 1616, influenced by the figurative meaning in French of dominate, and association with the similarity in sound of English round.

surtax n. 1881, borrowed from French surtaxe (Old French sur- over, *sur-*¹ + taxe tax).

surveillance n. 1802, borrowed from French surveillance oversight, a watch, from surveiller oversee, watch (sur- over, *sur-*¹ + veiller to watch, from Latin vigilāre, from vigil watchful); for suffix see -ANCE. —surveil or surveille v. 1960, back formation from surveillance.

survey v. About 1400 servayen examine in detail, appraise; later surveyen (1439); borrowed from Old French surveoir, sourveoir, from Medieval Latin supervidere oversee, SUPERVISE. The sense of determine the form, extent, and position of (land), is first recorded in 1550. —n. 1535, supervision, from the verb. The sense of an act of surveying is first recorded in 1548. —surveyor n. About 1417 surveour overseer, supervisor; borrowed from Middle French surveieur, from Old French surveoir to survey; for suffix see *-OR*². A person who surveys land is first recorded in 1551.

survive v. 1473 surviven live on, especially in the legal sense of a survivor; perhaps a back formation from earlier survivor, in the legal sense, and later (1591 or 1593) as a borrowing from Middle French survivre, sourvivre, from Latin supervivere live beyond, live longer than (super- over, beyond + vivere to live). —survival n. 1598, formed from English survive + *-al*². —survivor n. 1425 (in law) the surviving person of two or more with a joint interest; formed from English survive + *-or*², in place of Old French survivant in the same sense (1125).

sus- a form of the prefix sub- before c, p, or t in some words of Latin origin, as in susceptible, suspend, sustain. Formed in Latin from an early variant sup-*; see SUB.

susceptible adj. 1605, capable of receiving or undergoing; borrowed from French susceptible, and directly from Late Latin susceptibilis capable, sustainable, susceptible, from Latin susceptus, past participle of suscipere sustain, support, acknowledge (sus- up + -cipere, from capere to take); for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of easily influenced or affected is first recorded in 1646. —susceptibility n. 1644, quality or condition of being susceptible; borrowed from Medieval Latin susceptibilitas, from Late Latin susceptibilis susceptible; for suffix see -ITY.

suspect adj. Before 1325, regarded with mistrust; borrowed from Old French suspect suspicious, from Latin suspectus suspected, suspicious, past participle of suspiciere look up at, mistrust, suspect (su- up to + specere to look at). —v. Before 1450 suspecten believe guilty, false, etc., without proof; developed from the adjective in Middle English, and probably borrowed from Middle French suspecter, or directly from Latin suspectāre mistrust, be suspicious of, frequentative form of suspiciere to suspect. —n. 1591, from the adjective.

suspend v. About 1300 suspenden to stop or debar temporarily; borrowed from Old French suspendre, or directly from Latin suspendere to hang, stop (sus- up + pendere cause to hang, weigh). The sense of hang, hang up, is first recorded in Middle English about 1440, and that of hold in suspension, keep (one's judgment, etc.) undetermined, in 1553. —suspenders n. pl. 1810, formed from suspend + *-er*¹ + plural suffix *-s*¹.

suspense n. 1402 suspence state of suspended action, abeyance; later, state of uncertainty (about 1450); borrowed through Anglo-French suspens (in en suspens in abeyance), from Old French suspens (feminine suspense) act of suspending, from Latin suspēnsus, past participle of suspendere Suspend.

suspension n. 1421, borrowed from Latin suspēnsiōnem (nominative suspēnsiō) the act or state of hanging up, a vaulting, from suspēns-, past participle stem of suspendere to hang; see Suspend; for suffix see -iōn. A mixture of particles that remain suspended without dissolving is first recorded in English in 1707.

suspicion n. 1375 suspicioun act of suspecting; alteration of earlier suspicioun (probably before 1300); borrowed through Anglo-French suspicioun, earlier suspeziun, from Old French suspeçun, sospeçon mistrust, suspicion, from Latin suspēctiōnem (nominative suspēctiō) mistrust, suspicion, fear, awe, from suspect-, past participle stem of suspiciere look up at; see Suspect; for suffix see -iōn. The modern spelling in English was influenced by Latin suspiciōnem (nominative suspiciō) suspicion, from suspiciere to suspect. —suspicious adj. 1340 suspecious open to, deserving of, or exciting suspicion; borrowed from Old French suspēciōsus, suspiciōsus, from Latin suspiciōsus full of suspicion, from suspiciō suspicion; for suffix see -ōsus.

sustain v. Probably before 1300 sustenēn keep up, keep going; about 1300 susteynen; borrowed from Old French sustenir, soustenir hold up, endure, from Latin sustinēre hold up, support, endure (sus- up + -tinēre, from tenēre to hold). —sustenance n. Probably before 1300 sustenance means of sustaining life; borrowed from Old French sustenance, soustenance endurance, a sustaining, from soustenir, sostenir sustain; for suffix see -ance.

sutler n. person who follows or camps near an army and sells provisions to the soldiers; later, one who establishes a store near an army post. 1590, borrowed from early modern Dutch soeteler (modern Dutch zoetelaar) small tradesman, sutler, from Middle Low German suteler, sudeler person who performs dirty tasks, from Middle High German sudelen to dirty, modern German Sudler bungler.

suture n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin sūtūra a seam, from sūt-, past participle stem of suere to sew; for suffix see -ure. —v. 1777, from the noun.

svelte adj. About 1817 svelt; borrowing of French svelte slim, slender, from Italian svelto slim, slender; originally, pulled out, lengthened, from past participle of svellere to pluck or root out, from Vulgar Latin exvellere* a re-formation replacing Latin ēvellere pull out (ē- out + vellere to pluck, stretch).

swab n. 1659, a reduced form of earlier English swabber (1607, a mop for cleaning a ship's deck, etc.); borrowed from early modern Dutch zwabber* a mop (compare Low German and West Frisian swabber mop), from obsolete early modern Dutch zwabben to mop, from Proto-Germanic swab-*. —v. 1719, possibly from the noun.

swaddle v. 1491 swadlen, probably a back formation from earlier swadling band swaddling cloth or band (before 1325), or swathelbonde (about 1200), from swathel-, probably a frequentative form of Late Old English swathian to SWATHE; for suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1538, from the verb.

swag v. 1530, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian svage, svaie to sway, toss, and Old Icelandic svęggia to swing, sway; cognate with Old English swingan to SWING¹). —n. 1660, a lurching or swaying; from the verb. The meaning of ornamental festoon is found in 1794. The slang sense of booty, plunder, is first recorded in 1812. Earlier senses of swag (a bulky bag, 1303, and a big blustering fellow, 1588) are probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian dialect svagg big, strong person).

swagger v. 1590, in probably a frequentative form of swag to sway; for suffix see *-ER*⁴. —n. 1725, from the verb.

swain n. Before 1160 swein young man, attendant, follower; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sveinn boy, servant, attendant, Danish svend servant, apprentice, Norwegian svenn, and Swedish sven apprentice). The Scandinavian words are from Proto-Germanic swainaz*, and cognate with Old English swān shepherd, Old High German swein shepherd.

swale n. 1667, low, wet piece of land; special use of Scottish swaill low, hollow place (1584), or dialectal English (East Anglian) swale, swell shady place; developed from Middle English swale shade (1440); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic swalr cool, from Proto-Germanic swalaz*, and svala to cool, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish sval cool).

swallow¹ v. take in through the throat. Probably before 1200 swelzen, swolegen; later swolowen (about 1380), swallow (1500–20); developed from Old English swelgan (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon farswelgan to swallow, Middle Dutch swelghen (modern Dutch zwellen), Old High German swelahan, swēlgan (modern German schwelgen to revel, feast), from Proto-Germanic swelH-/swelz-*; and Old Icelandic swelgja to swallow (Norwegian swelgje, Danish svælge, Swedish svälja). The sense of consume, destroy, is first recorded in English before 1340. —n. Before 1338 swelw gulf, abyss; later swalow throat, gullet (before 1400); developed from late Old English geswelg, swelw gulf, abyss (before 1100); cognate with Middle Low German swalch throat, glutton, gluttony, Middle High German swalch gullet, gorge, abyss, and Old Icelandic swelgr whirlpool, devourer, swallower (Swedish svalg throat, Norwegian swelg, Danish svælg).

swallow² n. bird. Probably before 1300 swalu, and swalewe; developed from Old English (before 800) swealwe, from Proto-Germanic swalwōn*; cognate with Old Saxon swala swallow, Middle Low German swalewe, swalue, Middle Dutch swāluwe (modern Dutch zwaluw), Old High German swalawa, swalwa (modern German Schwalbe), and Old Icelandic svala (Swedish svala, Norwegian and Danish svale).

swami n. 1773, an idol; later, a religious teacher (1901); borrowed from Hindi swāmī master (used as term of address), from Sanskrit svāmī (genitive svāmīnas) lord, master, from svā-s one's own.

swamp n. 1624, earlier in the compound swamuwatyr swamp water (before 1500); perhaps representing an Old English swamp*, which would be cognate with Old Icelandic svæppr sponge, fungus (Swedish and Danish svamp), from Proto-Germanic swampuz*; but traditionally compared with modern English sump as a variant of Middle English sompe morass, swamp (before 1450); probably borrowed from Middle Dutch somp or Middle Low German sump swamp; cognate with Middle High German sumpf swamp (modern German Sumpf). —v. 1772–84, fill with water, submerge; from the noun. The sense of overwhelm, sink as if in a swamp, is first recorded in 1818.

swan n. Old English swan (probably about 750), from Proto-Germanic swanaz*; cognate with Middle Low German swan swan, Middle Dutch swāne (modern Dutch zwaan), Middle High German swan (modern German Schwan), and Old Icelandic svanr (Swedish svan, Danish and Norwegian svane).

swank v. 1809, to strut, of uncertain origin; perhaps related to Middle High German swanken to sway, totter (modern German schwanken), and Old High German swingan to SWING¹. —adj. 1913, from the verb. —swanky adj. (1842) swap v. Probably before 1200 swappen to strike, strike the hands together; of unknown origin. The sense of exchange, barter, or trade, is first recorded in 1594; possibly so called from the practice of striking hands as a sign of agreement in bargaining. —n. About 1250 swop a blow, a striking; later swappe (about 1380). The meaning of an exchange, barter, or trade, is first recorded in 1625.

sward n. Probably before 1300 sward flesh or skin; about 1300, sod, turf; developed from Old English (before 800) sweard skin, rind; cognate with Old Frisian sward skin of the head, scalp, Middle Dutch swaerde skin, hide (modern Dutch zwaard bacon rind), Middle Low German sward hairy skin, scalp, Middle High German sward (modern German Schwarte rind), and Old Icelandic svǫrdhr (genitive svardhar) skin, walrus hide (Norwegian svor, svord rind, Swedish svål pigskin, turf), from Proto-Germanic swardu-*.

swarm¹ n. group of bees or other insects. About 1350 swarme; developed from Old English (before 800) swearm; cognate with Old Saxon and Middle Low German swarm swarm, Middle Dutch swarm, swerm (modern Dutch zwerm), Old High German swaram (modern German Schwarm), and Old Icelandic svarmr tumult (Danish sværm swarm, Swedish svärm, Norwegian swerm), from Proto-Germanic swarmaz*. —v. Probably about 1380 swarmen to leave a hive to start another; from the noun.

swarm² v. to climb, shin (as in swarm up a tree). 1500's, perhaps originally a sailor's term; also found in obsolete swarve (1500's); both words of uncertain origin.

swart adj. dark, swarthy. Before 1121 swarte; developed from Old English sweart (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon swart black, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch swart (modern Dutch zwart), Old High German swarz (modern German schwarz), Old Icelandic svart (Norwegian and Swedish svart, Danish sort black), and Gothic swarts from Proto-Germanic swartaz*.

swarthy adj. dark-colored or having a dark skin. 1581, alteration of earlier swarty (1572), formed from English swart + *-y*¹. A derivative form, swarthy, is found as early as 1577. It is not clear why the t of swarty changed to th beginning in the latter 1500's.

swash n. 1538, the fall of a heavy body or blow; possibly a formation on wash with s- added for emphasis, and reminiscent of splash, etc. The meaning of a body of splashing water appeared in 1671, and that of a dashing or splashing in 1847–54. —v. 1556 (implied in swashing); probably from the noun.

swashbuckler n. 1560, formed from English swash, v. + buckler shield; the original, literal sense may have been one who makes a noise by striking his own or his opponent's shield, a swordsman. —swashbuckling adj. Before 1693, formed from English swashbuckler + *-ing*².

swastika n. 1871, borrowed from Sanskrit svastika-s, from svasti-s well-being, luck; formed from su- well + as-, root of asti (he) is; so called because swastikas were thought in early times to bring good luck. The use of swastika in reference to the Nazi emblem is first recorded in English in 1932.

swat v. 1615, to sit down, squat; probably a dialectal variant of SQUAT. The sense of hit sharply (before 1796), may be of different derivation (possibly alteration of swap to strike, smite, probably before 1400). —n. Before 1800, sharp blow; probably from the verb.

SWAT or S.W.A.T. n. 1968, acronym formed from S(pecial) W(eapons) a(n)d T(actics) (squad or team) or S(pecial) W(eapons) A(tack) T(eam).

swatch n. 1512 swache the countercheck of a tally (in Northumberland); later, a tally attached to cloth sent to be dyed (1612, in Yorkshire); 1647, a sample piece of cloth; of unknown origin.

swath n. About 1250 swathe track, trace; developed from Old English swæth, swathu (about 725, in Beowulf). The Old-English forms swæth (from Proto-Germanic swathan*), and swathu (from Proto-Germanic swathō*) are cognate with Old Frisian swethe limit, boundary, Middle Low German swat, swāde furrow, swath, Middle Dutch swat swath (modern Dutch zwad, zwade), Middle High German swade swath (modern German Schwaden), and Old Icelandic svadh slippery place (Norwegian sva bare cliff, Swedish svad bare cliff, clearing). The meaning of a space covered by a single cut of a scythe is found probably about 1475, and that of a strip or lengthwise extent (of something), probably 1605.

swathe v. Probably before 1325 swathen; developed from Late Old English (1100's) swathian to swathe; cognate with Middle Low German swede bandage. —n. 1565, infant's swaddling bands; 1598, band of cloth, wrapping; re-formation; from the verb; also found in Late Old English swathum (about 1050).

sway v. About 1300 swien, swēgen go, glide, move; later sweyen sweep (probably about 1380); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic sveigja to bend, swing, give way, from Proto-Germanic swaizjanan*, related to svigna give way, and probably cognate with Middle Low German swāien to sway, modern Dutch zwaaien to swing, wave). The sense of swing, wave, waver, is first recorded about 1500. —n. About 1175 swēze motion; later sway (before 1300); probably from the same Scandinavian source as the verb (compare Old Icelandic svigi a bending switch, svig a bend, Norwegian svæg switch). The meaning of controlling influence (as in to be under the sway of a leader) is found before 1510.

swear v. 1123 sweren to take an oath; developed from Old English swerian (about 725, in Beowulf, from Proto-Germanic swarjanan*); cognate with Old Frisian swera to swear, Old Saxon swerian, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sweren (modern Dutch zweren), Old High German swerien, swerren (modern German schwören), Old Icelandic sverja to swear (Swedish svärja, Norwegian sverge, Danish sværge), and Gothic swaran to swear, from Proto-Germanic swar-*, found also in Old Icelandic svar answer, svara to answer, and Old English andswaru ANSWER.

sweat v. Probably before 1200 sweten; developed from Old English swētan perspire, work hard (before 899), from swāt, n., sweat. —n. Probably before 1200 swete life blood; also, perspiration, dialectal (northern English) variant of swote (probably about 1150); developed from Old English swāt sweat (from Proto-Germanic swaita-*), cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon swēt sweat, Middle Dutch sweet (modern Dutch zweet), Old High German swēiz (modern German Schweiss), and Old Icelandic svēiti (Swedish svett, Norwegian and Danish svet). Change to the form swete was influenced by the verb sweten to sweat. —sweater n. Before 1529, one who works hard, toiler; formed from English sweat, v. + *-er*¹. The meaning of a woolen vest or jersey, originally worn in rowing, is first recorded in 1882, from earlier sweaters clothing worn to produce sweating and reduce weight (1828). —sweaty adj. About 1380 swety causing sweat; formed from swete sweat + *-y*¹. The sense of covered with sweat is first recorded in 1590.

sweep v. Probably before 1200 swepen to clear away with a broom; also move swiftly and strongly; of uncertain origin, but replacing swope sweep (about 1200), developed from Old English swāpan to sweep; see SWOOP. —n. About 1250 swēp stroke, force; from the verb. The sense of an act of sweeping is first recorded in 1552, and that of scope, reach, compass in 1679.

sweepstakes n. 1773, prize won in a race or contest, from Middle English swepestake one who sweeps or wins all the stakes in a game (1495); formed from Middle English swepen, v., sweep + *stake*², n.

sweet adj. About 1175 swete; developed from Old English (before 830) swēte pleasing to the senses, mind, or feelings (from Proto-Germanic swōtijaz*); cognate with Old Frisian swēt sweet, Old Saxon swōti, swōti, Middle Low German sote, sute, Middle Dutch soete (modern Dutch zoet), Old High German suozi (modern German süss), and Old Icelandic sætr (Swedish söt, Norwegian sot, Danish sød). —n. Probably before 1200 swete; from the adjective. —sweet corn (1646) —sweeten v. 1552, formed from English sweet, adj. + *-en*¹. —sweetheart n. About 1290, as a term of address; 1576, loved one, lover. —sweetmeats n. pl. (about 1480) —sweet tooth Before 1393, Middle English tooth taste, liking; compare TOOTHsome.

swell v. Probably before 1200 swellen, developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) swellan grow or make bigger (past tense sweall, past participle swollen); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch swellen to swell (modern Dutch zwellen), Old High German swellan (modern German schwellen), Old Icelandic svella swell (Swedish svälla, Norwegian svelle), from Proto-Germanic swelanan*, and Gothic ufswalleinōs (plural) pride, arrogance. —n. Probably before 1200 swel swelling; from the verb. A rising or heaving of the sea in rolling waves is first recorded in 1606. —adj. 1810, fashionably dressed or equipped; from the noun. The sense of good, excellent, first occurs in 1897.

swelter v. About 1403 swelteren suffer from heat, sweat profusely; frequentative form of earlier swelten be faint, especially with heat (before 1390); developed from Old English sweltan to die (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon sweltan to die, Middle Dutch swelten to faint, die, Old High German swelzan burn away, languish, Old Icelandic svelta to die, starve (Swedish svälta starve, Danish and Norwegian sulte to hunger), and Gothic swiltan to die; probably from Proto-Germanic swel-* to burn slowly, found in Old English swelan to burn, Middle Low German swelen to smolder.

swerve v. Probably about 1200 swerfen go off, turn aside; later swerven (before 1338); developed in form from Old English sweorfan to rub, scour, file, but unaccounted for in sense development. Old English sweorfan, from Proto-Germanic swerbanan*, is cognate with Old Frisian swerwa to creep, Old Saxon swerban to wipe, Middle Dutch swerven to rove, stray (modern Dutch zwerfen), Old High German swerban wipe, move back and forth, Old Icelandic sverfa to file, and Gothic -swairban to wipe. Middle Dutch swerven stray, suggests the sense of go off, turn aside, may have come from influence outside of English, though present in Middle English was unrecorded in Old English. —n. 1741, from the verb.

swift adj. Old English swift moving quickly (about 725, in Beowulf), related to swifan move in a course, sweep; see SWIVEL. —adv. Probably about 1380; from the adjective. —n. Probably before 1481 swyfte something swift; from the adjective. Reference to a kind of bird noted for its swift flight is first found in 1668.

swig n. 1548, drink or liquor; later, big or hearty drink of liquor (1621–23); of unknown origin. —v. About 1654, from the noun.

swill v. About 1250, swilen to wash, stir, pour, drink; developed from Old English (before 800) swilian, swillan to wash, gargle, from Proto-Germanic sweljanan*. The meaning of drink greedily is first recorded about 1530. —n. 1553, liquid kitchen refuse fed to pigs; from the verb.

swim v. About 1175 swimmen; developed from Old English swimman to move in or on the water, float (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian swimma to swim, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch swemmen (modern Dutch zwemmen), Old High German swimman (modern German schwimmen), Old Icelandic svimma (Swedish simma, Norwegian and Danish svømme to swim), from Proto-Germanic swemjanan*. The sense of reel, move unsteadily, is first recorded in 1678. —n. 1599, smooth gliding movement; later, act of swimming (1764); from the verb.

swindle v. 1782, to cheat, defraud, back formation from SWINDLER. —n. 1852, from the verb. —swindler n. 1774, person who cheats or defrauds; borrowed from German Schwindler giddy person, extravagant speculator, cheat, from schwindeln to be giddy, act extravagantly, swindle, from Old High German swintilōn be giddy, frequentative form of swintan to languish, disappear; cognate with Old English swindan to languish, disappear, and probably with Old English swima dizziness.

swine n. Before 1325 suine; later swyne (about 1375); also earlier swein (1128); developed from Old English (before 800) swīn pig, hog; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German swīn swine, Middle Dutch swijn (modern Dutch zwijn), Old High German swīn (modern German Schwein), Old Icelandic svīn (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish svin), and Gothic swein; from Proto-Germanic swīnan*. —swineherd n. (before 1100)—swinish adj. Before 1200 swinisse, formed from Middle English swine swine + -isse -ish¹.

swing v. About 1175 swingen to beat, strike, move violently; developed from Old English (before 800) swingan; also earlier, to rush, fling oneself (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian swinga to fling, Old Saxon swingan fling oneself, Middle Low German swingen, Old High German swingan to fling, beat, move rapidly (modern German schwingen to swing), from Proto-Germanic swenzanan*. The meaning of suspend so as to turn freely is first recorded in English in 1528, and that of move freely back and forth, in 1545. —n. Before 1325, a stroke with a weapon; developed from Old English geswing stroke (as in sweordgeswing sword stroke); related to swingan to beat, strike. The meaning of an oscillating is found in 1589, from the verb. The meaning of an apparatus that swings is first recorded in 1687. A type of jazz music with swinging rhythm, is first recorded in 1934, though the sense has been traced to 1888. —swinger n. 1543, person or thing that swings, formed from English swing, v. + *-er*¹. The sense of a person who is lively in an unrestrained way (1965), is found in the form swinging, adj. in 1958.

swipe n. Before 1807, possibly a dialectal variant of SWEEP, and in part, perhaps from obsolete English swip a stroke, blow (from Proto-Germanic swip-*). —v. to strike with a sweeping blow. 1825; possibly a variant of sweep, v., and in part a verb use of swipe, n., perhaps influenced by or developing in part from obsolete swip to strike, move hastily, from Middle English swippen, from Old English swippan*, swipian* (compare Old English swipu a stick, whip); also perhaps connected to obsolete swope to sweep with broad movement, brandish, rush, dash, from Old English swāpan, or to obsolete swaip stroke, blow, or to obsolete swape oar, pole, etc., having a sweeping motion. The slang sense of to steal, pilfer, appeared in 1889, and is of uncertain connection, originally said to be theatrical slang, in reference to the practice of performers stealing jokes or appropriating stage routines from one another.

swirl n. About 1425 swyrl whirlpool, eddy; probably a formation similar in origin to dialectal Norwegian svirla and Dutch zwirrelen to whirl. The meaning of a whirling movement is first recorded in 1818. —v. 1513, to give a whirling motion to; from the noun. An earlier instance of the verb is recorded before 1398.

swish v. 1756, probably imitative of the sound made by a person, clothing, etc., brushing against or moving through something. —n. 1820, from the verb.

Swiss n. 1515, borrowed from Middle French Suisse, from Middle High German Suīzer, from Suīz Switzerland. —adj. 1530, borrowed from Middle French Suisse.

switch n. 1592, slender riding whip; probably borrowed from a Flemish or Low German word similar in formation to Hanoverian swutsche, variant of Low German zwukse long thin stick, switch. The meaning of a device for changing the direction of something or making or breaking a connection, is found in 1797. —v. About 1611, to beat or whip with or as with a switch; from the noun. The meaning of turn off or on is first recorded in 1853, and that of to shift, divert, in 1860.

swivel n. 1307–08 swyvel coupling device; possibly a frequentative form derived from swif-, stem of Old English swifan to move in a course, sweep, from Proto-Germanic swīpanan*; for suffix see -LE³ (compare Old Icelandic sveifla set in circular motion). Old English swifan is cognate with Old Frisian swīvia wander, sway, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch sweven to float, hover (modern Dutch zweven), Old High German swēben (modern German schweben), Old High German sweibōn to sway, hover, and Old Icelandic svífa to wander, drift. —v. 1794, from the noun.

swizzle n. 1813, possibly a variant of switchel a drink of molasses and water (1790), of uncertain origin. —v. to drink habitually and to excess. 1843, from the noun.

swoon v. About 1250 swounen; earlier iswozen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English geswōgen in a faint (about 1000), past participle of swōgan*, as in āswōgan to choke, of uncertain origin. —n. About 1250 in sowne; later in swoun (about 1303); alteration of a swoun in a faint (a in + sowne, swoun faint, from swounen to faint).

swoop v. 1566, move in a stately manner, variant of swopen to sweep (about 1175); developed from Old English (before 1000) swāpan to sweep, brandish, dash; cognate with Old Saxon swēpan to clean, sweep, Old High German sweifen to coil, wind (modern German schweifen to curve, rove, ramble), and Old Icelandic sveipa to sling, throw, wrap (Norwegian sveipe, Swedish svepe, Danish svøbe), from Proto-Germanic swaipan*. The meaning of pounce upon or seize with a sweeping movement is first recorded in 1638. Development of the spelling with -oo- may have been influenced by Scottish and Northern English dialect soop to sweep (about 1480), borrowed from Old Icelandic sōpa to sweep. —n. 1605, rapid downward sweep, sudden descent or attack; from the verb. An earlier sense of a blow, stroke, is found in 1544–45; the source of this sense is unclear.

sword n. About 1250, developed from Old English sweord (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon swerd sword, Middle Dutch swaert (modern Dutch zwaard), Old High German swert (modern German Schwert), and Old Icelandic sverdh (Swedish svärd, Danish and Norwegian sværd), from Proto-Germanic swerdan*; related to Old High German sweran to hurt, from Proto-Germanic swer-* to cut. —swordfish n. (about 1400) sy- a form of the prefix *syn-*¹ before s with a following consonant, or before z in words of Greek origin, as in system, syzygy.

sybarite n. 1598, inhabitant of Sybaris, an ancient Greek town in southern Italy known for its luxury; borrowed from Latin Sybarita, from Greek Sybaritēs, from Sýbaris Sybaris; for suffix see -ITE¹. The meaning of a person devoted to luxury and pleasure is first recorded in 1623. —sybaritic adj. (1619) sycamore n. About 1350 sicamour a kind of fig tree; borrowed from Old French sicamor, from Latin sýcomorus, from Greek sýkomoros (sýkon fig + móron mulberry); so called because the tree has leaves resembling those of the mulberry. The use of sycamore in the sense of a maple tree of Europe and Asia appeared in 1588; application to a North American shade tree in 1814.

sycophant n. Before 1548, informer, talebearer, slanderer; borrowed from Middle French sycophante, and directly from Latin sýcophanta, from Greek sýkophántēs, originally, one who makes the insulting gesture of the “fig,” that is, sticking the thumb between two fingers (sýkon vulva, fig + -phántēs one who shows, from phainēin to show). The sense of a mean, servile flatterer, is first recorded in English in 1575. —sycophancy n. 1622, borrowed from Latin sýcophantia, from Greek sýkophantía conduct of a sycophant, from sýkophántēs informer; for suffix see -ANCY. —sycophantic adj. 1676, borrowed from Greek sýkophantikós, from sýkophántēs sycophant; for suffix see -IC.

syl- a form of the prefix *syn-*¹ before l in words of Greek origin, as in sylogism. Formed in Greek by assimilation of n before the following consonant (l).

syllable n. About 1380 sillable part of a word pronounced as a unit; borrowed through Anglo-French sillable, alteration with l of Old French sillabe, from Latin syllaba, from Greek syllabē a syllable, several sounds or letters taken together; originally a taking together (syl- together + lab-, stem of lambánein to take). The alteration with l in Anglo-French and English apparently developed on the analogy of such words as participle and principle. —syllabary n. 1586, borrowed from New Latin syllabarium, from Latin syllaba syllable; for suffix see -ARY. —syllabic adj. 1728, forming a syllable; borrowed through French syllabique, and directly from New Latin syllabicus, from Greek syllabikós of or pertaining to a syllable, from syllabē syllable; for suffix see -IC. —syllabicate v. 1775, back formation from earlier syllabication formation of syllables (1631); for suffix see -ATE¹. English syllabication was borrowed from Medieval Latin syllabicationem (nominative syllabication) formation of syllables, from syllabicare form into syllables, from Latin syllaba syllable; for suffix see -ATION. —syllabify v. 1864, back formation from earlier syllabification formation of syllables (1838); for suffix see -FY. English syllabification was formed from Latin syllaba syllable + English connective -i- + -fication.

syllabus n. 1656, brief outline of a treatise, course of study, etc.; borrowed from Late Latin syllabus, a misreading of Greek sillybos parchment label.

sylogism n. Before 1387 silogisme, borrowed from Old French silogisme a syllogism, from Latin sylogismus, from Greek sylogismós a syllogism, originally, inference, conclusion, from sylogizesthai bring together, premise, conclude (syl- together + logizesthai to reason, count, from lógos a reckoning, reason); for suffix see -ISM. —sylogistic adj. About 1449 sillogistik; borrowed from Latin sylogisticus, from Greek sylogistikós pertaining to syllogism, from sylogizesthai conclude; for suffix see -IC.

sylyph n. 1657, an imaginary spirit of the air; borrowed from New Latin sylyphes, pl., coined in the 1500's, and originally referring to any of a race of spirits inhabiting the air, described as having mortality but lacking a soul. The meaning of a slender, graceful girl with light, airy movement is first recorded in English in 1838.

sylvan n. 1565, a spirit of the woods; borrowed from Middle French sylvain, and directly from Latin silvānus pertaining to wood or forest, from silva a wood, forest, grove. —adj. 1580–83, from the noun.

sym- a form of the prefix *syn-*¹ before b, m, or p in words of Greek origin, as in symbol, sympathy. Formed in Greek by assimilation of n before the following consonant.

symbiosis n. 1877, New Latin, from Greek syμβίōsis a living together, from syμβiōn live together, from syμβios (one) living together (with another), partner (sym- together + bios life); for suffix see -OSIS. An earlier sense of communal or social life, is found in 1622. —symbiotic adj. 1882, formed from English symbiosis, on the analogy of osmosis, osmotic, etc.

symbol n. About 1434 simbal creed, summary or religious belief; later symbole (1490); borrowed from Middle French symbole, and directly from Latin symbolum creed, token, mark, from Greek symbolon (sym- together + bol-, stem related to that of bállein to throw). The meaning of something that stands for something else, is first recorded in English in 1590.

—symbolic adj. 1656, shortened form of symbolical (1607), perhaps by influence of French symbolique; borrowed from Late Latin symbolicus, from Greek symbolikós of or belonging to a symbol, from symbolon symbol; for suffix see -IC. —symbolism n. (1654) —symbolize v. 1590, unite (elements or substances of similar qualities); formed from English symbol + -ize on the model of Middle French symboliser be alike, represent; from Latin symbolum symbol; for suffix see -IZE. The meaning of represent or stand for is first recorded in 1603.

symmetry n. 1563, mutual relation of parts, proportion; borrowed from Middle French symmétrie, or directly from Latin symmetria, from Greek symmetría agreement in dimensions, arrangement, from symmetros having a common measure, even, proportionate (sym- together + métron meter). The meaning of well-balanced arrangement of parts, harmony, is first recorded in 1599. —symmetrical adj. 1751, formed from English symmetry + -ical, on the analogy of geometry, geometrical.

sympathy n. 1579, agreement in qualities, conformity, concord; borrowed from Middle French sympathie, or directly from Late Latin sympathia community of feeling, sympathy, from Greek sympátheia, from sympathēs having a fellow feeling, affected by like feelings (sym- together + páthos feeling); for suffix see -Y³. The meaning of agreement in feelings or temperament is first recorded in English in 1596, and that of compassion, commiseration, in 1600. —sympathetic adj. 1644, acting by a real or supposed affinity; shortened form of sympathetical (1639, also implied in sympathetically, 1621); borrowed from New Latin sympatheticus, from Greek sympathētikós having sympathy, from sympathēs having a fellow feeling; patterned after pathētikós pathetic; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL. —sympathize v. 1597, borrowed from French sympathiser, from sympathie sympathy; from Latin sympathia sympathy; for suffix see -IZE.

symphony n. About 1300 symphonie any of various musical instruments; later simphonia harmony (before 1398); borrowed from Old French symphonie, and directly from Latin symphōnia a unison of sounds, harmony, from Greek symphōnía harmony, concert, from symphōnos harmonious (sym- together + phōnē voice, sound); for suffix see -Y³. The meaning of an elaborate orchestral composition appeared in 1789. —symphonic adj. 1856, involving similarity of sound; borrowed from French symphonique, or formed in English from symphony + -ic, on the analogy of harmony, harmonic. The meaning of having to do with or like a symphony is first recorded in 1864.

symposium n. Before 1586, account of a convivial party or gathering; borrowed from Latin symposium drinking party, symposium, from Greek sympósion (sym- together + pósis a drinking, from po-, a stem related to that of Aeolic pónēn to drink, cognate with Latin pōtāre to drink). The sense of a meeting on some subject is first cited in 1784.

symptom n. 1541, indication or evidence of sickness; alteration (influenced by Middle French symptome, and Late Latin symp̄tōma) of Middle English sinthoma (before 1398); borrowed from Medieval Latin sinthoma symptom of a disease, from Late Latin symp̄tōma, from Greek symp̄tōma (genitive symp̄tōmatos) a happening, accident, disease, from a stem of symp̄ptēin to befall (sym- together + p̄ptēin to fall). The general sense of a sign, indication, is first recorded in English in 1611. —symp-tomatic adj. 1698, shortened form of symptomatical (1586); borrowed through French sympptomatique, and directly from Late Latin symp̄tomaticus, from Greek symp̄tōmatikós, from symp̄tōma symptom; for suffix see -IC.

syn⁻¹ a prefix occurring in words of Greek origin and especially in many modern scientific and technical terms, meaning: with, together, jointly, at the same time, alike, as in synchronous, syntax, synthesis; or completely, thoroughly, as in syncope. Borrowed from Greek syn-, from the preposition syn, earlier xyn with.

syn⁻² a combining form meaning synthetic, added to nouns, as in synjet, synoil, synfuel. 1971, abstracted in English from SYNTHETIC.

synagogue n. About 1175 sinagoge a Jewish house of worship; also, assembly or congregation of Jews; later synagogue (about 1300); borrowed from Old French sinagoge, from Late Latin synagōga congregation of Jews, from Greek synagōgē place of assembly, synagogue; literally, meeting, assembly, from synagein to gather, assemble (syn- together, syn⁻¹ + agein bring, lead).

synapse n. 1899, borrowed from Greek synapsis conjunction, from synáptēin to clasp (syn- together, syn⁻¹ + háptēin to fasten). Related to APSE.

sync or synch n. 1929, shortened form of SYNCHRONIZATION. The sense of be in agreement, coincide, found in in sync is first recorded in 1961. —v. 1945, shortened form of SYNCHRONIZE.

synchronic adj. 1833, synchronous, simultaneous; shortened form of synchronical (1652, formed from Late Latin synchronus simultaneous + English -ical). The sense of dealing with a language only as it occurs at a given time, as opposed to historical or diachronic, is first recorded in English in 1922, and was probably a reborrowing into English from French synchronique (before 1913).

synchronism n. 1588, borrowed from New Latin synchronismus, from Greek synchronismós, from synchronos SYNCHRONOUS; for suffix see -ISM.

synchronize v. About 1624, to occur at the same time; borrowed from Greek synchronízein be of the same time, from synchronos happening at the same time, SYNCHRONOUS; for suffix see -IZE. The sense of make synchronous, is first recorded in synchronous adj. 1669, borrowed from Late Latin synchronus simultaneous, from Greek sýchronos happening at the same time (syn- together, *syn-*¹ + chrónos time); for suffix see -OUS.

1806. —synchronization n. 1828, formed from English synchronize + -ation.

syncopate v. 1605, shorten (a word) by omitting sounds from the middle; probably a back formation from syncopation, on the model of Medieval Latin syncopatus, past participle of syncopare to shorten, from Late Latin syncopē SYNCOPE; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The meaning in music is first recorded in 1667, implied in syncopated, from use in syncopation. —syncopation n. About 1532, contraction of a word; 1597, shifting of accents in music; borrowed from Medieval Latin syncopationem (nominative syncopatio) a shortening or contraction, from syncopare shorten; for suffix see -ATION.

syncope n. 1530 syncopa, later syncope (1579), alteration (influenced by Greek synkopē) of Middle English sincopene (1464); borrowed from Late Latin syncopē contraction of a word, accusative of syncopē, from Greek synkopē contraction of a word; originally, a cutting off, from synkóptein to cut up (syn- together, thoroughly + kóptein to cut).

syncretism n. 1618, borrowed from French syncretisme (1611), or directly from New Latin syncretismus (1615), from Greek synkrētismós union of communities, from synkrēteîn to combine against a common enemy; for suffix see -ISM. The merging of two or more inflectional categories, such as of a declension, is first recorded in 1909. —syncretize v. 1675, borrowed from New Latin syncretizare, from Greek synkrēteîn to combine; for suffix see -IZE.

syndic n. 1601, civil magistrate, especially in Geneva; borrowed from French syndic chief representative and directly from Late Latin syndicus representative of a group or town, from Greek syndikos public advocate (syn- together, *syn-*¹ + dikē judgment, usage). The representative of a university or other corporation is first found in English in 1607.

syndicalism n. 1907, borrowed from French syndicalisme, from syndical of a labor union, from syndic chief representative, SYNDIC; for suffix see -ISM.

syndicate n. 1624, council or body of representatives; borrowed from French syndicat, from syndic representative of a corporation, SYNDIC; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of a combination of persons or companies to carry out some commercial undertaking first occurs in 1865. —v. 1610, to judge, censure; borrowed from Medieval Latin syndicatus, past participle of syndicare to judge, censure, from Late Latin syndicus chief delegate, SYNDIC. The sense of control or manage by a syndicate is first recorded in English in 1882, and those of combine into a syndicate and publish simultaneously in a number of periodicals, both in 1889.

syndrome n. 1541, borrowed from New Latin, from Greek syndromē concurrence of symptoms, concourse, from syndromos, literally, running together (syn- with, *syn-*¹ + drōmos running, course). The sense of behavior pattern, attitude, is first recorded in 1955.

synecdoche n. 1483, alteration (influenced by Late Latin synecdochē) of Middle English synodoches (before 1397); borrowed from Medieval Latin synodochē, an alteration of Late Latin synecdochē, from Greek synekdochē, from synekdechēsthai supply a thought or word, take with something else (syn- with, *syn-*¹ + ek- out + dechēsthai to receive, related to dokēn seem good).

synergism n. 1764, theological doctrine that the human will cooperates with divine grace in regeneration; borrowed from New Latin synergismus, from Greek synergós working together; see SYNERGY; for suffix see -ISM. The sense of the combined activity of two drugs or other substances is first recorded in 1910, probably suggested by the use of this sense in synergistic (1876), or in synergy (1847). The sense of interactive or interdependent, is first recorded in 1925. —synergistic adj. 1818, of or pertaining to synergism; formed from English synergist + -ic.

synergy n. 1660, cooperation; borrowed from New Latin synergia, from Greek synergiā joint work, assistance, help, from synergós working together, related to synergeîn work together, help another in work (syn- together, *syn-*¹ + érgon work); for suffix see *-Y*³. The sense of the combined action of a group of bodily organs, mental faculties, drugs, etc., is first recorded in English in 1847.

synod n. Before 1121 sinoth; later synod (before 1382); borrowed from Late Latin synodus, from Greek synodos assembly, meeting, conjunction of planets (syn- together, *syn-*¹ + hodós a going, a way). —synodic adj. 1640, made by or proceeding from a synod; borrowed from Late Latin synodicus, from Greek synodikós of a meeting or conjunction, from synodos SYNOD; for suffix see -IC.

synonym n. Probably before 1425 sinonymes, pl., a word having the same sense as another; borrowed from Middle French synonyme, and directly from Latin synonymum, from Greek synōnymon, noun use of neuter of synōnymos having the same name as, synonymous (syn- together, same + ónyma, dialectal form of ónoma name). The Anglicized singular is rarely found before the late 1700's. —synonymous adj. 1610, borrowed from Medieval Latin synonymus, from Greek synōnymos; for suffix see -OUS. —synonymy n. 1657, borrowed from French synonymie, and directly from Late Latin synōnymia, from Greek synōnymíā likeness of name or meaning, from synōnymos synonymous; for suffix see *-Y*³. An earlier sense "synonym" appeared in 1609.

synopsis n. 1611, condensed statement, summary, digest; borrowed from Late Latin synopsis a synopsis, from Greek synopsis general view, from a stem of synorân to see altogether, all at once (syn- together, *syn-*¹ + horân to see, view). —synoptic adj. 1763, borrowed from New Latin synopticus, from Greek synoptikós seeing the whole together, from synopsis synopsis; for suffix see -IC.

syntax n. 1605, orderly arrangement of parts or elements; borrowed from French syntaxe, and directly from Late Latin syntaxis, from Greek syntaxis a putting together or in order, arrangement, syntax, from stem of syntássein put in order (syn-together, syn-¹ + tássein arrange). The grammatical sense is first recorded in English in 1613. —syntactic adj. 1807, belonging or relating to grammatical syntax; borrowed from New Latin syntacticus, from Greek syntaktikós a joining together or in order, from syntássein put in order; for suffix see -IC.

synthesis n. 1611, deductive reasoning from causes or principles to effects or particular instances; borrowed from Latin synthesis collection, set, composition (of a medication), from Greek synthesis composition, from syntithénai put together, combine (syn-together, syn-¹ + tithénai put, place). The sense of a combination of parts or elements into a whole is first recorded in 1733, and occurs in Middle English (about 1450) with the spelling sintecis. —synthesize v. 1830; formed from English synthesis + -ize. —synthetic adj. 1697, deductive; borrowed through French synthétique, and directly from New Latin syntheticus, from Greek synthetikós skilled in putting together, from synthetós put together, combined, from syntithénai to combine; for suffix see -IC. The sense of made artificially by chemical synthesis is first recorded in 1874. —n. 1934, from the adjective.

syphilis n. 1718, New Latin, originally the title of a poem (Syphilis, sive Morbus Gallicus Syphilis, or the French Disease), telling of the shepherd Syphilus, supposedly the first sufferer from the disease. —syphilitic adj. 1786, borrowed from New Latin syphiliticus, from syphilis syphilis; for suffix see -IC. —n. 1181, from the adjective.

syringe n. Before 1398 suringa a catheter or a tube for irrigating wounds, etc.; later siringe (probably before 1425), syringe (before 1475); borrowed from Late Latin sýringa from Greek sýringa, accusative of sýrinx tube, hole, channel, shepherd's pipe. The sense of a hypodermic syringe is known in English before 1889. —v. 1610, from the noun.

syrinx n. 1606, a musical instrument known before 1387 in English; borrowed from Late Latin sýrinx, from Greek sýrinx shepherd's pipe. The vocal organ of birds is first recorded in English in 1872.

syrup n. Before 1398 suripe, sinupe, syrop thick, sweet liquid; borrowed from Old French sirop, possibly also through Italian siropo, from Arabic sharāb a drink, beverage, syrup. —syrupy adj. 1707, formed from English syrup + *-y*¹.

system n. 1619, the whole creation, the universe; borrowed from Late Latin systema an arrangement, system, from Greek systema organized whole, body (sy-together + stā-, root of histānai cause to stand). The meaning of a set of correlated principles, facts, ideas, etc., is first recorded in English before 1656. —systematic adj. Before 1680, according to a system; borrowed from French systematique, and directly from Late Latin systematicus, from Greek systematikós combined in one whole, systematic, from systema (genitive systematos) system; for suffix see -IC. —systematize v. 1764, borrowed from French systematiser, or formed from Late Latin systema (genitive systematis) system + English -ize. —systemic adj. 1803, belonging to, supplying, or affecting the body as a whole; formed from English system + -ic.

systole n. 1578, borrowed from Greek systolē contraction (sy-together + stol-, stem related to that of stēlein to put, send). Compare DIASTOLE.

syzygy n. 1656, borrowed from Late Latin syzygia, from Greek syzygiā yoke, pair, union of two, conjunction, from syzygein to yoke together (sy-together + zygōn YOKE); for suffix see -Y³.

T

-t¹ a suffix found in the past tense and the past participle of some verbs, as in kept, thought, built, meant, dreamt, lost, sent. The past tense form of the ending of such verbs in Old English was (in first and third persons singular) -te, a form of -de assimilated to a preceding voiceless consonant (see -ED¹). The past participle of these verbs in Old English had the ending -t, an assimilated form of -d (see -ED²). In Middle English the corresponding endings were -te in the past tense and -t in the participle.

-t² a variant form of the suffix -th¹ (in depth, length, strength, etc.), often used after h, as in height (Middle English hihthe), sleight (Middle English sleahthe), but also in forms like theft (Old English thēofth), drought (Middle English drouth), and others.

tab¹ n. small flap, strap, loop, or piece. 1607, possibly a dialectal word of uncertain origin. —v. 1872 (implied in tabbed); from the noun.

tab² n. account, bill or check. 1889, probably shortened form of tabulation or tablet a sheet for writing on.

tab³ n. pill. Before 1961, shortened form of tablet.

tabard n. 1253 thabardo; later tabard (probably before 1300); borrowed from early Spanish tabardo and Old French tabart, of unknown origin.

Tabasco n. 1876, tabasco kind of peppery sauce; named after Tabasco, a state in Mexico, perhaps because it was first encountered there by American and European travelers.

tabby n. 1638, borrowed from French tabis a rich, watered silk, from Middle French atabis, from Arabic ʿattābīya, from ʿAttābiy, a section of Baghdad where such cloth was first made. In the sense of a striped cat, is first found in 1774, shortened from tabby cat (1695). —adj. 1638, from the noun.

tabernacle n. About 1250, portable sanctuary carried by the Israelites in the wilderness; borrowing of Old French tabernacle, and directly from Latin tabernaculum tent, especially a tent of an augur (for taking observations), diminutive of taberna hut, cabin, booth. The sense of a house of worship, is first recorded in 1711.

table n. About 1175, board, slab, plate, tablet; borrowed from Old French table, and developed from Old English (about 1000) tabele; earlier tabule (before 899). Both the Old French and the Old English words were borrowed from Latin tabula a board, plank, table, small flat slab or piece usually intended to receive an inscription. The meaning of piece of furniture having a flat top on legs is first recorded, probably before 1300, as is the sense of an arrangement of numbers or other items for convenience of reference or calculation. —v. About 1450 tablen enter in a table or list; later, provide with meals (1457–58); from the noun. The parliamentary meaning of postpone action is first recorded in 1849. —tablecloth n. (1467).

tableau n. 1699, borrowing of French tableau picture, painting, diminutive of Old French table slab, writing tablet; see TABLE.

tablet n. About 1300, slab or flat surface for an inscription; borrowed from Old French tablete, diminutive of table slab; see TABLE; for suffix see -ET. The meaning of a lozenge, pill, is first recorded in English in 1582, that of a pad of writing paper in 1880.

tabloid n. 1884 Tabloid, trademark for compressed or concentrated chemicals and drugs; formed from English tablet + -oid. The term was soon (by 1898) applied figuratively to a compressed form or dose of anything; as in tabloid journalism (1901) and a newspaper typifying tabloid (condensed) journalism by having short news articles, etc., in 1918.

taboo or tabu adj. 1777, (among the Polynesians) consecrated, inviolable, forbidden, unclean, or cursed; borrowed from Tongan (usually rendered taboo), the Polynesian language of the island country of Tonga, in the South Pacific. Use of the word as a noun and verb are English innovations; in the Polynesian languages the word is generally used only as an adjective. —n. 1777, the act of setting a person or thing apart as sacred, unclean, or cursed; from the adjective in English. —v. 1777, to ban, forbid; from the adjective in English.

tabor or tabour n. Probably before 1300 tabour, borrowing of Old French tabour, tabur, probably from Persian tabūr drum. Related to TAMBOURINE.

tabular adj. 1656, having the form of a slab or tablet; borrowed from Latin tabulāris of a slab or tablet, from tabula slab; for suffix see -AR. The meaning of entered in a table or list is first recorded in 1710.

tabulate v. 1734, formed from Latin tabula TABLE + English -ate¹. An earlier sense of lay a board, plank, floor, is first recorded in 1656. —tabulation n. 1837, formed from English tabulate + -ation. An earlier sense of the making of a floor is first recorded in 1658 as a borrowing of Latin tabulatiōnem (nominative tabulatiō) a flooring over, from tabula board + -atiōnem -ation.

tachometer n. 1810, formed from Greek táchos speed + English -meter.

tachyon n. 1967, formed from Greek tachy-, stem of tachys swift + English -on.

tacit adj. 1604, borrowed through French tacite, and directly from Latin tacitus that is passed over in silence, done without words, assumed, silent, from past participle of tacēre be silent.

taciturn adj. 1771, probably a back formation from taciturnity, formed on the model of Latin taciturnus disposed to be silent, from tacitus silent; see TACIT. —taciturnity n. Before 1500, borrowed from Middle French taciturnité, and probably directly from Latin taciturnitatem (nominative taciturnitās) a being or keeping silent, from taciturnus taciturn; for suffix see -ITY.

tack n. 1296–97 tacke clasp, hook, fastener; later tak (about 1390); borrowed from Old North French taque nail, pin, peg, probably from a Germanic source (compare Middle Dutch tacke twig, spike, Low German takk tine, pointed thing, modern German Zacke spike, prong). The meaning of a rope to hold the corner of a sail in place is first recorded in 1481–90. —v. Probably about 1200 (possibly as tac(k)en) attach, fasten; ultimately, probably borrowed from the same Germanic source as the noun. The meaning of sail into the wind is first recorded in 1557.

tackle n. About 1250 takel apparatus, gear; earlier as a surname (1179); borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German takel the rigging of a ship, perhaps related to Middle Dutch taken grasp, seize, TAKE; for suffix see -LE¹. —v. About 1340 takilen entangle, involve; from the noun. The meaning of lay hold of, attack, is first recorded in 1828, and that of try to deal with (a task or problem), in 1847.

tacky¹ adj. sticky. 1788, formed from English tack, in the sense of an act of attaching lightly or temporarily (1705) + -y¹.

tacky² adj. in poor taste, cheap. 1862, shabby, seedy, adjective use of tackey small or inferior horse (1800), of uncertain origin. The sense of in poor taste is first recorded in 1883.

tact n. 1651, sense of touch or feeling; borrowed from Latin tactus (genitive tactūs) touch, feeling, handling, sense of touch, from tag- a root of tangere to touch. The meaning of a sense of discernment, diplomacy, is first recorded in English in 1804–06; borrowing of French tact, from Latin tactus. The word is found in Middle English as tactthe (about 1200).

tactics n. 1626, art or science of deploying military or naval forces in battle; possibly in part a back formation from earlier tactical + -s, modeled on, and in part borrowed from New Latin tactica the art of deploying forces in war, neuter plural, from Greek taktikē téchnē art of arrangement, noun use of feminine of taktikós of or pertaining to arrangement especially tactics in war, adjective to táxis order, verbal noun of tássein arrange; for suffix see -ICS. —tactical adj. 1570, of or pertaining to military tactics; formed from Greek taktikós of tactics + English -al. —tactician n. 1798, person skilled in tactics; borrowed from French tacticien, from tactique tactics, from Greek taktikē téchnē art of arrangement; for suffix see -IAN.

tactile adj. 1615, that can be felt by touch, tangible; borrowed from French tactile, and directly from Latin tactilis tangible, that may be touched, from tag-, root of tangere to touch.

tad n. 1877, a young or small child, probably a shortened form of TADPOLE. The extended meaning of a small amount (as in a tad of salt, feeling a tad better) is first recorded in 1915.

tadpole n. Probably before 1475 taddepol (tadde TOAD + pol head; see POLL).

taffeta n. 1345–49 taffata stiff silk cloth with a smooth, glossy surface; later taffeta (1393–94); borrowed from Old French taffetas, from Italian taffetà, ultimately from Persian tāfiāh silk or linen cloth, noun use of tāfiāh, past participle of tāfiān to shine, twist, spin.

taffrail n. 1814, rail around a ship's stern; alteration of tafferel upper panel on the stern of a sailing ship, often ornamented (1704); earlier, a carved panel (1622–23); borrowed from Dutch taferel panel for painting or carving, formed by dissimilation of l . . l to r . . l, in tafeleel*, diminutive of tafel table, from Latin tabula slab, board. Dutch taferel developed from the practice of ornamenting the high, and generally flattened sterns of sailing ships. The spelling -rail in English is by association with rail, n.

taffy n. 1817, perhaps originally a dialectal term for toffee; of uncertain origin (perhaps associated with tafia 1777, a rumlike alcoholic liquor, the candy presumably arising from the syrupy mixture skimmed off the liquor during distillation).

tag n. small hanging piece. Before 1400 tagge small hanging piece of cloth; as a surname (1195); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian tagg point, prong, barb, and Swedish tagg prickle, thorn); cognate with Middle Low German tagge, tacke branch, twig, spike, and Middle Dutch tacke (modern Dutch tak); see TACK. The meaning of a label is first recorded in 1835. —v. 1436 tagen furnish with a tag (implied in tagging); from the noun.

tag² n. children's game. 1738, perhaps variant of Scottish tig touch, tap (1721); probably an alteration of Middle English tek touch, tap; see TICK² sound. —v. 1878, from the noun.

taiga n. 1888, swampy evergreen forest land, borrowing of Russian taigá, of Mongolian origin.

tail n. Probably before 1200 taile animal's tail; developed from Old English (before 800) tægl, tægél; cognate with Middle Low German tagel end of a rope, Old High German zagal animal's tail (dialectal German Zagel), Old Icelandic tagl horse's tail, Gothic tagl hair, from Proto-Germanic taglā-*. —v. 1523, to attach to the tail or hind end; from the noun. The sense of follow as a detective or spy is first recorded in 1907. —adj. 1673, from the noun.

taylor n. About 1300; borrowed through Anglo-French tailleur, variant of Old French tailleur a cutter, tailor, from tailleur to cut, from Late Latin tāliāre to split, from Latin tālea a slender stick, rod, staff, a cutting, twig; for suffix see -OR². —v. 1662 (implied in tailoring), to do tailor's work; 1856, to make by tailor's work; from the noun. The sense of adjust or alter is first recorded in 1942.

taint v. 1591, to touch or tinge with something undesirable; a fusion of Middle English teynten to convict, prove guilty (about 1350), and early modern English taynt to color, dye, tinge (before 1533). The verb teynten was borrowed from Old French ataint, past participle of ataindre to touch upon, seize. The verb taynt was borrowed from Anglo-French teinter to color, dye, from Old French teint, past participle of teindre, tindre to dye, color, from Latin tingere to TINGE. —n. 1601, a stain or spot; a fusion of Middle English taynte a blow, hit (about 1400), and early modern English tainte color, dye, tinge (1567). Middle English taynte was borrowed from Middle French ateinte, atainte one who is blemished, noun use of feminine past participle of ataindre to touch upon, seize. Early modern English tainte was borrowed from Middle French teint color, dye, noun use of Old French teint, past participle of teindre.

take v. Probably before 1200 taken, developed from Old English tacan (before 1000); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic taka take, grasp, lay hold, past tense tók, past participle tekinn). Old Icelandic taka is cognate with Middle Low German tacken to take, Middle Dutch taken, and Gothic tēkan to touch, from Proto-Germanic tākanan*. In Middle English, this verb gradually replaced nimen to take; see NUMB.

The basic senses are to lay hold of (about 1000, in Old English), to accept or receive (as in take my advice, about 1200); from these developed to absorb (as in take a high polish, before 1325); to choose, select (as in take the shortest way, about 1275); to make, obtain (as in take a bath, 1375); to become affected by (as in take cold, before 1325). —n. 1511, a lease of land; from the verb. The sense of the amount taken (as in a great take of fish), is first recorded in 1654. —takeoff n. (1826, something that detracts; 1846, parody; 1869, act of leaping into the air; 1904, act of becoming airborne) talc n. 1582 talke; later talc (1601); borrowed from Middle

French talc, probably from Spanish talco, and Medieval Latin talcum talc; both from Arabic ṭalq, from Persian talk talc.

talcum n. 1558, borrowed from Medieval Latin talcum any of various shiny minerals, from Arabic ṭalq; see TALC.

tale n. Probably about 1150 tale story, account, counting; developed from Old English talū (about 950); cognate with Old Frisian tale number, speech, Old Saxon tala number, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tāle speech, narrative (modern Dutch taal), Old High German zala number, Middle High German zal number, story (modern German Zahl number, Erzählung story), Old Icelandic tala speech, narrative, number (Swedish and Icelandic tal), from Proto-Germanic talō*, and Gothic talzjan to teach. Related to TALK and TELL.

talent n. Probably before 1300, inclination, disposition, will, desire; borrowed from Old French talent, from Medieval Latin talentum inclination, leaning, will, desire, from Latin talentum balance, weight, sum of money, from Greek tálanon, balance, weight, sum. The ancient unit of weight or money is found in Middle English before 1382, borrowed directly from Latin talentum. The meaning of a special natural ability, aptitude, is first found about 1430, and developed from a figurative use of the word in the sense of money, value, taken from the parable of the talents in the Bible.

talesman n. 1679, formed from Middle English tales writ ordering bystanders to serve (1495) + man. Middle English tales was borrowed through Anglo-French from Latin tālēs, in tālēs dē circumstantibus such (or similar) persons from those standing about, used in the writ. Latin tālēs is a noun use of the plural of tālīs such.

talisman n. 1638, borrowed from French talisman (perhaps earlier in Spanish talismán), in part from Arabic ṭīlsam, both the Arabic and the French from Late Greek télesma talisman, religious rite, payment; earlier consecration ceremony, payment; originally, completion, from teleîn perform (religious rites), pay (tax), fulfill, from tēlos completion, end, tax.

talk v. Probably before 1200 talken; related to Middle English tale story, account, tale; probably a diminutive or frequentative form from the stem tal- (compare tale) with -k suffix (as in stalk), ultimately from the same Germanic source as tale, and replacing tale, v. (before 1225 talen to talk, developed from Old English talian). A possible cognate may be East Frisian talken to talk, chatter, whisper. —n. Probably about 1380 talke speech, discourse; from the noun. —talkative adj. Before 1425, tending to talk; formed from Middle English talken to talk + -ative.

tall adj. About 1385 talle quick, prompt; probably before 1400, brave, valiant, seemly, proper; later, attractive, handsome (about 1450); probably developed from Old English (about 1000) getæl prompt, active; cognate with Old Saxon gital quick, prompt, Old High German gizal, and Gothic untals disobedient, related to talzjan teach. The sense of being of more than average height is first recorded in 1530. Compare STOUT for sense development.

tallow n. Before 1382 talowȝ, a later form of talwȝ (before 1325; in a surname Talghmongere, 1294); cognate with Middle Low German talȝ, talch tallow, and Middle Dutch talch (modern Dutch talk), from Proto-Germanic talga-*.

tally n. 1440 taly, talye stick marked with notches to indicate amount owed or paid, (but found as early as 1166 in Anglo-Latin talli-); borrowed through Anglo-French tallie, from Medieval Latin tallia, from Latin tālea a cutting, rod, stick. The meaning of a thing that matches another, counterpart, is first recorded in 1651, traditionally reputed to be from the early practice of splitting a tally lengthwise, the debtor and creditor each retaining one of the halves. —v. Probably about 1200 talien keep an account; probably borrowed from Medieval Latin talliare to tax, from tallia tally. The sense of correspond, match (1705) is probably from the noun.

tallyho interj. 1772 tallio; also, a roistering character, Sir Toby Tallyho (1756); alterations of French taiaut cry used in deer hunting (1662), from Old French taho, tielau. An earlier form is found in Middle English taylia (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French.

talon n. claw. Probably before 1400 taloun dragon's claw; as a surname talun (1180); probably originally borrowed from Old French talon heel or hinder part of the foot of a beast, from Medieval Latin talonem heel, from Latin tālus ankle, TALUS¹.

talus¹ n. anklebone. 1693, borrowed from Latin tālus ankle, anklebone, knucklebone, from earlier taxlos*; compare Latin taxillus a small die, a cube.

talus² n. slope. 1645, slope, especially of a military earthwork; borrowing of French talus, from Old French talū slope, from Gallo-Romance talūtum*, alteration of Latin talūtium a slope or outcrop of rock debris, possibly of Celtic origin (compare Welsh, Breton, and Cornish tal forehead, brow, and Middle Irish taul, tul). The sense of a sloping mass of rocky fragments that has fallen from a cliff is first recorded in English in 1830.

tamale n. 1691 tamales, borrowed from American Spanish tamales, plural of tamal, from Nahuatl tamal, tamalli a food made of Indian corn and meat.

tamarack n. 1805, probably of Algonquian origin (compare the synonym hackmatack, 1792, from an Algonquian source, such as Abnaki akemantak a kind of supple wood used for making snowshoes).

tamarind n. 1313, fruit of the tamarind; borrowed from Old French tamarinde, tamarandi, from Arabic ṭamr hindī, literally, date of India. Reference to the tree itself is first found in English in 1614.

tambourine n. 1782, apparently a transferred use of earlier tamburin a small drum (1579); borrowed from French tambourin, diminutive of tambour drum. French tambour is an alteration (influenced by Arabic ṭunbūr lute; also, a drum) of Old French tabour TABOR.

tame adj. Probably about 1200 tom not wild, domesticated, found in Old English tom (about 1000); also, about 1250 tame; developed from Old English tam (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch tam tame, Old High German zam (modern German zähm), and Old Icelandic tamr, from Proto-Germanic tamaz*, found in Gothic tamjan to tame. —v. Probably before 1200 temen; developed from Old English temian make tame (about 1000), and tamian become or grow tame, from temman (before 899); cognates with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch temmen, Old High German zemen (modern German zähmen), Old Icelandic temja, and Gothic gataujan, from Proto-Germanic tamjanan*. The new form found in Middle English tamen (probably before 1300) developed from the adjective in Middle English and gradually replaced older temen in the 1300's.

tam-o'-shanter n. 1840–50, from Tam o' Shanter (Tom of Shanter), name of the hero of a poem by Robert Burns, written in 1790.

tamp v. 1819, to fill (a hole containing an explosive) with dirt or clay before blasting; perhaps a back formation from tampin, variant of TAMPION, taken as tamping, present participle or verbal noun.

tamper v. 1567 temper to meddle or interfere with; later tamper (1610); both figurative uses of tamper to work in clay, etc., so as to mix it thoroughly (1573); for suffix see -ER¹. Before about 1600 the word was generally spelled temper, and probably originated as a variant of TEMPER, v. Tamper may have represented a dialectal or workman's pronunciation, which at length became established as a differentiation from temper. Compare MEDDLE for a similar sense development.

tampion n. 1430 tampioun piece of cloth; later tampyne plug, bung (about 1460), tampyon wooden plug for a gun (1485); borrowed from Middle French tampon, variant of Old French tapon piece of cloth to stop a hole, from Frankish tappo* stopper, plug, related to Old High German zapho and Old English tæppa stopper, *TAP*².

tampon n. 1848; borrowed from French tampon, from Middle French tampon plug; see TAMPION. —v. 1860, from the noun.

tan v. Before 1400 tannen make a hide into leather; developed from Old English tannian, implied in getanned, past participle (about 1000); borrowed from Medieval Latin tannare tan, dye a tawny color, from tannum crushed oak bark used in tanning, probably from a Celtic source (compare Breton tann oak tree). The meaning of make brown by exposure to the sun is first recorded in 1530. —n. 1604 (implied in tan-mill), oak bark used in tanning; borrowed from French tan, from Old French, from Medieval Latin tannum. The word is also found in Middle English as tanne (1392, implied in tannedust), borrowed from Old French tan or Medieval Latin tannum. —adj. 1630, from the noun. —tannery n. 1736, formed from English tanner one who tans (Old English tannere, before 975) + -Y³.

tanager n. 1844; borrowed from New Latin tanagra (1758), alteration of Portuguese tangara, from Tupi (Brazil) tangara. Earlier in English the bird was called a tangara (1614), borrowed from Portuguese tangara.

tandem n. 1785, carriage pulled by horses harnessed one behind the other, a punning use of Latin tandem at length (of time), from tam so + demonstrative suffix -dem. —adv. 1795, from the noun. —adj. 1801, from the noun.

tang n. Before 1350 tange a serpent's tongue, thought to be the stinging organ; later, sharp extension of a metal blade (1440); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tangi spit of land, pointed metal tool, perhaps related to Old Icelandic tunga TONGUE). The sense of a sharp taste is first recorded in Middle English in 1440, and that of a suggestion, trace, in 1593. —tangy adj. 1875, formed from English tang + -Y¹.

tangent adj. 1594, borrowed from Latin tangentem (nominative tangēns), present participle of tangere to touch; for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1594, revived in New Latin tangentem, from Latin, present participle of tangere to touch. —tangential adj. 1630, of or pertaining to a tangent; formed from English tangent, n. + -IAL. The sense of slightly connected with a subject is first recorded in 1825, and that of wandering off suddenly, digressive, in 1867 (in adjective use 1787).

tangerine n. 1842, abstracted from tangerine orange (1841), meaning an orange of or from Tangier, a seaport in northern Morocco. The adjective tangerine (1710) was probably modeled on Spanish Tangerino of or from Tangier; for suffix see -INE¹.

tangible adj. 1589, capable of being touched; borrowed from Middle French tangible, and directly from Late Latin tangibilis that may be touched, from Latin tangere to touch; for suffix see -IBLE. The sense of material (as a tangible reward), is first recorded in 1620, and that of able to be realized or dealt with (as tangible ideas), in 1709.

tangle v. Before 1340 tangilen, variant (with added nasalization of g to ng) of tagilen to involve in a difficult situation, entangle; probably from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish taggla to disorder). The meaning of twist in a confused mass is first recorded in 1530. —n. 1615, from the verb.

tango n. 1913, borrowed from Argentine Spanish tango, originally, a dance to the sound of drums; of African origin, probably from a Niger-Congo language (compare Ibibio tanigu to dance); used earlier in English to refer to a Spanish flamenco dance (1896). —v. 1913, from the noun.

tank n. About 1616, (in India) pool or lake for irrigation or drinking water; borrowed from Gujarati tānkh cistern, Marathi tānken, or tānkā, perhaps from Sanskrit taḍāga-m pond, lake, pool. In later use, in the sense of a container for large quantities of liquid (1690), the word was probably borrowed also from Portuguese tanque reservoir (itself perhaps reinforced by association with Gujarati tānkh), from estancar hold back a current of water, from Vulgar Latin stancāre* STANCH¹. This later use of tank was associated with tankard by sound and meaning. The use of tank in the military sense originated in 1915 as a code name, partly because it resembled a large water tank and partly to conceal its true nature. —tanker n. 1900, ship for carrying oil or other liquid cargo, for earlier tank steamer and tank vessel (before 1889).

tankard n. About 1384, large tublike vessel; earlier as a surname Tankart (1202); corresponding to Middle Dutch tanckaert, of the same meaning but both of unknown origin. The meaning of a large drinking vessel is first recorded in 1485.

tannin n. 1802, borrowed from French tannin, tanin, from tan crushed oak bark containing tannin (see TAN); for suffix see -IN². —tannic acid 1836, Anglicized borrowing of French acide tannique, from tannin, tanin tannin; for suffix see -IC.

tansy n. Before 1250 tanessie; later tansy (1373); borrowed from Old French tanessie, tanase, from Gallo-Romance tanacēta*, from Late Latin tanacētum wormwood.

tantalize v. 1597, to subject to a torture or teasing like that inflicted on Tantalus; formed from Latin Tantalus, a character in Greek mythology (from Greek Tāntalos) + English -ize. Tantalus, son of Zeus, was punished for betraying the god's secrets by standing in a river up to his chin, under branches of fruit which withdrew from his reach when he tried to eat or drink.

tantalum n. 1809, New Latin, formed from Latin Tantalus (see TANTALIZE) + New Latin -um, variant of -ium; so called because this element cannot absorb acid even when immersed in it.

tantamount adj. 1641, from the obsolete noun tantamount something equivalent (1637); developed from tant amount be equivalent (1628); borrowed from Anglo-French tant amunter amount to as much, from Old French tant as much + amouter amount to, go up.

tantrum n. 1748, of unknown origin.

Taoism n. 1838, borrowed from Chinese tao way, path; for suffix see -ISM.

tap¹ v. strike lightly. Probably before 1200 tepen; later tappen (before 1450); probably borrowed from Old French taper tap, rap, strike, possibly from: 1) a northern Gallo-Romance stem tapp-*, with the meaning of strike, hit, especially with something flat, as the palm of the hand, perhaps ultimately imitative of the sound of tapping or slapping; 2) a Germanic source (compare Middle Low German tappen, tapen grope, fumble); 3) Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic tapsa tap). —n. 1340 teppe, later tape, tappe (probably about 1390); possibly from the verb in Middle English, but also perhaps influenced by Old Frisian tap slap.

tap² n. stopper, faucet. 1340 teppe, later tappe (about 1390); developed from Old English (about 1050) tæppa; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tappe tap (modern Dutch tap), Old High German zapho (modern German Zapfen), and Old Icelandic tappi (Norwegian and Swedish tapp, Danish tap), from Proto-Germanic tappōn*. —v. Before 1325 tepen draw (liquid) from a tap; later tappen (1402); developed from Old English (about 1050) tæppian provide with a tap, from tæppa tap², n. Old English tæppian is cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch tappen to tap, Middle High German and modern German zapfen. The sense of make use of, is first recorded in English in 1575.

tape n. Probably before 1300 tape, developed from Old English tæppe narrow strip of cloth used for tying, measuring, etc. (about 1000). Development of a lengthened vowel in Middle English is unexplained, but may be by mistaken analogy with taper. Old English tæppe is probably cognate with Old Frisian tapia and Middle Low German tapen to pull, pluck, tear, of unknown origin. —v. 1609, from the noun. The meaning of record on magnetic tape appeared in 1950, shortened from tape-record v. 1950, back formation from tape recorder (1892, device for recording data on ticker tape; 1932, device for recording sound on magnetic tape) and tape recording (1940).

taper n. Probably before 1200 taper candle; developed from Old English tapur, taper (before 1000); earlier tapor (before 899); of uncertain origin, though possibly a dissimilated form (with t. . p for p. . p) of papur*, borrowed from Latin papyrus PAPYRUS, which in Medieval Latin and some Romance forms has the sense of the wick of a candle, for which the pith of the papyrus was used. The sense of a gradual decrease in size, force, capacity, is first recorded in 1793. —adj. Before 1450, from the noun. —v. 1589, to rise up like a flame or spire, from the noun. The meaning of become gradually smaller toward one end is first recorded in 1610, implied in tapering.

tapestry n. 1397 tapiestre; and tapstry (probably about 1400); alteration of tapicery heavy fabric with pictures or designs woven into it (1388); borrowed from Middle French tapisserie tapestry, from tapisser to cover with heavy fabric, from tapis, tapiz heavy fabric, from Byzantine Greek tapētion (pronounced as if spelled tapition), from Classical Greek tapētion, diminutive of tápēs (genitive tápētos) tapestry, heavy fabric, probably from an Iranian source (compare Persian tāftan, tābīdan to turn, twist); see TAFFETA. The figurative use is first recorded in 1581. —v. 1630, to cover, hang, or adorn with tapestry; from the noun. The meaning of portray in tapestry is first found in 1814.

tapioca n. 1648 tipioja, tipiaca; later tipioca (1707), tapioca (1792); borrowed from Portuguese or Spanish tapioca, from Tupi (Brazil) tipioca.

tapir n. 1774, perhaps borrowed through French tapir, ultimately from Tupi (Brazil) tapira.

tar¹ n. black sticky substance. About 1250 ter; later tar (before 1382); developed from Old English (before 700) teornu, teru; cognate with Old Frisian tera tar, Middle Low German tere (modern German Teer), Middle Dutch tar, terre (modern Dutch teer), and Old Icelandic tjara (Swedish tjära, Danish and Norwegian tjære); probably from Proto-Germanic teruō*, related to trewan*, the source of TREE. —v. About 1250 terren, later tarren (about 1400); from the noun.

tar² n. sailor. 1676, special use of *tar*¹, or possibly a shortened form of tarpaulin (1647, nickname for a sailor).

tarantella n. 1782, borrowing of Italian tarantella, from Taranto Taranto, a city in southern Italy, from Greek Tārās (genitive Tārantos), Latin Tarentum. The dance in Italian folklore was associated with the tarantula and its bite which was supposed to cause tarantism (an impulse to dance or move about feverishly). The dance was considered a cure for tarantism.

tarantula n. 1561, borrowed from Medieval Latin tarantula, from Italian tarantola, from Taranto Taranto, a city in southern Italy, near which such spiders are found. See TARENTELLA.

tardy adj. 1530 take tardy to overtake, alteration of Middle English tardive slow (1483); borrowed from Middle French tardif (feminine tardive), from Vulgar Latin tardivus*, from Latin tardus slow, sluggish, dull, stupid; for suffix see -Y¹. The earliest recorded sense in English is slow in motion or action; that of behind time, late, is first recorded in 1667.

tare¹ n. kind of fodder plant, vetch. Probably before 1300, perhaps cognate with Middle Dutch tarwe wheat (from Proto-Germanic tanwō*).

tare² n. the difference between gross and net weight. 1486, borrowed from Middle French tāre wastage in goods, deficiency, imperfection, from Italian tara (also found in Medieval Latin tara deduction), from Arabic ṭarāḥ, literally, thing deducted or rejected.

target n. Probably before 1300 target shield, diminutive of targe shield (1297), borrowed from Old French targe light shield; for suffix see -ET. Old French targe derives from Frankish targa* shield, cognate with Old High German zarga edging, border (modern German Zarge), and Old Icelandic targa shield, from Proto-Germanic tarǵō*. The meaning of an object to be aimed at in shooting practice, is first recorded in English in 1757. —v. 1611, to shield; from the noun. The meaning of make a target of is first recorded in 1837.

tariff n. 1591, an arithmetic table; 1592 tariffa list of duties on imports or exports; borrowing of Italian tariffa (in Medieval Latin tarifa list of prices, book of rates), from Arabic ta'rif information, notification, inventory of fees to be paid. The spelling tariff is first recorded about 1700.

tarn n. Probably about 1380 terne lake; later tarne (probably about 1425); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tjörn inland sea, pool, Swedish tjörn tarn, and Norwegian tjern). Old Icelandic tjörn comes from Proto-Germanic ternō*, perhaps originally a water hole.

tarnish v. Probably before 1439 ternysshen; later tarnish (1598); borrowed from Middle French terniss-, stem of Old French ternir dull the luster or brightness of, make dim, probably from the adjective terne dull, dark; for suffix see -ISH². Old French ternir derives from a Frankish source cognate with Old High German tarnan, tarnjan to conceal, hide, modern German tarnen, Old Saxon derman, and Old English dyman; from a Germanic adjective represented by Old High German tarni, Old Saxon dermi, and Old English dyrne, dierne hidden, secret, obscure, from Proto-Germanic darnijaz*. —n. 1713, from the verb.

taro n. 1779, borrowed from Polynesian (compare Tahitian and Maori taro). The corresponding Hawaiian form is kalo.

tarpaulin n. 1605 tarpauling, probably formed from English *tar*¹ + *pall*¹ heavy cloth covering + *-ing*¹ (as in netting, grating, etc.); probably so called because the canvas is sometimes coated in tar to make it waterproof. The present spelling tarpaulin is first found in 1719, but similar spellings are recorded: Tarpawlin (1647) as the nickname of a sailor, and tarpalin (1652).

tarry v. Probably before 1300 taryen delay, retard, prolong; of uncertain origin.

tarsus n. 1676, New Latin, from Greek tarsós ankle, sole of the foot, rim of the eyelid; originally, flat surface, especially for drying. An earlier borrowing of the Greek word is found in Middle English as tharsum (probably about 1425). —tarsal adj. 1817, borrowed from New Latin tarsalis of or pertaining to the tarsus, from Latin tarsus tarsus; for suffix see -AL¹.

tart¹ adj. having a sharp taste. About 1387, developed from Old English teart painful, sharp, severe (about 1000).

tart² n. small pie. Before 1399, borrowed from Old French tarte, possibly an alteration of torte, from Late Latin torta round loaf of bread. Old French tarte was perhaps influenced by Medieval Latin tarta a cake, tart, and later in Middle English by tart having a sour taste associated with fruit often used in tarts. The meaning of prostitute is found in 1887, from use of endearment (1864).

tartan n. 1454 tartyn; probably borrowed from Middle French tiretaine strong coarse fabric, from Old French tiret kind of cloth, from tire silk cloth, from Medieval Latin tyrius cloth from Tyre. The spelling tartan was influenced by Middle English tartaryn rich silk cloth (1343), borrowed from Old French tartarin Tartar cloth, from Tartare Tartar, group inhabiting Central Asia.

tartar n. 1392 tartre; borrowed from Old French tartre, from Medieval Latin tartarum, from Late Greek tártaron tartar encrusting the sides of casks. The encrustation on the teeth is first recorded in 1806. —tartaric adj. 1790, formed from English tartar + -ic.

task n. Before 1325, piece of work imposed as a duty; later, impost, tax (about 1400); borrowed from Old North French tasque (in Old French tasche) duty, tax, from Vulgar Latin tasca* a duty, assessment, alteration (by transposition of the sound ks associated with x to sk written sc) of taxa*, from Latin taxāre to evaluate, estimate, assess; see TAX.

tassel n. Probably about 1300 tassel mantle fastener; borrowed from Old French tassel a fastening, clasp, from Vulgar Latin tassellus* (in Italian tassello collar of a cloak, a square), alteration of Latin taxillus small die or cube, a diminutive form from tālus knucklebone used in a game, ankle; see TALUS¹. The form of the Vulgar Latin word was influenced by Latin tessella small cube. A hanging bunch of small cords is first recorded in English about 1390.

taste v. Probably before 1300 tasten try the flavor of, taste; borrowed from Old French taster to feel, taste, from Vulgar Latin tastāre*, apparently alteration of taxitāre*, taxtāre, a frequentative form of Latin taxāre evaluate, handle; see TAX. —n.

Before 1325 tast touch, touching, taste, tasting; borrowed from Old French tast touching, touch, from taster to feel, taste. The sense of aesthetic judgment, a sense of what is appropriate, harmonious or beautiful, is first recorded in 1671.

tat v. 1882, back formation from tatting making of knotted lace (1842), of uncertain origin.

tatter n. Before 1400 tatrys, pl. (implied earlier in tatrid wearing ragged clothes, about 1340); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tǫturr rag, modern Icelandic tötur, plural tötrar rags); cognate with Old English tættec, tætteca rag, tatter, Old High German zotta tuft of hair, modern German Zotte, Zottel tuft of hair, modern Dutch tod, todde rag, and East Frisian todde bundle, pack). —v. About 1380 tateren (implied in tatering); from the noun.

tattle v. 1481 tatelen to stammer, prattle; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch tatelen to stutter, a parallel or variant form of Middle Dutch, Middle Low German, and East Frisian tateren to chatter, babble; possibly of imitative origin. The meaning of tell tales or secrets is first recorded in English in 1581. —n. Before 1529, idle or foolish talk, gossip; from the verb. —tattleale n. 1888, formed from English tattle + tale, patterned on telltale (before 1548).

tattoo¹ n. signal. 1688, signal calling soldiers or sailors to quarters at night, assimilated variant (by alteration of tap- to tat-) of tap-too (1644); borrowed from Dutch taptoe (tap faucet of a cask, *TAP*² + toe shut; so called because the police used to visit taverns in the evening to shut off the taps of casks). —v. 1780, from the noun.

tattoo² v. mark the skin with pigments. 1769 tattow, borrowed from a Polynesian source (compare Tahitian and Samoan tatau, and Marquesan tatu). The spelling tattoo is first recorded in English in 1774. —n. 1777, from the verb.

tatty adj. 1513, (of hair) tangled or matted, Scottish, probably related to Old English tættec a rag, TATTER. The sense of tattered, ragged, shabby, is first recorded in 1933.

taunt v. 1438 tanten to mock, jeer (implied in tantingly); possibly borrowed from Middle French tanter, tenter to try, tempt, provoke, variant of tempter to try, TEMPT. —n. Before 1529 taunte, of uncertain origin; possibly from the verb.

taupe n. Before 1889, a mole; later, the dark, brownish gray color of moleskin (1911); borrowed from French taupe the color; originally, a mole, from Latin talpa a mole.

taut adj. Before 1625 taught tightly drawn; later tau't (1727–41); found in Middle English as tohte (about 1250); later tozte (about 1300); possibly developed from tog-, past participle stem of Old English tēon to pull, drag.

tautology n. 1579, borrowed from Late Latin tautologia repetition of the same thing, from Greek tāutologiā, from tāutológos repeating what has been said (tāutó the same + -lógos saying, related to légein to say); for suffix see -LOGY. —tautological adj. 1620, formed from English tautology + -ical.

tavern n. About 1290 taverne wine shop; later, public house, inn (about 1440); borrowed from Old French taverne, from Latin taberna shop, inn, tavern; originally, hut, shed, dissimilated (by loss of first r) from traberna*, from trabs (genitive trabis) beam, timber.

tawdry adj. 1676, adjective use of earlier tawdry silk necktie for women (1612), shortened form of tawdry lace (1548), an alteration of Saint Audrey's lace a necktie or ribbon sold at an annual fair commemorating St. Audrey (1530). Association with St. Audrey is traced to the story that she died of a throat tumor, a punishment she considered retribution for her youthful fondness for showy necklaces.

tawny adj. Probably before 1387 tauny; borrowed through Anglo-French tauné, associated with the brownish-yellow of tanned leather, Old French tané, past participle of taner to tan hides, from Medieval Latin tannare to TAN.

tax v. About 1300 taxen to assess, put a tax on; borrowed from Old French taxer, and directly from Latin taxāre evaluate, estimate, assess, handle, probably a frequentative form of tangere to touch; see TANGENT. The sense of burden, put a strain on, is found in Middle English before 1327. —n. Before 1327, assessment, levy; from the verb. —taxable adj. 1474, borrowed from Anglo-French, from Old French taxer to tax + -able -able. —taxation n. About 1325 taxacioun fixing of a tax, borrowed through Anglo-French taxacioun, Old French taxation, from Medieval Latin taxationem (nominative taxatio), from Latin, and borrowed directly into English from Latin taxātiōnem (nominative taxātiō) evaluation, from taxāre evaluate; for suffix see -ATION.

taxi n. 1907, probably a shortened form of TAXICAB. —v. 1911, (of an airplane) to travel slowly as before taking off; from the noun, perhaps in allusion to the way a taxi driver slowly cruises when looking for fares. The meaning of travel in a taxi is first recorded in 1918.

taxicab n. 1907, automobile for hire, probably contraction of taximeter cab a cab with an automatic meter (taximeter) to record the distance and fare. Taximeter (1898) was borrowed from French taximètre, alteration of earlier taxamètre, from German Taxameter (from Medieval Latin taxa tax, from taxare to TAX + German -meter -meter). An earlier English form taxameter (1894); borrowed directly from German Taxameter, a meter used in horsedrawn cabs.

taxidermy n. 1820, formed in English from Greek táxis arrangement, from tássein arrange + dérma skin; for suffix see -Y³. —taxidermist n. (1828) taxonomy n. 1828, borrowed from French taxonomie, from Greek táxis arrangement; see TAXIDERMY + -nomía method, from -nómos managing, from némein manage.

tea n. 1655 tay (but found earlier as chaa, 1598, from the Portuguese chá); borrowed through Malay teh, and directly from Chinese (Amoy dialect) t'e, in Mandarin ch'a. English tea derives from the same Amoy form as French thé, Spanish té, Italian tè, Dutch thee, German Tee, and Norwegian and Swedish te. Such forms as Portuguese chá, Russian chai, Persian chā, modern Greek tsai, Arabic šāy, and Turkish çay were borrowed from the Mandarin Chinese form.

teach v. Probably before 1200 teachen; developed from Old English tēcan to show, teach (before 899), from Proto-Germanic taikijanan*; related to Old English tācen, tācn sign, mark, TOKEN. The Old English past tense and past participle tæht(e) developed into early Middle English tahte, taghte with a short vowel, and eventually into taught. — teacher n. Probably before 1300 techere person who teaches; formed from Middle English techen, teachen to teach + -ere *-er*¹. An earlier sense, that which shows or points out, indicator, index finger, is recorded about 1290.

teak n. 1698, borrowed from Portuguese teca, from Malayalam tēkka, corresponding to Tamil tēkku, Telugu tēku, Kanarese tēgu.

teal n. Probably about 1300 tele; cognate with Middle Dutch tēling, teiling teal (modern Dutch taling), and Middle Low German tēlink.

team n. Old English tēam set of draft animals yoked together (about 825); cognate with Old Frisian tām bridle, Old Saxon tōm, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch toom bridle, rein, Old High German zoum (modern German Zaum), and Old Icelandic taumr bridle, rein, rope (Swedish töm), from Proto-Germanic taumaz*, probably from tauzmaz* action of drawing or pulling, from the series tauH-/tuH-/tu3-* to draw, pull, represented by Old English togian to pull, drag, TOW¹.

The meaning of a number of people working or acting together (1529), was also known in Old English in the sense of a group of people acting together to bring suit (before 800, and in verb use before 700). Other early senses include offspring or line of descendants (902; related to TEEM¹), and a chain or other apparatus to harness oxen or horses to a plow or other farm equipment (1350). — v. 1552, from the noun; other senses (bear offspring, and vouch to warranty) were also from the noun in Old English and Middle English. — teamster n. 1779, person who drives a team of horses, especially in the handling of freight; formed from English team, n. + -ster. The meaning transferred from wagon to truck driver as early as 1907.

tear¹ n. drop of water from the eye. Probably before 1200, found in Old English tēar; developed from earlier tēahor, tæhher (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian tār tear, Old High German zahor (literary German Zähre), Old Icelandic tār (Swedish tår, Danish tåre), and Gothic tagr, from Proto-Germanic tāHr-/ta3r,-*. — v. Before 1425 teren to shed tears; from the noun. A rare Old English verb tæherian (about 950) did not survive into Middle English.

tear² v. pull apart. Probably before 1200 teren; found in Old English teran (about 1000); earlier teoran (before 850); cognate with Old Saxon terian consume, destroy, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch teren, Old High German zeran (modern German zehren, zerren), and Gothic -talran in distalran destroy.

The Old English past tense tær survived as tare to the 1600's, when it was replaced by English tore, with o from the past participle toren, torn. — n. 1611, from the verb.

tease v. About 1290 tesien separate the fibers of, shred or card (wool or flax); later tesen (before 1325); developed from Old English tēsan pluck, pull apart (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tēsen to pluck, and Old High German zeisan to pluck wool, from Proto-Germanic taisijanan*. The sense of vex or worry, annoy (1619), is comparable to sense development in heckle. — n. 1693, act of teasing; from the verb. The sense of one who teases (1852) is found earlier in teaser, n. (1659).

teasel n. About 1265 tesel, developed from Old English (about 1000) tāsel, probably from tēsan to pluck, TEASE; and cognate with Old High German zeisala, zeisila, Middle High German zeisel teasel, from Proto-Germanic taisilō*. — v. raise a nap on cloth with teasels. 1543, from the noun, probably further associated with tease, v.

teat n. About 1250 teten, pl., borrowed from Old French tete, tette teat, from Proto-Germanic titta* (the source of Middle Low German titte teat, Old English titt, Middle High German zitze, modern German Zitze, and modern Dutch tit).

technetium n. 1947, New Latin, formed from Greek technētōs artificial (from technāsthai produce by art, from téchnē art, skill) + New Latin -ium.

technical adj. 1617, skilled in a particular art or subject; formed in English probably from Greek technikós of art, from téchnē art, skill, craft; for suffix see -AL¹. It is also possible that in some instances technical is an extended form of older technic, adj. (1612). The meaning of having to do with an art, science, discipline, or profession, especially the mechanical arts, is first recorded in English in 1727–41. — technicality n. 1814, technical point, detail, term, or expression; formed from English technical + -ity.

technician n. 1833, formed in English from technic technical (1612, from Greek technikós; see TECHNICAL) + -ian.

technicolor n. 1946, transferred use of earlier trademark Technicolor, a special process of making colored motion pictures (1917); formed from techni(cal) + color. — adj. Before 1940, from the trademark. — technicolored adj. 1947, formed from technicolor + *-ed*².

technique n. 1817, borrowing of French technique manner of artistic expression, noun use of adjective technique of art, technical, from Greek technikós; see TECHNICAL.

techno- a combining form meaning 1) art, craft, skill, especially mechanical or industrial crafts and systems, as in technology. 2) technical or technology, as in technocracy = government by technical experts. Borrowed from Greek techno-, combining form of téchnē art, skill, craft, method, system.

technocracy n. 1919, coined as the name for a new system of government; formed from English techno- + -cracy.

technology n. 1615, treatise on the arts; borrowed from Greek technología systematic treatment of an art, craft or technique; originally referring to grammar (techno- + -logia -logy). The sense of science of the mechanical and industrial arts, practical arts collectively, is first recorded in 1859. —technological adj. 1627, of technical terminology; formed from English technology + -ical. The meaning “of or relating to technology” appeared in 1800.

tectonic adj. 1656, of or relating to building; borrowed from Late Latin tectonicus, from Greek tektonikós pertaining to building, from tékton (genitive téktonos) builder, carpenter, related to tékhnē art, craft; for suffix see -ic. The sense in geology (1894), probably from tectonics. —tectonics n. pl. 1850, building or the constructive arts in general, from tectonic; for suffix see -ics.

teddy bear 1906, from Teddy, nickname of President Theodore Roosevelt, famous as a big-game hunter. Roosevelt was shown sparing the life of a bear cub in an editorial cartoon as a spoof on the President in the role of an ardent conservationist.

Te Deum Latin hymn of praise. 1131 Tē Deum laudamus; later Tē Deum (before 1200); borrowing of Late Latin Tē Deum laudamus Thee God we praise, the first words of the hymn.

tedious adj. Before 1410 tedyouse; borrowed from Late Latin taediōsus wearisome, irksome, tedious, from Latin taedium TE-DIUM; for suffix see -ous.

tedium n. 1662, borrowed from Latin taedium weariness, disgust, related to taedet it is wearisome, and taedēre to weary.

tee n. 1721, back formation from teaz (1673), taken as a plural (compare pea, pease); originally a Scottish word, of uncertain origin. —v. 1673, from teaz, n.; later with the spelling tee (1737, also after the noun).

teem¹ v. abound, swarm. Probably before 1200 temen give birth to, produce; developed from Old English (about 1000), found in Old Mercian tēman, in Old West Saxon tieman (from Proto-Germanic taumijanan*), from tēam offspring; see TEAM. The meaning of be fertile, abound, swarm (as in streams teeming with fish), is first recorded in 1593.

teem² v. to flow copiously. Before 1325 temen to empty a vessel; later, to discharge, pour out (1482); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tēma to empty, from tōmr empty, cognate with Old English tōm empty). The sense of flow copiously (as in teeming rain) is first recorded in 1828.

-teen a combining form meaning ten more than, used in forming the cardinal numbers from thirteen to nineteen, as in sixteen = ten more than six. Old English -tēne, -tīene (from Proto-Germanic teHuniz*), an inflected form of tēn, tien TEN. —teenth combining form of ordinal numerals, from thirteenth to nineteenth, formed from -teen + *-th*². Middle English -tēthe, alteration (influenced by ten) of earlier -tethe, developed from Old English (West Saxon) -tēoþa, -tēoþe, corresponding to Anglian teogoþa tenth; see TITHE.

teen-age adj. 1921, formed from English -teen, as a separate word + age, n. —teen-aged adj. 1952, formed from English teen-age + *-ed*². —teen-ager n. 1941, formed from teen-age + *-er*¹.

teens n. pl. 1673, formed from English -teen, as a separate word + *-s*¹.

teeny adj. 1825, alteration of TINY.

teepee n. See TEPEE.

teeter v. 1843, to seesaw; 1844, move unsteadily; alteration of titter move unsteadily, totter; developed from Middle English titeren (about 1385), probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic titra to shake, shiver, totter); cognate with Old High German zittarōn to tremble, modern German zittern. —teeter-totter n. (1905)

teetotal adj. 1834, possibly formed from English total (abstinence), with repetition of the initial t of total; or based on teetotally, adv., entirely, wholly (1832), reduplicated form of totally, adv.

Two explanations for teetotal are given: teetotal was supposedly coined or first used in 1833 by Richard Turner of Preston, England, in a speech advocating total abstinence from alcoholic liquor; or teetotal was introduced in a New York temperance society in 1827, as an indication (with “T”) after the signature of one taking the pledge of total abstinence. —teetotaler n. 1834, formed from English teetotal + *-er*¹.

Teflon n. Trademark. plastic resin used as a coating to prevent friction or sticking. 1945, formed from te(tra-) + fl(uor-), from the chemical name polytetrafluoroethylene + -on, arbitrary ending, as in rayon.

tegument n. About 1440, borrowed from Latin tegumentum a cover or covering, from tegere to cover; for suffix see -ment.

tektite n. 1909, formed from Greek tēktios molten (from tēkein to melt) + English *-ite*¹.

tele- a combining form meaning: 1) far, far off, operating over a long distance, as in telephone; 2) television, as in telecast, telethon. Borrowed from Greek tēle-, combining form of tēle far off, afar, at or to a distance (related to tēleos, genitive tēlos end, goal, result).

telecast n. 1937, formed from tele- television + (broad)cast. —v. 1940, from the noun.

telegram n. 1852, formed from English tele(graph) + -gram.

telegraph n. 1794, a semaphore apparatus; borrowed from French télégraphe, from télé- far (from Greek tēle-) + -graphie. The term was first applied in English to an experimental electric telegraph in 1797; a practical telegraph was developed in the 1830's by Samuel Morse. —telegraphic adj. 1794, in reference to the semaphore apparatus; formed from English telegraph + -ic. —telegraphy n. 1795, formed from English tele- + -graphy.

telemeter n. Before 1889, device for measuring (heat, radiation, pressure, etc.) and transmitting the information to a distant receiving station; earlier, a rangefinder used in surveying and artillery (1860, telometer); borrowed from French télé- mètre (tél- far + mètre -meter) and formed from English tele-, telo- + -meter. —telemetry n. Before 1885, formed from English tele- + -metry.

teleology n. 1740, borrowed from New Latin teleologia, from Greek télos (genitive of télos end, goal, result) + -logiā -logy.

telepathy n. 1882, coined from English tele- far + -pathy feeling. —telepathic adj. 1884, formed from English telepathy + -ic.

telephone n. 1844, instrument similar to a foghorn for conveying signals from a ship; probably borrowed from French téléphone (about 1830), from télé- tele- + -phone sound, -phone; later in English, a kind of megaphone or loudspeaker (1849), and the modern instrument developed by Bell (1876). —v. 1877, talk or communicate by Bell's telephone; from the noun.

telephoto adj. 1898, in tele-photo lens; shortened form of telephotographic (1892); formed on earlier telephotograph (not recorded before 1900, but probably known by 1892, and found earlier in the meaning of a photograph transmitted over a distance, 1881).

Teleprompter n. 1951, trademark for a device that shows a prepared speech line for line to a speaker being televised; formed from tele(vision) prompter.

telescope n. 1648 telescopio; later telescope (1656); borrowing of Italian telescopio (used by Galileo in 1611) and New Latin telescopium (used by Kepler in 1613); both from Greek tēleskōpos far-seeing (tēle- far + -skōpos seeing, from skopein to watch). —v. 1867, to force together one inside another, like the sliding tubes of some telescopes; from the noun. —telescopic adj. 1705, formed from English telescope + -ic.

teletype n. 1904, trademark for a communications system of typewriters connected electronically; shortened form of teletypewriter (1904), formed from English tele- + typewriter. —v. 1904 (implied in teletyping); from the noun.

televisé v. 1927, back formation from TELEVISION.

television n. 1907, viewing of a distant object or scene by means of an apparatus (not yet perfected) which electrically transmits and reproduces it; borrowed from French télévision, or formed from English tele- far + vision. The modern electronic television was developed in the 1920's and 1930's.

Telex n. 1932, a communications system of teletypewriters; formed from English tele(type) + ex(change).

tell v. Before 1121 tellen; found in Old English tellan (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian talja, tella, Old Saxon telljan tell, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, Middle Low German, and modern Low German tellan count, reckon, Old High German zellen tell (modern German zählen reckon, count), and Old Icelandic telja tell, count (Swedish tälja, Danish tælle count, reckon), from Proto-Germanic taljanan*. Related to TALE. The sense of recognize, distinguish, know (as in tell one thing from another), is first recorded about 1370. —teller n. Probably before 1300 tellere person who tells; formed from tellen to tell + -ere -er¹. The meaning of a person who keeps accounts is first recorded in 1475. —telling adj. 1852, having effect or force, striking. —telltale n. (before 1548). —adj. (before 1577).

tellurium n. 1800, New Latin, from Latin tellūs (genitive tellūris) earth + New Latin -ium; coined probably in contrast to uranium (from Greek ouranós heaven). Latin tellūs is the word for the earth as a planet.

temblor n. 1876, borrowed through American Spanish temblor earthquake, from Spanish temblor, literally, a trembling, from temblar to tremble, from Vulgar Latin tremulāre* to TREMBLE.

temerity n. Before 1387 temerite, borrowed from Middle French témérité, or directly from Latin temeritatem (nominative temeritās) blind chance, accident, rashness, from temere by chance, blindly, casually, rashly; for suffix see -ITY.

temp n. 1932, American English, shortened form of TEMPORARY. —v. 1973, work as a temp, from the noun.

temper v. About 1200 tempren to moderate, regulate; developed from Old English temprian (about 1000); borrowed from Latin temperāre to mix correctly, moderate, regulate, from tempus time, season, proper time or season. The sense of bring a substance, such as clay, paint (later steel), to a proper condition by mixing (before 1300), and may have been influenced by Old French temprer to temper, from Latin temperāre. —n. Before 1387 tempre balance, due proportion; from the verb. The sense of characteristic state of mind, is first recorded in 1595, that of calm state of mind, in 1603, and an angry state of mind in 1828.

tempera n. 1832, borrowing of Italian tempera, from temperare to mix colors, temper, from Latin temperāre to mix, TEMPER.

temperament n. Before 1398, proportioned mixture of elements; borrowed from Latin temperamentum proper mixture, from temperāre to mix, TEMPER; for suffix see -MENT. In medieval times temperament a combination of qualities, as hot or cold, moist or dry, that in a certain proportion determine the nature of an organism (1471), was extended in medieval to refer to the combination of the four humors (sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, and melancholic), and reference is still found in such allusions as a phlegmatic temperament. The meaning of a person's characteristic disposition (as in a poetic temperament) is found in 1821. —temperamental adj. 1646, of or relating to temperament; formed from English temperament + *-al*¹. The meaning of subject to moods and whims, is first recorded in 1907.

temperance n. About 1340, borrowed through Anglo-French temperance, from Latin temperantia moderation, from temperans, present participle of temperāre to moderate, TEMPER; for suffix see -ANCE. Latin temperantia was used by Cicero to translate Greek sōphrosynē moderation. In early modern English, temperance was used to render Latin continentia CONTINENCE or abstinentia ABSTINENCE, specifically in eating and drinking alcohol, and by the early 1800's it referred to total abstinence from alcoholic drink; hence often used attributively in temperance movement (1855), etc.

temperate adj. About 1310 tempret of mild temperature; later temperat (about 1380); borrowed from Latin temperātus restrained, regulated, from past participle of temperāre to moderate, regulate, TEMPER; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of restrained, moderate (applied to persons, their conduct, etc.), is found in Middle English before 1382.

temperature n. About 1450, a tempered or temperate condition (as of the weather); borrowed from Latin temperātūra a tempering, moderation, from temperātus, past participle of temperāre to moderate, TEMPER; for suffix see -URE. The sense of the degree of heat or cold is first recorded in 1670.

tempest n. About 1275 tempeste violent storm; borrowed from Old French tempeste, from Vulgar Latin tempesta*, variant of Latin tempestās (genitive tempestātis) storm, weather, season; also, commotion, disturbance; related to tempus time, season. The sense of a violent commotion is first recorded in Middle English before 1333. —tempestuous adj. About 1385, borrowed, perhaps by influence of Middle French tempêteux, from Late Latin tempestuosus stormy, turbulent, from tempestās tempest (perhaps influenced in formation by tumultuosus tumultuous); for suffix see -OUS.

temple n. 1677 templet horizontal piece under a girder or beam; probably borrowed from French templet weaver's stretcher, diminutive of temple, of similar meaning, from Latin templum plank, rafter, building for worship, TEMPLE¹; for suffix see -ET. The meaning of a pattern or gauge for shaping a piece of work (1819) is found in the form temple (1688). Alteration to template (1844), probably influenced by PLATE, was not influenced by pronunciation, until recently.

temple¹ n. building for worship. Old English temple (before 899); also templ and tempel (before 830); borrowed from Latin templum piece of ground consecrated for the taking of auspices, building for worship. Though said to be reinforced by Old French temple, the word has a continuous history from Old to Middle English.

temple² n. side of the forehead, usually found as a plural in early use. About 1340 tempils; later temples (about 1430); borrowed from Old French temple side of the forehead, from Vulgar Latin tempula*, feminine singular, alteration of Latin tempora, plural of tempus (genitive temporis) side of the forehead, probably originally the thin stretch or span of skin at the side of the forehead and possibly associated with tempus span, as of time.

tempo n. 1724, time or rate of movement in music; borrowing of Italian tempo, literally, time, from Latin tempus (genitive temporis) time. The sense of rate of motion or activity (as in the fast tempo of modern life) is first recorded in 1898.

temporal¹ adj. of time, temporary. About 1340 temporalle worldly, secular; later temporale of time, temporary (about 1375); borrowed from Old French temporal, and directly from Latin temporalis of time, temporary, from tempus (genitive temporis) time, season, proper time or season; for suffix see -AL¹.

temporal² adj. of or situated at the sides of the forehead. 1597, borrowed from Late Latin temporalis of the temples, from Latin tempora the temples, from tempus (genitive temporis) side of the forehead; for suffix see -AL¹.

temporary adj. 1547, borrowed from Latin temporarius of seasonal character, lasting a short time, from tempus (genitive temporis) time, season; for suffix see -ARY.

temporize v. 1579, to fit one's acts to the time or occasion, evade immediate action; borrowed from Middle French temporiser to pass one's time, wait one's time, from Medieval Latin temporizare pass time, perhaps through Vulgar Latin temporāre* to delay, from Latin tempus (genitive temporis) time; for suffix see -IZE.

tempt v. Probably before 1200 tempten try to attract, allure, entice; borrowed from Old French tempter, and directly from Latin temptāre to feel, try out, attempt to influence, test. Old French tenter was not adopted in English, but the noun tentation is found in early modern English as a borrowing from Old French. —temptation n. Probably before 1200 temptaciun; borrowed from Old French temptation enticement, allurements, attraction, from Latin temptātiōnem (nominative temptātiō) trial, feeling, from temptāre to feel, try, test; for suffix see -ATION.

ten adj. 1311 tenn; developed from Old English tēn (Mercian), tien (West Saxon, about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian tiān ten, Old Saxon tehan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch tien, Middle Low German tein, Old High German zehan (modern German zehn), Old Icelandic tiū (Danish and Norwegian ti, Swedish tio), and Gothic talhun. —tenfold adj., adv. Probably before 1200; developed from Old English tiēnfeald (tiēn ten + -feald -fold). —tenth adj., n. Before 1150 tenthe, formed from Middle English ten ten + -the -th², replacing Old English tēoþa, teogotha; see TITHE.

tenable adj. 1579, borrowed from Middle French, from Old French tenir to hold, from Latin tenēre hold, keep; for suffix see -ABLE. The sense of capable of being maintained against objection is first recorded in 1711.

tenacious adj. 1607, holding fast, clinging, cohesive, tough; formed as an adjective to tenacity from English tenac(ity) + -ous. The sense of persistent, stubborn, is recorded in 1656. —tenacity n. Probably before 1425 tenacite persistence, obstinacy; borrowed from Middle French ténacité, and directly from Latin tenācitas the act or fact of holding fast, from tenāx (genitive tenācis) tough, holding fast, from tenēre to hold; for suffix see -ITY.

tenant n. Before 1325 tenaun person who holds lands by title or by lease; later tenant (about 1340); borrowed from Anglo-French tenaunt and Old French tenant, noun use of present participle of tenir to hold, from Latin tenēre hold, keep; for suffix see -ANT. —v. 1634, from the noun. —tenancy n. 1423, property held by a tenant; formed from English tenant + -cy, probably by influence of Old French tenance and Medieval Latin tenantia state or condition of being a tenant. The meaning of a holding or possession of lands is first recorded in 1590.

tend¹ v. incline. About 1330 tenden to move toward, incline; earlier tenen (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French tendre stretch, hold forth, offer, from Latin tendere to aim, stretch, extend.

tend² v. attend to. Probably before 1200 tenden, shortened earlier variant of atenden, attenden ATTEND.

tendency n. 1628, borrowed from Medieval Latin tendentia inclination, leaning, from Latin tendēns, present participle of tendere to stretch, aim; for suffix see -ENCY. —tendential adj. 1889, having a tendency, tendentious; formed from Medieval Latin tendentia tendency + English -al¹. —tendentious adj. 1900, having a particular tendency, tending to take sides; formed from Medieval Latin tendentia tendency + English -ous, by influence of German tendenziös.

tender¹ adj. soft. Probably before 1200 tendre soft, delicate; borrowed from Old French tendre, earlier tenre, from Latin tenerem (nominative tener) soft, delicate, of tender age. The meaning of kind, affectionate, loving, is first recorded in Middle English before 1325.

tender² v. to offer formally. 1542–43 tendre, borrowing of Middle French tendre to offer, hold forth, from Latin tendere to stretch, extend. The retention of the ending of the Middle French infinitive is unusual; compare BATTER¹, RENDER. —n. 1542–43 tendre; from the verb.

tender³ n. person or thing that tends another. About 1470, probably formed from Middle English tenden attend to, TEND² + -er¹. The meaning of a small boat used to attend a larger one is first recorded in 1675.

tenderloin n. 1828, tender part of the loin of beef or pork; formed from tender¹, adj. + loin. The slang meaning of a police district (originally in New York City) noted for vice (1887) is said to have been so named because of the graft available.

tendon n. 1543, borrowed from Medieval Latin tendonem (nominative tendo), alteration (influenced by Latin tendere to stretch) of Late Latin tenōn, from Greek tēnōn (genitive tēnōntos) tendon, sinew, from telnein to stretch.

tendril n. 1538, borrowed from Middle French tendrillon bud, shoot, cartilage, diminutive of tendron cartilage, from Old French tendre soft, TENDER¹.

tenebrous adj. Probably before 1475, full of darkness, dark; borrowed from Middle French tenebreus, from Latin tenebrōsus, from tenebrae darkness; for suffix see -OUS.

tenement n. About 1303, a holding of immovable property such as land or buildings; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French tenement, from Medieval Latin tenementum a holding, fief, from Latin tenēre to hold; for suffix see -MENT. The meaning of a dwelling place, residence, is found probably before 1400. The term tenement house an apartment building usually in a poor section of a city, is first recorded in 1858.

tenet n. 1413, doctrine, principle; probably from Medieval Latin use (to introduce a statement of doctrine) of Latin tenet he holds, third person singular present indicative of tenēre to hold.

tennis n. 1345–46 tenyes the game of tennis, of uncertain origin (not recorded in the modern spelling until the 1500's); possibly borrowed through Anglo-French tenetz hold! receive! take!, from Old French tenez (imperative of tenir to hold, receive, take), used as a call from the server to his opponent, though no mention of this call has been found in French (in Old French the game itself was la paulme, la paume, literally, the palm, because it was played by striking the ball with the palm of the hand). The server's call in some Latin sources of the 1500's is given as accipe and excipe accept! take!, which suggests tenez an equivalent in Old French.

tenon n. Probably about 1380 tenoun, borrowed from Middle French tenon a tenon, from Old French tenir to hold. —v. 1596, fasten securely; from the noun. The meaning of fix with a tenon and mortise is found in 1649.

tenor n. Probably before 1300 tenour general meaning, purport, drift; borrowed from Old French tenour substance, sense, from Latin tenōrem (nominative tenor) contents, course, originally a holding on, from tenēre to hold; for suffix see -OR¹. The meaning of the general tendency, course, direction, is first recorded in Middle English before 1398. The sense in music (probably 1388), is so called because the melody was carried or held by the tenor's part.

tense¹ adj. stretched tight. 1670, borrowed from Latin tēnsus, past participle of tendere to stretch. The sense of in a state of nervous tension, is first recorded in 1821. —v. 1676, from the adjective. The sense of make or become nervous (often in tense up) is first recorded in 1946.

tense² n. form of a verb showing time of an action or state. Before 1333 tens time, also tense of a verb; borrowed from Old French tens time, from Latin tempus; see TEMPORAL¹ of time.

tensile adj. 1626, that can be stretched, ductile; borrowed from New Latin tensilis capable of being stretched, from Latin tēnsus, past participle of tendere to stretch. The meaning of pertaining to tension is first recorded in English in 1841.

tension n. 1533, a stretched condition; borrowed through Middle French tension, or directly from Latin tēnsiōnem (nominative tēnsiō) a stretching (in Medieval Latin, a struggle, contest), from tēnsus, past participle of tendere to stretch; for suffix see -SION. The sense of nervous strain is first recorded in English before 1763. The meaning of electromotive force (as in high-tension wires) is first recorded in English in 1802.

tensor n. 1704, New Latin, from Latin tēnsus, past participle of tendere to stretch; for suffix see -OR².

tent n. Probably before 1300, portable shelter of skins or cloth stretched over poles; borrowed from Old French tente, from Medieval Latin tenta a tent, noun use of feminine singular of Latin tentus stretched, variant past participle of tendere to stretch. Also compare Latin tentorium tent; see TENTER. —v. 1553, to pitch a tent; from the noun.

tentacle n. 1762, borrowed from New Latin tentaculum feeler (Latin tentāre to feel, try + -culum diminutive suffix).

tentative adj. 1588 (implied in tentatively); borrowed from Medieval Latin tentativus trying, testing, from Latin tentātus, past participle of tentāre, variant of temptāre to feel, try, test; for suffix see -IVE.

tenter n. About 1300 teyntur frame; later tentour tent (before 1325); of uncertain origin, probably connected with Latin tentorium tent made of stretched skins, from tentus, variant past participle of tendere to stretch. The compound tenterhook (before 1480) one of the hooks that holds cloth on a tenter is found in the figurative phrase on tenterhooks in painful suspense in 1748. —v. 1437 teynteren; from the noun.

tenuous adj. 1597, formed from Latin tenuis thin + English -ous. The sense of having slight importance, not substantial, is found before 1817. —tenuity n. Probably before 1425 tenuite, borrowed from Middle French ténuité, or directly from Latin tenuitās thinness, from tenuis thin; for suffix see -ITY.

tenure n. 1414, holding of a tenement; borrowed from Anglo-French and Middle French tenure a tenure, estate in land, from Old French tenir to hold; for suffix see -URE. The sense of the condition or fact of holding a status, position, or occupation (as in a tenure of office, a lifetime tenure) is first recorded in 1599.

teepee or teepee n. 1743 ti pee, borrowed from Siouan (Dakota) tipi dwelling.

tepid adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Latin tepidus lukewarm, from tepēre be warm.

tequila n. 1849, borrowing of American Spanish tequila, from Tequila, name of a district in central Mexico noted for the superiority of its tequila.

tera- a combining form meaning one trillion, as in teracycle (1964), terawatt (1969), terahertz (1969). Adapted from Greek téras (genitive téras) marvel, monster.

terbium n. 1843, New Latin, from (Yt) terby, town in Sweden where the mineral gadolinite (which contains terbium) was found + -ium.

tercet n. 1598 terset, borrowed from Italian terzetto, diminutive of terzo third, from Latin tertius THIRD; for suffix see -ET. The spelling tercet was influenced by French tercet, from Italian terzetto.

tergiversate v. 1654, probably a back formation from tergiversation, modeled on Latin tergiversātus, past participle of tergiversāre turn one's back, evade; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —tergiversation n. 1570, borrowed from Latin tergiversātiōnem (nominative tergiversātiō) a shifting, evasion, from tergiversāre turn one's back on, evade (tergum the back + versāre to spin); for suffix see -ATION.

term n. Probably before 1200 terme limit in time, set or appointed time or period; later, period of time a law court or school is in session (1454); borrowed from Old French terme limit of time or place, from Latin terminus end, boundary line, related to termin boundary, end. The meaning of a word or phrase used in a limited or precise sense is first recorded in about 1378; borrowed from Medieval Latin terminus word, expression, from Late Latin terminus, from Latin, end, boundary line. The plural terms limited conditions, stipulations, is first recorded before 1333. —v. 1549, to name, call, designate (found in termining); from the noun. An earlier sense of terminate (about 1410); was borrowed from Middle French terminer terminate, limit, from Old French terme limit.

termagant n. 1500–20, violent, overbearing person; found in Middle English Termagaunt, name of a fictitious Moslem deity appearing in medieval morality plays as a violent, overbearing personage (about 1303); earlier Tervagant (probably before 1200); borrowed from Old French Tervagan, Tervagant, of uncertain origin. —adj. 1596, violent, overbearing; from the noun.

terminal adj. 1459, relating to or marking a boundary, limit, or end; borrowed from Latin terminālis pertaining to a boundary or end, final, from terminus end, boundary line; for suffix see *-AL*¹. The sense of situated at or forming the end of something (as in a terminal bud) is first recorded in 1805, and that of concluding, final (as in a terminal payment) in 1827. The meaning of fatal, approaching death (as in a terminal case) is first recorded in 1891. —n. 1831, final syllable, letter, or word; from the adjective. The sense of an end point, such as a screw or post, for making an electrical connection, is first recorded in 1838; that of an end point of a railroad line in 1888, and a device for communicating with a computer, in 1954.

terminate v. Probably before 1425, to bring or come to an end; borrowed from Latin terminātus, past participle of termināre to limit, end; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —termination n. 1395 terminacioun determination, decision; borrowed from Old French, and directly from Latin terminātiōnem (nominative terminātiō) a fixing of bounds, bounding, determining, from termināre to limit, end, from terminus end, boundary line; for suffix see -ATION.

terminology n. 1801, borrowed from German Terminologie (Medieval Latin terminus word, expression + German -ologie -ology).

terminus n. Before 1617, goal, end, final point; borrowing of Latin terminus end, boundary line. The meaning of either end of a transportation line is found in 1836.

termite n. 1849, new singular formed in English by back formation from the earlier plural termites (1781); borrowed from New Latin termites, plural of termes (genitive termitis), a special use of Late Latin termes woodworm, alteration (influenced by Latin terere to rub, wear, erode) Latin tarmes.

tern n. 1678, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic therna tern, Norwegian terne, and Swedish tärna).

terrace n. 1515, gallery, portico, balcony; later, flat, raised place for walking (1575); borrowed from Middle French ter- race, from Old French terrace, terrasse platform (built on or supported by a mound of earth), from Vulgar Latin terrācea*, from Latin terra earth, land. —v. 1615, from the noun.

terra cotta 1722, borrowing of Italian terra cotta (terra earth, from Latin; and cotta baked; literally, cooked, from Latin cocta, feminine past participle of coquere to COOK).

terra firma 1605, New Latin terra firma the part of the Italian mainland ruled by Venice (from Latin terra earth, land; and firma firm, feminine of firmus FIRM¹, adj.).

terrain n. 1727, ground for training horses; later, any tract of land or ground (1766); borrowed from French terrain piece of earth, ground, land, from Old French, from Vulgar Latin terrānum*, alteration of Latin terrēnum land, ground, from neuter of terrēnus of the earth, earthly, from terra earth, land.

terrapin n. 1672 terrapine, tarapine; earlier torope (1613); borrowed from an Algonquian source (compare Abnaki turepé, and Delaware turpa turtle).

terrarium n. 1890, small enclosure for land animals, vivarium; New Latin, formed from Latin terra land + -arium -ary; patterned on aquarium, with which it was contrasted.

terrestrial adj. Before 1387 terrestrialle, formed from Latin terrestris earthly (from terra earth) + English -*al*¹.

terrible adj. Before 1387, causing terror, frightful, dreadful; borrowed from Old French terrible, from Latin terribilis frightful, from terrēre fill with fear; for suffix see -IBLE. The meaning of very bad, awful, is first recorded in 1596. —terribly adv. 1526, formed from English terrible + -*ly*¹. The sense of extremely is first recorded in 1833.

terrier n. About 1410; earlier in the surname Terrier (1166); borrowed from Old or Middle French chien terrier terrier dog, from Medieval Latin terrarius of earth, from Latin terra earth; so called because the terrier pursues its quarry (foxes, badgers, etc.) into their burrows.

terrific adj. 1667, causing terror, frightening; borrowed from Latin terrificus causing terror or fear, from terrēre fill with fear; for suffix see -FIC. The sense of very great or severe (as in a terrific headache) is first recorded in 1809, and as a generalized term of approval (as in a terrific dancer), in 1930.

terrify v. 1575, fill with terror, frighten very much; borrowed from Latin terrificāre to frighten, from terrificus causing terror; see TERRIFIC; for suffix see -FY.

territory n. Before 1398 territorie land under the jurisdiction of a town, state, or ruler; borrowed from Latin territōrium land around a town, domain, district, from terra earth, land, patterned after words such as dormitōrium dormitory. The sense of any tract of land, district, region, is first recorded in English in 1610. —territorial adj. 1625, of or pertaining to a particular territory; borrowed from Late Latin territōriālis of or belonging to a territory, from Latin territōrium TERRITORY; for suffix see -AL¹.

terror n. About 1375 terroure great fear; borrowed from Old

French terreur, from Latin terror great fear, dread, from terrēre fill with fear, frighten, terrify; for suffix see -OR¹. —terrorism n. 1795, government by intimidation in the Reign of Terror (1793–94) during the French Revolution; borrowing of French terrorisme (Latin terror terror + French -isme -ism). The sense of systematic use of terror as a policy is first recorded in English in 1798. —terrorist n. 1795, person connected with the Reign of Terror during the French Revolution; borrowing of French terroriste (Latin terror terror + French -iste -ist). The sense of one who furthers a cause by the use of terror is first recorded in English in 1866, in connection with the activities of extreme radical groups in Russia. —terrorize v. 1823, to coerce or deter by terror; borrowed from French terroriser (Latin terror terror + French -iser -ize), or formed from English terror + -ize.

terry n. 1784, of uncertain origin; possibly alteration of French tiré drawn, from past participle of tirer draw out. Compare German gezogener Sammet drawn velvet.

terse adj. 1599, clean-cut, burnished, neat, (implied in tersely); borrowed from French ters clean, and directly from Latin tersus wiped off, clean, neat, from past participle of tergere to rub, polish, wipe. The sense of concise and pithy in style or language, is first recorded in 1777 as a specific application of (now obsolete) polished, refined, cultured, especially in language (1621).

tertiary adj. 1656, borrowed from Latin tertiarius of or pertaining to a third, from tertius third; for suffix see -ARY.

tesla n. 1960, unit of magnetic flux density, in allusion to Nikola Tesla, a Croatian-born American engineer.

tessellate v. 1791, back formation from earlier tessellated, adj., made in a checkered pattern (1695); and possibly borrowed directly from Latin tessellātus made of small square stones or tiles, from tessella small square stone or tile, diminutive of tessera a cube or square of stone or wood, tile, often used in a mosaic; perhaps from Greek téssera, neuter of tésseres, Ionic variant of téssares FOUR (so called from its four corners); for suffix see -ATE¹. —adj. 1826, possibly a shortened form of tessellated, adj., modeled on Latin tessellātus.

test n. About 1395 teste small vessel used in assaying precious metals; borrowed from Old French test, from Latin testum earthen pot, related to testa piece of burned clay, earthen pot, shell, and texere to weave. The sense of that by which the correctness or genuineness of something may be determined, means of trial or examination, is first recorded in 1594. —v. 1603, to assay (gold or silver); from the noun. The sense of try, examine, put to a test, is first recorded in 1748.

testament n. About 1290, last will disposing of property; borrowed from Latin testāmentum a will, publication of a will, from testārī make a will, be witness to, from testis witness; for suffix see -MENT.

Late Latin testāmentum a covenant, is a loan translation of Greek diathēkē, used in this sense in the account of the Last Supper and thus associated with the notion of a last will or testament. As the name of either of the two main divisions of the Bible (Old Testament and New Testament), the word is found in Middle English (before 1325), translated from Late Latin vetus testāmentum old testament, and novum testāmentum new testament, themselves loan translations from Greek palaiā diathēkē and kainē diathēkē.

testate adj. About 1430, borrowed from Latin testātus, past participle of testārī make a will, be witness to, declare; see TESTAMENT; for suffix see -ATE¹. —testator n. Before 1400 testatour, borrowed from Anglo-French, from Latin testātor one who makes a will, from testat-, past participle stem of testārī make a will; for suffix see -OR².

tester¹ n. one who tests or proves something. 1661, formed from English test, v. + -er¹.

tester² n. a canopy over a bed. About 1380, borrowed from Medieval Latin testerium, from testera head stall, from Late Latin testa (capitis) skull, from Latin, earthenware, pot.

testicle n. Probably before 1425, alteration of earlier testicule (1392); borrowed from Latin testiculus, diminutive of testis testicle; see TESTIS.

testify v. About 1387 testifyen give evidence, bear witness; borrowed from Latin testificārī bear witness, formed from a lost adjective testificus* making a witness (testis witness + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY.

testimony n. Before 1382 testymonye the Ten Commandments, a borrowing representing Late Latin testimōnium in the Vulgate, and Greek tò martýrion in the Septuagint, of Hebrew ʿēdūtā attestation, testimony, from ʿēd witness.

The meaning of evidence, statement of a witness, is first recorded in Middle English (probably before 1425); borrowed from Old French testimonie, and directly from Latin testimōnium evidence, proof, testimony (testis witness + -mōnium, suffix signifying action, state, condition); for suffix in English see -Y². —testimonial adj. About 1422, of or serving as testimony, in lettres testimoniales credentials; borrowed from Middle French testimonial, in lettres testimoniaulx, and directly from Latin testimōniālis, in litterae testimōniālēs, from testimōnium evidence, proof; for suffix see -AL¹. It is also probable that the adjective was, in part, derived from noun use in English. —n. Before 1387, evidence, testimony; borrowed from Late Latin testimōniālis, adj., testimonial. The meaning of a certificate of character or qualifications, letter of recommendation, is first recorded in English in 1571.

testis n., pl. testes 1704, borrowed from Latin testis testicle, a special application of testis witness; presumably because it bears witness to male virility; compare a similar use of Greek paras-tátēs, literally, one that stands by, and French témoins, literally, witnesses.

testosterone n. 1935, formed from English testis + connecting -o- + ster(ol) + -one.

testy adj. 1510 testie; alteration (with substitution of -ie -y¹) for Middle English testif headstrong (about 1385); borrowed from Anglo-French testif, from Old French teste head + -if -ive; see -IVE. Old French teste is from Late Latin testa skull, in Latin, pot, shell. The sense of easily irritated, impatient, is first recorded in English in 1526.

tetanus n. 1392, borrowed from Latin tetanus, from Greek tétanos muscular spasm; literally, a stretching, tension, from teínein to stretch; so called because the disease is characterized by violent spasms and stiffness of the muscles.

tether n. 1376–77, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tjōðhr tether, Norwegian tjor, and Swedish tjuder); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tūder tether, (modern Dutch tuier, and Old High German zeotar pole of a cart, from Proto-Germanic teudrān*). —v. About 1450 teduren; implied in horsthethering (before 1382); from the noun.

tetr- a variant form of tetra- in some instances before a vowel, as in tetroxide.

tetra- a combining form meaning four, as in tetrameter (1612), tetravalent (1868). Borrowed from Greek tetra-, combining form of téttares, téssares four.

tetragrammaton n. the Hebrew divine name transliterated as YHWH; vocalized as Jehovah or Yahweh. Probably before 1400 tetragrammaton; borrowed from Greek (tō) tetragrāmmaton, literally, (the word) of four letters (tetra- four + grāmma, genitive grāmματος letter, something written).

tetrahedron n. 1570, borrowed from Late Greek tetráedron, originally, neuter of tetráedros, adj., four-sided (tetra- four + hédra seat, base).

tetralogy n. 1656, borrowed from Greek tetralogíā group of four dramas (tetra- four + -logíā -logy).

tetrameter n. 1612, borrowed from Latin tetrametrus, from Greek tetrámetron verse of four measures, originally, neuter of tetrámetros, adj., having four measures (tetra- four + métron measure). —adj. 1770, from the noun.

tetrarch n. Old English (before 1150) tetrache ruler of one of four divisions of a kingdom or province; borrowed from Late Latin tetrarcha, from Latin tetrarchēs, from Greek tetrárchēs leader of four companies, tetrarch (tetra- four + árchein to rule).

tetrarchy n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin tetrarchia, from Latin, form Greek tetrarchía, from tetrárchēs TETRARCH.

text n. 1369, the wording of anything written; borrowed from Old French texte, from Medieval Latin textus the Scriptures, text, treatise, (in Late Latin, written account, content, characters used in a document), from Latin textus (genitive textūs) style or texture of a work; originally, thing woven, from texere to weave. —textual adj. About 1390 textuel well-read, of or conforming to the text; borrowed from Anglo-French textuel, from Medieval Latin textualis of or pertaining to a text, from textus the Scriptures, text, treatise; for suffix see -AL¹. The spelling textual (about 1470), was an alteration to conform to the Medieval Latin.

textile n. 1626, borrowed from Latin textilis woven fabric, cloth, noun use of textilis woven, from texere to weave. —adj. woven. 1656, borrowed from Latin textilis woven, from the verb in Latin.

texture n. Probably about 1425, network, structure; borrowed from Middle French, and directly from Latin textūra web, texture, structure, from text-, a stem of texere to weave; for suffix see -URE. The sense of constitution, nature, or quality (as in the texture of a fable) is first recorded in 1611.

th is a spelling found chiefly in words of Old English or Old Icelandic origin and sometimes in words borrowed from Greek. The digraph th became common during the Middle English period, replacing the Old English and Old Icelandic letters thorn (þ) and edh (ð), to represent both the voiceless consonant found in thing (Old English þing) and the voiced consonant found in heathen (Old English hæðen). The letter edh went out of use in the 1200's. The thorn continued to be used, but was more and more restricted to pronouns and demonstratives, such as þat, þe, þey, þis, (that, the, they, this), other words being spelled with th. With the advent of printing, using continental type which had no thorn, th came into general use in all positions, though for a long time y was sometimes used to approximate the thorn's shape, resulting in spellings such as ye for the. See also CH, SH, WH.

-th¹ a suffix forming nouns from verbs, as in bath, growth, stealth, or from adjectives (rarely from other nouns), as in depth, length, strength, truth. Old English -thu, -tho, -th, cognate with Gothic -itha, Old High German -ida, Old Icelandic -th. This suffix has a variant -t, as in height (Middle English hihthe) and theft (Old English thēofth); see -T².

-th² a suffix forming ordinal numerals, as in fourth, tenth, twelfth. Sixth = number six in order or position. Old English -tha; cognate with Gothic -da, -ta, Old High German -do, -to, Old Icelandic -di, -ti. See also the variant -ETH¹, and compare fifth a re-formation with -th, on analogy with fourth, seventh and ninth.

-th³ a variant form of the archaic suffix -eth² forming the third person singular of the present tense, as in doth, hath. See -ES² and -S².

thalamus n. 1753, the receptacle of a flower; New Latin, special use of Latin thalamus inner chamber, from Greek thálamōs inner chamber, bedroom. The sense of part of the forebrain is first recorded in English in 1756, but is found earlier in Latin plural form in 1704.

thallium n. 1861, New Latin, from Greek thallós green shoot + New Latin -ium; so called because its spectrum is marked by a green band.

thallophyte n. 1854, borrowed from New Latin Thallophyta former division of the plant kingdom, from Greek thallós green shoot + phytón plant.

than conj. Old English than (before 735), developed from thane, thænne, thonne THEN. It is not clear how the conjunction (than) used in comparisons developed from the adverb (then) showing time, but than after a comparative ("bigger than") is a pre-English development, existing early in West Germanic: Old Frisian than, Old Saxon thanna, thane, Middle Dutch danne, dan, and Old High German thanna, thane, danne. The semantic development may have been directly from the demonstrative sense of then, thus: "John is smarter than Tom" = "John is smarter; then (= after that) Tom." It could also derive from the relative or conjunctive use of Old English thonne when, when as, thus: "When as (whereas) Tom is smart, John is more (so)." For a long time the English adverb and conjunction were treated as one word; they did not become fully differentiated in form until about 1700.

thanatology n. 1842, formed from Greek thánatos death + English -logy study of.

thane n. 1124 thæin servant, retainer; later thein (probably before 1200), thane (about 1200); developed from Old English thegn military follower (about 725, in Beowulf), thegen (before 800); cognates with Old Saxon thegan man, boy, Old High German thegan warrior, hero, boy, servant (modern German Degen warrior, soldier), and Old Icelandic thegn freeman, thane, from Proto-Germanic theznás*.

The specific sense of a man who ranked between an earl and a freeman is found in Middle English about 1470. The spelling thane was Scottish; the regular modern representation of Old English thegn, thegen would have been thain (compare rain from Old English regn).

thank v. Probably about 1175 thanken express gratitude to; developed from Old English thancian (about 725, in Beowulf), from thanc, thonc thought, good will, gratitude; cognate with Old Frisian thank, thonc gratitude, Old Saxon thank, Middle Dutch danc (modern Dutch dank), Old High German thank, dank (modern German Dank), Gothic thanks thought, from Proto-Germanic thankaz, and Old Icelandic thökk (Danish tak, Norwegian takke, Swedish tack), related to the root of English THINK. —thankful adj. 1375, deserving thanks, feeling gratitude; developed from Old English thancfule, thoncfule grateful, content (before 900), formed from thanc gratitude, good will + -full -ful. —thanks n. pl. Before 1250 thonkes; plural of thank, thonc. —thanksgiving n. (1533, giving of thanks; 1632, = Thanksgiving Day) —Thanksgiving Day (1674) that pron. Old English thæt (about 725, in Beowulf), neuter singular of the demonstrative pronoun and adjective sē (masculine), sēo (feminine); see THE¹ and the plural THOSE. Old English thæt is cognate with Old Frisian thet, neuter demonstrative pronoun, Old Saxon that, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dat, Old High German daz (modern German das), Old Icelandic that, and Gothic thata. —adj. Probably about 1200, from the pronoun. —conj. Old English thæt, before 899; from the pronoun in Old English. —adv. About 1450, from the adjective.

thatch v. About 1378 thechen; later thacchen (before 1398); developed from Old English theccan to cover (about 725, in Beowulf), related to thæc roof, thatching material, from Proto-Germanic thakan*. Cognates of the verb and noun in Germanic are found in Old Frisian thekka to cover, thek roof, Old Saxon thekkian to cover, Middle Dutch decken to cover (modern Dutch dekken), dak roof (modern Dutch dak), Old High German decchen to cover (modern German decken), dah roof (modern German Dach), and Old Icelandic thekja to cover (from Proto-Germanic thakjanan*), thak roof. The Middle English spelling thacchen (with a), was probably influenced by earlier thacken (about 1350), developed from Old English thacian (before 1100), from thæc roof, thatching material. —n. Before 1325 thach; probably an alteration (influenced by Old English theccan, pronounced thēchən) of Middle English thak thatching material; developed from Old English thæc.

thaw v. Before 1325 thowen, thouen; developed from Old English thawian (about 1000); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch douwen to thaw (modern Dutch dooien), Old High German douwen, dōan, dewen (modern German tauen), from Proto-Germanic thawōjanan*, and with Old Icelandic theyja (Swedish töa, Norwegian and Danish tø). —n. About 1400 thawe; from the verb.

the¹ definite article. Old English (about 950) thē, developed from adjective use of thē, nominative masculine form of the demonstrative pronoun and adjective, and replacing earlier sē (masculine), sēo (feminine), thæt (neuter). The s-forms were superseded by forms in th-, influenced by the neuter thæt (the source of that), and by such oblique cases as thæs, genitive singular masculine and neuter. Old English sē, sēo is cognate with Old Frisian thi, masculine demonstrative pronoun and adjective, Old Saxon se, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch de, Old High German and modern German der, Old Icelandic sá, Gothic sa.

the² adv. by how much . . . by that much, as in the more the merrier, the sooner the better. Old English thē (before 899), variant of thȳ, originally, instrumental case of the neuter demonstrative thæt THAT.

the- the form of theo- before a vowel, as in theism, monotheism, pantheist.

theater n. About 1380 theatre (in ancient Greece and Rome) an open-air place for viewing plays and other spectacles; borrowed from Old French theatre, and directly from Latin theātrum, from Greek theātron theater, from theāsthai to behold, from thēā a view. The meaning of a building where plays are shown (1577) was transferred to that of plays, writing, production, the stage, in 1668. The sense of a place of action, something representing a theater, appeared in 1581. —theatrical adj. 1558, of or connected with the theater; formed from Middle French theatrical or Late Latin theātricus of or pertaining to the theater + English *-al*¹. Late Latin theātricus is borrowed from Greek theātrikós of or pertaining to the theater, from theātron theater. —n. 1657–83, dramatic performance; from the adjective.

thee pron. 1382, developed from Old English the, thē (before 830), dative singular of thū THOU.

theft n. About 1250 theft, thefte; developed from Old English (about 695) thēofth (thēof thief + -th -th¹); cognate with Old their adj. Probably about 1200 thezre; later theyr (about 1303); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic theirra, theira, genitive plural of their THEY). —theirs pron. Before 1325 thairs; from their, adj.

Frisian thiūfthe, thiūfte theft, Old Saxon thiubda, and Old Icelandic thýfth, thýft, from Proto-Germanic theubithō*.

theism n. 1678, formed from Greek theós god + English -ism. —theistic adj. 1780, of or pertaining to theists or theism; formed from earlier (1662) theist believer in theism (Greek theós god + English -ist) + -ic.

them pron. Probably about 1200 thezzm; later them (probably before 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic heim, dative plural of their THEY). —them-*selves pron. pl. 1502, alteration (influenced by selves, plural of self) of Middle English tham-self, thaim-self (before 1325).

theme n. Before 1325 teme topic, subject; later theme (before 1387); borrowed from Old French tesme (with silent s), and directly from Latin thema a subject, thesis, from Greek théma a proposition, subject, deposit; literally, something set down, from the- root of tithénai put down, place. Application to music is first recorded in 1674. —thematic adj. 1697, borrowed from Greek thematikós of or connected with a theme, from théma (genitive thématos) theme; for suffix see -ic.

then adv. Probably about 1200 thenne at that time; developed from Old English thanne, thænne, thonne (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian thenne, thanne then, Old Saxon thanna, than, Middle Dutch danne, dan (modern Dutch dan), Old High German danne, denne (modern German dann), Old Icelandic thā, and Gothic than. Compare the related form THAN. —n. Before 1325 than, from the adverb. —adj. 1584, from the adverb.

thence adv. About 1300 thannes; later thenne (before 1325); formed from thanne, thenne thence + adverbial genitive -es, -s; see -s³. Middle English thanne, thenne developed from Old English thanone, thanon (about 725, in Beowulf), cognate with Old Frisian thana thence, Old Saxon thanana, thanān, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dan, Old High German thanana, thanān, danān (modern German dannen), from early West Germanic thanana*, and Old Icelandic thanān; all formed by the addition of suffixes to the demonstrative stem tha- found in English THAT and its cognates. The spelling thence (with c) functioned to preserve the voiceless sound represented by s. Compare HENCE. —thenceforth adv. (about 1380) —thenceforward adv. (1457) theo- a combining form meaning god, gods, or God, as in theocentric = centered or centering in God (1886), theocracy, theology. Borrowed from Greek theo-, combining form of theós god; see THEOLOGY.

theocracy n. Before 1652, borrowed from Greek theokratía the rule of God (theós god + krátos a rule, regime, strength); for suffix see -CRACY and -CY. An earlier spelling theocracy is found in 1622. —theocratic adj. 1741, formed in English from theocracy on the pattern of such pairs as democracy, democratic.

theology n. Before 1376 teologie; later theologie (before 1387); borrowed from Old French theologie philosophical treatment of Christian doctrine, from Latin theologia, from Greek theologia an account of the gods, or of God, from theologos one discoursing on the gods (theos god + -logos treating of; see -LOGY). The sense of a system of religious beliefs (as in Calvinist theology) is first recorded in 1669. —theologian n. 1483, borrowed from Middle French théologien, from théologie; for suffix see -AN. —theological adj. Before 1450 theologicall of or pertaining to the word of God, Biblical, Scriptural; formed from Late Latin theologicus of or pertaining to theology (Latin theologia + -icus -ic) + English *-al*¹. The sense of pertaining to or dealing with theology is first recorded in English in 1603.

theorem n. 1551, borrowed from Middle French théorème, and directly from Late Latin theōrēma, and from Greek theōrēma spectacle, speculation, theorem, from theōrein to consider; see THEORY.

theoretical adj. 1616, contemplative, formed from Late Latin theōrēticus of or pertaining to theory + English *-al*¹. Late Latin theōrēticus was borrowed from Greek theōrētikós contemplative, pertaining to theory, from theōrētós that may be seen or considered, from theōrein to consider, look at; see THEORY. The meaning of having to do with theory is found in English before 1652. —theoretician n. 1886, formed from Late Latin theōrēticus theoretical + English -ian.

theory n. 1592, conception, mental scheme; borrowed from Late Latin theōria, from Greek theōriā contemplation, speculation, a looking at, thing looked at, from theōrein to consider, speculate, look at, from theōrós spectator. (thēa a view + -horós seeing, related to horân to see); for suffix see -Y³. The sense of the principles or methods of a science or art rather than its practice is first recorded in 1613, and that of an explanation based on observation and reasoning in 1638. —theorist n. 1594, formed from English theory + -ist. —theorize v. 1638, formed from English theory + -ize.

theosophy n. 1650, knowledge about God and nature obtained through mystical study; borrowed from Medieval Latin theosophia, from Late Greek theosophiā wisdom concerning God or things divine, from Greek theosophos one wise about God (theos god + sophós wise, learned); for suffix see -Y³. Theosophy is also the name of a modern philosophical system founded in 1875, which combines the teachings of Hinduism and Buddhism.

therapeutic adj. 1646, probably a shortened form of therapeutical (1605); modeled on New Latin therapeuticus curing, healing, from Greek therapeutikós, from therapeutēs one ministering, from therapeîn to cure, treat, related to therápōn (genitive therápontos) attendant; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL.

therapy n. 1846, borrowed from New Latin therapia, from Greek therapēia curing, healing, from therapeûein to cure, treat; for suffix see -Y³. —therapist n. 1886, formed from English therapy + -ist.

there adv. Probably before 1200 ther, thare; developed from Old English thær in or at that place (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian thēr there, Old Saxon thār, Middle Dutch daer (modern Dutch daar), Old High German dār (modern German da, darin, daraus), from Proto-Germanic thēr*, and Old Icelandic thar (Danish and Norwegian der, Swedish där), Gothic thar. Related to Old English thæt THAT. —n. 1588, from the adverb. —thereabouts adv. About 1400; also thereabout, developed from Old English thær onbutan (before 925). —thereafter adv. Old English thær æfter (before 899). —thereby adv. Old English thærbig (before 899). —therefore adv. About 1175 therefor (Middle English ther there + fore for). —therein adv. Old English thærin (before 1000). —thereupon adv. About 1175, on that; before 1325, after that, then. —therewith adv. Old English thæ (before 899).

therm- the form of thermo- before a vowel, as in thermanesthesia.

thermal adj. 1756, of or having to do with hot springs; borrowed from French thermal, formed from Greek thérme heat + French -al -al¹. The sense of having to do with heat is recorded in English in 1837.

thermo- a combining form meaning heat, temperature, as in thermometer, thermoplastic. Borrowed from Greek thermo-, combining form of thérmos hot, thérme heat.

thermometer n. 1633, borrowed from French thermomètre (1624), formed from Greek thérmos hot + métron measure. An earlier form appeared in Latin thermoscopium (1617).

thermoplastic adj. 1883, formed from English thermo- + plastic, adj. —n. 1929, from the adjective.

thermos n. 1907 thermos flask, a trademark patented in 1904; borrowed from Greek thérmos hot.

thermostat n. 1831, formed from English thermo- + -stat.

thesaurus n. 1823, a treasury, storehouse; borrowed from Latin thesaurus treasury, treasure, from Greek thēsaurós a treasure, treasury, storehouse, chest. The sense of a dictionary or encyclopedia filled with information is first recorded in 1840, but the sense was known earlier in English thesaurarie (1592); and in Latin title (1565).

these pron. About 1175 thes; probably before 1200 these; developed from Old English thās, variant of thās, plural of thes, thēos, this THIS. The Old English form thās remained thas in northern Middle English, but by regular phonetic development became thos in Midland and South, resulting in modern those, which came to be used as the plural of that. Old English thās, in turn, became Middle English thes, remaining in the South as plural of this. The two forms became differentiated in use after 1250–1300. The ending -e was apparently patterned in Middle English on the plural forms of adjectives (alle for all, sume for sum, etc.).

thesis n. Before 1398, unaccented (weak) syllable or note; borrowed from Latin thesis unaccented syllable in poetry; later, the stressed part of a metrical foot, from Greek thésis a proposition, the downbeat (in music); originally, any setting down or placing, from a root of tithénai to place, put, set. The sense of a proposition or statement to be proved is first recorded in English in 1579, and that of a dissertation written by a candidate for a university degree, in 1653.

Thespian or thespian adj. 1675, formed from Greek Thēspis Thespis + English -an. Thespis was a Greek poet of the 500's B.C., the traditional father of Greek tragedy. —n. 1827, from the adjective.

thews n. pl. 1566, bodily powers or parts indicating strength, good physique, from Middle English theweas, theauwes good qualities, virtues (probably before 1200); developed from Old English thēawes customs, manners, personal qualities, plural of thēaw habit, custom (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon thau usage, habit, custom, and Old High German thau discipline, from Proto-Germanic thawaz*. The sense of muscles, muscular development, was associated with sineus.

they pron. Probably before 1200 thei; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic their, originally masculine plural demonstrative pronoun corresponding to that, neuter singular; see THAT). The Scandinavian form gradually replaced Old English hī, hīe, plural of hē, hēo, hit; see HE, SHE, IT.

thick adj. Probably before 1200 thikke, thicke; developed from Old English thicce not thin, dense (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian thikke numerous, Old Saxon thikke thick, Middle Dutch dicke (modern Dutch dik), Old High German dicki (modern German dick), Old Icelandic thykker (Swedish tjock, Danish tyk, and Norwegian tykk), from Proto-Germanic theku-, thekwī-. —adv. Before 1175 thicke; developed from Old English thicce (before 971), from the adjective in Old English. —n. About 1250 thikke, from the adjective. —thicken v. Before 1398 thickenen make thick; formed from Middle English thicke thick, adj. + -enen *-en*¹. —thickset adj. About 1370, set close together; later, stocky (1724).

thicket n. 1530, developed from Old English thiccet (before 1000), formed from thicce THICK + -et, a denominative suffix. No record of a Middle English thicket* has been found, suggesting a revival in the early 1500's after several centuries of obsolescence.

thief n. 1124 thef; later thief (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (688–695) thēof; cognate with Old Frisian thiāf thief, Old Saxon thiof, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch dief, Old High German diob (modern German Dieb), Old Icelandic thjöfr (Danish and Norwegian tyv, Swedish tjuv), and Gothic thiufs, from Proto-Germanic theubaz*. —thievish adj. About 1450 (implied in thievishly); formed from Middle English thef thief + *-ish*¹.

thieve v. 1530 (implied in thieving); developed from Old English (about 920) thēofian, from thēof THIEF. The verb is rare in Old English, after which it does not appear until the 1600's. —thievery n. 1568, act of stealing, theft; probably formed from English thieve, v. + -ery.

thigh n. Probably before 1200 thih, developed from Old English (before 800) thēoh, thēh; cognate with Old Frisian thiāch thigh, Old Saxon thioch, Middle Dutch die (modern Dutch dij), Old High German dioh, Middle High German diech, and Old Icelandic thjō upper thigh, buttock, from Proto-Germanic theuHaz*.

thimble n. 1440 thymbyl covering for the finger, alteration (with b) of Old English (about 1000) thymel sheath or covering for the thumb, from thūma THUMB; for suffix see *-LE*¹. For the development of the b after m, see BRAMBLE and HUMBLE.

thin adj. Probably before 1200 thunne; later thynne (before 1225), thin (about 1250); developed from Old English (849) thynne narrow, lean, scanty; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch dunne thin (modern Dutch dun), Old High German dunni (modern German dünn), Old Icelandic thunnr (Swedish tunn, Norwegian tynn, Danish tynd), from Proto-Germanic thunnuz*, thunw-*, and with Gothic ufthanjan to stretch. —adv. About 1250 thunne, from the adjective. —v. About 1340 thynnen; developed from Old English (about 900) thynnian; from the adjective in Old English.

thine pron. Before 1175 thine; developed from Old English (before 830) thīn, possessive pronoun; originally, genitive of thū THOU. Old English thīn is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon thīn thine, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dijn, Old High German đin (modern German dein), Old Icelandic thīn (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish din), and Gothic theina (genitive), theins (possessive pronoun), from Proto-Germanic thīnaz*.

thing n. Old English (685–86) thing meeting, assembly; later, entity, being, matter (before 899); also, act, deed, event (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon thing assembly, action, matter, thing, Middle Dutch dinc lawsuit, matter, thing (modern Dutch ding thing), Old High German ding assembly, lawsuit, thing (modern German Ding matter, affair, thing), Old Icelandic thing assembly, meeting, parliament, council (Norwegian ting assembly, being, creature, thing, Swedish ting court session, thing, and Danish ting court, law court, thing), from Proto-Germanic thenzān*. The meaning of personal possessions, often in the plural (perhaps from Old Icelandic things objects, articles, valuables), is first recorded in Middle English about 1300.

think v. Probably about 1175 thenken, thenchen; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) thencan conceive in the mind, think (past tense thōhte, past participle gethōht), probably originally meaning “cause to appear to oneself,” and thus a causative of thyncan to seem or appear. Old English thencan is cognate with Old Frisian thanka, thenka, thenza to think, Old Saxon thenkian, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, Old High German, and modern German denken, Old Icelandic thekeja to perceive, know (Norwegian tenke, Swedish tänka, Danish tænke to think), and Gothic thankjan consider, meditate, think, from Proto-Germanic thankijanan*.

Compare archaic METHINKS, which is a relic of a different word think. Because of close semantic relationship and a sharing of forms (thought and think), these two different words, now both spelled think, became thoroughly confused in early modern English, which has led to the complete submersion of the form think to seem, to appear. —n. 1834, act of continued thinking, meditation; from the verb. —thinker n. (1440)

third adj., n. Probably about 1175 therdde, alteration (by metathesis of i and r) of earlier thridde (before 1121); developed from Old English thridda (about 750), from thrēo THREE. Old English thridda is cognate with Old Frisian thredda third, Old Saxon thriddio, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch derde, Old High German dritto (modern German dritte), Old Icelandic thridhi (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish trejde), and Gothic thridja, from Proto-Germanic thridjās*. —third degree 1900, figurative use of Third Degree of master mason in Freemasonry (1772); with reference to the interrogation ceremony performed in conferring this degree (1838). —third world the underdeveloped countries of the world (1963, translation of French tiers monde).

thirst n. Probably before 1200 thirst; developed from Old English (about 1000) thurst; cognate with Old Saxon thurst thirst, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dorst, Old High German durst (modern German Durst), Old Icelandic thorsti (Swedish törst, Norwegian and Danish tørst), and Gothic thaurstei, from Proto-Germanic thurs-*. The change from Old English thurst to Middle English thirst was probably influenced by the verb. —v. Probably about 1200 thirsten; developed from Old English thyrstan (before 899); from the noun in Old English. Old English thyrstan is cognate with Old Saxon thurs-tian to thirst, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dorsten, Old High German dursten (modern German dürsten), and Old Icelandic thyrsta (Swedish törsta, Norwegian and Danish tørste). —thirsty adj. 1388 thirsti; developed from Old English thyrstig, thurstig (before 899), from thurst, n. + -ig -y¹.

thirteen adj. Before 1398 thyrten, alteration (by metathesis of r and i) of thritene (probably about 1200); developed from Old English (before 900) Mercian threotēne, West Saxon threotēne (thrēo three + -tēne, -tēne -teen); cognate with Old Frisian thritten thirteen, Old Saxon thritein, thritein, Middle Low German dertēn, druttēn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch dertien, Old High German drizehan (modern German dreizehn), and Old Icelandic threttān (Norwegian and Danish tretten, Swedish tretton).

thirty adj. Probably before 1350 thurtty; later thyrty (1413); alteration (by metathesis of r and i) of thritti, developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) thritig (thri, thrēo three + -tig group of ten, -TY¹); cognate with Old Frisian thritig thirty, Old Saxon thritig, Middle Dutch dertich (modern Dutch dertig), Old High German drizzug (modern German dreissig), Old Icelandic thrijätigi, thrijätü (Swedish trettio, Norwegian tretti, Danish trediv), and Gothic (accusative) thrins tigus.

this pron. Old English (probably 670) this, neuter demonstrative pronoun and adjective (masculine thes, feminine thēos). In Middle English, the various case and gender forms were gradually eliminated so that by the 1400's, this was the only singular form, with the plural THESE, representing Old English thās, the relationship with THOSE, representing Old English thās, now passing to a plural of that. Old English this is cognate with Old Frisian this, Old Saxon these, Middle Dutch dese (modern Dutch deze), Old High German dese, desēr (modern German dieser), and Old Icelandic thessi; all probably derived from a Germanic pronoun formed by combining the simple demonstratives represented by Old English thæt THAT and sē THE¹. The earlier pronominal base tha* of the, that, etc., combined with added -s (earlier -se, -si) which is probably identical with Old English se the, but has also been identified with Old English sēo imperative of see, v., behold. —adj. Old English (before 899), from the pronoun. —adv. About 1375, from the pronoun.

thistle n. About 1325 thystle; developed from Old English thistel (about 700); cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch distel, Old High German distil (modern German Distel), and Old Icelandic thistill (Norwegian and Swedish tistel, Danish tidse), from Proto-Germanic thistuka*.

thither adv. Before 1325 tethir, thither, alteration of earlier thider (probably before 1200); found in Old English thider (about 725, in Beowulf), an alteration (by influence of its opposite hider HITHER) of earlier thæder to that place. Related to Old English thæt THAT, THIS. Old English thæder is cognate with Old Icelandic thadhra there (from Proto-Germanic thadrá-*). For the change of d to th see GATHER. —adj. 1830, from the adverb.

thole n. 1440 tholle peg; developed from Old English tholl thole (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch dolle thole (modern Dutch dol), and Old Icelandic thollr tree, peg (Norwegian tolle peg), from Proto-Germanic thulnaz*.

—thon a combining form, variant of -ATHON, as in telethon.

thong n. Probably before 1200 thong, thwong, found in Old English thwong (about 950), thwang (about 1000) thong; cognate with Old High German dwang rein, bridle (from Proto-Germanic thwanzaz*), and Old Icelandic thvengr thong.

thorax n. 1392, borrowing of Latin thōrāx, from Greek thōrāx (genitive thōrākos) breastplate, chest. —thoracic adj. 1656, borrowed from Medieval Latin thoracicus of or pertaining to the chest, from Greek thorākeikós, from thōrāx THORAX; for suffix see -IC.

thorium n. 1832, New Latin, formed from Thor, ancient Scandinavian god of thunder and war (Old Icelandic thōrr, see THUNDER) + New Latin -ium.

thorn n. Old English thorn sharp point on a stem or branch (about 750); earlier, thorny tree or plant (about 700, implied in hæguthorn hawthorn); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon thorn thorn, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch doorn, Old High German dorn (modern German Dorn), Old Icelandic thorn (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish torn), and Gothic thaurnus, from Proto-Germanic thurnuz*. —thorny adj. Probably before 1200 thorni; developed from Old English thornig (about 1000), from thorn thorn + -ig -y¹.

thorough adj. 1300 thoro fully done or carried out, complete; later thoruz (before 1420); adjective use of Old English (about 1000) thuruh, adv., from end to end, from side to side, stressed variant of thurh, adv., prep., THROUGH. —thoroughfare n. About 1385 thurghfare; formed from Middle English thurh, thuruh through + fare course, way, journey.

those pron. Probably before 1300 thoos; before 1325 thos (Midland and Southern England), with Northern variant thas; developed from Old English thās, plural of thes, thēos, this THIS. Middle English thos replaced an earlier form tho, which developed from Old English thā, nominative plural of sē, sēa, thæt THE¹; see also THESE.

thou pron. you. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English thū (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon thu thou, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch du, Old High German dū, du (modern German du), Old Icelandic thú (Danish and Swedish du), and Gothic thū, from Proto-Germanic thū*/thu.

Thou and its cases thee, thine, thy were used in ordinary speech in Old English; however, in Middle English they were gradually superseded by the plural ye, you, your, yours in addressing a superior and, later, an equal, though they were long retained in addressing an inferior. In recent times, except for special uses (as among Quakers), thou and its cases have become archaic.

though conj. Probably about 1200 thohh; later though (about 1378); in part developed from Old English thēah, thāh (before 899), and in part borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thō though). Cognates of the Old English and Old Icelandic forms are found in Old Frisian thāch but, yet, still, though, Old Saxon thoh, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch doch, Old High German doh (modern German doch), and Gothic thauh in that case, from Proto-Germanic thauH*. —adv. Probably about 1200 thohh; developed from Old English (971) thēah, thāh; from the conjunction in Old English.

thought n. Probably before 1200 thought or thoht; developed from Old English (before 839) thōht, gethōht, from the stem of thencan to conceive of in the mind, consider; see THINK. Cognates of the Old English forms are found in Old Saxon githāht thinking, belief, Dutch gedachte thought, Old High German gidāht (modern German Bedacht thoughtfulness, consideration), Old Icelandic thōtti, thōttr thought, and Gothic thūhtus thought. —thoughtful adj. Probably about 1200 thohtfull given to thought, contemplative; formed from Middle English thoht thought + -full -ful. The sense of considerate, kindly, is first recorded in 1851.

thousand n. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English thūsend (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian thūsend thousand, Old Saxon thūsundig, Middle Dutch dūsent (modern Dutch duizend), Old High German thūsunt, dūsunt (modern German Tausend), Old Icelandic thūsund (Norwegian and Swedish tusen, Danish tusind, tusinde), and Gothic thūsundi; see HUNDRED. —thousandth adj. 1552, formed from English thousand + *-th*².

thrall n. Probably before 1200 thralle person in bondage, slave; developed from Old English thræl (about 950); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thræll slave, servant, Danish træl, Norwegian trell, Swedish träl). Old Icelandic thræll (from Proto-Germanic thraHilaz*) is probably cognate with Old High German dregil, drigil servant, apparently in the sense of "runner," Gothic thragjan to run, from Proto-Germanic thrazjanan*. The meaning of condition of a slave, bondage, servitude, thrallhood, is found in Middle English before 1325. —thralldom or thralldom n. Probably before 1200 thralldome; formed from Middle English thralle thrall + -dom.

thrash v. 1588, to separate grains from wheat, etc., by beating; variant of threshen to THRESH. The sense of beat, with or as if with a stick, is first recorded before 1625. —n. 1669, threshing implement, flail; later, a thrashing or beating (1840); from the verb.

thread n. About 1200 threade; later threde (about 1380); developed from Old English (before 800) thræd fine cord, especially when twisted; related to thrāwan to twist; see THROW, and cognate with Old Saxon thrād wire, thread, Middle Dutch draet (modern Dutch draad), Old High German drāt (modern German Draht), and Old Icelandic thrādr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish tråd), from Proto-Germanic threǵdūs*. —v. About 1350 threden, from threde thread. —threadbare adj. (before 1376 thred-bare).

threat n. Old English thrēat crowd, troop, oppression, menace (about 725, in Beowulf), related to thrēotan to trouble, weary (from Proto-Germanic threutanan*). These Old English words are cognate with Old High German driozan to vex, trouble, Middle High German drōz annoyance, verdriezen annoy (modern German verdrissen), Old Icelandic thrust struggle, labor, trouble, thrjōta to fail, lack, and Gothic usthriutan to trouble, threaten. —threaten v. Probably before 1200 threatenen; developed from Old English thrēatnian to press, urge, force (about 1000); formed from thrēat + -nian -en¹.

three adj. 1123 thre, developed from Old English (before 830) thrēo, feminine and neuter, (masculine thri, thrie) from Proto-Germanic thrijiz*, and cognate with Old Frisian thrē, thriā, thriū, Old Saxon thria, thriu, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch drie, Old High German dri, drīo, driu (modern German drei), Old Icelandic thri, thriar, thriū (Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian tre), and Gothic thrija. —threefold adj. About 1000, comprising three parts, kinds, etc.; later, three times as great or as many (about 1200); adv. (about 1020). —three-score adj., n. (about 1388) —threeosome n. (1375) threnody n. 1634, borrowed from Greek thrēnōidiā (thrēnos dirge, lament + ōidē ode); for suffix see -y³.

thresh v. Probably about 1200 thresshen, developed from Old English threscan, therscan to beat, sift grain by trampling or beating (about 750), related to thrāwan to twist, turn; see THROW. Old English threscan, therscan is cognate with Middle Dutch derscen, dorscen to thresh (modern Dutch dorsen), Old High German dreskan (modern German dreschen), Old Icelandic thriskja (Danish tærskje, Norwegian treske, and Swedish tröska), and Gothic thriskan, from Proto-Germanic threskanan*.

threshold n. Before 1376 thresshewold; found in the Old English compound threscold, thærscolwold doorsill, point of entering (before 899). The first element of the compound is related to Old English threscan, therscan to THRESH, perhaps originally to tread, trample; the second element has not been identified. The Old English forms for threshold, doorsill are cognate with Old Icelandic threskjöldr threshold (Swedish tröskel, Norwegian terskel, Danish tærskel).

thrice adv. Probably before 1200 thries (thrie thrice + -es, genitive singular ending used adverbially; see -s³). Middle English thrie developed from Old English (about 950) thriga, thriwa thrice, from thrie THREE. Old English thriga, thriwa is cognate with Old Frisian thria thrice, and Old Saxon thriio, thriwo.

The final -s in thries was voiceless (not pronounced as z), and so about 1600 it began to be spelled -ce, as in hence, pence, ice, mice, to represent this pronunciation.

thrift n. Probably before 1300, prosperity, savings, profit; from thrive to THRIVE; probably influenced by Old Icelandic thrift, variant of thrif prosperity, from thrifask to thrive. The sense of a habit of saving, economy, is first recorded in 1553. Compare SPENDTHRIFT. —thrifty adj. About 1385 thrifti respectable, thriving, successful, fortunate; formed from thrift + -i -y¹. The sense of economical, frugal, saving, appeared in 1526.

thrill v. Before 1325 thrillen to pierce, penetrate; alteration (by metathesis of i and r) of thirlen, earlier thurlen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 1000) thýrlan, from thýrel (earlier thýrhl*) hole, from thurh THROUGH. The meaning of give a shivering, exciting feeling, is first recorded in 1592. —n. Before 1680, a shivering, exciting feeling; from the verb.

thrive v. Probably about 1200 thrifenn to flourish, prosper; later thrive (probably before 1300); borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic thrifask to thrive; originally, grasp to oneself (Swedish trivas thrive, Danish and Norwegian trives), probably derived from Old Icelandic thriða to clutch, grip, grasp (Norwegian trive to grab, seize, and Swedish treva to grope, grab); of unknown origin.

throat n. Old English (before 700) throthe (implied in Old English throtholla throat boll, the Adam's apple, larynx), related to thriutan to swell, possibly with reference to the external appearance of the throat; cognate with Old High German drozza throat (modern German Drossel), and Old Icelandic throtti a swelling, thriutna to swell, from Proto-Germanic thrut-*. —throaty adj. About 1645, guttural, hoarse; formed from English throat + *-y*¹.

throb v. Before 1376 throbben beat rapidly or strongly (implied in throbbant throbbing); of uncertain origin (possibly imitative in the sense of representing the pulsation of arteries, veins, and heart). —n. 1579, from the verb.

throe n. Probably before 1200 throwe violent spasm, pain; of uncertain origin; possibly from the verb throwen (Old English thraūwan) twist, turn, writhe; see THROW; or an altered form (influenced by throwen to suffer) of thraue, developed from Old English threā (genitive thraue) affliction, pang, evil, threat, related to throwian to suffer. Old English threā (from Proto-Germanic thrawō*) is cognate with Middle Low German draue, drouwe threat, Old High German draua, drōa, Old Icelandic threā longing. The spelling throe is first recorded in 1615. The sense (usually throes) of a violent convulsion or struggle (as in the throes of a revolution) is first recorded in 1698.

thrombosis n. 1706, New Latin, from Greek thrōmbōsis a clumping or curdling, from thrōmbōsthai become curdled or clotted, from thrōmbos clot, curd, lump; for suffix see -OSIS. The sense was known somewhat earlier in thrombus a clot (1693, New Latin, from Greek thrōmbos).

throne n. Probably before 1200 trone; later throne (about 1300); borrowed from Old French trone, from Latin thronus, from Greek thrōnos seat, chair, throne.

throng n. Probably before 1300 thronge crowd, crowding, pressure; also thrang; probably a shortened form of Old English (993) gethrang, related to thringan to push, crowd, press. Old English gethrang (from Proto-Germanic thranzān*) is cognate with Middle Dutch dranc throng, pressure, crowd (modern Dutch drang), Middle High German gedranc, dranc (modern German Drang), Old Icelandic throng throng, crowd, Gothic threihan to crowd, press (from Proto-Germanic thren-Hanan*). —v. Before 1325 thringen to press, compress, squeeze; probably from the noun. The sense of to crowd, go in a crowd, is first recorded probably before 1542.

throstle n. Old English (before 800) throstle; cognate with Old Saxon throsla thrush, Old High German drōschala, Middle High German (Bavarian) drōschel (modern German Drossel); see THRUSH. Old English throstle developed from Proto-Germanic thrustalō*, altered from thurstaz*.

throttle v. Before 1387 throtelen; probably formed from Middle English throthe THROAT + *-LE*³. —n. 1824, in throttle-valve, from the sense of the throat (before 1547); probably formed from Middle English throthe throat + *-LE*¹.

through prep., adv. Before 1375 throu, alteration (by metathesis of r and u) of earlier thurh (about 1175); developed from Old English thurh (about 750), later also thuruh (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian thruich through, Old Saxon thurh, thuru, Middle Dutch dore (modern Dutch door), Old High German durh, duruh (from Proto-West-Germanic thurH*) and Gothic thairh; not found in Scandinavian.

Old English thuruh developed into modern English thorough and became differentiated, being used chiefly as an adjective while through is used as the preposition and (less exclusively) as the adverb. Similar formation is found in burh which became borough and furh, furrow. —throughout adv., prep. About 1066 thurhūt; found in thurh ut through out (about 1000).

throw v. Probably before 1200 thrauwēn to twist, turn; later throwen to cast, hurl (probably before 1300); developed from Old English thraūwan to twist, turn, writhe (about 1000); cognate with Old Saxon thraūan to twist, turn, Middle Dutch draeyēn (modern Dutch draaien), and Old High German drāen (modern German drehen), from Proto-Germanic thrē-*. The word is not found in Scandinavian and Gothic.

The sense of put by force (as in throw into prison) is first recorded in 1560, and the meaning of lose deliberately, let win, in 1868. —n. 1530, from the verb.

thrum v. 1592, from the noun, or of imitative origin similar to that of the noun. —n. Before 1553, of imitative origin.

thrush n. About 1250 thrusche, developed from Old English (about 1000) thyrsc, related to throstle THROSTLE. Old English thyrsc (from Proto-Germanic thruskjōn*) is cognate with Old High German drōsca(la), from Proto-Germanic thrau(d)-sk-*.

thrust v. Probably before 1200 thrusten push with force; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thrýsta to thrust, force, from Proto-Germanic thrustjanan*). —n. 1513, act of pressing, pressure; from the verb. The sense of act of pushing with force is found in 1580–83, and that of propulsive force (as by a jet engine) in 1870.

thud v. Probably before 1200 thudden to strike, thrust; developed from Old English thyddan (before 899), earlier thud-janan*. The sense of hit with a dull sound, is found in 1796 (implied in thudding). —n. 1535 thude a loud sound, Scottish, from the verb. The sense of a dull sound, is first recorded in 1825.

thug n. 1810, member of a gang of robbers and murderers in India who strangled their victims; borrowed from Hindi thag, perhaps from Sanskrit sthaga-s cunning, fraudulent, possibly from stthagayati (he) covers, conceals. The sense of ruffian or cutthroat is first recorded in 1839.

thulium n. 1879, New Latin, from Latin Thūlē Thule (from Greek Thoulē) the part of the world that the ancient Greeks and Romans regarded as farthest north + New Latin -ium.

thumb n. 1137 thumb, developed from Old English (before 800) thūma thumb; cognate with Old Frisian thūma, tūma thumb, Old Saxon thūmo, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch dūme (modern Dutch duim), Old High German thūmo (modern German Daumen), and Old Icelandic thumall thumb of a glove (Danish and Norwegian tommel, Swedish tumme), from Proto-Germanic thūman-* the stout or thick (finger). For a note on the spelling with b, see under LIMB¹, n. —v. 1593, to play (a musical instrument) with or as with the thumbs; from the noun. The meaning of go through (as in thumb through a book) is found in 1930, though a related sense of soil or wear, by handling, especially a book, is found as in 1644–47.

thump v. About 1537 (implied in thumper); probably imitative of the sound made by hitting with a heavy object. —n. 1552, from the verb.

thunder n. About 1250 thunder; earlier thunre (probably before 1200); developed from Old English thunor (before 899); earlier thuner (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian thuner thunder, Old Saxon thunar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch donder, Old High German donar (modern German Donner), and Old Icelandic Thorr god of thunder (earlier poetic form Thunnarr), from Proto-Germanic thunraz*. The intrusive d in English thunder also appears in Dutch donder; compare also Old Icelandic Thundr (genitive Thundar) one of the names of the god Odin. —v. Before 1338 thundren, developed from Old English thunrian (before 899); from the noun. —thunderbolt n. About 1440, formed from Middle English thunder + bolt arrow, projectile. —thunderclap n. (about 1390)

Thursday n. Before 1250 thursdei, developed from Old English Thurresdæg (about 1000), perhaps a contraction (influenced by Old Icelandic Thörsdagr Thursday) of Thunresdæg; literally, Thor's day (Thunre, genitive of Thunor Thor, from thunor THUNDER + dæg DAY). Old English Thunresdæg corresponds to Old Frisian Thunresdei Thursday, Middle Dutch Donresdach (modern Dutch Donderdag), Middle Low German Donersdach, and Old High German Donares Tag (modern German Donnerstag). The Germanic compounds are loan translations of Latin Jovis diēs, day of Jove or Jupiter.

thus adv. Old English thus in this way (about 725, in Beowulf), related to thæt THAT. Old English thus is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon thus and Middle Dutch dus, dos (modern Dutch dus).

thwart adv., prep. across, crosswise. Probably before 1200 thwert- (as in thwertover athwart over); later thwart (about 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thvert across; originally neuter of thverr, adj., transverse, cross). Old Icelandic thverr is cognate with Old English thweorh transverse, perverse, angry, cross, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch duers, duars (modern Dutch duars), Old High German duerah, twerh (modern German zwerch-), Gothic thwairhs angry, from Proto-Germanic thwerHaz*, altered (by influence of thwer-* to turn) from therH-*. —v. About 1250 thwerten run counter to, oppose, hinder; from thwert- across. —adj. Probably about 1200 thwert, about 1250 thwart; from the adverb. —n. 1611, act of thwarting, hindrance; from the verb. The seat across a canoe (1736), is probably from the adjective.

thy adj. Probably before 1200 thi, reduced form of thin THINE, used before consonants, except h.

thyme n. Before 1398 thyme; earlier as a surname Thymme (1266); borrowed from Old French thym the plant, and directly from Latin thymum, from Greek thýmon possibly first used as incense, from thýein burn as a sacrifice.

thymus n. 1693, New Latin, from Greek thýmos a warty excrescence; probably so called because it was likened to a bunch of thyme.

thyroid adj. 1693, thyroides, in translation from French; later thyroid (1726–41); borrowed from Greek thyreoeidēs shield-shaped, from thyreós oblong, door-shaped shield, from thyra door + -eidēs in the form of, -oid. —n. 1840, principal cartilage of the larynx; 1849–52, thyroid gland; from the adjective.

ti n. 1839 te, seventh note of the musical scale; about 1845 tj; replacement of earlier si, to avoid confusion with so, sol.

tiara n. 1555, headdress of the Persian kings, also worn by men of rank; borrowed from Latin tiāra, from Greek tiārā, tiārās. The form tiar is found in 1513.

tibia n. 1726–41, borrowed from Latin tibia shinbone; earlier, pipe or flute.

tic n. 1822, (often shortened form of tic douloureux, 1800; a severe facial neuralgia; literally, painful twitch); borrowed from French tic a twitching disease of horses (1611); of unknown origin.

tick¹ n. tiny parasitic animal. About 1310 tik, perhaps developed from Old English tica* or tica*, recorded in Old English as ticia tick (before 850); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tēke tick (modern Dutch teek), Middle High German zeche (modern German Zecke).

tick² n. sound made by a clock or watch. 1440 tek light touch or tap; later tick (1580); probably cognate with Dutch tik light touch or tap, Middle High German zic, and dialectal Norwegian tikka touch lightly. The meaning of a sound made by a clock is found possibly in tick-tack (1549). —v. 1546, to touch lightly, tap; from the noun.

tick³ n. cloth covering of a mattress or pillow. 1342 tyke, probably borrowed from Middle Dutch tike, tēke (cognate with Old High German ziahha tick, pillowcase, modern German Ziehe), a West Germanic borrowing from Latin thēca case, from Greek thēkē a case, box, cover, sheath. —ticking n. 1649, cloth covering for mattresses and pillows.

ticket n. 1528, short note or document; borrowed from Middle French etiquet label, note, from Old French estiquette label, note, especially one affixed to a gate or wall as a public notice, from estiquer to affix, stick, from Frankish stikēan*, cognate with Old English stician to pierce, *STICK*².

The card or piece of paper that gives its holder a right or privilege (1673), probably developed from the meaning of a certificate, license, permit (1529). —v. 1611, from the noun.

tickle v. Before 1338 tikellen; of uncertain origin, possibly a frequentative form of *tick*² to touch lightly (with *-LE*³). —n. 1801, from the verb. —ticklish adj. 1581, (figurative) sensitive, touchy; later, delicate, critical, risky (1591); formed from English tickle, v. + *-ish*¹. The sense of easily tickled is first recorded in 1598.

tick-tack-toe n. 1884, probably an extension tick-tack a form of backgammon (1558, possibly borrowed from Middle French trictrac).

tidbit n. About 1640, probably formed from dialectal tid fond, solicitous, tender + bit morsel.

tide n. Before 1121 tide a season of the year; developed from Old English tīd point or portion of time, due time (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon tīd time, Middle Low German tīt, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch tijt time (modern Dutch tij tide of the sea), Old High German zīt time (modern German Zeit), and Old Icelandic tīdh (Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian tīd), from Proto-Germanic tīdis*. The meaning of rise and fall of the sea (1340) is probably a borrowing from Middle Low German, perhaps coalescing with the earlier sense of fixed time. —v. 1593 (implied in tiding), to flow or surge as the tide does; from the noun. —tidal adj. 1807, formed from English tide, n. + *-al*¹.

tiding n. Usually tidings pl. Probably before 1200 tidinge, developed from Late Old English tīdung event, occurrence, piece of news (1069); perhaps in part a verbal noun of Old English tīdan to happen, or borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tīdhendi, pl., events, news, from tīdh, adj., occurring, from tīdh time).

tidy adj. About 1250 tidi in good condition, fair, healthy; originally, in season, timely, opportune, excellent (tide season, time + *-y*¹). The sense of neat and in order is first recorded in 1706. —v. 1821, from the adjective.

tie n. About 1300 tie cord, rope, band; earlier teg (probably before 1200); developed from Old English tēag (about 750); cognate with Old Icelandic taug rope, from Proto-Germanic tauzō*. The sense of equality in points, votes, etc. between two or more competitors or sides, is found in 1680. The sense of a necktie or cravat is first recorded in 1761. —v. Probably before 1200 teien fasten, unite; developed from Old English tīgan, tīegan (about 1000), from tēag, n.

tier n. Probably before 1450 tir, tire; borrowed from Middle French tire, from Old French tire rank, sequence, order, from tirer to draw, draw out.

tiff n. 1727, outburst of temper; later, small quarrel (1754); of uncertain origin. —v. 1727, probably from the noun.

tiger n. Probably before 1300 tigre, developed from Old English tīgras, pl. (before 1000), and in part borrowed from Old French tigre; both from Latin tigris tiger, from Greek tigris, possibly from an Iranian source.

tight adj. Probably before 1400 tyght dense, solid; earlier tigt (about 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thēttir watertight, close in texture, solid, Norwegian tett, Danish tæt, Swedish tät tight, close, compact). Old Icelandic thēttir is presumably (through earlier thēttir*, from Proto-Germanic thenHtuiz*), the source of Middle English thight close, dense, and it is probable that tight and thight (about 1375) were confused. However, both English words seem to have developed the specific sense of watertight independently by the early 1500's, and maintained their separate use into the 1800's, so that tight cannot truly be said to be the variant of thight. Old Icelandic thēttir is cognate with Old English -thīht in metethīht stout from eating, and Middle High German dīhte dense, thick (modern German dicht).

The meaning of not letting water, etc., out or in, is first recorded in English in 1507, that of fixed firmly in place, in 1513, and drawn or stretched, in 1576. The sense of fitting closely appeared in 1779. —adv. 1680, from the adjective. —tighten v. 1727, formed from English tight + *-en*¹.

tilde n. 1864, borrowed from Spanish, alteration of Catalan tíle (later títlla), from Latin titulus inscription, heading, TITLE.

tile n. Before 1325 tile, developed as a contracted form of earlier tigel, from Old English (before 800) tigele; borrowed from Latin tēgula tile, from tegere roof, cover. Other Germanic borrowings from the Latin are found in Old Saxon tiegla tile, Middle Dutch tiegel (modern Dutch tegel), Old High German ziagala, ziagal (modern German Ziegel), and Old Icelandic tigl (Danish and Norwegian tegl, Swedish tegel). —v. About 1375 tilen; from the noun.

till¹ prep. until. About 1200, developed from Old English (before 800) Northumbrian til; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic, Danish and Norwegian til to, until, Swedish till; cognate with Old Frisian til to, until). These words are common prepositions in Scandinavian, taking the place of to as used in English, and probably originally accusative of a lost noun (Proto-Germanic tilan*), except as found in Icelandic tili, tíli scope, the noun used to express aim, direction, purpose, as seen in Old Icelandic aldrtíli end of life, death; compare TILL². —conj. 1137 til, from the preposition, in Old English.

till² v. cultivate (land), plow. 1137 tilen, developed from Old English (before 850) tilian cultivate, tend, work at; originally, strive after, related to till fixed point, goal, and til good, suitable; see TILL¹. Old English tilian is cognate with Old Frisian tilia to get, cultivate, Old Saxon tilian to obtain, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch telen to breed, raise, cultivate, Old High German zil goal (modern German Ziel), Old High German zilon, zilen to strive (modern German zielen to aim, strive), from Proto-Germanic tilōjanan*, and Gothic gatils suitable; compare TILL¹.

till³ n. drawer for money, cashbox. Before 1450, borrowed from Anglo-French tylle compartment, Old French tille compartment or shelter on a ship, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic thilja plank, floorboard; from Proto-Germanic theljon*).

tiller n. Before 1325 tilier stock of a crossbow; borrowed from Old French telier stock of a crossbow; originally, weaver's beam, from Medieval Latin telarium, from Latin tēla web, loom. The bar to turn the rudder of a boat (before 1625) is a development in English.

tilt v. Probably about 1350 tulten; probably about 1380 tylten to push over, fall over; developed from Old English tyltan* for tieltan*, from tealt unsteady, from Proto-Germanic taltaz*. Old English tealt, and its corresponding verb tealtian be unsteady, are cognate with Middle Dutch touteren to tremble, and dialectal Norwegian tylta walk softly.

The meaning of lean, tip, slope (1594) is from the sense of the verb "push or fall over." —n. Before 1510, place for holding jousts; from the verb, in the sense of push over, overthrow. The sense of a sloping position appeared in 1562.

timber n. Old English (before 750) timber building, structure; later, building material, trees suitable for building (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian timber building, Old Saxon timbar, Middle Dutch timmer building, wood (modern Dutch timmer timber), Old High German zimbar dwelling, room, wood (modern German Zimmer room), and Old Icelandic timbr timber (Swedish timmer, Norwegian and Danish tømmer), from Proto-Germanic temran*. —v. Probably before 1200 timbrēn to build, construct; developed from Old English (before 750) timbran, timbrian, derived from timber, n., and cognate with Old Frisian timbria to build, Old Saxon timbrian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch timmeren, Old High German zimbarōn (modern German zimmern to frame), Old Icelandic timbra (Swedish timra, Danish and Norwegian tømre), and Gothic timrjan.

timbre n. 1849, borrowing of French timbre quality of a sound; earlier, sound of a bell, from Old French, bell without a clapper; originally, a drum, probably through Medieval Greek timbanon*, from Greek týmpanon kettledrum.

time n. 1154, developed from Old English tīma (before 899), related to tīd time; see TIDE. Old English tīma is cognate with Old Icelandic tīmi time, proper time, good time (Swedish timme, Norwegian and Danish time hour), from Proto-Germanic tīmōn*.

Some extended meanings are original to Old English, such as that of an occasion (as in This time we will succeed, before 899), and the right time (as in time to eat, before 899); other meanings are developments in Middle English, such as that of leisure (as in have time to read, about 1220), or the plural times multiplied by (about 1380). —v. About 1250 timen fare well; later, arrange the time for an event (probably about 1390). The sense of measure or note the time, rate, or duration of, is first recorded in 1670. —timely adj. 1382, formed from Middle English time + *-ly*².

timid adj. 1549, borrowed from Middle French timide easily frightened, shy, and directly from Latin timidus fearful, from timēre to fear. —timidity n. 1598, quality of being timid; borrowed from Latin timiditas fearfulness, from timidus fearful, timid; for suffix see -ITY.

timorous adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French timoureux, from Medieval Latin timorosus fearful, from Latin timor fear, from timēre to fear; for suffix see -OUS.

timpani n. pl. 1876 (1740 timpano, singular), borrowing of Italian timpani drums, from Latin tympanum drum; see TYMPANUM. —timpanist n. 1939, formed from English timpani + -ist.

tin n. Old English (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch tin tin, Old High German zin (modern German Zinn), and Old Icelandic tin (Danish tin, Norwegian tinn, Swedish tenn), from Proto-Germanic tinan*. —v. Before 1398 tinnen, from the noun. —tin foil n. (1467–68) —tinny adj. (1552, of tin; 1884, in-substantial). —Tin Pan Alley, 1908, musicians, songwriters, and their publishers as a group; 1909, district frequented by musicians, songwriters, and their publishers; formed from tin pan tinny piano (1882) + alley.

tincture n. 1400, pigment, dye; borrowed from Latin tinctura act of dyeing or tingeing, from tinctus dye, past participle of tingere to tinge; for suffix see -URE. The solution of medicine in a mixture of alcohol is recorded before 1648. —v. 1616, to dye, color, tinge; from the noun.

tinder n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 800) tynder, tyndre, related to or derived from Old English tendan to kindle, and cognate with Middle Low German tunder tinder, Dutch tondel, tonder, Old High German zuntra (modern German Zunder), Old Icelandic tundr (Danish and Norwegian tønder, Swedish tunder), Gothic tundnan to catch fire, and tandjan to kindle.

tine n. About 1350 tyne, a reduced form (with loss of d) of Old English (before 800) tind; cognate with Middle Low German tind tine, Middle High German zinke, zint point, spike, tine (modern German Zinke), Old Icelandic tindr tine (Danish and Norwegian tind, Swedish tinne), and probably with Old High German zinna pinnacle (modern German Zinne), of unknown origin.

tinge v. 1471 tingen to dye, color; borrowed from Latin tingere to dye, color, moisten. —n. 1752, from the verb.

tingle v. Before 1382 tinglen have a ringing sensation at hearing something; later, to have a stinging or thrilling feeling (before 1398); variant of tinkelen TINKLE. —n. Before 1700, a tinkling sound; later, a tingling sensation or action (1848); from the verb.

tinker n. About 1378 tynkere; as a surname Tynker (1252); of uncertain origin. —v. 1592 (implied in tinkering), to mend, especially in a clumsy way; from the noun. The sense of keep busy in a useless way is found in 1658.

tinkle v. Before 1382 tinklen to ring, jingle; possibly a frequentative form of tinken to ring, jingle (also before 1382), perhaps of imitative origin; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1682, a tinkling sound; from the verb.

tinsel n. About 1448 tyneseyle shining metallic thread; borrowed from Middle French estincelle, estencele spark, spangle; see STENCIL. —v. 1594, from the noun. —adj. 1595, from the noun, in attributive use (1502) of made to sparkle by interweaving metallic thread or overlaying a thin coating of gold or silver.

tint n. 1717, alteration of tinct (1602); borrowed from Latin tinctus (genitive tinctūs) a dyeing, from tingere to dye; influenced by Italian tinta tint, hue, from Latin tinctus. Compare TINCTURE. —v. 1791, from the noun.

tintinnabulation n. 1845, formed from Latin tintinnābulum bell + English -ation; probably influenced by tintinnabulary (1787), tintinnabulatory (1827), etc., and tintinnabulum a small bell (before 1398). Latin tintinnābulum derives from the verb tintinnāre to ring, jingle, a reduplicated form of tinnire to ring.

tiny adj. 1598 tynie, 1599 tiny, formed from Middle English tyne very small (before 1400) + -ie, -y¹.

-tion a suffix forming nouns from verbs, and meaning act or process of ____ing, as in addition; condition or state of being ____ed, as in exhaustion; result of ____ing, as in reflection. Found especially in the form -ATION; see also -SION.

English -tion was borrowed from Latin -tiōnem (accusative of noun suffix -tiō, a compound fusing abstract noun stem -ti- and -iō, accusative -iōnem, a suffix forming nouns of condition and action).

Often -tion is a spelling replacement of Middle English -tioun, borrowed from Old French -tion, -cion, from Latin -tiōnem (nominative -tiō), and forms words modeled on derivatives from Latin and French (protect, protection and opt, option).

tip¹ v. to slope, overturn. Probably about 1380 typen to overthrow, overturn, of uncertain origin (possibly from a Scandinavian source, and then later perhaps a special use of tip² end, point, top, suggested by use with up, over, etc.). The sense of to slope, tilt, is found in 1624. —n. 1673, the upsetting of a bowling pin; from the verb. The sense of an act of sloping or tilting appeared in 1849. —tipsy adj. 1577, probably formed from English tip + -sy, as in drowsy.

tip² n. end, point, top. Probably before 1200 tippe; cognate with, and perhaps derived from, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch (modern Dutch) tip utmost point, extremity, tip, also cognate with Middle High German zipf (modern German Zipfel); ultimately probably from the same root as Old English tæppa stopper, TAP². —v. put a tip on. About 1395 tippen; from the noun. —tiptoe n. (about 1390); adv. (1592); adj. (1593) on tiptoe; from the noun; v. 1632 (implied in tiptoed); from the noun.

tip³ v. give a small present of money to. 1610, to give, hand, pass, originally thieves' cant; perhaps from TIP⁴ to tap. The meaning of give a gratuity to is first found in 1706–07. The sense of give confidential information 1883, implied in tippling, is probably from the noun. —n. 1755, small present of money; from the verb. The sense of a piece of confidential information, helpful hint, is first recorded in 1845.

tip⁴ n. light, sharp blow or tap. About 1450 tippe; possibly cognate with, or even derived from, Low German tippen to poke, touch lightly, related to Middle Low German tip end, point, TIP². —v. to hit lightly and sharply, tap. 1567, from the noun.

tipple v. 1531 (implied in tippling, verbal noun) sell alcoholic liquor by retail, of uncertain origin (possibly of Scandinavian origin; compare Norwegian tippe to drip, tinkle); or a back formation from earlier tippler. The meaning of drink (alcoholic liquor) often or too much is found in 1560. —n. an alcoholic liquor. 1581, from the verb. —tippler n. 1396 tipeler seller of alcoholic liquors; of uncertain origin.

tirade n. 1801, borrowing of French tirade speech, volley, shot, continuation, drawing out; formed from tirer draw out, endure, suffer, probably from a shortened form of Old French martirer, martirier endure martyrdom + -ade. The Old French forms developed from martyrie, martyre martyrdom, suffering, from Late Latin martyrium martyrdom, witness, testimony, from Greek martýrion, from mártyr MARTYR.

tire¹ v. to weary. Before 1460 tyren, developed from Old English tēorian (about 1000), in Kentish tiorian (before 800), of unknown origin.

tire² n. band around a wheel. 1485 tyre iron rim of a carriage wheel, probably from earlier tire equipment, dress, covering (about 1300); shortened form of ATTIRE. In the 1600's and 1700's the standard British and American spelling was tire. But since the beginning of the 1800's the spelling tyre has been revived to become standard in Great Britain. —v. furnish with a tire. Before 1899, from the noun.

tissue n. About 1385 tyssew band or belt of rich material; borrowed from Old French tissu a ribbon, headband, belt of woven material, noun use of tissu woven, interlaced, past participle of tistre to weave, from Latin texere weave. The sense in biology of the masses of cells forming the "fabric" or parts of animals or plants is first recorded in 1831.

tit¹ n. small bird. 1706, shortened form of TITMOUSE.

tit² n. nipple, teat. Old English titt (about 950); see TEAT.

tit³ n. See TIT FOR TAT.

Titan n. 1727–41 (in 1667, ancestor of the Titans), borrowed from Latin Tiān, from Greek Tiān member of a mythological race of giants. The sense of a person or thing of enormous size, strength, or intellect, is first found in 1828. —titanic adj. 1656, of or belonging to the sun; 1709, of or like the Titans, gigantic, colossal; borrowed from Greek Tiānikós of the Titans, from Tiān Titan; for suffix see -IC.

titanium n. 1796, New Latin, formed from Latin Tiān TITAN + New Latin -ium, on the analogy of uranium in German.

tit for tat blow for blow, like for like. 1556, possibly an alteration of tip for tap blow for blow (*tip*⁴ tap, *tap*¹ touch lightly).

tithe n. Before 1338 tithe tax of one tenth of a yearly produce paid to support the church; earlier tigthe (about 1250), tigethe (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 737) Anglian teogotha tenth (earlier tegūnthōn*), West Saxon (854) tēotha (from Proto-Germanic teHūnthōn*). Old English teogotha is cognate with Old Frisian tegotha tenth, Old Saxon tegotho, Middle Low German tegede, Old High German zehanto (modern German zehnte), Old Icelandic tiundi, and Gothic talhunda, from Proto-Germanic teHundōn*. —v. Probably before 1200 tithen put or pay a tithe on; developed from Old English (854) tēothian, from tēotha tenth.

titillate v. 1620, back formation from English titillation, modeled on Latin titillāus, past participle of titillāre to tickle; for suffix see -ATE¹. —titillation n. About 1425 titilacion; borrowed from Latin titillatiōnem (nominative titillatiō) a tickling, from titillāre tickle; for suffix see -ATION.

title n. About 1303 tytyl inscription, heading; in part a borrowing of Old French title, and in part developed from Old English titul (about 950); both borrowed from Latin titulus inscription, heading. The name of a book, play, etc., is first recorded about 1340, title deeds (probably about 1421), and a name showing a person's rank, occupation, etc. (as Dr., Esq.), (1590). —v. Before 1325 titlen give a title to, entitle; from the noun.

titmouse n. About 1325 titmose, formed probably from tit (as found in titling, 1386, expressing something small, and in Old Icelandic tittr titmouse) + Middle English mose titmouse (about 1250). Middle English mose developed from Old English māse (before 800), and was later influenced in spelling by mouse. Old English māse is cognate with Middle Dutch mēse titmouse (modern Dutch mees), Old High German meisa (modern German Meise), and Old Icelandic meisingr. Old High German meisa is from Proto-Germanic maisōn*, built on an adjective maisa-* little, tiny, whence Norwegian dialect meis a thin, weak person.

titter v. Before 1619, giggle; probably of imitative origin. —n. 1728, from the verb.

titile n. About 1384 titil small stroke or point in writing very little bit (said to be a rendering of apex in the Late Latin sense of accent mark over a vowel); borrowed (perhaps by influence of Provençal titule the dot over i) from Latin titulus inscription, heading.

titular adj. 1591, formed perhaps by influence of Middle French titulaire, from Latin titulus TITLE + English -ar.

tizzy n. 1935, of uncertain origin (perhaps related to tizzy a sixpence piece, 1804, as in "A man reads at a tizzy what he had not read when priced at twelve times the humble tanner," with a play on words for the sense "little" in amount of money and time).

to prep., adv. Old English tō in the direction of, for the purpose of, furthermore, until (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian tō, adv., to, te, ti, prep.; Old Saxon tō, adv., te, prep.; Middle Dutch and modern Dutch toe, adv., te, prep.; Old High German zuo, adv., za, zi, ze, prep. (modern German zu).

In early Old English the preposition (go to London) leveled with the adverb (the door slammed to) into one form. But Old English tō, adverb, where it retained its stress (hungry and thirsty too) came to be written too (see TOO).

Beside the simple infinitive ending -an (Middle English -en), Old English had a dative form, which in Middle English blended with the infinitive. This dative form was preceded by the preposition tō, expressing motion, direction, inclination, purpose, etc., as in "he came to help (i.e. to the help of) his friends." This sense of the preposition weakened and tō became a link expressing any prepositional relation between an infinitive and a preceding verb, adjective, or noun (wants to go, nice to see, a book to read). Use of the infinitive with to further increased with loss of inflectional endings in and the resulting need to distinguish the infinitive. The simple infinitive (without to) survives only in auxiliary verbs like shall, may, can, and after certain verbs (make, let, hear, feel, etc.).

Although in Middle English to was fairly commonly used in combination with verbs, nouns, adjectives, and adverbs in the sense of motion, direction, or addition to (as in to-cast add, to-hear listen to, to-tach attach, to-against against), the surviving uses of to in compounds are found in to-do, together, and in expressions of time today, tonight, and tomorrow.

toad n. Probably before 1300 tode; earlier tadde (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) tādige, tādie, of unknown origin.

toadstool n. Before 1398 tadstole mushroom; apparently a fanciful name formed from Middle English tadde TOAD + stole STOOL.

toady n. 1826, apparently shortened from toad-eater (1742), with the same meaning; originally referring to the assistant of a charlatan, employed to eat poisonous toads to enable his master to display his skill in expelling the poison (1629); for suffix see -y². —v. act like a toady. 1827, from the noun.

toast¹ v. to brown by heat. Before 1398 tosten, borrowed from Old French toster to roast or grill, from Vulgar Latin tostāre*, frequentative form of Latin torrere to parch. —n. About 1400 tost, from tosten to toast.

toast² n. a call to drink to someone's health. Perhaps before 1684, but first attested in 1700, a beautiful or popular woman whose health is proposed and drunk. Origin of the term has been explained as referring to an incident at Bath, England in the time of Charles II, when a beauty of the time was found standing in a bath and admirers drank to her health from the water, one however, declining the water but desiring the toast (an allusion to TOAST¹, from the fact that spiced toast was used to flavor drinks). By 1746 the word was applied to any person whose health is proposed and drunk. —v. Before 1700 tost, (1701 toast) to propose a toast, drink to someone's health; probably from the noun.

tobacco n. 1597, alteration of earlier tobaco (1588), borrowing of Spanish tabaco, in part from an Arawakan (probably Taino) language of the Caribbean, meaning a roll of tobacco leaves or a kind of pipe for smoking tobacco. However, while it is a fact that the tobacco plant and the custom of smoking its leaves (already observed by Columbus in 1492) did originate in the New World, Spanish tabaco (also known in Italian tabacco, Spanish atabaca, tabaca, and similar words, about 1410 as the names of medicinal herbs), also came from Arabic ṭabbāq or ṭubbāq, attested since the 800's A.D. as the names of various herbs. It is possible, therefore, that the Spaniards transferred the European plant name to the American plant, just as corn, turkey, robin, and other European (English) names were applied to different plants and animals in North America. —tobacconist n. 1599, person addicted to tobacco; formed from English tobacco + inserted -n- (perhaps suggested by such words as Platonist, 1549) + -ist. The meaning of dealer in tobacco is first found in 1657.

toboggan n. Before 1820 tobogin; borrowed from Canadian French tabagane, tobagan (in French, tobogan), from Algonquian (probably Micmac) tobākun a sled. —v. 1846, from the noun.

tocsin n. 1586 tocksaine, borrowed from Middle French to-quassen an alarm bell, the ringing of an alarm bell, from Old Provençal tocasenh, formed from tocar to strike (from Vulgar Latin toccāre* strike a bell) + senh bell, bell note (from Late Latin signum bell, ringing of a bell, in Latin, mark or signal). The spelling tocsin appeared in English in 1794, adopted from modern French.

today adv. Probably about 1200 to dai; developed from Old English (before 899) tō dæge on (the) day (tō at, on; see TO + dæge, dative of dæg DAY); written as two words until the 1500's, after which it was written to-day until the present century. —n. 1535, this day; from the adverb.

toddle v. About 1600 todde, Scottish and Northern British English, of uncertain origin (not originally related to toddle, which does not appear in this sense before 1821, perhaps as a back formation from toddler; but possibly related to totter, 1534 in tottering). An earlier sense of to toy, play, is found in 1500–20. —n. 1825, from the verb. —toddler n. 1793, formed from English toddle, v. + -er¹.

toddy n. 1620, alteration of earlier taddy (1611) and tarrie (1609–10) beverage made from fermented palm sap; borrowed from Hindi tārī palm sap, from tār palm tree, from Sanskrit tāla-. The sense of a beverage made of alcoholic liquor with hot water, sugar, and spices, is first recorded in 1786.

to-do n. 1570–76, formed from the verb phrase to do, Old English tō dōn proper or necessary to be done (tō, prep., see TO + dōn DO¹ act). Compare ADO.

toe n. Probably before 1300 to, developed from Old English (before 900) tā, in plural tān, contraction of tāhe*, in Mercian tāhae (before 800); cognate with Middle Low German tē toe (Old Low German tēha*), Middle Dutch tee (modern Dutch teen), Old High German zēha (modern German Zehe), and Old Icelandic tā (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish tå), from Proto-Germanic taiHwō* (probably formerly meaning “finger” as well). —v. 1607–08, to furnish with a toe or toes (as in toeing a stocking); from the noun. The meaning of touch or reach with the toes (as in toe a line) is found in 1833. —toenail n. (1841) toffee n. Before 1825 tuffy, toughy, southern British English variant of TAFFY. The spelling toffee is first recorded in 1862.

tog n. 1708, any outer garment, shortened form of togman or togeman cloak or loose coat (1567), an obsolete thieves' cant word; formed in English from French togue cloak, from Latin toga TOGA + -man, a cant suffix; also probably influenced by Middle English toge a toga (before 1400), a cant word for coat. The plural togs clothes, is first recorded in 1779. —v. 1793, probably from the noun, though perhaps influenced by toged (1604).

toga n. 1600, borrowing of Latin toga cloak or mantle, related to tegere to cover. The sense of a mantle of office is first recorded in 1855.

together adv. Before 1160 togedere, developed from Old English (707) tōgædere (tō, see TO + gædere together, adv., an apparent variant of the adverb geador together, related to gaderian to GATHER). Old English geador is cognate with Old Frisian gader, gadur together, Middle Low German tōgader, and Middle High German gater. For the change of d to th, see GATHER. —adj. 1966, self-assured, free of emotional difficulties, from the adverb.

toggle n. 1769–76 toggel, of uncertain origin, perhaps a frequantitative form of tog tug + *-le*³, earlier confined to nautical use. —toggle bolt (1794).

toil¹ n. hard work, labor. Probably before 1300 toyle turmoil, contention, dispute; borrowed from Anglo-French toil, from toiler agitate, stir up, entangle, variant of Old French toeillier drag about, make dirty, from Latin tudiculāre crush with a small hammer, from tudicula instrument for crushing, from the root tud- of tundere to pound. The sense of hard work, labor (1594) is from the verb. —v. Probably before 1300 toilen to drag, struggle (implied in toiling); borrowed from Anglo-French toiler agitate, stir up. The sense of work hard is recorded before 1376. —toilsome adj. 1581, laborious, tiring; formed from English *toil*¹, n. + *-some*¹.

toil² n. net, snare. Before 1529, borrowed from Middle French toile hunting net, cloth, web, from Old French teile, from Latin tēla web, related to texere to weave. The word is now used largely in the plural (as caught in the toils of the law), a form known as early as 1530.

toilet n. 1540, cover or bag for clothes; borrowed from Middle French toilette a cloth, bag for clothes, diminutive of toile cloth, net, TOIL²; for suffix see -ET.

The act or process of dressing is first recorded in 1681, and the dressing room in 1819; the lavatory or porcelain plumbing fixture appeared in 1895. —adj. 1721, from the noun. —toiletry n. 1892, formed from English toilet, n. + -ry.

token n. About 1250, developed from Old English tācen sign, symbol, evidence (about 725, in Beowulf), related to tācan show, explain, teach. Old English tācen is cognate with Old Frisian tēken token, Old Saxon tēkan, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch tēken (modern Dutch teken), Old High German zeihhan (modern German Zeichen), Old Icelandic teiken (Swedish tecken, Norwegian and Danish tegn), and Gothic taiken sign, wonder, miracle, from Proto-Germanic taikanan*. The sense of a coinlike piece of stamped metal is first recorded in 1598. —adj. nominal. 1915, from the noun. —tokenism n. 1962, formed from token, n. + -ism.

tolerable adj. Probably about 1425, borrowed from Middle French tolerable, and directly from Latin tolerābilis that may be endured, from tolerāre to tolerate; for suffix see -ABLE.

tolerance n. Before 1420 tolleraunce endurance, fortitude; borrowed from Middle French tolérance, and directly from Latin tolerantia endurance, from tolerāns, present participle of tolerāre to bear, endure, tolerate; for suffix see -ANCE. The act of indulging, allowing, forbearance, is first recorded in English in 1765, and an allowable amount of variation, in 1868. —tolerant adj. 1784, formed in English as an adjective to the noun tolerance, and borrowed from French tolérant, present participle of tolérer tolerate, from Latin tolerāre tolerate; for suffix see -ANT.

tolerate v. 1531, to endure, bear; 1533, to allow, permit; either a back formation from toleration, or formed by influence of earlier tolerable or tolerance on the model of Latin tolerātus, past participle of tolerāre to bear, endure; related to tollere to bear, lift up, raise; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —toleration n. 1517–18, permission granted by authority, license; borrowed from Middle French tolération, and directly from Latin toleratiōnem (nominative toleratiō), from tolerāre tolerate; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of an act of allowing, forbearance, appeared in 1582.

toil¹ n. tax or fee. Old English (about 1000, perhaps 963) toll, variant of toln (1023); early borrowing from Late Latin tolōnium, from Latin telōnium, telōnēum tollhouse, from Greek telōnelon tollhouse, from telōnēs tax collector, from tēlos tax. Other early Germanic borrowings from the Late Latin include Old Frisian tolen, tolene toll, Old Saxon tolna, Old High German zol, and Old Icelandic tollr. —v. collect tolls from. Before 1350 (implied in tolling), from the noun. —tollbooth n. (before 1400).

toll² v. to sound with single strokes. 1452 tollen to ring a bell by pulling a rope; possibly special use of tollen to draw, lure (probably before 1200), variant of tillen; developed from Old English -tyllan in betyllan to lure, decoy, and fortyllan draw away, seduce. —n. 1452, probably from the verb.

tom n. 1762, in allusion to the nickname Tōm for Thomas, used in Middle English as a type name for a common man, and about 1303 applied to a male kitten; possibly influenced later by the name of a male cat (“Tom the Cat”) the hero of a popular work “The Life and Adventures of a Cat,” published in 1760. —tomboy n. Before 1553, rude, boisterous boy; formed from English Tom + boy. In 1579 the word was applied to a bold or immodest woman, and by 1592 to a girl who behaves like a spirited, boisterous boy. —tomcat n. 1809, formed from English tom + cat; probably influenced by Tōm the Cat (see tom, n.). —tomfool n. 1650, buffoon, clown; later, silly or stupid person; originally, Tōm Fool, personification of a mentally deficient man, from Middle English Thome Fole (1338–39); formed from Thome Tom + fole FOOL. —tomfoolery n. 1812, formed from English tomfool + -ery.

tomahawk n. 1612 tamahaac, also tomahack; later Tōmahawke (1648); borrowed from Algonquian (probably Powhatan) tamahack a striking instrument. —v. 1711, from the noun.

tomato n. 1753, alteration of earlier tomate (1604); borrowed from Spanish, and perhaps from Portuguese, tomate, from Nahuatl tomatl a tomato. The spelling tomato was probably influenced by earlier potato (1565).

tomb n. Probably before 1200 tumbe, later tomb (before 1325); borrowed from Anglo-French tumbe, and directly from its variant Old French tombe, from Late Latin tumba, from Greek týmbos burial mound, grave, tomb. With the shift in spelling to tomb, the b became silent in English. —v. Probably about 1300 tomben; from the noun.

tome n. 1519, single volume of a literary work; later, book (1573); borrowing of Middle French tome, from Latin tomus section of a book, tome, from Greek tómos volume, section of a book; originally, section, piece cut off, from témnein to cut.

tommyrot n. 1884, formed from earlier tommy a simpleton (1829), diminutive of Tōm (as in TOMFOOL) + rot, n.

tomorrow adv. About 1250 to morwe, developed from Old English (about 897) tō morgenne on (the) morrow (tō at, on; see TO + morgenne, morgne, dative of morgen morning); written as two words until the 1500's, after which it was written to-morrow until this century. —n. About 1390, from the adverb.

tom-tom n. 1693, drum (originally used in India); borrowed from Hindi tam-tam, probably of imitative origin similar to Singhalese tamaṭ tama, and Malay tong-tong.

—atomy a combining form meaning: 1 surgical incision, as in tracheotomy, lobotomy. 2 a cutting or casting off, as in autotomy = a casting off of part of the body. Borrowed from Greek -tomía a cutting, from -tómōs person cutting, related to tómos piece cut off; see TOME.

ton n. Probably before 1300 tonne unit for measuring the carrying capacity of a ship; originally, space occupied by a tun or cask of wine, and the same word as TUN. Tōn and tun were not differentiated until about 1688. The measure of weight is first recorded in 1485. The spelling ton (1538) became established in the 1700's. —tonnage n. 1422 tonage tax or duty levied on wine imported in tuns; borrowed from Middle French tonnage weight of goods, carrying capacity in tuns, from Old French tonne cask, tun; for suffix see -AGE. Later senses of the English word are derived from English ton + -age.

tone n. Before 1300 ton musical sound or note; later tonne (before 1325); borrowing of Old French ton, and perhaps borrowed directly from Latin tonus a sound, tone, accent, stretching (in Medieval Latin, a term particular to music), from Greek tónos vocal pitch, raising of voice, accent, key in music; originally, a stretching, taut string, related to teínein to stretch.

The sense of manner of speaking is recorded before 1610, that of degree of firmness normal to healthy tissues, in 1669. The spelling tone appeared in Middle English before 1400. —v. Before 1300 tonen to sound with the proper tone; from the noun. The sense of impart a tone to is first recorded in 1811. —tonal adj. 1776, formed from English tone + -al, perhaps on the model of Medieval Latin tonalis of or pertaining to tone, from Latin tonus tone. —tonality n. 1838, formed from English tonal + -ity.

tongs n. pl. About 1250 tonges, plural of tonge; developed from Old English (before 800) tange, tang tongs (from Proto-Germanic tanǵō*); cognate with Old Frisian tange tongs, Middle Dutch tanghe (modern Dutch tang), Old High German zanga (modern German Zange), and Old Icelandic ṭung (Danish and Norwegian tang, Swedish tång).

tongue n. Probably before 1300 tong; developed from Old English tunge organ of speech, speech, language (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian tunge tongue, Old Saxon tunga, Middle Dutch tonghe (modern Dutch tong), Old High German zunga (modern German Zunge), Old Icelandic tunga (Swedish tunga, Norwegian and Danish tunge), Gothic ṭungō (from Proto-Germanic tanǵōn*). —v. About 1388 tongen to reproach, scold; earlier tuingen (about 1300); from the noun.

tonic adj. 1649, relating to or characterized by muscular tension; borrowed from Greek tonikós of stretching, from tónos a stretching; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of maintaining the healthy firmness, of normal tissues, is first recorded in 1684, and having the property of restoring to health in 1756. The musical sense is first recorded in 1760. —n. 1799, tonic medicine; from the adjective.

tonight adv. Before 1325 to night on this very night; developed from Old English (about 1000) tōniht tomorrow night (tō at, on; see TO + niht, dative of niht NIGHT); written as two words until the 1700's, after which it was written to-night until the present century. —n. Before 1325 to night; from the adverb.

tonsil n. 1601, borrowed from Latin tōnsillae, pl., tonsils. —tonsillectomy n. 1899, formed from English tonsil + -ectomy. —tonsillitis n. 1801, formed from English tonsil + -itis.

tonsorial adj. 1813, formed from Latin tōnsōrius of or pertaining to shearing or shaving (from tōnsor a shaver or barber, from tōnsus, past participle of tōndēre to shear, shave) + English -al.

tonsure n. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French tonsure, and directly from Latin tōnsūra a shearing, clipping, from tōnsus, past participle of tōndēre to shear, shave; for suffix see -URE. The part of a priest's or monk's head left bare by shaving the hair (before 1439) is found earlier in Anglo-French (1351, probably from Medieval Latin tonsura). —v. shave the head of. 1793, from the noun.

too adv. About 1175 to in addition, moreover; developed as a stressed variant of to from Old English tō in the direction of, furthermore; see TO. The spelling too is first recorded in 1590.

tool n. Before 1225 tool; earlier tol (probably before 1200); developed from Old English tōl instrument, implement (before 899), from Proto-Germanic tōlan*, and cognate with Old Icelandic tōl tool; all derived from a Germanic verb stem represented by Old English taufian prepare, Old Saxon tōgian, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch touwen, Old High German zouwen, Old Icelandic tæja, týja to help, and Gothic taujan to do, make, from Proto-Germanic taujanān*. —v. 1812 to drive a vehicle; from the noun. The meaning of work or shape with a tool is first recorded in 1815, and equip (a factory) with the machine tools necessary to make a certain product, in 1927.

toot v. About 1510, perhaps originally imitative, but found also in Middle Low German and modern Low German tuten blow a horn, which may be the source in English.

tooth n. Probably before 1200 toth; later tooth (about 1385); developed from Old English (before 800) tōth, plural tēth; cognate with Old Frisian tōth tooth, plural tēth, Old Saxon and Middle Low German tand, Middle Low German plural tene (modern Low German Tähne), Middle Dutch tant, tand (modern Dutch tand), Old High German zand, plural zeni (modern German Zahn, plural Zähne), Old Icelandic ṭonn (Norwegian tann, Danish and Swedish tand), plural tenn, tennr, and Gothic ṭunthus, from Proto-Germanic tanth-/tunth-*. The meaning of something like a tooth, as the projecting parts of a comb or saw, is first recorded in 1523. —teethe v. About 1410 tethen, from Middle English teth, plural of toth tooth. —toothache n.

(about 1378) —toothed adj. Probably before 1300 tothed; formed from Middle English toth tooth + *-ed*².

top¹ n. highest point. Old English top summit, crest, tuft, as of hair or feathers (about 1000); cognate with Old Frisian topp tuft, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch top summit, crest, Old High German zopf summit, crest, tuft (modern German Zopf pigtail, plait), and Old Icelandic toppr (Swedish and Norwegian topp, Danish top), from Proto-Germanic tuppaz*. —adj. 1593, from the noun. —v. Probably before 1300 toppen remove the top of; from the noun. The meaning of put a top on is first recorded in 1581, and that of be higher or greater than, in 1582.

top² n. toy that spins on a point. Late Old English top (about 1060), probably a special use of top highest point, TOP¹.

topaz n. About 1250 topace, borrowed from Old French topace, topaze, from Latin topazus, from Greek tópazos, topázion.

topiary adj. 1592, borrowed from Latin topiárius of or pertaining to ornamental gardening, from topia ornamental gardening, from Greek tópiā, plural of tópion, originally, a field, diminutive of tópos place; for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1908, from the adjective.

topic n. 1634, argument suitable for debate, singular form of earlier Tópics (before 1568), the name of a work by Aristotle on logical and rhetorical generalities or commonplaces (passages that serve as the basis of argument); borrowed from Latin Topica, from Greek (Tā) Topiká, literally, matters concerning tópoi commonplaces, neuter plural of topikós commonplace, of a place, from tópos place; for suffix see -IC. The meaning of a matter treated in speech or writing, subject, theme, is first recorded in English in 1720. —topical adj. 1588, of or pertaining to a place; formed from English topic + *-al*¹. The meaning of pertaining to a subject or theme is first attested in 1856.

topography n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Late Latin topographia, from Greek topographiā a description of a place, from topográphos describing a place, as a noun meaning one who is skilled in topography (tópos place + gráphein to write); for suffix see *-Y*³. —topographic adj. 1632, shortened form of earlier topographical (1570, formed from Greek topographikós, from topographiā topography + English *-al*¹), perhaps modeled on French topographique; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL.

topple v. 1590, tumble down; earlier, to tumble or roll about (1542); frequentative form of TOP¹, v.; for suffix see *-LE*³.

topsy-turvy adv. 1528 topsy-tervy in utter confusion; 1530 topsy-tirvy upside down; probably formed from tops (plural of TOP¹ highest point) + obsolete terve, tirve turn upside down, topple over, from Middle English terven (about 1400), from Proto-Germanic terbanan*. —adj. 1618, from the adverb.

toque n. 1505 towk small cap worn in various countries; borrowed from Middle French toque, from Spanish toca woman's headdress, possibly from Arabic tāqa*, from Old Persian tāq veil, shawl.

torah n. 1577, Mosaic law; borrowing of Hebrew tōrah, literally, instruction, law, from hōrah he taught, showed.

torch n. About 1250 torche burning stick, firebrand; borrowed from Old French torche, originally, twisted thing; hence, torch formed of twisted tow dipped in wax, probably from Vulgar Latin torca*, alteration of Latin torqua, variant of torquēs collar of twisted metal, from torquēre to twist. —v. 1819 (implied in torched), to illuminate with a torch; from the noun. The meaning of set fire to (1931). —torch-bearer n. 1538; in the sense of a leader of a cause (1847). —torchlight n. (about 1425) toreador n. 1618, borrowing of earlier Spanish toreador (now torero), from torear to fight in a bullfight, from toro bull, from Latin taurus.

torment n. Probably before 1300 tourment torture, pain, distress; borrowing of Old French tourment, torment, from Latin tormentum twisted sling, rack, related to torquēre to twist; for suffix see -MENT. —v. About 1300 tormenten inflict torture upon, distress, vex; borrowed from Old French tourmenter, tormenter torment, from tourment, torment, n. —tormentor n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French tormenteur, from tormenter to torment + -eur *-or*².

tornado n. 1556 ternado violent thunderstorm; borrowed probably as an imperfect alteration of Spanish tronada thunderstorm, from tronar to thunder, from Latin tonāre to thunder. The forms turnado, tournado and tornado (from 1625) were influenced by Spanish torrar to twist, turn, from Latin torāre to turn, which account for metathesis of o and r of original Spanish tronada. The meaning of an extremely violent whirlwind is first recorded in 1626.

torpedo n. About 1520, the electric ray (a fish); borrowing of Latin torpēdō, originally, numbness (from the effect of the ray's electric discharges), from torpēre be numb. The sense of an explosive device used to blow up enemy ships is first recorded in 1776. —v. 1873, from the noun.

torpid adj. 1613, borrowed (by influence of earlier torpor) from Latin torpidus benumbed, from torpēre be numb or stiff. —torpidity n. 1614, formed from English torpid + -ity.

torpor n. 1607, borrowed from Latin torpor numbness, from torpēre be numb.

torque n. 1884, force causing rotation or torsion; borrowed from Latin torquēre to twist. —v. 1954 (implied in torquing); from the noun.

torrent n. 1601, borrowed from French torrent, and directly from Latin torrentem (nominative torrens) rushing stream; originally, roaring, boiling, burning, parching, present participle of torrere to parch; for suffix see -ENT. The sense of any onrush (as of words or feelings) is first recorded in English in 1647. —torrential adj. 1849, like a torrent, rushing; formed perhaps by influence of French torrentiel, from English torrent + -ial.

torrid adj. 1586 torrid zone region of the earth between the tropics; borrowed from Latin torrida zōna, from feminine of torridus dried with heat, scorching hot, from torrere to parch. Use of torrid in the sense of very hot, scorching, is first recorded in 1611.

torsion n. Probably before 1425 torcion, torcioun wringing pain in the bowels; borrowed from Middle French torsion, from Late Latin torsionem (nominative torsio) a wringing or griping, variant of Latin tortionem (nominative tortio) torture, torment, from tortus, past participle of torquere to twist; for suffix see -SION. The sense of the action or process of twisting as by opposing forces is first recorded in 1543.

torso n. 1797, borrowing of Italian torso trunk of a statue; originally, stalk, stump, from Vulgar Latin tursus*, from Latin thyrsus stalk, stem, from Greek thyrsos.

tort n. About 1250, injury, wrong; borrowing of Old French tort, from Medieval Latin tortum injustice, noun use of the neuter of tortus wrung, twisted, past participle of Latin torquere turn, turn awry, twist, wring, distort. The legal sense of an injury or wrong is first recorded in 1586.

torte n. 1555, borrowed from German Torte; also probably borrowed from Middle French torte; both ultimately from Late Latin torta flat cake; also, round loaf of bread; probably related to *TART*².

tortilla n. 1699 tartillo; later in the spelling tortilla (1828); borrowing of American Spanish tortilla, in Spanish, a tart, diminutive of torta cake, from Late Latin torta flat cake; also, round loaf of bread.

tortoise n. 1552 tortoyse, alteration (perhaps influenced by the ending of porpoise) of Middle English tortuse (1495), probably a variant of earlier tortue (1440); borrowed from Medieval Latin tortuca, alteration (by loss of -ar- before the last syllable) of Late Latin tartarūchus of the underworld; see *TURTLE*¹. The Medieval Latin spelling may have been influenced by Latin tortus twisted, because of the shape of the tortoise's feet.

tortuous adj. full of twists, turns, or bends. About 1390, borrowed from Anglo-French tortuous, from Latin tortuosus full of twists, winding, tortuous, from tortus (genitive tortus) a twisting, winding, from tort-, stem of torquere to twist, wind, wring, distort; for suffix see -OUS.

torture n. Probably before 1425, severe pain or suffering; borrowed from Middle French torture infliction of great pain, great pain, agony, from Late Latin tortura a twisting, writhing, torture, torment, from Latin tort-, stem of torquere to twist, turn, wind, wring, distort; for suffix see -URE. —v. 1588, cause severe pain to, torment; from the noun, perhaps influenced by Middle French torturer to torture. —torturous adj. About 1495, causing torture, tormenting; borrowed from Anglo-French torturous, Old French tortureus, formed from Latin tortura torture + Old French -eus -ous.

Tory n. 1566 tory an outlaw; specifically, a robber; borrowed from tōnighe plunderer; originally, pursuer or searcher, from Old Irish tōirighim I pursue, related to tōracht pursuit.

In British history Tory became prominent about 1646 as a derogatory term for Irish Catholics dispossessed of their land since 1641, or the Irish shippers excluded from the colonial trade and farmers affected by the ban on Irish cattle in England. Some dispossessed Irishmen turned to outlawry, and by 1679–80 Tory referred to supporters of the Catholic Duke of York (later James II) in his succession to the throne of England. From 1689 Tory became the name of a newly-formed British political party, because the party's membership at first consisted mainly of the Yorkist Tories of 1679–80. Compare WHIG.

In American history (from 1769) Tory referred to colonists who remained loyal to George III of England. Compare WHIG.

toss v. Before 1450 tossen pitch or throw about; of uncertain origin, possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish and Norwegian tossa to strew, spread). —n. 1634, act of tossing; from the verb.

tot n. little child. 1725, a Scottish word of uncertain origin; perhaps a shortened form of TOTTER, or by some associated with Icelandic tottr (Danish tot) nickname of a dwarf.

total adj. About 1390, borrowing of Old French total, and probably directly from Medieval Latin totalis entire, total (as in summa totalis sum total), from Latin tōtus all, whole, entire; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. whole amount, sum. 1557, from the adjective. —v. 1716, from the noun. The sense of destroy totally, is first recorded in 1954. —totality n. 1598, borrowed from Middle French totalité, and directly from Medieval Latin totalitas, from totalis total; for suffix see -ITY.

totalitarian adj. 1926, of or having to do with a government which suppresses all opposition; formed from English total + (author)itarian.

tote v. 1677 toat, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from a West African language (compare Kikongo tota pick up, and Kimbundu tuta carry, load, related to Swahili tuta pile up, carry). —n. 1884, from the verb. —tote bag (1900) totem n. 1760–76, borrowed from Algonquian (probably Ojibwa) ototeman his sibling kin; 1609 acoutem among the Indians of Nova Scotia (presumably the Micmacs). —totem pole 1808, referred to in a description of west coast Canadian Indians.

totter v. About 1200 toteren swing to and fro; of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian totra to quiver, shake, dialectal Swedish tuttra). The meaning of stand or walk with shaky, unsteady steps, is first recorded in 1602. —n. Before 1387, board suspended between two ropes, swing; from the verb. The sense of the act of tottering is found in 1747.

toucan n. 1568, borrowed from Middle French toucan, and perhaps directly from Spanish tucán, from Tupi (Brazil) tuká, tukána.

touch v. Probably before 1300 touchen, borrowed from Old French touchier to touch, hit, knock, from Vulgar Latin toccāre* to knock, strike (as a bell); perhaps of imitative origin. —n. About 1300, borrowed from Old French touche a touching, blow, hit, from touchier to touch, hit. —touched adj. 1340, stirred emotionally; formed from Middle English touchen touch + *-ed*². —touching adj. 1601, affecting the emotions; formed from English touch, v. + *-ing*². —prep. About 1395, concerning, about; formed (on the model of Old French touchant) from the present participle of Middle English touchen to touch. —touchy adj. 1605, too sensitive; formed from English touch, n. + *-y*¹.

touché interj. 1904, exclamation acknowledging a hit in fencing; borrowed from French touché, past participle of toucher, from Old French touchier to hit, TOUCH. The sense of an exclamation acknowledging a valid point, justified accusation, etc., is first recorded in 1907.

tough adj. Probably before 1200 toge; later toghe (probably before 1325); developed from Old English (about 700) tōh strong and firm in texture (from Proto-Germanic tanHuz*); cognate with Middle Low German tā, teie tough, Middle Dutch taey (modern Dutch taai), Old High German zāhi (modern German zäh), and Old Icelandic tā trodden ground or path. See ROUGH for spelling change. The figurative sense of hard to influence, firm, persistent, is first recorded about 1400, and that of hard, trying, laborious, in 1619. —n. 1866, from the adjective. —toughen v. 1582, formed from English tough, adj. + *-en*¹.

toupee n. 1727, respelled borrowing of French toupet tuft of hair, forelock, diminutive formed from Old French toupe tuft, from Frankish top* (compare Middle Low German top and Old High German zopf crest, tuft, summit); see TOP¹ highest point.

tour n. About 1300, a turn, revolution; borrowed from Old French tour, tourn a turn, trick, round, circuit, circumference, from torner, tourner to turn, from Latin turnāre to polish, round off, fashion, turn on a lathe. The sense of a traveling around, journey, is first recorded in 1643. —v. 1746, to travel around, make the rounds of; from the noun. —tourism n. (1811) —tourist n. (1780) tournament n. Probably before 1200 turnement medieval contest between groups of knights on horseback; borrowed from Old French torneiment a tournament (in Medieval Latin turnamentum), from torneier to joust, tilt; see TOURNEY; for suffix see -MENT.

tourney v. Probably before 1300 tourneyen take part in a tournament; borrowed from Old French torneier to joust, tilt, tourney; literally, turn around, from Vulgar Latin turnizāre*, from Latin turnāre to TURN. —n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French tornei, from torneier to tourney.

touriquet n. 1695, borrowing of French touriquet surgical tourniquet, turnstile (with diminutive suffix), from torner to turn, from Old French tourner, torner TURN.

tousle v. About 1440 touselen, frequentative form of -tousen handle or push about roughly (about 1300), as in totousen, betousen; for suffix see -LE³. Middle English -tousen is cognate with East Frisian tūsen to pull about, treat roughly, Old High German -zūsōn in zirzūsōn pull to pieces (modern German zausen pull about, tousle), from Proto-Germanic tūs-*. —n. 1788, a struggle, tussle; from the verb. The sense of a disordered mass is first recorded in 1880.

tout v. Before 1700 to act as a lookout, spy on; developed from Middle English tuten to peep, peer (before 1400), probably related to Old English (before 899) tōtian to stick out, peep, peer. The sense of look out for, try to get (jobs, votes, etc.), is first recorded in 1731, and that of praise highly in 1920. —n. 1718, thieves' lookout; from the verb, and a person who solicits customers, etc. (1853).

tow¹ v. pull by a rope, chain, etc. About 1300 togen; later towen (probably about 1350); developed from Old English (about 1000) togian to drag, pull; cognate with Old Frisian togia to draw, tug, drag, Middle Low German togen, Old High German zogōn, Old Icelandic toga to draw, pull, from Proto-Germanic tuzōjanan*; related to Old English tēon to draw, Old Saxon tiohan, Old High German ziohan (modern German ziehen), and Gothic tiuhan, from Proto-Germanic teuHanan*. The Middle English spelling with -og- quickly shifted to -ow- on the model of shifting as found in *bow*² where Old English o in -og- became ō and g became w. —n. 1600, rope used for towing; later, act of towing (1622); from the verb. —towage n. 1562, formed from tow, v. + -age. The Medieval Latin form towagium (1286), found in Middle English towage (before 1327), may have been formed from Old English togian or Old Icelandic toga.

tow² n. coarse, broken fibers of flax, hemp, etc. Probably before 1387, developed from Old English tōw- spinning (as in tōwlic fit for spinning); perhaps cognate with Old Icelandic tō unworked fiber, tuft of wool for spinning, and Gothic tauī work, doing, taujan to do, make. —adj. 1601, from the noun. —towhead n. (1830) toward prep. Probably before 1200 toward; earlier toweward (1114); found in Old English (before 899) tōweard in the direction of, prepositional use of tōweard, adj., coming, approaching (tō TO + -weard -WARD), and perhaps a shortening both in Middle English and Old English of the synonymous towards, developed from Old English tōweardes (before 899); formed from tōweard, adj. + -es, -s adverbial genitive ending. —adj. About 1350 toward impending, about to happen, promising, hopeful; earlier touward (about 1290); developed from Old English tōweard coming to or toward, about to come, future (tō to + -weard tending or leading to, found in the modern adjective and adverb suffix -ward).

towel n. About 1250 towaille piece of cloth for wiping or drying something; borrowed from Old French toaille, from Frankish thwahlja* (compare Old High German duahila, dwehila towel, Middle Dutch dwāle, dwele, modern Dutch dwaal altar cloth, and Old Saxon thwahlila, twahila towel from Proto-Germanic thwaHlijan*). —v. 1836–39, to rub or dry with a towel, from the noun.

tower n. Before 1121 tur high structure; developed from Old English torr (about 899); borrowed from Latin turris high structure. The word was also separately borrowed in the Middle English as tour (before 1300), from Old French tur, tour, from Latin turris. The form tower (first recorded in 1526) is probably the result of a blend of Middle English tur and tour, with replacement of ou by ow in tour (first found in 1382). —v. 1582, (but found earlier as the past participle towered, before 1400, either implying a verb or formed from tower, n. + *-ed*²); from the noun.

town n. About 1330 toun, developed from Old English (601–04) tūn enclosure, enclosed land with its buildings; later, village (about 700); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German tūn enclosure, fence, hedge, Middle Dutch taun (modern Dutch tuin garden), Old High German zūn (modern German Zaun), Old Icelandic tūn, from Proto-Germanic tūnaz*, tūnan, borrowed very early from Celtic dūnom* (compare Old Irish dūn fortress); see DOWN³. The sense in English of an inhabited place larger than a village is first recorded after the Norman Conquest, and corresponds to the French ville town, city, from Latin villa farm, country house. —township n. 1414 tounshiþe, developed from Old English tūnscepe (before 899) inhabitants or population of a town (tūn village + -scepe -ship). —townsman n. 1433, developed from Old English (962–63) tūnesman villager (tūn village + -es, genitive suffix + man person).

toxic adj. 1664, borrowed from French toxique, and directly from Late Latin toxicus poisoned, from Latin toxicum poison, from Greek toxikōn (phármakon) (poison) for use on arrows, from toxikōn, neuter of toxikós pertaining to arrows or archery, and thus to a bow, from tóxon bow; for suffix see -IC.

toxin n. 1886, formed from Latin toxicum poison; see TOXIC + English *-in*².

toy n. About 1303 toye amorous playing, sport; later toy a piece of fun or entertainment (before 1500); a thing of little value, trifle (1530); and a thing for a child to play with, plaything (before 1586). The origin of the word is uncertain, and possibly the thing to play with, plaything, represents a different word from that of the earlier meanings, and was borrowed from Dutch tuig tools, apparatus, stuff, trash, speeltuig play-tool, plaything, toy, cognate with German Zeug stuff, gear, Spielzeug plaything, toy, and Danish toi stuff, gear, legetoi playthings, toys. —v. Before 1529, act idly or without seriousness, trifle, play; from the noun.

trace¹ v. follow by means of marks, tracks, or signs. 1381 tracen traverse, pass over, tread; borrowed from Old French trasser, tracier delineate, score, trace, follow, pursue, from Vulgar Latin tractiāre* delineate, score, trace, from Latin tractus (genitive tractūs) track, course; literally, a drawing out, from trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw.

The sense of draw, draw an outline of, is first recorded about 1393, that of follow the tracks or traces of (about 1450) and follow the course or development of in 1654. —n. Probably before 1300, path, course, track; borrowed from Old French trace, from tracier to trace. The plural traces indications, is first recorded about 1400. —tracer n. 1552, person who tracks or investigates; formed from English *trace*¹ + *-er*¹.

trace² n. either of the two straps, ropes, or chains by which an animal pulls a vehicle. About 1400 trays, new singular (1404, plural trasys), developed from earlier collective plural trays (about 1330); borrowed from Old French traiz, plural of trait strap for harnessing, act of drawing, from Latin tractus (genitive tractūs) a drawing, track, from trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw.

tracery n. 1669, formed from English *trace*¹, v. + -ery.

trachea n. 1392, borrowing of Medieval Latin trachea, as in trachea arteria, from Late Latin trāchiā, from Greek trācheia, in trācheia artēriā windpipe; literally, rough artery (so called from the rings of cartilage forming the trachea), from feminine of trāchys rough; see ARTERY for Greek association with windpipe.

trachoma n. 1693, New Latin, from Greek trāchōma roughness, from trāchys rough.

track n. Before 1470, footprint, mark left by anything; borrowed from Middle French trac, of uncertain origin; possibly from a Germanic source (compare Middle Low German and Middle Dutch trek, treck, and modern Dutch trek a drawing, pull, haul, trek). The line of metal rails for trains is first recorded in 1805. —v. 1565, follow the track of; from the noun.

tract¹ n. area. 1441, period or lapse of time; borrowed from Latin tractus (genitive tractūs) track, course, space, duration; literally, a drawing out or pulling, from trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw. The sense of a stretch of land or water, extent, region, area, is first recorded in English in 1553.

tract² n. little book on a religious or political subject. Before 1398 tracte, probably a shortened form of Latin tractatus (genitive tractātūs) a handling, treatise, treatment, from tractāre to handle, TREAT.

tractable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin tractabilis that may be touched, handled, or managed, from tractāre to handle, manage; see TREAT; for suffix see -ABLE.

traction n. 1615, a drawing or pulling (as by a device); borrowed from Medieval Latin tractionem (nominative tractio) a drawing, from Latin trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw; for suffix see -TION. The sense of the rolling friction of a vehicle appears in 1825.

tractor n. 1856, something that pulls; earlier, a quack device, consisting of two metal rods for relieving pain of rheumatism (1798); borrowed from Medieval Latin tractor, from Latin trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw; for suffix see -OR². The sense of an engine or vehicle for pulling wagons or plows, or for excavating, grading, etc., is first recorded in 1901, the earlier term being traction engine (1859); the sense of a powerful truck for pulling a freight trailer is found in 1926.

trade n. About 1375, path, track, course of action; borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German trade track, course (probably originally, of a trading ship); cognate with Old Saxon trada footstep, track, Old High German trata track, way, passage, and Old English treðan to tread.

The sense of one's habitual business (1546) developed from the meaning of way, course, or manner of life; and the sense of buying and selling, commerce, traffic, is first recorded in 1555. —v. 1548, to tread, traverse, go through; from the noun. The sense of engage in trade, buy and sell, is first recorded in 1570. —trade wind (1650; trade in the obsolete sense of habitual or regular course) tradition n. About 1382 tradicion a belief, practice, or custom handed down; borrowed from Old French tradicion, and directly from Latin trāditiōnem (nominative trāditiō) delivery, surrender, a handing down, from trādi-, stem of trādere deliver, hand over (trāns- over + dare give); for suffix see -TION. —traditional adj. 1594, observant or bound by tradition; formed from English tradition + *-al*¹. The sense of handed down by or derived from tradition is recorded before 1600.

traduce v. Before 1533, to alter, change over, transport, also, to translate; borrowed from Latin trādūcere change over, convert; originally, lead along or across, transfer (trāns- across + dūcere lead). The sense of defame, slander (1586–87) was probably borrowed from Latin trādūcere in the sense of to scorn or disgrace. —traducer n. slanderer. 1614, formed from English traduce + *-er*¹.

traffic n. 1505 traffikke trade, commerce; borrowed from Middle French traffique, traffique; later traffic, from Italian traffico, from trafficare carry on trade, of uncertain origin; perhaps from a Vulgar Latin trānsfricāre* to rub across (Latin trāns- across + fricāre to rub) with the original sense of the Italian verb being that of to touch repeatedly, handle. The meaning of people or vehicles coming and going along a way of travel is first recorded in English before 1825. —v. 1542, carry on trade; borrowed from Middle French traffiquer, from Italian trafficare.

tragedy n. About 1375 tragedie a play or other serious literary work having an unhappy ending; borrowed from Old French tragedie, from Latin tragoedia a tragedy, from Greek tragōidīa a dramatic poem or play in formal language and having an unhappy resolution; literally, goat song (trāgos goat; see TRAGIC + ōidē song, ODE); for suffix see -Y². The connection with a goat, may be that the actors or singers in Greek tragedies were originally dressed in goatskins to represent satyrs, and thereby became actors in satyric drama from which tragedy was later developed.

The sense of an unhappy event, calamity, or disaster, is found in 1509. —tragedian n. About 1380, writer of tragedies; borrowed from Old French tragedian, from tragedie tragedy; for suffix see -IAN. The sense of a tragic actor is first recorded in 1592.

tragic adj. 1545, calamitous, disastrous, fatal; shortened form of earlier tragic (1489); modeled on Latin tragicus, from Greek tragikós of or pertaining to tragedy; literally, of or pertaining to a goat, and probably to a satyr impersonated by a goat singer or satyric actor, goatish, from trāgos goat; for suffix see -IC, -ICAL. The sense of pertaining to tragedy as a part of drama, is first recorded in English in 1563.

tragicomedy n. 1579–80, borrowed from Middle French tragicomédie, from Italian tragicommedia, from Latin tragicomœdia, contraction of tragicomœdia (tragicus TRAGIC + comœdia COMEDY). —tragicomic adj. 1683, shortened form of tragicomical (1567, formed from tragi- + comical); for suffix see -IC, -ICAL.

trail v. About 1303 traillen to drag or be drawn along behind; borrowed from Old French trailler to tow, from Vulgar Latin trāgulāre* to drag, from Latin trāgula dragnet, probably related to trahere to pull, draw. The meaning of follow the trail or track of is first recorded in 1590. —n. Probably before 1325, something that trails; from the verb. The sense of a track or smell left by a person or animal is first recorded in 1590. —trailer n. 1590, person that follows a trail, tracker; formed from English trail, v. + *-er*¹. The vehicle pulled by another is first recorded in 1890.

train n. Before 1338 trayne a drawing out, delay; later trayn trailing part, retinue, procession (about 1440); borrowed from Old French train (feminine traine), from trainer to pull, draw, from Vulgar Latin trāgināre*, extended from trāgere* to pull, back formation from tractus, past participle of Latin trahere to pull, draw. The sense of a connected line of railroad cars or wagons moving together is first recorded before 1824. —v. 1375 traynen to draw along, allure; borrowed from Old French trainer to pull, draw. The sense of instruct, discipline, teach, is first recorded in 1542, probably developed from the meaning of draw by persuasion, induce (1526), and to manipulate in order to bring to a desired form (about 1440). —training n. 1440, a drawing out, trailing; formed from Middle English traynen draw along + *-ing*¹. The sense of instruction, discipline, education, is first recorded in 1548.

traipse v. 1593 (implied in trapesing), of uncertain origin. The dialectal forms trapass, traipass suggests dialectal French trapasser, trepasser pass over or beyond (Old French trespasser TRESPASS), though the senses do not fit exactly.

trait n. About 1477, shot, missiles; later, a stroke, short line (1589); borrowed from Middle French trait, from Latin tractus (genitive tractūs) draft, drawing, drawing out; later, line drawn, feature, from trac-, stem of trahere to pull, draw. The sense of a particular feature of mind, distinguishing quality, is first recorded in English in 1752; this sense developed from the meaning of a line, streak, feature, found in earlier English, French, and Latin.

traitor n. Before 1300 traitur person who betrays a trust, betrayer; borrowed from Old French traitor, traitur, from Latin trādītōrem (nominative trādītōr) a betrayer; literally, one who delivers, from trādi-, stem of trādere deliver, surrender; for suffix see -OR². Earlier Middle English treitre (probably before 1200) was borrowed from Old French traître, from Latin trādītōr. —traitorous adj. About 1380 traytrous, borrowed from Old French traitreux (traître traitor + -eux -ous).

trajectory n. 1696, borrowed from New Latin trajectory, from feminine of trajektorius of or pertaining to throwing across, from Latin trāiectus thrown over or across, past participle of trāicere throw across (Latin trā-, variant of trāns- across + -icere, combining form of jacere to throw); for suffix see -ORY.

In Middle English this word is found probably before 1425 as traictorie a funnel, borrowed from Middle French trajectoire end of a funnel, and directly from Medieval Latin trajectorium a funnel (from Latin trājectus, past participle + -ōrium -ory).

tram n. 1500–20, beam or shaft of a barrow or sledge; also, a barrow or truck body (1516–17); Scottish, borrowed probably from Middle Flemish tram beam, handle of a barrow, bar, rung; cognate with Middle Low German trame, modern Low German Traam, and Middle Dutch trame, of similar meaning, but of unknown origin. The sense of a track for a barrow, tramway, is first recorded in 1826 and that of a streetcar (1860) implied in tramway.

trammel n. 1397 trameyle a net to catch fish; borrowed from Middle French tramail, from Late Latin trimaculum, trēmaculum, perhaps meaning a net made of three layers of different-sized meshes (Latin tri-, trēs three + macula a mesh). —v. 1536, to bind up (a corpse); from the noun. The sense of catch or entangle is first found in 1605, and that of to hinder, restrain, in 1727.

tramp v. About 1395 trampen walk heavily, stamp; borrowed from Middle Low German trampen to stamp; cognate with Middle High German trumpfen to run, dialectal Norwegian trumpa to knock, push, and Gothic anatripan to tread or press upon, perhaps related to the same source as English TRAP. —n. 1664, person who wanders about, vagabond; from the verb. The sense of a long, steady walk, is first recorded in 1760.

trample v. Before 1382 trampelen to walk heavily; frequentative form of TRAMP; for suffix see -LE³. The transitive sense of tread heavily on, crush, is first recorded in 1530. —n. 1604, from the verb.

trampoline n. 1798 trampolin, 1799 trampoline; borrowed from Spanish trampolín springboard, and from Italian trampolino, from trampoli stilts, from a Germanic source (compare Low German trampeln trample, and Middle Low German trampen walk heavily, TRAMP).

trance n. About 1385 traunce state of extreme dread or suspense; later, a dazed, unconscious, or insensible condition (about 1395); borrowed from Old French transe fear of coming evil; originally, passage from life to death, from transir be numb with fear; originally, die, pass on, from Latin transire cross over.

tranquil adj. Before 1450 tranquill, probably a back formation from earlier tranquility, modeled on Latin tranquillus quiet, tranquil; also possibly borrowed from Middle French tranquille. The Latin word may derive from trans- over, beyond (here meaning exceedingly) + a root related to quiēs rest, QUIET. —tranquility or tranquillity n. About 1380 tranquillite, borrowed from Old French tranquillité, from Latin tranquillitatem (nominative tranquillitas) tranquillity, from tranquillus tranquil; for suffix see -ITY. —tranquelize v. 1623, formed from English tranquil + -ize. —tranquilizer n. 1800, formed from English tranquelize + *-er*¹. The sense of a sedative is first recorded in 1824.

trans- a prefix meaning: 1 across, over, through, as in transatlantic = across the Atlantic Ocean (1779). 2 beyond, on the other side of, as in transcend = to go beyond. 3 to go into a different place, condition, or thing, as in transform = to form into another condition. 4 (in chemistry) having certain atoms on the opposite side of a plane: a trans-isomeric compound. Borrowed from Latin trans- (also reduced to trā-, as in trādere hand over, trādūcere lead across), from trans, prep., across, over, beyond, probably originally the present participle of a verb (trāre* to cross); see THROUGH.

transact v. 1584–85, probably a back formation from transactio, modeled on Latin transactus, past participle of transigere drive or carry through, accomplish (trans- through + agere to drive). —transaction n. About 1460, (in Roman and civil law) adjustment of a dispute; borrowed from Middle French transaction, and directly from Latin transactiōnem (nominative transactiō) an agreement, accomplishment, from transigere accomplish; for suffix see -TION. The sense of a piece of business is first recorded in 1647.

transcend v. About 1340 transcenden; borrowed from Old French transcendre, and directly from Latin transcendere climb over or beyond, surmount (trans- beyond + scandere to climb). —transcendence n. 1601, formed in English as a noun to transcendent, possibly on the model of Late Latin transcendentia character of being transcendent, elevation, loftiness, from Latin transcendēns present participle of transcendere; for suffix see -ENCE. —transcendent adj. About 1450, borrowed from Latin transcendentem (nominative transcendēns) surmounting, rising above, present participle; for suffix see -ENT. —transcendental adj. 1668, transcending the bounds of any category; borrowed from Medieval Latin transcendentalis in the same meaning, from Latin transcendēns present participle of transcendere; for suffix see -AL¹. —transcendentalism n. (1803) transcribe v. 1552, borrowed from Latin transcribere to copy, write again in another place, write over, transfer (trans- over + scribere write). —transcript n. 1467, a written copy; borrowed from Medieval Latin transcriptum a copy, noun use of Latin transcriptus transcribed, copied, neuter past participle of transcribere transcribe. —transcription n. 1598, act or process of transcribing; borrowed from Middle French transcription, and directly from Latin transcriptiōnem (nominative transcriptiō), from transcriptus, past participle of transcribere transcribe; for suffix see -TION. The sense in biology of the process by which a nucleic acid is synthesized on a template is first recorded in 1961.

transducer n. 1924, device which converts energy from one form to another, formed from Latin transducere lead across, transfer (trans- across + ducere to lead) + English suffix *-er*¹. —transduce v. 1949, back formation from earlier transducer.

transept n. 1538 transsept, borrowed from New Latin transeptum; later, in the 1700's, reborrowed from French transept; both the New Latin and modern French words were formed from Latin trans- across + saeptum fence, partition, enclosure; see SEPTUM.

transfer v. About 1380 transferren move from one place to another, convey, transmit; borrowed from Latin transfere bear across, carry over, transfer, translate (trans- across + ferre to carry). —n. 1674, (in law) conveyance of property; from the verb. The general sense (as in the transfer of authority) is first recorded in 1785. —transference n. 1681, procedure for transferring a legal action; probably formed from English transfer + -ence, modeled on New Latin transfere transference, from Latin transfere present participle of transfere to transfer; for suffix see -ENCE. The meaning in psychoanalysis is first recorded in 1911, as a loan translation of German Übertragung.

transfigure v. Before 1325 transfigure, borrowed from Old French transfigurer, and directly from Latin transfigurare change the shape of (trans- across + figura FIGURE). —transfiguration n. About 1375, the change in the appearance of Christ before his disciples, John, Peter, and James; borrowed from Old French transfiguration, and directly from Latin transfiguratio (nominative transfiguratio) a change in form, from transfigurare transfigure; for suffix see -ATION. The sense (as in the mythical transfiguration of men into animals) is first recorded in English before 1548.

transfix v. 1590, pierce through, impale; borrowed from Middle French transfixer, and directly from Latin transfixus impaled, past participle of transfigere to impale, pierce through (trans- through + figere to fix, fasten). The sense of make motionless or helpless (as with amazement, terror, or grief) is first recorded in 1649.

transform v. About 1340 transformen change the form of; borrowed from Old French transformer, and directly from Latin transformare change the shape or form of (trans- across + formare to FORM). The meaning in mathematics is first recorded in 1743. —n. 1853 (in mathematics) the result of transforming; from the verb. —transformation n. 1410 transformatioun act of transforming; borrowed from Old French transformation, and directly from Late Latin transformatiōem (nominative transformatiō) a change of shape, from transformare transform; for suffix see -ATION. —transformer n. 1601, person who transforms; formed from English transform + *-er*¹. The device to reduce electric currents is first recorded in 1883 as a translation of French transformateur.

transfuse v. Probably before 1425 transfusen, borrowed from Latin transfusus, past participle of transfundere pour from one container to another (trans- across + fundere to pour). —transfusion n. 1578, act of pouring a liquid from one container into another; borrowed from Middle French transfusion, and directly from Latin transfusiōem (nominative transfusiō) a pouring from one container to another, from transfusus, past participle of transfundere; for suffix see -SION. The sense of a transfer of blood from one individual into the veins of another is first recorded in English in 1643.

transgress v. About 1475 transgressen break a law or command; borrowed from Middle French transgresser, and probably a back formation from transgression, modeled on Latin transgressus, past participle of transgredi go beyond (trans- across + gradi to walk, go). —transgression n. About 1415 transgrescion violation of law, duty, or command, disobedience, trespass; borrowed from Middle French transgression, from Late Latin transgressiōem (nominative transgressiō) a transgression of the law, from Latin a going over, from transgressus, past participle of transgredi go beyond; for suffix see -SION.

transient adj. 1612, borrowed from Latin transiens (accusative transientem) passing over or away, present participle of transire cross over, pass away (trans- across + ire go); for suffix see -ENT. —n. 1652, from the adjective. The sense of a transient guest or boarder is first recorded in 1748. —transience n. 1745, formed from English transient + -ence, possibly as a shortened form of transiency (1652, formed from English transient + -ency).

transistor n. 1948, formed from English tran(sfer) + (re)sistor; so called because it transfers an electrical current across a resistor. —transistorize v. (1953) transit n. 1440 transite; borrowed from Latin transitus (genitive transitus) passage, transition, a going over, from transi-, stem of transire cross over, go across; see TRANSIENT. —v. 1440 transiten; borrowed from Latin transitus, past participle of transire. —transition n. About 1450 transicion a change or passing from one condition, place, etc. to another; borrowed from Latin transitiōem (nominative transitiō) a passing over or away, from transi-, stem of transire go or cross over; for suffix see -TION. —transitional adj. About 1810, formed from English transition + *-al*¹. —transitive adj. 1560, passing away, transient; later, of verbs taking a direct object (1571, also transitory, 1560); borrowed from Middle French transitif (feminine transitive), and directly from Late Latin transitivus passing over (also of verbs), from Latin transitus, past participle of transire cross over; for suffix see -IVE. —transitory adj. About 1380 transitorie lasting only a short time; borrowed from Old French transitoire, from Late Latin transitoriū passing, transient, from Latin, allowing passage through, from transitus, past participle of transire go or cross over; for suffix see -ORY.

translate v. Before 1325 translaten to change from one language to another; borrowed from Old French translater, but probably at first from Latin translatus, a form serving as past participle to transfere to bring over, carry over; see TRANSFER; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —translation n. About 1340 translacioun, borrowed from Old French translation, and directly from Latin translatiōem (nominative translatiō) translation, from translatus, a form serving as past participle to transfere; for suffix see -ATION.

transliterate v. 1861, formed from English trans- across + Latin littera letter + English suffix *-ate*¹. —transliteration n. (1861).

translucent adj. 1596, formed in English as an adjective to earlier translucence, on the model of Latin translucens (nominative translucens) shining through, present participle of translucere shine through (trans- through + lucere to shine); for suffix see -ENT. —translucence n. Probably before 1425, formed in English as if from Latin translucencia*, from translucens present participle of translucere shine through; for suffix see -ENCE.

transmigration n. 1297, migration; borrowed from Old French transmigration, and directly from Late Latin transmigrā- tiōnem change of country, from Latin trāsmigrāre to migrate (trāns- over + migrāre to migrate).

transmission n. 1611, borrowed from Old French transmission, and directly from Latin trāsmissiōnem (nominative trāsmissiō) a sending over or across, passage, from trāsmisus, past participle of trāsmittere send over or across; for suffix see -SION. The part of a motor vehicle that regulates power from the engine to the axle is first recorded in 1894.

transmit v. Probably before 1400 transmitten convey, transfer; borrowed from Latin trāsmittere send across, transfer, pass on (trāns- across + mittere send). —transmitter n. 1727, one that transmits; formed from English transmit + *-er*¹. The telegraphic or telephonic transmitting apparatus is first recorded in 1844, and an apparatus for transmitting radio signals in 1934.

transmute v. 1392 transmuten, perhaps in part a back formation from transmutation, but also borrowed from Latin trāsmūtāre change from one condition to another (trāns- thoroughly + mūtāre to change). —transmutation n. About 1380, borrowed from Old French transmutation, and directly from Late Latin trāsmūtatiōnem (nominative trāsmūtatiō) a change, shift, from Latin trāsmūtāre transmute; for suffix see -ATION.

transom n. 1388 transeyn crossbeam spanning an opening, lintel; later trausom (1462); probably alteration (by dissimilation of medial -tr-) of Latin trānstrum crossbeam, especially one spanning an opening (trāns across + -trum instrumental suffix). Related to TRESTLE. The small window over a door or other window is first recorded in 1844.

transparent adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French transparent, and directly from Medieval Latin transparentem (nominative transparentes) present participle of transparere show light through (Latin trāns- through + pārere come in sight, appear); for suffix see -ENT. The figurative sense of easily seen through is first recorded in 1592. —transparency n. 1615, borrowed from Medieval Latin transparentia transparent, from transparentes present participle of transparere; for suffix see -ENCY.

transpire v. 1597, pass off in the form of a vapor or liquid; back formation from earlier transpiration, and borrowed from Middle French transpirer, from Latin trāns- through + spīrāre breathe. The sense of take place, happen (1755) is probably from a misunderstanding of leak out, become known (1741–42). —transpiration n. Probably before 1425 transpiracioun a passing out, exhalation; borrowed from Middle French transpiration (transpirer transpire + -ation).

transplant v. About 1440, borrowed from Middle French transplanter, and directly from Late Latin trānsplantāre plant again in a different place (Latin trāns- across + plantāre to plant). The sense of convey or remove (people, a colony, etc.) from one place to another is first recorded in 1555, and that of transfer an organ or portion of tissue from one person or animal to another, in 1786. —n. 1756, a transplanted seedling; from the verb. —transplantation n. 1601, probably borrowed from French transplantation, from transplanter transplant transport v. About 1380 transporten carry or convey from one place to another; borrowed from Middle French transporter carry or convey across, and directly from Latin trānsportāre (trāns- across + portāre carry). The sense of carry away by strong feeling is first recorded in English in 1509. —n. 1456, a transfer of property; from the verb. The means of transportation or conveyance is first recorded in 1694. —transportation n. 1540, act or process of transporting; borrowed from Middle French transportation, and formed from English transport, v. + -ation. The sense of a means of conveyance is first recorded in 1853. —transporter n. 1535, one who transports; later, a heavy vehicle used to transport large pieces of machinery (1944); formed from English transport, v. + *-er*¹.

+ -ation -ation, and a formation in English of transplant + -ation.

transpose v. About 1392 transposen transform, transmute, convert; borrowed from Old French transposer transpose (trans- across + poser to put, place). The sense of change the position or order of, interchange, is first recorded in English in 1538, and the specific sense in algebra in 1810, while in music to put into a different key is found in 1609. —transposition n. 1538, borrowed from Middle French transposition, and directly from Medieval Latin transpositionem (nominative transpositio) act of transposing, from Latin trānspositus, past participle of trānsponere place over (trāns- over + pōnere put, place); for suffix see -TION.

transubstantiation n. Before 1398, changing of one substance into another, probably especially in the religious sense of the Eucharist; borrowed from Old French transsubstantiation, and directly from Medieval Latin transsubstantiationem (nominative transsubstantiatio) particularly in the religious sense, from transsubstantiare to change from one substance into another (Latin trāns- + substantia substance); for suffix see -ATION.

transverse adj. 1621, lying across, placed crosswise; borrowed from Middle French transverse, and directly from Latin trānsversus turned or directed across, past participle of trānsvertere turn across (trāns- across + vertere to turn). —n. Before 1633, from the adjective.

transvestite n. 1922, borrowed from German Transvestit (Latin trāns- across + vestire to clothe); for suffix see *-ITE*¹. Compare TRAVESTY.

trap n. About 1200 trapp snare, pitfall; developed from Old English træppe snare, trap (before 1000); cognate with Middle Dutch trappe trap, snare; also, stair, step, tread, from Proto-Germanic trap-*. The sense of a deceitful practice, trickery, or fraud is first recorded in 1681. —v. Before 1393 trappen to catch in a trap, ensnare; from the noun. —trap door (about 1385) —trappings n. pl. Before 1398 trappinge, sing., ornamental covering for a horse; later trappings, pl., ornaments, dress, embellishments, (1596); formed from Middle English trappe cloth for a horse (alteration of French drap cloth, drape) + -ings, plural of *-ing*¹. —traps n. pl. 1925, drums, cymbals, bells, gongs, etc., from trap drummer (1903) street musician who plays a drum and usually several other instruments at once; from traps belongings (1813), as a shortened form of trappings ornaments, belongings.

trapeze n. 1861, borrowing of French trapèze, from Late Latin trapezium TRAPEZIUM; probably originally applied to a kind of trapeze in which the ropes formed a trapezium with the crossbar and the roof.

trapezium n. 1570, borrowed from Late Latin trapezium, from Greek trapézion irregular quadrilateral; originally, small table, diminutive of trápeza table (tra- four + péza foot, edge).

trapezoid n. 1706, a trapezium; borrowed from New Latin trapezoides, from Late Greek, special use of Greek trapezoeidēs trapezium-shaped, from trápeza table + -oeidēs -oid. The sense of a four-sided plane figure having only two sides parallel is first recorded in English in 1795.

trash n. About 1518, worthless stuff, rubbish; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Norwegian trask lumber, trash, Old Icelandic tros rubbish, fallen leaves and twigs, and Swedish trasa rag), of unknown origin. —v. 1859, from the noun. The sense of destroy, vandalize (1970), was extended to criticize severely in 1975. —trashy adj. Before 1620, formed from English trash, n. + *-y*¹.

trauma n. 1693, physical wound; borrowed from Greek trauma wound. The sense of an unpleasant experience which causes an abnormal mental stress, psychic wound (1894, implied in traumata, pl. and in use of traumatic in psychology 1889). —traumatic adj. 1656, of or caused by a trauma; borrowed from French traumatique, and directly from Late Latin traumaticus of or pertaining to a wound, from Greek traumatikós, from trauma (genitive traumatós) wound; for suffix see -ic.

travail n. About 1275, toil, labor, trouble; borrowed from Old French travail suffering or painful effort, trouble, from travailler to toil, labor; originally, to trouble, torture, from Vulgar Latin tripaliare* to torture, from tripalium* (attested as Late Latin trépaliū) instrument of torture, probably from Latin tripalis having three stakes (tria, trēs three + pālus stake). —v. About 1275 travaillen to toil, labor, trouble; borrowed from Old French travailler. Related to TRAVEL.

travel v. 1375 travelen to journey; the sense found earlier (1300) in travaillen, the form developing from a shift of stress in travaillen, originally meaning to toil, labor; see TRAVAIL. The semantic development of travel may have come from an original meaning “to go on a difficult journey” or may have referred to the hardships and difficulties of early travel. —n. About 1375, action of traveling; perhaps from the verb, or developed, as the verb did, from a specialized sense and form of travail. —traveled adj. 1413, experienced in travel, from travel, v. + *-ed*². —traveler n. 1375, possibly formed from travel + *-er*¹, or from earlier travaillen + *-er*¹, -our and then leveled in form to traveler.

traverse v. Before 1325 traversen pass across, over, or through; borrowed from Middle French traverser to cross, thwart, from Vulgar Latin trāversāre*, from Latin trāversāre to cross, throw across, from Latin trāversus turned across, TRANSVERSE.

—n. 1347 travers act of crossing, something put across, borrowed from Old French, in part from 1) travers passage, a lying across, transverse, from Latin trāversum, neuter of trāversus transverse, lying across; and in part from 2) traverse crosspiece, crossroad, from Latin trāversa, feminine of trāversus transverse, lying across. —adj. 1415, borrowed from Middle French travers, from Latin trāversus transverse.

travesty n. 1674, developed from adjective meaning dressed so as to be made ridiculous, parodied, burlesqued (about 1662); borrowed from French travesti dressed in disguise, past participle of travestir to disguise (Latin trā-, trāns- over + vestire to clothe); for suffix see *-y*³. Compare TRANSVESTITE. —v. 1673, borrowed from French travesti, past participle of travestir.

trawl v. 1561, borrowed from Dutch tragelen, from Middle Dutch traghelen to drag, from traghel dragnet, probably from Latin trāgula dragnet. —n. 1630, action of trawling; later, a dragnet (1759); from the verb. —trawler n. 1630, person (and a ship) that trawls (implied in trawler boat, 1599); formed from English trawl + *-er*¹.

tray n. 1270 trey; later tray (1350); developed from Old English træg, trīg flat container with a low rim (from Proto-Germanic traujan*), related to trēow wood, TREE, so that the primary sense may have been “wooden (vessel).” Old English træg, trīg is probably cognate with Old Swedish trø corn measure.

treachery n. Probably before 1200 tricherie deceit, treason; later trecherie (about 1300); borrowed from Old French trecherie, tricherie deceit, cheating, from trechier, trichier to cheat, deceive; see TRICK; for suffix see -ERY. —treacherous adj. Before 1338 trichereous characterized by treachery; borrowed from Old French trecheros, tricheros deceitfulness, from trecheur, tricheur a deceiver, cheat, from trechier, tricher to cheat; for suffix see -OUS.

treacle n. 1340 triacle medicinal compound, an antidote for poison; borrowed from Old French triacle antidote, from Latin thēriaca, from Greek thēriakē (antídotos) antidote for poisonous wild animals, as reptiles, from feminine of thēriakós of a wild animal, from thērion wild animal, diminutive of thēr (genitive thērós) wild animal. The sense of molasses is first recorded in 1694, and that of something too sweet or sentimental, in 1771. Connection between “molasses” and the “medicinal compound” comes from the use of molasses as a laxative.

tread v. Probably about 1200 treden to step, step heavily on; developed from Old English tredan (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic tredanan*; cognate with Old Frisian treda to tread, Old Saxon tredan, Old High German tretan (modern German treten), and related to Old Icelandic trodha (Swedish tråda, tråda, Danish træde, and Norwegian trå), and Gothic trudan, from Proto-Germanic trudan*. —n. Probably before 1200 tred mark made in treading, footprint; presumably from the verb.

treadle n. About 1410 tredel; literally, step, stair; found in Old English (about 1000), from tredan to TREAD; for suffix see *-LE*¹. —v. 1891, from the noun.

treason n. Probably before 1200 treison the action of betraying, treachery; borrowed through Anglo-French treson, from Old French trahison (influenced by the verb trahir betray), from Latin trāditiōnem (nominative trāditiō) a handing over, delivery, surrender.

treasure n. 1137 tresor wealth or riches stored up; borrowed from Old French tresor treasury, treasure, from Latin thēsauros treasure, from Greek thēsauros treasure. The spelling treasure began to appear in English about 1530. —v. Before 1382 tresoren to hoard, store up, preserve in the memory; from tresor, n. —treasurer n. About 1290 tresurer; borrowed through Anglo-French tresorer, from Old French tresorier, from tresor treasure; for suffix see -ER¹. —treasury n. About 1300 tresorie place where valuables are kept; borrowed from Old French tresorie, from tresor treasure; for suffix see -Y³. The government department that controls public finances is first recorded in Middle English about 1383.

treat v. About 1300 treten negotiate, bargain, deal with; borrowed from Old French traitier, from Latin tractāre manage, handle, deal with; originally, drag about, frequentative form of trahere to pull, draw. The sense of deal with in speech or writing (about 1325) is used in medicine in 1781. —n. 1375 trete act of negotiating; from the verb. The sense of a treating with food and drink (1651) was extended to anything that gives pleasure by 1770. —treatment n. About 1560, act or way of treating; formed from English treat, v. + -ment. The sense in medicine is first recorded in 1744.

treatise n. Before 1325 treteice, borrowed from Anglo-French treteiz, contracted from treteiz*, from Gallo-Romance tractātiū*, from Latin tractāre to deal with.

treaty n. Before 1382 tretee treatment, discussion; borrowed from Old French traitié, traitié assembly, agreement, treaty, from Latin tractātus (genitive tractātūs) discussion, handling, from tractāre to handle, manage; for suffix see -Y³. The sense of a signed contract between two or more nations is first recorded in 1430–31, found in the sense of an agreement arrived at by negotiation (1427).

treble adj. Probably before 1300, three times, triple; borrowed from Old French treble, from Latin tripulus TRIPLE. —v. Before 1325 treblen; borrowed from Old French trebler, from treble, adj. —n. Before 1338, highest part in music, soprano; borrowed from Old French treble, n. and adj. In early contrapuntal music the chief melody was given to the tenor, and the voice parts added above were the alto and the treble (third part).

tree n. Before 1250 tre; later tree (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 830) trēo, trēow tree; cognate with Old Frisian trē tree, Old Saxon trio, tree, Old Icelandic trē (Swedish trä wood, träd tree, Danish træ, and Norwegian tre), and Gothic triu tree, wood, from Proto-Germanic trewan*. —v. 1575, take or cause to take refuge in a tree; from the noun.

trefoil n. 1384 trefoyle, borrowed through Anglo-French trifol, from Old French trefeuil, from Latin trifolium three-leaved plant (tri- three + folium leaf).

trek v. 1850, to travel or migrate by ox wagon, borrowed from Afrikaans trek, from Dutch trekken to march, journey; originally, to draw, pull, from Middle Dutch trecken; cognate with Middle Low German trecken and Old High German trechan to pull. —n. 1849, a journey by ox wagon or a stage of such a journey, earlier a migrating Boer (1835); borrowed from Afrikaans trek, from Dutch trek a drawing, pull, haul, march, from trekken to journey.

trellis n. 1380 trellis, borrowed from Old French trellis, from Vulgar Latin trilicius*, from Latin trilicis, genitive of trilix having three threads, triple-twilled, in reference to the number of threads of the warp gathered together in weaving (tri- three + licium thread). The sense of a lattice used to support growing vines (1513) apparently developed from French treillis applying to things woven of iron wire, gold, etc., from Old French trelliz applying to stout woven fabric, from an early confusion with the prefix tres- from Latin trāns-. —v. Probably before 1400 trelesen; from the noun.

tremble v. About 1303 tremlen shake from fear, cold, etc., later tremblen (reinforced by the spelling in Old French, about 1380); borrowed from Old French trembler tremble, fear, from Vulgar Latin tremulāre*, from Latin tremulus trembling, tremulous, from tremere to tremble. —n. 1609, from the verb. —trembly adj. 1848, formed from English tremble, v. or n. + -y¹.

tremendous adj. 1632 tremenduous awful, dreadful, terrible; later in the spelling tremendous (1657–83); borrowed from Latin tremendus fearful, terrible; literally, to be trembled at, a gerundive form of tremere to TREMBLE; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of extraordinarily great or good, immense (1812), parallels semantic changes found in terrific, terribly, awfully, etc.

tremolo n. 1801, borrowing of Italian tremolo, from Latin tremulus trembling; see TREMULOUS.

tremor n. About 1385 tremor, tremour terror; borrowed from Old French tremor, tremour, and directly from Latin tremōrem (nominative tremor) a trembling, terror, from tremere to TREMBLE. The sense of an involuntary shaking is first recorded in English in 1615.

tremulous adj. 1611, borrowed from Latin tremulus shaking, quivering, from tremere to TREMBLE; for suffix see -OUS.

trench n. About 1395 trench track cut through a wood; later, long and narrow ditch (1489); borrowed from Old French trenche a slice, ditch, from trenchier to cut, possibly from Vulgar Latin trincāre*, from Latin truncāre to cut or lop off. The trench used for military protection is first recorded in English about 1500. —v. 1483 trenchen to cut, borrowed from Middle French trenchier, from Old French. Some senses of the English verb derive from the noun.

trenchant adj. Before 1325 trenchant (implied in trenchantliche trenchantly) sharp, incisive; borrowed from Old French trenchant cutting, sharp, present participle of trenchier to cut; for suffix see -ANT. —trenchancy n. 1866; formed from English trenchant + -cy.

trencher n. About 1308 trenchur wooden platter on which to cut meat; also trencheour knife (before 1338); borrowed from trend v. 1598, (of rivers, coasts, etc.) to run or bend in a certain direction; developed from Middle English trenden roll about, turn, revolve (probably before 1300), found in Old English (before 1000), trendan from Proto-Germanic trandijanan*.

Anglo-French trenchour, from Old French trenchoir a trencher; literally, a cutting place, from trenchier to cut.

The sense of have a general tendency (said of events, opinions, etc.) is first recorded in 1863. —n. About 1630, a rounded bend or circuit of a stream; from the verb. The sense of a general direction of a river, coast, etc., is first recorded in 1777, and that of a general course or tendency (of action, thought, etc.), in 1884. —trendy adj. (1962) trepidation n. 1607–12, borrowed from French trepidation, and directly from Latin trepidatiōnem (nominative trepidatiō) agitation, alarm, trembling, from trepidare to tremble, hurry, from trepidus alarmed, scared; for suffix see -ATION.

trespass v. About 1303 trespassen transgress, offend, sin; borrowed from Old French trespasser pass beyond or across (tres- beyond, from Latin trāns- + passer go by, pass¹). The meaning of enter unlawfully (about 1455) is from forest laws of the Scottish Parliament. —n. About 1300 trespas transgression, offense, sin; borrowed from Old French trespas a passing across, transgression, from trespasser pass beyond or across. Trespassing onto land is from the same source as the verb.

tress n. About 1300 tresse lock, curl, or braid of hair; borrowed from Old French tresse, tresce (also compare Italian treccia), perhaps from Vulgar Latin trichia* braid, rope, from Greek trichia rope, from thrīx (genitive trichós) hair. —tressed adj. Probably before 1300; formed from Middle English tresse + -ed².

trestle n. About 1330 trestle, borrowed from Old French trestel crossbeam, alteration (probably by influence of tres- beyond) of possible trastel*, from Latin trānstellum*, diminutive of Latin trānstrum beam, crossbar.

trey n. 1390 trey, card, die, or domino with three spots; borrowed from Old French treie three (in games of dice), from Latin tria (neuter) THREE.

tri- a combining form meaning: 1 having three, as in triangle = (a plane figure) having three angles. 2 once every three, lasting for three, as in trimonthly = occurring every three months. 3 containing three atoms, radicals, or other constituents of the substance specified, as in trioxide, trisulfate. Borrowed from Latin or Greek tri-, combining forms of Latin trēs (neuter tria) or Greek trēs (neuter tría) three.

triad n. 1546, borrowed from Late Latin trias (genitive triadis), from Greek triás (genitive triádos), from trēs three.

triage n. 1727–41, borrowing of French triage a picking out, sorting, from Old French trier to pick, cull; see TRY. In World War I triage was adopted for the sorting of wounded soldiers into three groups according to the severity of their injuries.

trial n. 1436 triall act or process of testing; borrowed from Anglo-French trial, from trier to TRY; for suffix see -AL². The sense of the examining and deciding of a case in a court of law (1577) was extended to any ordeal by 1595.

triangle n. 1392, borrowed from Old French triangle, and directly from Latin triangulum triangle, from neuter of triangulus three-cornered (tri- three + angulus corner, angle). —triangular adj. Before 1400, borrowed from Late Latin triangulāris pertaining to a triangle, from Latin triangulum triangle; for suffix see -AR.

tribe n. About 1250 tribu one of the twelve divisions of the ancient Hebrews; later tribe (about 1380); borrowed from Old French tribu, from Latin tribus one of three ethnic divisions of the original Roman State; later, one of the 35 political divisions, perhaps from tri- three, TRI- + bhu-, from the root of the verb BE. The sense of any ethnic group or race of people, is first recorded in 1596. —tribal adj. 1632, formed from English tribe + -al¹.

tribology n. 1965, study of friction, wear, and lubrication; coined from Greek tribos rubbing (from tribein to rub) + English -logy study of.

tribulation n. Before 1200 tribulaciun, borrowed from Old French tribulacion, and directly from Late Latin tribulatiōnem (nominative tribulatiō) distress, trouble, affliction, from tribulāre to oppress, afflict, a figurative use of Latin tribulāre to press; also possibly, to thresh out grain, from tribulum threshing sledge (stem trī- of terere to rub + -bulum a suffix forming names of tools); for suffix see -ATION.

tribunal n. 1447 trybunal, borrowed from Old French tribunal, and directly from Latin tribūnāl platform for the seats of magistrates, elevation, embankment, from tribūnus official in ancient Rome, magistrate; literally, head of a tribe; for suffix see -AL².

tribune¹ n. official in ancient Rome. About 1375, borrowed from Old French tribun, and directly from Latin tribūnus magistrate; originally, head of a tribe, from tribus (genitive tribūs) TRIBE.

tribune² n. raised platform, rostrum. 1762–71, borrowed from French tribune, from Italian tribuna raised platform, from Latin tribūnāl platform for the seats of magistrates in ancient Rome.

tributary n. 1375, person who pays tribute; borrowed from Latin tributarius liable to tax or tribute, from tributum TRIBUTE; for suffix see -ARY. The stream that flows into a larger body of water is a late development (1822) and developed from the adjective sense subsidiary, auxiliary. —adj. Before 1382, paying tribute; borrowed from Latin tributarius liable to tax or tribute. The sense of subsidiary, auxiliary, is first recorded in English in 1611.

tribute n. About 1350 tribit tax paid to a ruler or master for security and protection; later tribute (about 1380); borrowed from Old French tribut, and later directly from Latin tributum tribute; literally, a thing contributed or paid, noun use of tributus, neuter past participle of tribuere to pay, assign, grant; also allot among the tribes or to a tribe, from tribus TRIBE. The sense of an offering, gift, or token, is first recorded in English in 1585.

trice¹ v. haul up and fasten with a rope. About 1375 tricen, borrowed from Middle Dutch trisen hoist, from trise pulley; cognate with Middle Low German trīse pulley, of unknown origin.

trice² n. very short time. About 1440 tryse, in the phrase a tryse, or later in a tryce (1508) at a single pluck or pull, in an instant; tryse, tryce, trice a pull, from tricen to pull, TRICE¹.

triceps n. 1704, borrowed from Latin triceps (genitive tricipitis) three-headed (tri- three + -ceps, caput HEAD); so called because the muscle has three heads or origins.

trichina n., pl. trichinae. 1835, New Latin, borrowed from Greek trichinē, feminine of trichinos of or like hair, from thrīx (genitive trichós) hair. —trichinosis n. 1866, formed from English trichina trichina + -osis.

trick n. About 1412 trik thing done to deceive or cheat, ruse, wile; borrowed from Old North French trique trick, deceit, treachery, cheating, from trikier to deceive, cheat, variant of Old French trichier, probably from Vulgar Latin triccāre*, from Latin trīcārī be evasive, shuffle, from trīcae trifles, nonsense, a tangle of difficulties. —v. 1595, to deceive, cheat; from the noun. An earlier sense of to dress, adorn (found before 1500) is perhaps an unrelated word of different origin. —trickery n. (1800) —trickster n. (1711) —tricky adj. (1786) trickle v. About 1375 triklen flow or fall in drops, of uncertain origin; possibly a variant of striklen to trickle (also about 1375), a frequentative form of striken to flow, move, STRIKE; for suffix see *-LE*³. —n. 1580, from the verb.

tricolor n. 1798, flag having three colors; borrowed from French tricolore, originally found in drapeau tricolore three-colored flag, from Late Latin tricolor (Latin tri- three + color COLOR). —adj. 1815, borrowed from French tricolore.

tricot n. 1859, borrowing of French tricot, from tricoter to knit, probably variant of Old French estriquer to smooth, from a Germanic source (compare Middle Low German and Middle Dutch striken pass over lightly).

tricycle n. 1828, three-wheeled carriage; borrowing of French tricycle (tri- three + cycle). The three-wheeled vehicle worked by pedals is first recorded in English in 1868.

trident n. About 1450 trydent three-pronged spear; borrowed from Middle French trident, or directly from Latin tridēns (genitive tridentis) three-pronged, three-toothed (tri- three + dēns, genitive dentis, tooth).

triennial adj. 1640, lasting three years; 1642, occurring every three years; formed from Latin triennium three-year period (tri- three + annus year) + English suffix *-al*¹. —n. 1640, event that occurs every three years; from the adjective.

trifle n. Probably before 1200 trufle false or idle tale; later, a matter of little importance, trivial thing (about 1300); borrowed from Old French trufle mockery, diminutive of truffe deception, of uncertain origin. The spelling trifle developed in Middle English by about 1390 through earlier tryfyl (about 1303). —v. Probably before 1200 trufen to cheat, mock, jest; borrowed from Old French truffler, related to trufle, n. The sense of treat lightly, is first recorded in English in 1523.

trigger n. 1660, small lever that releases a spring or other mechanism, spelling alteration of earlier tricker (1621); borrowed from Dutch trekker trigger, from trekken to pull. Tricker remained the usual form in English until about 1750. —v. 1930, from the noun.

trigonometry n. 1614, from New Latin trigonometria, formed on the model of Greek trīgōnon triangle (tri- three + gōnīa angle) + mētron a measure; for suffix see *-y*³. —trigonometric adj. 1811, shortened form of trigonometrical (1666), formed from English trigonometry + -ical.

trilby n. 1897, in allusion to Trilby, heroine of the novel of the same name by George du Maurier, published in 1894; so called because this kind of hat was worn in the stage version of the novel.

trill v. 1666–67, borrowed from Italian trillare to quaver, trill, probably of imitative origin, but found in Medieval Latin trillare and in an unnamed German source (compare Middle Dutch trillen vibrate, move back and forth, vacillate). —n. 1649, borrowed from Italian trillo a quaver or warbling in singing, from trillare to trill.

trillion n. 1690, (in Great Britain) fourth power of a million (one million billion); borrowed from French trillion, formed from tri- three + (m)illion, from Old French million million. In the United States, Canada, and France, trillion is the third power of a thousand (one thousand billion).

trilobite n. 1832, borrowed from New Latin Trilobites former group name of these animals (from Greek tri- three + lobós lobe); so called because the trilobite's body is divided into three lobes; for suffix see *-ITE*¹.

trilogy n. 1661, borrowed from Greek trilogía series of three related tragedies performed at the festival of Dionysus (tri- three + lógos story; see -LOGY).

trim v. Before 1460 trimmen make firm, make fit; probably developed from Old English (before 800) trymman strengthen, make ready, from trum strong, stable, from Proto-Germanic trumaz*. The meaning of make neat by cutting is first recorded in 1530, and that of decorate, adorn, in 1547. The nautical meaning of adjust (the sails or yards) to fit the direction of the wind (1624) was probably influenced by the adjective sense. —adj. Probably about 1500 trym elegant; from the verb. The sense of in good condition, neat, fit (1503–13) is implied in trimly. —adv. 1529, from the adjective. —n. 1579–80, ornament, decoration, from the verb. The sense of readiness of a ship for sailing is first recorded in 1590. —trimmer n. 1518, possibly in the obsolete meaning of a canopy; later, one who trims, repairs, or adjusts (1555), and one who changes his opinions, actions, etc., to suit the circumstances (1682); formed from English trim, v. + *-er*¹. —trimming n. 1519, a making trim, putting in order; later trimmings any adornment or accessories (1612).

trimaran n. 1949, formed from tri- three + (cata)maran.

trimester n. 1821, borrowed from French trimestre, from Latin trimestris of three months (tri- three + mēnsis month).

trimeter n. 1567, borrowed from Latin trimetrus, from Greek trímētrōs having three measures (tri- three + mētron a measure).

Trinity n. Probably before 1200 Trinite the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as constituting one God in Christian doctrine; borrowed from Old French trinité, from Latin trīnitātem (nominative trīnitās) Trinity, triad, from trīnī three at a time, threefold (earlier trīsnō*), related to trēs (neuter tria) three; for suffix see -ITY. The general sense of any group of three is first recorded in 1542. — Trinitarian adj. 1656, formed from New Latin trinitarius of the Trinity (from Latin trīnitās Trinity) + English -an, probably by influence of French trinitarien. trinket n. Before 1533, of uncertain origin.

trinomial n. 1674, formed from English tri- three + -nomial, patterned on binomial. — adj. 1704, from the noun.

trio n. 1724, borrowing of Italian trio, from tri- three, patterned on duo DUO. The sense of any group of three is first recorded in English in 1777.

trip v. About 1390 trippen tread or step lightly, skip, caper; borrowed from Old French tripper strike with the feet, from a Germanic source (compare Low German trippen, trippeln, Middle Dutch trepelen, and modern Dutch trippelen to trip, related to Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch trappen to stamp, tread; see TRAP). The sense of strike with the foot causing to stumble is first recorded in Middle English about 1425. — n. Before 1420, act of tripping, stumble; from the verb. The sense of a short journey or voyage, a run (1691), originated as a nautical term, possibly developed from an act of tripping or moving lightly and quickly (1600).

tripartite adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin tripartitus, variant of tripertitus divided into three parts (tri- three + partitus, past participle of partiri to divide).

tripe n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French tripe entrails, of uncertain origin (perhaps ultimately through Spanish tripa from Arabic therb suet). The sense of something worthless, foolish, or offensive (1892) derived from earlier use applied contemptuously to a person (1595).

triple v. 1375 tripplen, borrowed from Medieval Latin tripulare to triple, from Latin tripulus threefold, triple (tri- three + -plus -fold). — n. About 1425, borrowed from Latin tripulus, n. and adj. — adj. Probably before 1425, consisting of three things, threefold; borrowed from Latin triplex threefold.

triplet n. 1656, three successive lines of poetry; formed in English from TRIPLE, perhaps patterned on doublet; for suffix see -ET. The general meaning of any set or group of three is first recorded in 1733, and that of one of three children born at the same birth (usually triplets) in 1787.

triplicate adj. Probably before 1425, triple, threefold; borrowed from Latin triplicatus, past participle of triplicare to triple (tri- three + plicare to fold); for suffix see -ATE¹. — n. 1762–71, from the adjective. — v. 1623, borrowed from Latin triplicatus, past participle of triplicare to triple; for suffix see -ATE¹.

tripod n. 1603, borrowed from French tripode, and directly from Latin tripūs (genitive tripodis), from Greek trípous (genitive trípodos) a three-legged stool or table; literally, three-footed (tri- three + poús, genitive podós foot).

triptych n. 1731, hinged, three-leaved writing tablet used in ancient Greece and Rome; borrowed from Greek tríptychos three-layered (tri- three + ptychós, genitive of ptýx fold, layer).

trireme n. 1601, ancient ship with three rows of oars; borrowed from Latin trirēmis (tri- three + rēmus oar).

trisect v. 1695, formed in English from tri- three + Latin sectus, past participle of secare to cut; probably patterned on bisect.

trite adj. Before 1548, borrowed from Latin tritius worn, familiar, from past participle of terere to rub, wear down.

triturate v. 1755, borrowed from Late Latin trītūrātus, past participle of trītūrāre to thresh, from Latin trītūra a rubbing, from trītus, past participle of terere to rub, grind; for suffix see -ATE¹.

triumph n. About 1375 triumphe procession for a victorious general in ancient Rome; borrowed from Old French triumphe, triumphe achievement, conquest, rejoicing for success, and directly from Latin triumphus achievement, a success, procession for a victorious general or admiral; earlier, trumpus, probably through Etruscan from Greek thrámbos hymn to Dionysus. The sense of victory, conquest, is first recorded in Middle English about 1400. — v. Probably before 1450, rejoice in victory, exult; borrowed from Middle French triumpher, and directly from Latin triumphāre to achieve success, celebrate a triumph, from triumphus triumph. The sense of gain mastery, prevail, is first recorded in English in 1508. — triumphal adj. Probably before 1439, of a triumph; borrowed from Latin triumphālis, from triumphus triumph; for suffix see -AL¹. — triumphant adj. About 1410 triumphaunt conquering, victorious; borrowed from Middle French triumphant, triumphant, and directly from Latin triumphantem (nominative triumphāns) celebrating, exultant, present participle of triumphāre to triumph; for suffix see -ANT.

triumvir n. Probably before 1439 tryumvir, borrowed from Latin triumvir (usually triumvirī, plural), abstracted from the Old Latin phrase trium virum, genitive plural of trēs virī three men (trēs three + virī, plural of vir man). — triumvirate n. 1584, association of three joint rulers or powers; borrowed from Middle French triumvirat, and directly from Latin triumviratus office of a triumvir, from triumvir a triumvir; for suffix see -ATE³.

trivia n. pl. 1902, borrowing of Latin trivia, plural of trivium place where three roads meet, common place, gutter, a meaning reinforced by influence of English trivial.

trivial adj. Before 1425 triviale of the trivium; borrowed from Medieval Latin trivialis, from trivium first three of the seven liberal arts, in Latin from trivium place where three roads meet (tri- three + via road); for suffix see *-AL*¹. The meaning of ordinary (1589) and of not important, insignificant, in 1593 were borrowed from Latin trivialis commonplace, vulgar; originally, of or belonging to the crossroads, from trivium. —triviality n. 1598, trivial quality; later, trivial matter (1611); formed from English trivial + -ity.

trivium n. 1804, borrowed from Medieval Latin, grammar, rhetoric, and logic, the first three of the seven liberal arts in the Middle Ages; from Latin trivium place where three roads meet; see TRIVIAL.

troche n. 1597 trochies, plural, alteration of trosc (1392); borrowed from Latin trochiscus, from Greek trochiskeos small wheel or globe, lozenge, diminutive of trochos wheel, from tréchein to run; see TROCHEE.

trochee n. 1603 trochie, measure in poetry consisting of two syllables; borrowed from French trochée a trochee, from Latin trochaus a trochee, from Greek trochaíos a trochee; literally, running, as in trochaíos poús running foot, from tróchos a running, spinning, from tréchein to run. —trochaic adj. 1589, consisting of or characterized by trochees; borrowed from Middle French trochaïque, and directly from Latin trochaeus, from Greek trochāikos, from trochaíos trochee; for suffix see -IC.

troglydite n. 1555, borrowed from Middle French troglydite, and directly from Latin trōglodyta, from Greek trōglodytēs cave dweller; literally, one who creeps into holes (trōglē hole, from trōgein to gnaw + dýein go in, dive in).

troika n. 1842, borrowed from Russian troika three-horse team, any group of three, from the collective numeral tróe three. The sense of a group of three administrators or rulers, triumvirate, is first recorded in 1945.

troll¹ v. sing in a full, rolling voice. Probably before 1387 trollen to go about, stroll; later (about 1425) roll about, trundle; borrowed from Old French troller wander, search for game, from a Germanic source (compare Middle High German trollen to walk with short steps), from Proto-Germanic truzlanan*. The sense of sing in a full, rolling voice (1575) and of fish with a moving line (1606) are extended technical applications of the generalized sense of roll, trundle. —n. 1570, fishing reel; from the verb. The meaning of a song sung in parts, round, is first recorded in 1820.

troll² n. ugly dwarf or giant. 1616, Scottish; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic troll giant, fiend, demon, Swedish and Norwegian troll hobgoblin, giant, Danish trolld), perhaps originally a creature that walks clumsily (from Proto-Germanic truzlān*, from truzlanan*); see TROLL¹.

trolley n. 1823, a cart, especially (1858) with wheels flanged for running on a track, probably from *troll*¹ in the sense of to roll. The pulley to convey current to a streetcar motor (1890) is followed by a streetcar drawing power by a trolley (1891).

trollop n. 1615, slovenly woman; probably derived from *troll*¹ roll about, wallow; for suffix compare gallop, wallop.

trombone n. 1724, borrowed from French trombone, and directly from Italian trombone, augmentative form of tromba trumpet, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German trumba, trumpa trumpet); see TRUMPET.

-tron a suffix meaning: 1 having to do with electrons, as in magnetron (1924) a device in which the flow of electrons is controlled by a magnetic field. 2 device for directing the movement of subatomic particles, as in cyclotron, synchrotron. 3 device or structure for controlling physical conditions, as in phylotron (1949) a structure where plants are studied under controlled conditions. Borrowed from Greek -tron, suffix used in names of means, devices, and tools, as in átron plow.

troop n. 1545, body of soldiers; borrowed from Middle French troupe, from Old French trope band of people, company, troop, probably from Frankish throp* assembly, gathering of people; compare Old High German thorf, thorph village (modern German Dorf), Old Frisian and Old Saxon thorp, Old English thorp, thorp, Old Icelandic thorp village, and Gothic thaurp field, from Proto-Germanic thurpa-*. —v. 1565, from the noun. —trooper n. 1640, soldier in the cavalry; formed from English troop, n. + *-er*¹. The meaning of mounted policeman (1858) was extended to state policeman by 1911.

trope n. 1533, figure of speech; borrowed from Latin tropus a figure of speech, from Greek trópos turn, direction, turn or figure of speech, related to trópē a turning, and trépein to turn.

trophy n. 1513, a spoil or prize of war; borrowed from Middle French trophée, from Latin trophaeum, tropaeum a sign of victory, monument, from Greek trópaion monument of an enemy's defeat, from neuter of the adjective trópaíos of defeat, from trópē a rout; originally, a turning (of the enemy). The figurative sense of any token or memorial of victory is first recorded in English in 1569.

tropic n. 1391, either of two circles in the celestial sphere; borrowed from Old French tropique, and directly from Late Latin tropicus of or pertaining to the solstice (as a noun, one of the tropics), from Latin tropicus pertaining to a turn, from Greek trópikós of or pertaining to a turn or change, or to the solstice (as a noun, the solstice), from trópē a turning (see TROPE); for suffix see -IC. The sense of either of the two parallels of latitude on the earth's surface (usually the tropics) is first recorded in English in 1527. —tropical adj. 1527, formed from English tropic, n. + *-al*¹.

tropism n. 1899, tendency of an animal or plant to turn or move in response to a stimulus; abstracted from GEOTROPISM.

troposphere n. 1914, lowest region of the atmosphere; borrowed from French troposphère (from Greek trópos a turn, change + sphaíra SPHERE).

trot v. Before 1387 trotten, borrowed from Old French troter trot, go, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German trottōn to tread and Middle High German trotten to run, related to Old High German tretan to tread). —n. Before 1325 trott, borrowed from Old French trot, from troter to trot.

troth n. Probably about 1150 trowthe; developed from Old English trēowth faithfulness, truth (in which the stress shifted from the e to the o).

troubadour n. 1727–41, borrowing of French troubadour, from Old Provençal trobador, from trobare to find; earlier, invent a song, compose in verse, probably from Vulgar Latin tropāre* compose, sing, especially in the form of tropes, from Latin trōpus a song; see TROPE.

trouble v. Probably before 1200 trublen disturb, agitate, injure; borrowed from Old French trubler, troubler (formed by metathesis of u, ou and r, found in Old French turbler, tourble), from Vulgar Latin turbulāre*, alteration of Late Latin turbidāre to trouble, make turbid, from Latin turbidus TURBID. Vulgar Latin turbulāre* was influenced by Latin turbula small group, diminutive of turba turmoil, crowd. —n. Probably about 1200 trubuil worry, distress; borrowed from Old French truble, trouble, from trubler, troubler to trouble. —troublesome adj. Before 1548, formed from English trouble, n. + *-some*¹. —troubled adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French troubleus, troubleux, from trouble trouble, n.; for suffix see -OUS.

trough n. Before 1325 trow; later trog, trough (about 1390); developed from Old English (about 700) trog; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon trog trough, Middle Dutch trog (modern Dutch troch), Old High German trog (modern German Trog), and Old Icelandic trog (Danish trug, Norwegian trau, Swedish tråg), from Proto-Germanic trugā-*.

The original sound represented by gh in trough, as in cough, laugh, etc., was a guttural ch, as in Scottish loch or German ach. As the pronunciation shifted to the sound of f in off, the spelling of many words also changed to reflect this process, as in draft for draught, dwarf, etc.; but a group of spellings remained fixed.

trounce v. 1551, to trouble, afflict, harass; later, to beat, thrash (1568); of uncertain origin. The original English spelling was trounse, but trounce was also used by 1568, perhaps through influence of Middle French troncer to cut, cut off a piece from, from tronce piece of timber, from Old French tronc TRUNK.

troupe n. 1825, borrowing of French troupe, from Middle French troupe company, TROOP. —trouper n. 1890, formed from English troupe + *-er*¹.

trousers n. pl. 1612, extended form (through apparently accidental intrusion of r) of earlier trouzes (1581); borrowed from Gaelic or late Middle Irish triubhas (pronounced trē'vəs or trē'vəs), of uncertain origin. As early as 1581 trouzes was taken as a plural (and may have been known much earlier, compare trues, 1306).

trousseau n. 1817; later borrowing of French trousseau, originally, a bundle, diminutive of Old French trousse bundle. Old French trousse was borrowed into Middle English in its original sense of bundle, by about 1200.

trout n. Before 1325 trute; in part developed from Old English trūht trout (about 1050), and in part borrowed from Old French truite, troite; both from Late Latin tructa, trōcta, perhaps from Greek trōktēs a kind of sea fish; literally, nibbler, from trōgein to nibble, gnaw.

trowel n. 1344, tool for spreading plaster or mortar; borrowed from Old French troele, truele, from Late Latin truella small ladle, dipper, diminutive of Latin trua a stirring spoon, ladle, skimmer. The small spade held in one hand and used in gardening is first recorded in 1796. —v. About 1599, from the noun.

troy adj. 1380–81 troye, probably from Troyes, a city in France (ancient Tricasses), former site of a fair at which this weight for gems and precious metals is said to have been used.

truant n. About 1300, beggar, vagabond; borrowed from Old French truant beggar, vagabond, rogue, from Gaulish trouant-* (compare Breton truan*, later truant vagabond, Middle Welsh tru miserable, Welsh truan miserable, as a noun meaning wretch, Old Irish trōg miserable; also compare Gaelic truagh miserable, truaghan wretch). The child who stays away from school is first recorded about 1449. —adj. Before 1550, that is a truant, or plays truant; from the noun.

truce n. Probably before 1200 triws a stopping of fighting, feuding, or quarreling, armistice; variant of *trewe*s, originally the plural of trewe faith, assurance of faith, covenant, treaty; developed from Old English trēow faith, treaty (from Proto-Germanic treuwō*); related to trēowe faithful; see TRUE; and cognate with Old Frisian triūwe faith, loyalty, Old Saxon treuwa, Middle Dutch trouwe (modern Dutch trouw), Old High German triūwa (modern German Treue), Old Icelandic trū (Danish and Swedish tro, Norwegian tro, tru), and Gothic triggwa covenant.

Plural trewes gradually became a singular through application of the word to the agreement or promise of good faith pledged by parties after a dispute. —trucial adj. 1876, pertaining to or bound by a truce (used originally in reference to a maritime truce made in 1835 between the British government and certain sheikdoms in southeastern Arabia); formed from English truce + -ial.

truck¹ n. vehicle. 1611, small wheel, especially one on which carriages of a ship's guns were mounted; probably borrowed from Latin trochus iron hoop, from Greek trochós wheel, from tréchein to run. The cart for carrying heavy loads (1774) was extended to that of a motor vehicle for carrying such loads in 1930, as a shortened form of motor truck (1916). —v. 1809 (implied in trucking); from the noun. —trucker n. 1853, worker who moves loads using a cart; formed from English truck a cart + *-er*¹. The person who drives a truck (1955) comes from truck driver (probably before 1931).

truck² v. exchange, barter. Probably before 1200 trukien, borrowed from Old North French troquer to barter, exchange, from Medieval Latin trocare barter, of unknown origin. The sense of have dealings with, is first recorded in English in 1615. —n. 1533, barter, from the verb. The sense of dealings (as in to have no truck with loan sharks) is first recorded in English before truckle¹ n. small wheel or roller. 1397 trokell, borrowed from Anglo-French trocle, from Latin trochlea a small wheel, sheaf of a pulley, from Greek trochileā a pulley, from trochós wheel, from trêchein to run. —truckle bed low bed moving on small wheels or casters (1459).

1625. The sense of vegetables raised for the market, market-garden produce (1784) is also found in truck farm or garden (1866)

truckle² v. give up or submit tamely, be servile. 1612, sleep in a truckle bed; later, to submit, give precedence (1667); abstracted from truckle bed, in allusion to its use by servants and inferiors.

truculent adj. About 1540, borrowed from Latin truculentus fierce, savage, from trux (genitive trucis) fierce, wild; for suffix see -ENT. —truculence n. 1727, fierceness, savageness; formed in English as a noun to truculent, or borrowed from French truculence, and directly from Latin truculentia savageness, ferocity, from truculentus truculent; for suffix see -ENCE.

trudge v. 1547, to walk wearily but persistently; of unknown origin. —n. 1748, person who trudges; 1835, act of trudging; from the verb.

true adj. Probably before 1200 trewe, treowe faithful, loyal, trustworthy; developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) West Saxon trēwe, Mercian trēowe faithful, trustworthy; related to TRUCE.

Old English trēwe, trēowe (from Proto-Germanic trēw-wjaz*) is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon triuwi faithful, trustworthy, Middle Dutch ghetruwe (modern Dutch getrouw), Old High German gitriuwi (modern German treu) faithful, Old Icelandic trygg trustworthy, safe (Danish tryg, Swedish and Norwegian trygg safe, secure), and Gothic triggus faithful. The sense of consistent with fact (as in a true story) is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1200, and that of agreeing with a standard, accurate (as in true north) about 1550. —adv. About 1303 trew faithfully; before 1325, truthfully, rightly, from the adjective. —n. Probably about 1390, faithful person; from the adjective; later, that which is true (1812). —v. 1647, to prove true; from the adjective; later, make true (1841). —truism n. 1708, formed from English true, adj. + -ism. —truly adv. About 1303 trewely; earlier trouliche (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 1000) trēowlice (trēowe faithful, TRUE + -lice -ly¹).

truffle n. 1591, borrowed from Middle French trufle, alteration of Old French truffe, from Old Provençal trufa, from Late Latin tīfera, pl., cognate of Latin tuber edible root.

trump¹ n. playing card of a suit ranking above others. 1529, alteration of triumph name of a card game. —v. 1598, from the noun. The sense of surpass, beat, is attested in 1586, and that of put in one's way, in 1553, probably influenced by *trump*² to deceive, cheat.

trump² v. trump up fabricate, devise unscrupulously. 1695, from trump deceive, cheat (1513); developed from Middle trumpery n. 1456 tromperie deceit, trickery; also, nonsense, rubbish; borrowed from Middle French tromperie, from tromper to deceive, of uncertain origin; for suffix see -ERY. The spelling with u was influenced by confusion with *trump*² deceive. The sense of showy but worthless finery is first attested in 1610. —adj. 1576, trifling, worthless; from the noun.

English trumpen, borrowed from Old French tromper deceive, of uncertain origin.

trumpet n. Before 1393 trompette, borrowed from Old French trompette trumpet, diminutive (perhaps because of the shortening by bending over into curves) of trompe a musical wind instrument of a long tubelike form, from a Germanic source (compare Old High German trumba, trumpa and Old Icelandic trumba, both meaning trumpet); for suffix see -ET. The spelling trumpet is first recorded about 1447. —v. 1530, from the noun.

truncate v. 1486 (implied in truncated), borrowed from Latin truncātus cut off, past participle of truncāre to maim, cut off, from truncus mutilated, cut off; for suffix see -ATE¹. —adj. 1579 (implied in truncately), borrowed from Latin truncātus, past participle of truncāre cut off. —truncation n. Probably before 1425 truncacioun, borrowed from Late Latin truncātiōnem (nominative truncātiō) a cutting off or maiming, from truncāre to cut off; for suffix see -ATION.

truncheon n. Probably before 1300 tronchon shaft of a spear; also, a short stick, club, cudgel (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old North French tronchon, Old French tronçon a piece cut off, thick stick, stump, from Vulgar Latin trunciōnem* (nominative trunciō*), from Latin truncus stem, stock.

trundle n. 1564 (in trundle bed low bed on small wheels), possibly alteration of Middle English trendle wheel, suspended hoop (1324); developed from Old English trendel ring, disk (806); see TREND. —v. 1598, from the noun.

trunk n. 1440 trunke box, case; borrowed from Old French tronc alms box in a church; also, trunk of a tree, trunk of the human body, from Latin truncus trunk of a tree, trunk of a human body; originally adj., mutilated, cut off. The meaning of a box or case is likely a matter of simple resemblance. The meaning of the main stem of a tree (1490) and that of the torso of a human body (1494) are both derived from Old French. The luggage compartment of a motor vehicle (1930) derives from the use of a trunk fixed to the rear of some models. The use referring to an elephant's snout (1565) is from the generalized sense of pipe or tube (1548, found in trump about 1440).

trunnion n. Before 1625, either of the two round projections of a cannon; borrowed from French trognon core of fruit, stump, tree trunk, from Middle French troignon, from Latin truncus TRUNK, but influenced by Old French moignon, with the same meaning, from Gallo-Romance moniōnem*, from Gaulish moni*- neck.

truss v. Probably before 1200 trussen, borrowed from Old French trusser, trousser to load, pack, fasten, of uncertain origin. —n. Probably before 1200, bundle, pack; borrowed from Old French trousse, from trousser to pack. The sense of a framework for supporting a roof or bridge is first recorded in English in 1654.

trust n. Probably before 1200 truste confidence, reliance; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic traust help, confidence, Swedish tröst, Danish and Norwegian tröst consolation, related to Old Icelandic tryggr faithful, TRUE); cognate with Old Frisian trāst trust, Middle Dutch troost, modern Dutch troost consolation, Old High German trōst, modern German Thost consolation, and Gothic trausti agreement, covenant, from Proto-Germanic traust-*. —v. Probably before 1200 trusten, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic treysta to trust, related to traust, n.). —trustee n. 1647, person who is trusted; formed from English trust, v. + -ee. The person responsible for the property or affairs of another is first recorded in 1653. —trustworthy adj. (1808, implied in trustworthiness) —trusty adj. Probably before 1200 trusti having trust, trusting; formed from Middle English trust, adj. + -i *-y*¹. The sense of trustworthy (as in my trusty dog) is found in Middle English before 1310. —n. 1573, trustworthy person; from the adjective.

truth n. 1137 treuthe quality of being true (as in whispering tongues can poison truth), faithfulness; developed from Old English (before 899), West Saxon trēowth, Mercian trēowth faithfulness, from trīewe, trēowe faithful, TRUE. The sense of something that is true (as in tell us the truth), is first recorded in Middle English about 1378. The sense of conformity with fact (as in There is some truth in what you say), is first recorded in 1570. Compare TROTH.

try v. Before 1325 trien examine judicially, sit in judgment of; borrowed from Anglo-French trier, from Old French trier to pick out, cull (also found in Old Provençal and Catalan triar) all suggesting derivation from Gallo-Romance triāre*, of unknown origin. The sense of test, is first recorded in Middle English probably about 1380, and that of attempt to do, perform, etc., before 1333. —n. Before 1400, an attempt, endeavor; from the verb.

tryst n. 1375, borrowed from Old French tristre, triste appointed station in hunting, possibly from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic treysta to TRUST).

tsetse fly or tsetse n. 1849 tsetse, borrowed from a Bantu language (compare Setswana tsētsē, Luyia tsiisi flies).

T-shirt n. 1920, formed from the letter T, in allusion to the shape of the shirt when spread out flat + shirt.

tsunami n. huge ocean wave, tidal wave. 1904, borrowing of Japanese tsunami (tsu harbor + nami wave).

tub n. 1384 tobbe, 1388 tub; borrowed from Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, or Middle Flemish tubbe, of uncertain origin. The sense of a bathtub is first recorded in English in 1594, and that of a washtub, in 1560. —v. 1610, bathe in a tub; from the noun. —tubby adj. 1806–07, sounding like a tub when struck; formed from English tub, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of shaped like a tub, corpulent, is first recorded in 1835.

tuba n. 1852, borrowed from French tuba, from Latin tuba war trumpet, related to tubus TUBE.

tube n. 1611, borrowed from Latin tubus tube, pipe. —tubular adj. 1673, having the form of a tube or pipe; formed from Latin tubulus small tube (diminutive of tubus tube) + English -ar.

tuber n. 1668, borrowed from Latin tūber lump, bump, perhaps related to tumēre to swell. Compare TUMOR. —tuberous adj. 1650, covered with tubers, knobby; borrowed from French tubéreux (feminine tubéreuse) knobby, from Middle French tuberoux, from Latin tūberōsus full of lumps or tubers, from tūber tuber; for suffix see -OUS. A parallel form tuberosa knobby, is found in Middle English, probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin tūberōsus.

tubercle n. 1578, borrowed from Latin tūberculum small swelling, pimple, diminutive of tūber lump. —tubercular adj. 1799, characterized by tubercles, having tuberculosis (1898); borrowed from New Latin tubercularis* of or pertaining to tubercles, from Latin tūberculum tubercle; for suffix see -AR.

tuberculosis n. 1860, New Latin, from Latin tūberculum TUBERCLE. —tuberculous adj. 1747, tubercular; borrowed from New Latin tuberculosus characterized by tubercles, from Latin tūberculum tubercle; for suffix see -OUS.

tuck v. 1440 tukken gather up in folds; earlier, to pull or gather up (about 1385), and to pluck, stretch (probably before 1300, and implied earlier in tucker one who dresses or finishes cloth, 1273); probably borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch tucken pull up, draw up, tug; cognate with Old High German zuchen, zucken to jerk, tug (modern German zucken), and Old English tūcian mistreat, torment, related to togian to pull, TOW¹. The sense of thrust into a snug place is first recorded in 1587. —n. About 1385 tucke a fold or pleat; from the verb.

tucker¹ n. piece of lace worn around the neck. 1688, earlier, one who tucks in loose edges (1506); developed from Middle English tokker one who dresses or finishes cloth (before 1376); tukken to TUCK + -er *-er*¹.

tucker² v. to tire, weary. 1833, of uncertain origin.

-tude a suffix forming abstract nouns from adjectives and participles, usually in words borrowed (often through French) from Latin with French or English -tude replacing Latin -tūdō, as in altitude, fortitude, solitude; occasionally in words of later formation, as in decrepitude, exactitude, platitude, from French. Borrowed from French -tude, from Latin -tūdō (genitive -tūdinis). An occasional formation is found in English, such as torpitude, formed from English torpid + -tude, perhaps by analogy with a form such as turpitude.

Tuesday n. Probably before 1200 tisdae; earlier tywesdæi (1122); developed from Old English (about 1050) Tiwesdæg (*Tiwe*s, genitive of Tiū Tiu + dæg DAY). Tiū is derived in form from Proto-Germanic Tiwaz* god of the sky, but is a differentiation in sense specifically alluding to Tiū ancient Germanic god of war.

tuff n. 1569, rock of consolidated volcanic fragments; borrowed from Middle French tuf, from Italian tufo tufa (a porous rock), from Latin tōfus, probably.

tuft n. About 1387, a bunch of feathers, hair, grass, etc.; borrowed perhaps from Old French touffe, toffe, tofe, either from Late Latin tufa a kind of crest on a helmet, also found in Late Greek toúpha; or from a Germanic source (compare Old High German zopf and Old Icelandic toppr tuft, summit, TOP¹). The ending in -t is an innovation of English. —v. 1535, from the noun.

tug v. Probably before 1200 toggen pull playfully; later tuggen pull with force (about 1303); related to Old English togian to pull, drag; see TOW¹. —n. 1500–20, a hard pull; from the verb.

tuition n. About 1410 tuicioun protection, care, custody; borrowed from Anglo-French tuycioun, from Old French tuicion guardianship, from Latin tuitiōnem (nominative tuitiō) guard, protection, defense, from tui-, stem of tuērī to look after, protect, watch over; for suffix see -TION. The meaning of money paid for instruction (1828) is probably a shortening of tuition money, tuition fees, and derives from the act of teaching, instruction of a pupil (1582).

tulip n. 1578, borrowed from earlier Dutch tulipa, from French tulipe a tulip; earlier tulipan, from Turkish tülbent turban, gauze, muslin, tulle, from Persian dulband turban; so called from the fanciful resemblance of the plant's flower to a turban.

tulle n. About 1818, named after Tulle, a town in central France where the fabric was first manufactured.

tumble v. Probably before 1300 tomblen, tumbelen to roll over, fall suddenly; later (about 1325), to dance like an acrobat; perhaps a frequentative form of Old English (about 1000) tumbian dance about (see suffix -LE³); cognate with Old High German tūmōn turn round, reel, Middle High German tūmeln, modern German taumeln to turn, reel (all ultimately derived from a Low German source), and Old Icelandic tumba to tumble, of unknown origin. —n. 1634, disorder, confusion; from the verb. A fall or falling down is first recorded in 1716. —tumble-down adj. 1791, habitually falling down, said of a horse; 1818, dilapidated. —tumbler n. Before 1340, person who dances or tumbles, acrobat; formed from tumbelen dance, roll about + *-er*¹. The sense of a drinking cup or glass is first recorded in 1664; tumblers originally had rounded or pointed bottoms so that they could not be set down until emptied.

tumbrel or tumbril n. 1383 tomrell, 1440 tumrel, 1481 tomberel; borrowed from Old French tumberel, tomberel dump cart, from tomber (let) fall or tumble, possibly from a Gallo-Romance stem tumb-, tomb-; or from a Germanic source (compare Old High German tūmōn turn round, reel, and Old Icelandic tumba to TUMBLE).

tumescence n. 1859, borrowed from French tumescence, from Latin tumēscētem (nominative tumēscēns) swelling, present participle of tumēscere begin to swell, from tumēre to swell; for suffix see -ENCE, -ESCENCE. —tumescēt adj. swollen.

1882, formed in English as an adjective to tumescence on the model of Latin tumēscēns; for suffix see -ENT, -ESCENT.

tumor n. Probably before 1425 tumour an abnormal growth or swelling; borrowed from Latin tumor a swelling, condition of being swollen, from tumēre to swell; for suffix see -OR¹.

tumult n. About 1380 tumolte noise, uproar; borrowed from Old French tumulte, from Latin tumultus commotion, disturbance, related to tumēre to be excited, swell. —tumultuous adj. Before 1548, borrowed from Middle French tumultueux, from Latin tumultuōsus full of tumult, from tumultus (genitive tumultūs) commotion, disturbance; for suffix see -OUS.

tun n. Probably before 1200 tunne, large cask for liquids; also tonne (1340); developed from Old English (before 800) tunne; corresponding to Old Frisian and Old Saxon tunna tun, Middle Dutch tonne, tunne (modern Dutch ton), and Old High German tunna (modern German Tonne); and in Latin and Romance (Old French tonne, Provençal tona, Medieval Latin tunna, etc.) suggesting a borrowing, perhaps from a Celtic source. Compare TON and TUNNEL.

tuna n. 1881, borrowed from American Spanish tuna a large saltwater food fish, from Spanish atún, from Arabic tun, from Latin thunnus TUNNY. The Arabic word replaced (presumably during the occupation of southern Spain by the Arabs) an earlier Spanish form that must have existed as a descendant from Latin (compare Italian tonno, French thon, Provençal ton).

tundra n. 1841, borrowed from Russian túndra, from Lappish tundar elevated wasteland.

tune n. Before 1325 tune musical sound or tone, unexplained variant of TONE. The sense of a succession of musical tones, an air, melody, is first recorded before 1387. The sense (in in or out of tune) is first recorded about 1440. —v. About 1500, give forth a musical sound, sing; from the noun; also, put into correct musical pitch (1505). —tuner n. About 1580, musician or singer; formed from tune, v. + *-er*¹. A person who tunes a musical instrument is first recorded in 1801, and that of a device for varying the frequency received by a radio, in 1909.

tungsten n. 1770, borrowing of Swedish tungsten (tung heavy + sten stone).

tunic n. Before 1481 tunyk, borrowed from Middle French tunique, and directly from Latin tunica, probably from a Semitic source (compare Hebrew kuttōneth coat).

tunnel n. Probably before 1425 tonel funnel-shaped net for catching birds; borrowed from Middle French tonnelle net, or tonel cask, diminutive of Old French tonne tun, cask for liquids, possibly from the same source as Old English tunne TUN. The meaning of an underground passage is attested since 1765, about five years after the first modern tunnel was built (on the Grand Trunk Canal, England). The earlier term for a passage dug in the earth was mine (1303). —v. 1577, furnish with a net; from the noun. The meaning of excavate an underground passage is implied in tunnelling (1795).

tunny n. 1530, probably an alteration of Middle French thon, from Old Provençal ton, and borrowed directly from Latin thunnus, thynnus = tuna, tunny, from Greek thýnnos a tuna, tunny, possibly in the literal sense of darter, from thýnein dart along. See also TUNA. The ending -y in English may have been influenced by the -a in tuna.

tupelo n. About 1730, apparently borrowed from Algonquian (Cree) ito opilwa swamp tree.

turban n. 1561 tolipane; later torbant (1588), and turban (1597); borrowed through Middle French turbant from Italian turbante, from Turkish tülbent gauze, muslin, tulle, from Persian dulband turban.

turbid adj. 1626, muddy, thick; borrowed from Latin turbidus muddy, full of confusion, from turba turmoil, crowd, probably borrowed from Greek týrbē turmoil.

turbine n. 1838, borrowing of French turbine, from Latin turbō (genitive turbinis) spinning top, eddy, whirlwind, related to turba turmoil, crowd; see TURBID.

turbo- a combining form meaning: 1 coupled to a turbine, as in turbogenerator = a generator coupled to a turbine (1902). 2 powered by or consisting of a turbine, as in turbocar = an automobile powered by a gas turbine (1956). Formed about 1900 from English turb(ine) + connective -o-, influenced by Latin turbō spinning top.

turbot n. About 1300 turbut, borrowed from Old French turbut, tourbout, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Swedish törnbut turbot, from törn thorn + but flatfish; see HALIBUT); so called from its "thorns" or spines.

turbulent adj. Probably before 1425, unruly, violent; borrowed from Middle French turbulent, and directly from Latin turbulentus full of commotion, restless, from turba turmoil, crowd; see TURBID; for suffix see -ENT. —turbulence n. Before 1410, state of being turbulent; borrowed from Middle French turbulence, and directly from Latin turbulentia trouble, disgust, from turbulentus turbulent; for suffix see -ENCE.

tureen n. 1706, borrowed from French terraine earthen vessel, from Old French terrīn, adj., earthen, from Gallo-Romance terrīnus*, from Latin terrēnus of the earth. The spelling with u is probably a popular equivalent to e before r and is said to have arisen in cookbooks.

turf n. Old English (before 800) turf; cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch turf turf, Middle Low German toff (modern German Torf peat, turf), Old High German zurba, Old Icelandic toff (Swedish and Norwegian torv, Danish torv), from Proto-Germanic turb-*.

turgid adj. 1620, borrowed from Latin turgidus swollen, inflated, from turgere to swell. The sense of bombastic, pompous, is first recorded in 1725.

turkey n. 1541 (in turkey cock) the guinea fowl, a domesticated fowl imported by the Portuguese from New Guinea and thence from Africa by way of Turkey. Later (in 1555) the word turkey was applied to the familiar large American bird because it was originally identified with or treated as a species of the guinea fowl. It is also possible the turkey found domesticated by the Spanish in their invasion of Mexico in 1518, and found domesticated in Europe by 1530, is the bird reputed to have reached England in 1524.

turmeric n. 1538, alteration of Middle English turmeryte (probably before 1425); borrowed from Middle French terre-mérite saffron, from Medieval Latin terra merita, literally, worthy earth (Latin terra earth + past participle of merēre to be worth).

turmoil n. 1526, of uncertain origin; perhaps an alteration (influenced by TURN and MOIL) of Middle French tremouille mill hopper, in reference to its constant motion to and fro, from Latin trimodia vessel containing three modii (tri- three + modius Roman dry measure, related to modus measure).

turn v. Probably before 1200 turnen, in part developed from Old English (about 1000) turnian to turn; and in part borrowed from Old French torner to turn; both forms borrowed from Latin tornāre turn on a lathe, from tornus lathe, from Greek tórnos lathe, tool for drawing circles. —n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French torn circuit, circumference, turn, lathe, from torner to turn. The English noun was also influenced by the verb. —turner n. About 1400, one who fashions things on a lathe. —turnpike n. About 1420, spiked road barrier used for defense, and later to restrict access to a road; formed from Middle English turnen to turn + *pike*² sharp spike. The toll gate (before 1678) is followed by a road with toll gates (1748), earlier turnpike road (1745).

turnip n. Before 1500 turnepe, perhaps formed from turn (implying its rounded shape) + Middle English nepe turnip; developed from Old English nāp, borrowed from Latin nāpus turnip.

turpentine n. About 1400 turpentyne; earlier terebentyn (1322); borrowed from Old French terebentine, from Latin terebinthina in terebinthina resina resin of the terebinth tree, a small European tree related to the sumac, from Greek terebinthínē in rhētínē terebinthínē, feminine of terebinthinos of the terebinth, from terebinthos, earlier terminthos terebinth tree.

turpitude n. 1490, shameful wickedness, baseness; borrowed from Middle French turpitude, from Latin turpitūdō (accusative turpitūdinem) baseness, from turpis vile; for suffix see -TUDE.

turquoise n. 1567, replacement (by influence of Middle French turquoise) of Middle English turkeis (before 1398); originally borrowed from Old French turquoise, feminine adj. Turkish, in pierre turquoise Turkish stone, from Turc Turk; so called because it was first found in Turkestan or the Turkish dominions. —adj. 1573, from the noun.

turret n. Probably about 1300 turet small tower; borrowed from Old French tourret, diminutive of tour tower, from Latin turris; for suffix see -ET.

turtle¹ n. aquatic reptile. 1657, borrowed as an alteration of French tortue turtle, tortoise; of uncertain origin (perhaps influenced by tortus twisted, because of the shape of the feet; or a word of English sailors, who altered the French tortue by substituting the like-sounding, known word *turtle*² as indicated above).

turtle² n. turtledove. Old English (about 1000) turtle, turtla; borrowed from Latin turtur turtledove, a reduplicated form imitative of the call of the dove.

turtledove n. About 1300, formed from *turtle*² turtledove + dove.

tusk n. Probably about 1200, possibly an alteration of Old English (before 899) tūx, variant of tūsc tusk; cognate with Old Frisian tusk tooth, perhaps from Proto-Germanic tunthskaz*, extended form of the root found in Gothic tunthus TOOTH.

tussle v. About 1470 tussillen to wrestle, scuffle; originally Scottish and Northern British English variant of touselen to TOUSLE. —n. 1629, from the verb.

tussock n. 1550, tuft of hair; of uncertain origin, but found as tusk with the same meaning in 1530; of unknown connection. The sense of tuft of grass, sedge, is first recorded in 1607.

tut interj. Before 1529, perhaps a later variation on trut (about 1330); or sometimes associated with the now archaic tush (about 1440).

tutelage n. 1605, office or function of a guardian; formed from Latin tūtēla a watching, protection (tūt-, variant past participle stem of tueri watch over) + English -age. The meaning of instruction, tuition, appeared in 1857.

tutulary adj. 1611, borrowed from Latin tūtēlārius guardian, from tūtēla protection, watching; for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1652, from the adjective.

tutor n. Before 1376 tutour guardian, private teacher; borrowed from Old French tutour guardian, private teacher, from Latin tutor guardian, watcher, from tūt-, variant past participle stem of tueri watch over; for suffix see *-OR*². —v. 1592, from the noun. —tutorial adj. 1742, formed from Latin tūtōrius of a tutor (from tutor tutor) + English *-al*¹. —n. 1923, from the adjective.

tutti-frutti n. 1834, borrowing of Italian tutti frutti all fruits (tutti, plural of tutto all; and frutti, plural of frutto fruit).

tutu n. 1910, borrowing of French tutu, an alteration of cucu, infantile reduplication of cul bottom, backside.

tuxedo n. 1889, named after Tuxedo Park, N.Y., site of a country club where it was first worn in 1886.

twaddle n. 1782, probably an alteration of twattle (1556, in twittle-twattle), with twattle possibly an alteration of TATTLE. —v. 1825, from the noun.

twain adj. Probably before 1200 tweien, developed from Old English (about 725) twēgen (masculine), TWO.

twang n. Before 1553, ringing sound produced when a tense string is plucked, of imitative origin. The sense of a nasal vocal sound, is first recorded in 1661. —v. 1542, of imitative origin like the noun.

tweak v. 1601, variant of twick, found in twycken (1440); developed from Old English (before 1000) twiccian to pluck; see TWITCH. —n. 1609, from the verb.

tweed n. 1847 (perhaps about 1831), a trade name, developing reputedly from a misreading (by James Locke, the London hatter) of twel, Scottish variant of TWILL, possibly influenced by the name of the river Tweed in Scotland. —tweedy adj. 1912, consisting of or relating to tweed, formed from English tweed, n. + *-y*¹. The sense of characteristic of the country or suburban set, is first recorded in 1912.

tweezers n.pl. 1654, extended form (probably on the pattern of scissors) of tweezes, plural of earlier tweeze case for tweezers (1622), shortened from etweese, considered as singular and plural of etwee a small case (1611); borrowed from French étui small case; originally, a keeping safe, from Old French estui to keep, shut up, imprison; of uncertain origin. —tweezer v. 1932, back formation from tweezers or tweezer, n., v. —tweezer v. 1806, back formation from tweezers. —n. tweezers. 1904, back formation from tweezers.

twelve adj. About 1175 twelve, developed from Old English twelf; literally, two left (over ten), before 899; cognate with Old Frisian twelef, twelif twelve, Old Saxon twelif, Middle Dutch twalef (modern Dutch twaal), Old High German zwelf (modern German zwölf), Old Icelandic tölf (Swedish, Danish, and Norwegian tolv), and Gothic twalif; developed from a Germanic compound made up of the source of Old English twēgen, twā TWO, + the root -lif- of the verb *LEAVE*¹; see ELEVEN. —twelfth adj., n. Before 1387 twelfthe; formed from twelf + -the *-th*²; replacing Old English twelfta (twelf twelve + -ta *-th*²; 878, in twelftan niht).

twenty adj. Old English (before 899) twēntig group of twenty (twēgen TWO + -tig group of ten, *-TY*¹); cognate with Old Frisian twintich, twēintich, Old Saxon twēntig, Dutch twintig, Old High German zweinzug. —twentieth n., adj. Old English (before 900) twēntigotha (twēntig twenty + -tha *-th*²).

twerp n. 1925, of unknown origin.

twi- a prefix meaning two, in two ways, twice, double, of Old English origin but little used today. It is the stem of such words as twice, twig, twill, and twin, and the first component of twilight. Old English twi- (from Proto-Germanic twi-*) is cognate with Old High German zwi- two, Old Icelandic tvī-. Related to TWO. Compare BI-, DI-.

twice adv. About 1250 twies; developed from Old English twiga, twigea twice (before 899; related to twi- two, TWI-) + -es, genitive singular ending used adverbially; see *-S*³. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian twīa twice, Old Saxon twīo, and Middle Low German twie. The final -s was voiceless and so began to be spelled -ce, as in ice, mice, to show this pronunciation.

twiddle v. About 1540, to trifle, of unknown origin (sometimes said to combine the idea of twist, or twirl and fiddle). The meaning of cause to rotate is first recorded in 1676. —n. 1774, from the verb.

twig n. Old English (about 950) twigge, related to twig (plural twigu), from twi- two, TWI- (in the sense of “forked”); also found in obsolete twisel a fork or point of division, 931, Old English twisla). Old English twig is from Proto-Germanic twizān*. Neither Old English twigge nor twig correspond exactly to the usual Continental forms having the sense of slender shoot, twig; compare Middle Low German twich twig, Middle Dutch twijch (modern Dutch twijg), and Old High German zweig (modern German Zweig).

twilight n. Before 1420, formed from twi- + *light*⁴ radiant energy; compare Low German Tivelecht twilight. The exact connotation of twi- is obscure but even though appearing twice in each day probably refers to half light (as bi- implies half in one sense of bimonthly, meaning each half of a month or twice a month). The figurative sense of the period just before or after full development is first recorded about 1600.

twill n. 1329 twyll, Scottish and Northern British English variant of Middle English twile; developed from Old English (about 700) twilf woven with double thread, twilled; borrowed from Latin bilix (with substitution of English twi- two for Latin bi-). Latin bilix (genitive bilicis) with a double thread is formed from bi- two + licium thread, which is of uncertain origin. —v. weave (cloth) in this way. 1808–18, from the noun.

twin adj. Old English (about 1000) twinn consisting of two, twofold, double, from twi-* two, TWI-; probably ultimately from Proto-Germanic twinjaz*, and cognate with Middle Dutch twelinc twin (modern Dutch tweeteling), Old High German zwinal born a twin, zwining twin (modern German Zwilling), and Old Icelandic tvinnr, tvennr double, in pairs. —n. Probably before 1300 twyn one of two children born at the same birth; earlier itwinn (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 900) getwinn double; related to twinn, adj. —v. Probably about 1395 twinnen give birth to twins, from twin, adj. or n.

twine n. Probably before 1200 twinn, developed from Old English (about 700) twinn a double thread, from twi- two, TWI-, and cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch twijn twine, Middle High German zwirn (modern German Zwirn), and Old Icelandic tvinni, from Proto-Germanic twizna-*. —v. Probably before 1200 twinen; from the noun.

twinge v. About 1250 twengen to pinch, tweak, twitch; developed from Old English (about 1000) twengan to pinch, of uncertain origin. The meaning of feel a sudden sharp pain is first recorded in 1640 from earlier noun sense. —n. 1548, act of pinching; from the verb. The meaning of sudden sharp pain is first recorded in 1608.

twinkle v. About 1350 twynkelen to sparkle, glitter, wink; developed from Old English twincian (before 899), frequentative form of twincan to wink, blink; cognate with Middle High German zwinken to wink (modern German zwinkern); for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1548, a winking of the eye; later, a sparkle, gleam (1663); from the verb. —twinkling n. Before 1300, the act of winking; later, a shining with wavering light (1398), and time taken to wink, as in the twinkling of an eye (1303).

twirl v. 1598, to spin, whirl; of uncertain origin (possibly a blend of twist and whirl, or an alteration of tirl to twirl, about 1500, or connected with Old English thwirl a stirrer). —n. 1598, from the verb.

twist n. 1350–51, a divided or branched object or part, especially the flat part of a hinge, in reference to what a door twists or turns on; developed from Old English -twist, as in mæsttwist mast rope, stay, from twi- two, TWI-. Old English -twist is cognate with Old Frisian and Middle Low German twist quarrel, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch twist, Middle High German zwist (modern German Zwist), and Old Icelandic twistra divide. The meaning of act or process of twisting is found in 1576, with associated senses derived mainly from the verb. —v. Probably before 1200 tweasten to divide, branch; later twasten to wring, wrench (about 1330), and twisten (1340); from the noun, developing out of Old English. The sense of combine, unite (1471) was extended to rotate, revolve, in 1789. —twister n. Probably about 1475, one that twists; formed from twist, v. + *-er*⁴. The whirling windstorm, tornado, is first recorded in 1897, but may be found in Middle English “twyster of trees” (probably about 1475).

twit v. 1573, from earlier twite (1530); shortened form of Middle English atwiten; developed from Old English ætwtitan to blame, reproach (æt AT + wtitan to blame); cognate with Old Frisian wita to punish, blame, Old Saxon witan, Old High German wizan, Old Icelandic vita, and Gothic frauweitan avenge, from Proto-Germanic wtitanan*. —n. 1664, from earlier twite (1528); from the verb. The sense of a stupid person, fool, is first recorded in 1934.

twitch v. About 1175 to-twic-chen pull apart with a quick jerk; later twicchen (about 1300), related to Old English twiccian to pluck; cognate with Low German twicken to pinch, tweak, Dutch twikken, and Old High German gizwickan (modern German zwicken), from Proto-Germanic twikjōnan*. The meaning of move with a quick jerk is first recorded in 1523. —n. 1523, from the verb.

twitter v. About 1380 twiteren utter a series of light sounds, chirp; of imitative origin; for suffix see -ER⁴. —n. 1678, state of agitation, flutter; from the verb (before 1616).

two adj. Probably before 1200 two, developed from Old English twā (about 725, in Beowulf), feminine and neuter form of twēgen two; cognate with Old Frisian twēne (feminine and neuter twā), Old Saxon twēne (feminine twā, neuter twē), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch twee, Old High German zwēne (feminine zwo, zwa, neuter zwei), modern German zwei, Old Icelandic tvær (feminine tvær, neuter tvau), and Gothic twai (feminine twōs, neuter twa), from Proto-Germanic twai*.

The pronunciation (tū) developed by elimination of the sound represented by w in earlier (twū) which had developed from earlier Middle English (twō). —twofold adj., adv. About 1175 twafalde; later twofolde (about 1394); alteration of Old English twofeald (about 890), twyfeald (before 899); formed from Old English twi- two, double + -feald -fold.

-ty¹ a suffix representing ten in forming the cardinal numbers that are multiples of ten, from twenty to ninety, as in seventy = seven tens. Developed from Old English -tig, cognate with Old High German -zug and modern German -zig; also found in Gothic tigjus and Old Icelandic tígr, independent words meaning tens or decades; see TEN.

-ty² a suffix forming abstract nouns from adjectives, meaning the fact, quality, or condition of being —, as in safety = condition of being safe. Middle English -tie, -tee, -te, from Old French -té, from Latin -tatem (-tās, genitive -tātis); see -ITY. In some words the suffix is not recognizable as such, as in city.

tycoon n. 1857, title given by foreigners to the shogun of Japan; borrowed from Japanese taikun great lord or prince, from Chinese taí great + kiun lord; influenced by the English suffixal ending -OON.

tyke n. About 1378, cur, mongrel; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic tík bitch; cognate with Middle Low German tike bitch). The meaning of a child (1902) though in playful reproach is recorded in 1894.

tympanum n. 1619, borrowed from Medieval Latin tympanum, from Latin tympanum drum, from Greek týmpanon a drum, panel of a door, from root of týptein to beat, strike. Compare TIMPANI. — tympanic adj. 1808, of or having to do with the eardrum; formed from English tympanum + -ic.

type n. About 1470, symbol, emblem; borrowed from Latin typus figure, image, form, kind, from Greek týpos dent, impression, mark, figure, original form, from the root of týptein to strike, beat. The meaning of the general form or character of some kind, class, or group (1843) evolved from the same sense in Latin and Greek. — v. 1596, (in theology) to foreshadow (as in a time typed by the Sabbath day); from the noun. The meaning of be a type of, symbolize, is first recorded in 1836. The modern sense of to write with a typewriter is found in 1888.

typhoid adj. 1800, formed from English typhus + -oid. (Originally applied to an infectious disease characterized by intestinal inflammation, now called typhoid fever, formerly thought to be a variety of typhus.) — n. 1861, shortened form of typhoid fever (1845).

typhoon n. 1555 típhon violent storm, hurricane; borrowed from Greek týphōn; later touffon; presumably borrowed from Chinese (Cantonese) taí fung a great wind; influenced in form by Greek týphōn whirlwind, and by the English ending -OON. It is also probable that the identical meanings of Arabic, Persian, and Hindi tūfān (from Greek týphōn) influenced the adoption and formation of this word in English. The spelling typhoon is not recorded before 1819.

typhus n. 1785, New Latin, from Greek týphos stupor caused by fever; originally, smoke, from týphein to smoke, related to typhlōs blind.

typical adj. 1605 (implied in typically), symbolical, emblematic; borrowed from Medieval Latin typicalis symbolic, from Late Latin typicus of or pertaining to a type, from Greek typikós, from týpos impression, TYPE; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of characteristic, is first recorded in English in 1850.

typify v. 1634, formed from Latin typus TYPE + English -ify, variant of -fy.

typography n. 1641, borrowed from French typographie, from Medieval Latin typographia, from Greek týpos TYPE + -graphiā writing, -GRAPHY. — typographical adj. 1593, formed probably by influence of French typographique, from Medieval Latin typographicus + English -al¹.

tyrannical adj. 1538, formed in English from Latin tyrannicus like a tyrant, despotic (from Greek tyrannikós of or pertaining to a tyrant, from týrannos TYRANT) + English -al¹. — tyrannize v. 1494, to rule as a tyrant; borrowed from Middle French tyranniser, from Old French tyran TYRANT; for suffix see -IZE. Perhaps formed in Middle French on the model of Late Latin tyrannizāre to act the tyrant. — tyranny n. About 1370 tyrannie cruel or unjust use of power; borrowed from Old French tyrannie, from Late Latin tyrannia tyranny, from Greek tyrannīā, from týrannos master, TYRANT; for suffix see -Y³.

tyrannosaurus n. 1905, in New Latin the genus name, from Greek týrannos tyrant + saúros lizard.

tyrant n. Probably before 1300 tyraunt absolute ruler; borrowed from Old French tyrant, alteration (by influence of the present participle suffix -ant) of earlier tyran, from Latin tyrannus lord, master, tyrant, from Greek týrannos lord, master, sovereign, tyrant.

tyro n. 1611, borrowed from Medieval Latin tyro, variant of Latin tíro young soldier, recruit, beginner.

U

ubiquity n. 1579, borrowed from Middle French ubiquité, also possibly from New Latin ubiquitas that is everywhere, from Latin ubique everywhere (ubi where + -que, an ending that can give universal meaning to the word it is attached to); for suffix see -ITY. —ubiquitous adj. 1837, formed from English ubiquity + -ous.

U-boat n. 1916, partial translation of German U-Boot, shortened form of Unterseeboot literally, undersea boat.

udder n. 1398 udder; developed from Old English (before 1000) ūder milk gland of a cow, goat, etc.; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon ūder udder, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch ūder (modern Dutch uier), Old High German ūtar (modern German Euter), and probably (by unexplained consonant change) Old Icelandic jūgr (Norwegian jur, Danish yver, Swedish juver).

The long vowel in Old English was shortened in Middle English, a process that occurred regularly in closed syllables as in fodder (Old English fōdor) and ladder (Old English hlāder).

UFO n. 1953, acronym formed from the initial letters of u(nidentified) f(lying) o(bject).

ugly adj. Before 1325 ugli frightful or horrible in appearance; earlier (about 1250) uglike; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic uggligr dreadful, from ugg fear, perhaps related to agg strife, hate); for suffix see *-LY*². The meaning of very unpleasant to look at, unsightly, is first recorded about 1375 and that of morally offensive (as in an ugly deed) before 1325. —ugliness n. About 1390; formed from Middle English ugli + -ness.

ukase n. 1729, decree issued by a Russian emperor; borrowed from Russian ukáz edict, from ukazát to show, decree, from Old Slavic ukazati (prefix u- + kazati to show, order).

ukulele n. 1896, borrowed from Hawaiian ‘ukulele; literally, leaping flea (‘uku louse, flea + lele to fly, jump, leap).

ulcer n. Before 1400, borrowed from Old French ulcere, and directly from Latin ulcus (genitive ulceris) ulcer. —ulcerate v. About 1425 ulceraten to form an ulcer; possibly in part a back formation from earlier ulceration (about 1400); and in part borrowed from Latin ulcerātus, past participle of ulcerāre, from ulcus; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —ulcerous adj. Probably about 1425, like an ulcer; borrowed from Latin ulcerōsus full of ulcers, from ulcus; for suffix see -OUS.

-ule a suffix meaning small, little, as in capsule, module, nodule. Borrowed from French -ule, from Latin -ulus (feminine -ula), (neuter -ulum), diminutive suffix.

ulterior adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin ulterior more distant, further, comparative of ulter*, ulterus* beyond, ULTRA. The sense of beyond what is stated or evident, intentionally concealed (as in ulterior motives) is first recorded in English in 1735.

ultimate adj. 1654, borrowed from Medieval Latin ultimatum last possible, final, from Latin ultimatum, past participle of ultimāre be final, come to an end, from ultimus last, final, superlative of ulter*, ulterus* beyond, ULTRA; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —n. 1681, from the adjective.

ultimatum n. 1731, New Latin, the final terms presented by one power to another in diplomacy, noun use of Medieval Latin ultimatum ULTIMATE. The general meaning of a final condition or stipulation, is first recorded in English in 1733.

ultra adj. 1817, borrowing of French ultra, especially as a shortening of ultra-royaliste extreme royalist, from Latin ultrā, adv. and prep., beyond, on the further side.

ultra- a prefix meaning: 1 beyond, as in ultraviolet = beyond the violet color (1840). 2 going beyond the limits of, as in ultramundane = going beyond the limits of the mundane (1656). 3 extremely, as in ultramodern = extremely modern (1843). Borrowed from Latin ultrā, from ultrā, adv. and prep., beyond; see ULTRA.

ultrasonic adj. 1923, having a frequency beyond the audible range; formed from English ultra- beyond + sonic. —ultrasonics n. 1924, ultrasonic waves; later, science that deals with ultrasonic phenomena (1940); formed from English ultrasonic + *-s*¹; see -ICS.

ululate v. 1623, probably a back formation from earlier ululation, and a borrowing from Latin ululātus, past participle of ululāre to howl or wail; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —ululation n. 1599, a howl or wail, cry of lamentation; borrowed from Latin ululātiōnem (nominative ululātiō) a howling or wailing, from ululāre ululate; for suffix see -ATION.

umber n. About 1568 (implied in umber-color); borrowed from Middle French ombre (also terre d'ombre) or from Italian ombra (also terra di ombra), the two words meaning either "shadow," from Latin umbra shadow, shade (see UMBRAGE); or "Umbria," from Latin Umbra, feminine of Umbro belonging to Umbria, region in central Italy, from which the coloring matter first came. —adj. 1802, from the noun.

umbilical adj. 1541, borrowed from Medieval Latin umbilicalis of the umbilicus or navel, from Latin umbilicus navel; for suffix see -AL¹. Umbilical replaced Middle English umbilic, adj. and n. (probably before 1425); borrowed from Latin umbilicus navel. —umbilical cord (1753) umbra n. 1599, phantom, ghost; borrowing of Latin umbra shade, shadow. The astronomical meanings of a shadow of the earth or moon that completely hides the sun, is first recorded in 1679, and the dark center of a sunspot, in 1788.

umbrage n. 1426, a shadow; borrowed from Middle French umbrage shade, shadow, from Latin umbraticum, neuter of umbraticus of or pertaining to shade, from umbra shade, shadow. The meaning of shadowy appearance, semblance, is first recorded in 1604, and that of suspicion that one has been slighted, resentment, offense, in 1620; later, in to take umbrage at (1680).

umbrella n. 1610 umbrello, 1611 umbrella; borrowed from Italian ombrello, ombrella, from Late Latin umbrella, alteration (by influence of umbra) of Latin umbella sunshade, parasol, diminutive form of umbra shade, shadow. The form umbrello was used in English until the mid-1700's, and an earlier form umbrel is found in 1603, borrowed from Middle French ombrel, probably from Italian ombrello, ombrella.

umiak n. About 1743 oomiak, later umyak (1863); borrowed from Eskimo umiaq an open skin boat.

umpire n. About 1350 noumpere, borrowed from Old French nonper odd or not even, in reference to a third person (non- not + per equal, from Latin pār). Later in Middle English (by about 1440), the initial n was lost through misdivision of a noumpere as an oumpere. —v. 1611, act as an umpire (in 1592, adjudge, appoint); from the noun.

umpty adj. 1905, of an indefinite number; originally, dash, used in reading Morse code; influenced by association with numerals such as twenty, thirty; for suffix see -TY. —umpteenth adj. 1918, many; formed from English umpty + -teen. —ump-teenth adj., n. (1918)

un-¹ a prefix meaning not when used with adjectives and adverbs, as in unlucky, unpopular, unfortunately; also when used with nouns, as in uncooperation, but many nouns in un-, such as ungodliness, unsociability may be considered nouns simply formed on adjectives in un- (as ungodly, unsociable). Old English un- is cognate with Gothic un-, Old High German un-, Old Icelandic ū-, ō-; also related to Latin in- and Greek a-, an-.

It is with in- that variants are often in dispute: as between inescapable and unescapable; inelastic and unelastic; indigestible and undigestible, though many times points are raised only in particular usages. The prefix has been freely used (except for words such as big, long, ugly, where direct synonyms exist, as in small or little for unbig, and pretty, handsome for unugly) from Old English times. Middle English was apparently left with only a fraction of these terms (unclear, unborn, unwounded), but the native word stock began to build up again (uncomely, untidy, undone), also with Scandinavian and French words (ungirth, unmeek, ungracious) until we see the present-day list of unlimited coinages.

The use of un- before past participles was common in Old English and revived in Middle English to produce such words as unspoiled, unbearded, unwanted, unwarranted. When formed of a verb in un- (as undone from *un-*¹ + done, but also from the past participle of undo), *un-*¹ became confused with *un-*², as illustrated by unlocked, modeled on unlock, v., which has provided three separate senses: 1) not now locked: *un-*¹ not + locked participial adjective; 2) not yet locked: *un-*¹ not + locked past participle; 3) no longer locked: unlock, v. (*un-*² + lock, v.) + -ed² past participle suffix. —unassuming adj. (1726) —unawares adv. (1535; for suffix see -s³) —unbecoming adj. (1598) —uncalled-for adj. (before 1610) —uncanny adj. (1596, mischievous; 1773, supernatural, weird) —uncommon adj. (1548, not held in common; 1611, unusual) —undreamed-of adj. (1636) —unequaled adj. (1622) —uneven adj. (before 900, Old English unefen unequal; about 1275 unevene not smooth) —unfeeling adj. (about 1000, Old English unfelende having no feeling; 1596, uncompassionate, unsympathetic) —ungainly adj. (1611) —unheard-of adj. (1592) —uninhabited adj. (1571, replacing earlier unhabited, 1490) —unjust adj. (1382, but also in unjustified about 1340) —unkind adj. (about 1250) —unlike adj. (probably about 1200; corresponding to Old English ungelic, uniliche, before 899) —unprincipled adj. (1634) —unread adj. (1456, not read; 1606, not instructed by reading) —unruly adj. (1400) —unscathed adj. (1425; earlier unschait, about 1375) —unspeakable adj. (before 1400) —unstable adj. (before 1200) —untold adj. (about 1000, Old English unteald uncounted) —untoward adj. (1526, perverse, stubborn; 1621, unfavorable) —unwieldy adj. (about 1386, weak; 1513 difficult to handle) —unwise adj. (Old English, about 830, unwis) —unworthy adj. (before 1240); adv. (1661) un-² a prefix added to verbs and meaning to do the reverse or opposite, as in uncover, unfasten, unhitch, unlearn, or to remove, release, deprive, as in undress, unearth, unpeel. Old English un-, on-; alteration (perhaps influenced by *un-*¹) of Old English and-, an- against, opposite, toward. Old English and-, an- is cognate with Gothic and-, Old High German ant- (modern German ent-), and related to Latin ante before, Greek anti opposite.

In the 1500's and 1600's use of un- was greatly expanded to include numerous formations that are not generally found in current English, such as uncompass, unhide, unflow, unsort. These and later formations were built on the model of unbend, unfasten, untie, etc. —uncover v. (before 1325) —undo v. (Old English, before 899 andōn; about 930 undōn) —unfold v. (Old English, about 890 to spread out; before 1050 to disclose) —unfurl v. (1641) —unhinge v. (1612) —unleash v. (1671) —unnerve v. (1621) —unsettle v. (1591, unfasten; 1651, disturb) —untie v. (Old English, about 1000 untigan) —unveil v. (1599)

unanimous adj. Before 1619 (implied in unanimously); borrowed from Latin ūnānimus of one mind (ūnus ONE + animus mind); for suffix see -OUS. —unanimity n. 1436 unanimitie; later unanimitie (1579); borrowed from Middle French unanimité, from Latin ūnānimitātem (nominative ūnānimitās) state of being unanimous, from ūnānimus unanimous; for suffix see -ITY.

uncle n. About 1300, brother of one's father or mother; borrowed through Anglo-French uncle, Old French oncle, from Latin avunculus mother's brother; literally, little grandfather, endearing diminutive of avus grandfather.

Uncle Sam 1813, originally a humorous expansion of the initials U.S., abbreviation of United States.

The name arose during the War of 1812, apparently suggested by the common sight of military vehicles marked U.S. for the United States government. As a figure in a high hat decorated with stars and stripes, Uncle Sam began to appear in political cartoons about 1850; by 1870, due chiefly to the popularization of the figure by the cartoonist Thomas Nast, this personification superseded the earlier nickname Brother Jonathan (1776). The frequently cited story that the name Uncle Sam originally referred to Samuel Wilson, an army yard inspector of Troy, N.Y., is without confirmation.

Uncle Tom 1922, servile black man; from the name of the central character of Harriet Beecher Stowe's antislavery novel Uncle Tom's Cabin (1851–52), thought of as a humble, pious, long-suffering black slave.

unconscionable adj. 1565, formed from English *un-*¹ not + conscionable conscientious (1549). Conscionable, now rarely used, was formed from obsolete English (1541) conscioned having a conscience (substandard variant of conscienced, 1530) + -able.

unconscious adj. 1712, unaware, not marked by conscious thought; formed from English *un-*¹ not + conscious. The meaning of temporarily not in a conscious state, is first recorded in 1860. —n. Usually, the unconscious. Before 1884, from the adjective; loan translation of German das Unbewusste.

uncouth adj. Old English uncūth unknown, uncertain, unfamiliar (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from *un-*¹ not + cūth known, well-known, past participle of cunnan to know. The meaning of strange, crude, clumsy, is first recorded in 1513.

unction n. Before 1387 uncion action of anointing as a religious rite; borrowed from Latin unctiōnem (nominative unctiō) anointing, from unct-, stem of ungere to anoint; for suffix see -ION.

unctuous adj. Before 1387, borrowed from Old French unctueus, and directly from Medieval Latin unctuosus, from Latin unctus (genitive unctūs) act of anointing, from unct-, stem of ungere to anoint; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of blandly ingratiating, is first recorded in English in 1742.

under¹ prep., adv. below, beneath. Old English (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian under under, Old Saxon undar, Middle Low German under, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch onder, Old High German untar (modern German unter), Old Icelandic undir (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish under), and Gothic undar, from Proto-Germanic under-*. —adj. Before 1325, lower; from the adverb.

under² prep. between, among. Old English (before 900); cognate with Old High German untar between, among (modern German unter). The preposition still functions in the sense of due to, because of, as in under these circumstances. See also UNDER⁻².

under⁻¹ a prefix meaning below, beneath, in various extended senses, paralleling the use of *under*¹: 1 as preposition, as in underground = beneath the ground; 2 as adverb, as in underdeveloped = not sufficiently developed; 3 as adjective, as in underclothes = (clothes) beneath the outer clothes. Old English under (like its cognates Old Saxon undar, Old High German untar, Old Icelandic undir, etc.) was used to form words clearly suggested by Latin forms with sub-; the frequency of such forms helped establish the prefix in ordinary use. —underbrush n. (1775) —undercover adj. 1854, sheltered; later, operating secretly, in 1920. —undercut v. 1382, to cut off; later, to cut away beneath (1598); and to render unstable, undermine (1955). —underfoot adv. (about 1200) —underground adj. 1610, beneath the surface of the ground; later, hidden or secret (1677). —n. 1590, region below the earth; later, secret organization (1939, but preceded by the clandestine system for sending escaped slaves to free territory, established about 1832, but not recorded before 1842). —underhand adj. 1592, secret; later, with the hand below the level of the shoulder (1850). —adv. 1538, secretly; later, with the hand held below (1828); found in Old English before 900 as under hand in subjection, under rule. —underlie v. Before 899 Old English underlicgan be subject to; 1856, be the basis of. —underpass n. (1904) —underpinning n. 1489, act of supporting from beneath; later, supporting material or structure (1538). —understudy v. (1874); n. (1882) —undertake v. (probably about 1200, entrap, seize upon; later, take upon oneself, before 1325) —underwrite v. About 1430, write below something; later, to sign (1557); and to accept insurance risk (1622).

under⁻² a prefix meaning between, among, in senses paralleling the use of *under*², represented in Old English by such verbs as underniman to receive, undersēcan to investigate, but surviving in modern English only in the verb UNDERSTAND.

undergo v. Probably about 1200 unndergan submit to; later undergon go under, deceive, investigate (about 1250), and undergan endure, suffer, go through (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 1000) undergān undermine (under⁻¹ under- + gān GO); cognate with Middle Dutch ondergaen (modern Dutch ondergaan), Old High German untarkān (modern German untergehen), and Danish and Swedish undergå.

underneath adv., prep. beneath. About 1375 undernethe, developed from Old English (before 899) underneothan (under UN-DER¹ + neothan below; see BENEATH).

understand v. Old English (before 899) understandan comprehend, grasp the idea of; literally, stand in the midst of, stand between (under-² + standan STAND), corresponding to Old Frisian understonda and Middle Danish understande, both meaning to understand.

underworld n. 1608, the lower world, Hades; 1609, the earth as distinguished from heaven; formed from English under-¹ + world. The meaning of a lower, or the lowest, level of society, etc., is first recorded in 1890, and that of the world of criminals and organized crime, in 1900.

undies n. pl. 1906; formed from English under, as in undergarment, underwear, etc. + suffix -ies, plural of -ie.

undulate v. 1664, back formation from earlier English undulation, or formed from Late Latin undula wavelet (diminutive of Latin unda wave) + English *-ate*¹. —adj. 1658, borrowed from Latin undulatus having a wavy form, from unda wave; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —undulant adj. 1830, formed from English undulate + -ant. —undulation n. 1646, formed from Late Latin undula wavelet + English -ation.

unguent n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin unguentum ointment, from ungere to anoint or smear with unguents.

uni- a prefix meaning one, a single, the same, as in unicellular = having one or a single cell. Borrowed from Latin ūni-, combining form of ūnus ONE. —unilateral adj. (1802) —unisexual n., adj. (condition of being) sexually indistinguishable or neutral (1968).

unicorn n. Probably before 1200 unicorne; borrowed from Old French unicorne, from Late Latin ūnicornis, noun use of Latin ūnicornis, adj., having one horn (ūni- one + cornū horn).

uniform adj. 1540, of one form, character, or kind; borrowed from Middle French uniforme, from Latin ūniformis having one form (ūni- one + fōrma form). —n. 1748, distinctive clothes worn by members of a group, from the adjective. An earlier sense of one body or flock is found in 1623. —uniformity n. Probably before 1425 uniformite uniform condition or character; borrowed through Middle French uniformité, or directly from Latin ūniformitatem (nominative ūniformitās) uniform in condition or character, from ūniformis uniform; for suffix see -ITY.

unify v. 1502, borrowed from Middle French unifier, and perhaps directly from Late Latin ūnificāre make one, from a lost adjective ūnificus* (Latin ūni- one + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. —unification n. 1851, borrowed from French unification, and probably formed from English unify on the pattern of such pairs as mollify, mollification.

union n. 1410 unioun a uniting or being united; borrowed from Middle French union, from Late Latin ūniōnem (nominative ūniō) oneness, unity, a uniting, found in Latin in the meaning of a single pearl or onion, from ūnus ONE; for suffix see -ION. The meaning of a group, as of people or states, united for some purpose, is first recorded in 1660. —unionize v. 1841, make into a union; formed from English union + -ize. The sense of bring under the rules of a labor union is first recorded in 1890.

unique adj. 1602, single or solitary; borrowing of French unique, and in early use in English borrowed directly from Latin ūnicus single, sole, from ūnus one; for suffix see English -IC, in relation to French -que. In the sense of having no like or equal, unparalleled, unique was reborrowed from the French in the late 1700's and regarded as a foreign word (usually italicized) down to the middle of the 1800's.

unison n. 1410 unisoun tone of the same pitch as another; borrowed from Middle French unisson unison, concord of sound, earlier unison, from Medieval Latin unisonus having one sound, sounding the same, from Late Latin ūnisonus in immediate sequence in the scale, monotonous (Latin ūni- one + sonus sound). The sense of harmonious agreement, accord, is first recorded in English in 1650.

unit n. 1570, single magnitude or number considered as the base of all numbers; formerly unite (about 1425), alteration of unity, on the pattern of digit. The meaning of a single thing as a separable member of a group (1642) was extended to a quantity adopted as a standard of measurement in 1738.

Unitarian n. 1687, formed from New Latin unitarius (from Latin ūnitās UNITY) + English -an.

unite v. Probably before 1425 uniten join together; borrowed from Latin ūnitus, past participle of ūnīre join together, make one, from ūnus one. —united adj. 1552, from the past participle of unite; for suffix see *-ED*². —unity n. Probably about 1300 unite, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French unité, from Latin ūnitatem (nominative ūnitās) oneness, sameness, agreement, from ūnus one; for suffix see -ITY.

universal adj. About 1380, borrowed from Old French universel, universal, and directly from Latin ūniversālis of or belonging to all, from ūniversus all together, whole, entire, collective, general; for suffix see *-AL*¹. —n. 1553, universal proposition in logic; from the adjective. —universality n. About 1380 universalite the quality of being universal; borrowed from Middle French universalité, and directly from Late Latin ūniversālītās a being universal, from Latin ūniversālis universal; for suffix see -ITY.

universe n. 1589, the whole world, the cosmos; borrowed from Middle French univers, and directly from Latin ūniversum the whole world, noun use of neuter of ūniversus, adj., whole, entire; originally, turned into one (ūnus one + versus, past participle of vertere to turn); found earlier in in universe universally, about 1385.

university n. About 1300 universite institution of higher learning; also, body of persons constituting a university; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French université, from Medieval Latin universitatem (nominative universitas) university, from Late Latin ūniversitatem (nominative ūniversitās) corporation, society, from Latin, aggregate, whole, from ūniversus whole, entire; for suffix see -ITY.

unkempt adj. 1579, (of language) unrefined or rude, from unkemd uncombed (before 1393; *un*¹ not + kembed, kempt, past participles of kemben to comb, developed from Old English cemban; cognate with Old Saxon kembian to comb, Old High German kemben, and Old Icelandic kemba, derived from the Proto-Germanic source of Old English camb, comb COMB).

unless conj., prep. 1467 unlesse, earlier onlesse (1438); originally, on lesse (than) on a less condition (than), except (on on + lesse less). The negative connotation of the word, as well as the lack of stress on the first syllable, led to association with the prefix UN¹.

until prep. Probably about 1200 untill; formed in Middle English from un- as far as, up to (as in unto; from Scandinavian; compare Old Icelandic und) + till until, up to; see TILL¹. The two syllables of until are originally of the same meaning.

Old Icelandic und is cognate with Old English oth up to, as far as, until, Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Gothic und. —conj. About 1300 untill, from the preposition.

unto prep. to. About 1250, formed from un- up to, as far as (see UNTIL) + to TO.

up adv. Developed from Old English ūp, upp upward (about 725, in Beowulf), and from Old English uppe on high, aloft (before 899); both cognate with Old Frisian up upward, up, Old Saxon up, Middle Low German up, uppe, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch op, Old High German ūf, Middle High German uf, ouf (modern German auf), Old Icelandic upp (Norwegian opp, Danish op, and Swedish upp), from Proto-Germanic upp*. —adj. Probably before 1300, dwelling inland; from the adverb. The meaning of going up (as in the up escalator, 1869), and that of enthusiastic, optimistic (as in to look on the up side of things, 1942), derive from the sense of sparkling, excited (1815). —prep. 1509, to a higher place (as in The cat ran up the tree); later, along or through (as in to walk up the street, 1513); also, toward, in, into (as in to walk up the country, 1596); from the adverb, by taking the place of the adverb up + a preposition, as in up against, up through. —n. 1536, person or thing that is up (as in the ups and downs of life); from the adverb. —v. 1560–61, to drive up and catch (swans) for marking; from the adverb. The meaning of get up, arise, (as in to suddenly up and march off) is first recorded in 1643, and that of increase, (as in to up the price of wheat) in 1915. —up-and-coming adj. (1889) —up-to-date adj. (1888) up- a prefix forming compound words with up (adverb, preposition, or adjective) in its various senses, as in upcoming, upgrade, uphill, upriver, upcurrent, upstroke. Old English ūp-, upp-, is identical in meaning with the Old English adverb and corresponds to similar prefixes in other Germanic languages, including Old Frisian op-, up-, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, and Low German up-, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch op-, Old High German and Middle High German ūf (modern German auf-), and Old Icelandic and Swedish upp-, Norwegian opp-, and Danish op-. —upbringing n. (1520) —upcoming adj. 1848, rising; later, forthcoming (1954).

—update v. (1948) —upheaval n. (1838) —uphold v. (probably before 1200) —uprising n. About 1250, resurrection; later, insurrection (1587). —upset v. About 1440, to set up, erect; later, overturn (1803). —adj. 1338, erected; later distressed (1805). —n. About 1425, an insurrection; later, an overturning of a vehicle or boat (1804); an unexpected defeat (1822). —upside down About 1490; earlier upsadown (1382), and up so down (before 1400). The sense of in complete disorder is found in the 1300's. —upstairs adv. (1596); adj. (1782); n. (1872) —upstanding adj. (Old English, about 1000); later, honest (1863). —uptown adv. (1802); adj. (1838) —upward adv. (before 900, Old English upweard); adj. (1603) —upwards, upward adv. Before 900, Old English upweardes, upweard. —adj. upward (1607, also found in Old English).

upbraid v. Probably about 1150 upbreyden; developed from Old English ūpbregdan (about 1000) bring forth as a ground for censure (ūp- up + bregdan move quickly, intertwine, BRAID). The meaning of find fault with, scold, is found about 1300.

upholster v. 1853, back formation from upholsterer. —upholsterer n. one who upholsters. 1613, formed from obsolete English upholster, n., dealer in small goods + English *-er*¹. Upholster, n. developed from Middle English upholdester (1411, uphold + -ster), from upholden to repair, uphold (up- up + holden to HOLD¹). —upholstery n. 1649, formed from obsolete English upholster, n. + *-y*³.

upon prep. 1121 uppon, a compound of UP, adv. + ON, prep., probably influenced by Scandinavian (compare Old Icelandic upp á, Middle Swedish uppa, oppa). The form upon is distinct from Old and early Middle English uppon, a variant of Old English uppan up (about 960).

upper adj. Probably before 1300, higher in position or location; originally comparative of UP (up, adj. + *-er*²), and replacing the earlier over, adj. —n. 1789, that part of a shoe or boot above the sole; from the adjective. Use in on one's uppers in poor circumstances, is first recorded in 1886, and down on one's uppers, in 1903. The stimulant drug is first recorded in 1968. —upper crust About 1460, top crust of a loaf of bread; 1836, the upper classes. —upper hand advantage (1481). —uppermost adj. (1481) upish adj. 1678, lavish, formed from English up, adj. + *-ish*¹. The meaning of conceited or arrogant is first recorded in 1734.

uppity adj. 1880, probably formed by influence of upish, from English up + -ty, as in haughty.

upright adj. Probably before 1200 upriht; later upright erect, vertical (before 1325); developed from Old English ūpriht (about 725, in Beowulf), a compound of ūp UP + riht RIGHT; cognate with Old Frisian upriucht, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch oprecht, Old High German ūfrehht (modern German aufrecht), and Old Icelandic upréttr (Danish opret, Swedish uprät). The sense of morally good, honest, is first recorded in English in 1530. —adv. 1509, sincerely or justly; later, in an upright position (1590); from the adjective. —n. 1563, a vertical front; later, something standing erect, vertical stone, post, etc. (1742).

uproar n. 1526, used as a loan translation in passages where Luther's Bible has German Aufbruch an insurrection, outbreak of disorder, revolt, commotion; or borrowed from Middle Low German uprör. Also 1535, in the Coverdale Bible, translated from the Dutch Bible using Dutch oproer, probably translated from German Aufbruch (auf up + bruch a stirring, motion, related to rühren to stir, move, and corresponding to Middle Low German roren, Middle Dutch roeren).

The meaning of the noise of shouting, loud outcry, tumult, is first recorded in English in 1544, probably influenced by roar, as the spelling uproar is mistakenly associated with roar. —uproarious adj. 1819, formed from English uproar + -ious.

ur- a prefix meaning original, earliest, primitive; originally in words borrowed from German, and now used in English, as in ur-performance and urtext. Borrowed from German ur- primitive, original; cognate with Gothic us- as in us-wakjan to wake up, and ūt OUT.

uranium n. 1797, New Latin, formed from Uranus, the planet + -ium. The planet was named after Uranus, a god in Greek and Roman mythology who represented heaven; borrowed from Latin ūranus, from Greek Ouranos, from ouranos heaven, sky.

urban adj. 1619, of or relating to cities or towns; borrowed from Latin urbānus of or pertaining to a city or city life; as a noun, a city dweller, from urbs (genitive urbis) city; for suffix see -AN; see URBANE. —urbanize v. 1642, render urbane or civil; formed from English urban or urbane + -ize. —urbanization n. 1888, formed from English urbanize + -ation.

urbane adj. 1533, of or relating to cities or towns; borrowed from Middle French urbain, and directly from Latin urbānus URBAN.

The meaning of having the manners of townspeople, courteous, refined, is first recorded in 1623; Latin urbānus also had this sense of refined, polished, elegant. For the difference in form, and meaning between urbane and urban, compare HUMAN and HUMAN. —urbanity n. 1535, borrowed through Middle French urbanité, and directly from Latin urbānitatem (nominative urbānitās) urban life, refinement, from urbānus refined, polite, elegant; see URBAN, URBANE; for suffix see -ITY.

urchin n. 1528, hunchback; about 1530, pert or mischievous child; developed from Middle English urchoun hedgehog (before 1325), earlier yrichon (about 1300); borrowed from Old French erichon, herichon hedgehog, from Gallo-Romance ērīciōnem* (nominative ērīciō*), from Latin ērīcius hedgehog, from ēr (genitive ēris) hedgehog, dialectal variant of hēr*.

Throughout the 1500's the word was applied to persons who suggested a hedgehog, as an ill-tempered or roguish girl (1534), a goblin or elf (1584), and a poorly or raggedly clothed youngster (1556).

-ure a suffix forming abstract nouns of action or the means or result of action, especially in words borrowed from Latin or French or formed in English from elements of Latin or French origin: 1 the act or fact of _____ing, as in failure = the act of failing. 2 the condition of being _____ed, as in pleasure = the condition of being pleased. 3 the result of being _____ed, as in exposure = the result of being exposed. 4 something that _____s, as in legislature = something that legislates. 5 a thing that is _____ed, as in disclosure = a thing that is disclosed. 6 other special meanings, as in procedure, sculpture, denture. Borrowed through Old French -ure, and directly from Latin -ūra, especially in the longer forms -tūra and -sūra. Many words in -ure were adopted from Old French, as figure, feature, closure, etc.; while others, such as investiture, scripture, censure, and juncture, were borrowed directly from Latin. The suffix was also added to English stems of Latin origin, giving composure, exposure, legislature, etc., or to true Latin stems, yielding such words as divestiture.

urea n. 1806, borrowing of New Latin form of French urée, from Old French urine URINE.

ureter n. 1578, borrowing of New Latin form of Greek ourēter one of the urinary ducts of the kidneys, from oureîn to urinate; see URINE.

urethra n. 1634, borrowed from Late Latin ūrēthra, from Greek ourēthrā the passage for urine, from oureîn to urinate.

urge v. 1560, borrowed, by influence of English urgent, from Latin urgere to press, push, drive, compel. —n. Before 1618, from the verb. —urgency n. 1540, probably formed in English as a noun to urgent, modeled on Late Latin urgentia urgent character, from Latin urgētem (nominative urgēs) urging, present participle of urgere to urge; for suffix see -ENCY. —urgent adj. 1456, borrowed from Middle French urgent pressing, impelling, from Latin urgētem (nominative urgēs) pressing, urging, present participle of urgere to urge; for suffix see -ENT.

urine n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French urine, and directly from Latin ūrīna urine; with the verb found only in Medieval Latin, the noun was probably formed after the related verb ūrīnārī plunge into water or as if from ūrīnus* of water, from ūrūm* water, urine. —urinal n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from Old French urinal, from the neuter of Late Latin ūrīnālīs of or pertaining to urine, from Latin ūrīna urine; for suffix see *-AL*². —urinary adj. of or relating to urine. 1578, borrowed from New Latin urinarius of or pertaining to urine, from Latin ūrīna urine; for suffix see -ARY. —urate v. 1599, probably a back formation from urination; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —urination n. Probably before 1425 urinacioun, formed as if from Medieval Latin urinationem*; for suffix see -ATION.

urn n. About 1385 urne vase used to preserve the ashes of the dead; borrowed from Latin urna a jar, vessel, probably from earlier urc-nā*, related to urceus pitcher, from the same source as Greek hýrchē earthen vessel.

ursine adj. About 1550, borrowed from Latin ursinus of or resembling a bear, from ursus bear; for suffix see *-INE*¹.

us pron. Old English ūs (before 830), accusative and dative plural of wē we. Old English ūs is cognate with Old Frisian and usable adj. Before 1382, borrowed from Old French usable, from user to USE; for suffix see -ABLE. It is also probable that the word was later independently re-formed in English in the 1800's.

Old Saxon ūs us, and Old Icelandic oss (Norwegian and Swedish oss, Danish os); these forms have lost an n, which appears in Middle Dutch and modern Dutch ons, Old High German and modern German uns, and Gothic uns.

usage n. Probably before 1300, established practice, custom, habit; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French usage custom, habit, experience, from us, from Latin usus use, custom; see USE, n.; for suffix see -AGE.

use v. Probably before 1200 usen utilize or employ for a purpose; borrowed from Old French user use, employ, practice, from Vulgar Latin ūsare* use, frequentative form from Latin ūs-, past participle stem of ūtī to use, in Old Latin oeti use, employ, exercise, perform. —n. Probably before 1200 us act of utilizing or employing a thing; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French us (feminine use, 1368), from Latin ūsus (genitive ūsūs) use, custom, skill, habit, experience, from ūs-, past participle stem of ūtī to use. —useful adj. (1595) —useless adj. (1593) usher n. About 1280 usschere doorkeeper; borrowed from Anglo-French usser, from Old French ussier, from Vulgar Latin ūstiārius* doorkeeper, from Late Latin ūstium, variant of Latin ostium door, related to os mouth. —v. 1594, admit ceremoniously, introduce; 1596, act as an usher to, conduct or escort; from the noun.

usual adj. Before 1387 usualle, borrowed through Old French usuel, and directly from Late Latin ūsūalis ordinary, customary, from Latin ūsus (genitive ūsūs) custom, USE; for suffix see -AL¹. —usually adv. (1477) usurer n. About 1300, borrowed from Anglo-French usurer, variant of Old French usurier, from Late Latin ūsūrārius moneylender, from Latin ūsūrārius, adj., that pays interest, for use, from ūsūra use, interest, usury, from ūsus (genitive ūsūs), from the stem of ūtī to USE; for suffix see -ER¹. —usurious adj. 1610, formed from English usury, n. + -ous. —usury n. About 1303 usery, borrowed from Medieval Latin usura, alteration of Latin ūsūra usury, interest, use; see USURER; for suffix see -Y³.

usurp v. Before 1325 usurpen; borrowed from Old French usurper, from Latin ūsūpāre make use of, seize for use, take possession of (formed from ūsū-rapōs*, from ūsus USE + rapere seize). —usurpation n. About 1385 usurpacion unwarranted claim, act of usurping; borrowed from Old French and Anglo-French usurpacion, from Latin ūsūrpātiōnem (nominative ūsūrpātiō) a using, an appropriation, from ūsūpāre use, usurp; for suffix see -ATION.

utensil n. About 1375, borrowed from Old French utensile implement, from Latin ūtēnsilia things for use, utensils, noun use of neuter plural of ūtēnsilis usable, that may be used or is fit for use, from ūtī to USE.

uterus n. Before 1398, borrowed from Latin uterus womb, belly. —uterine adj. Probably before 1425, having the same mother but a different father; borrowed through Old French uterin (feminine uterine), and directly from Late Latin uterinus born of the same mother, from Latin uterus uterus; for suffix see -INE¹. The meaning of having to do with the uterus is first recorded in English in 1615.

utilitarian n. 1781, formed from English utility + -arian, as in Trinitarian, etc. —adj. 1802, from the noun.

utility n. 1391 utilite, borrowed from Old French utilité usefulness, from Latin utilitatem (nominative utilitās) usefulness, serviceableness, profit, from utilis usable, from ūtī to USE; for suffix see -ITY.

utilize v. 1807, borrowed from French utiliser, from Italian utilizzare, from utile usable (also found in obsolete English utile useful, 1484), from Latin utilis usable, from ūtī to use; for suffix see -IZE. —utilization n. 1847, formed in English from utilize + -ation, perhaps by influence of French utilisation.

utmost adj. Old English (Anglian) ūtmest outermost (before 830); formed from ūt out + -mest -most, double superlative (compare foremost, inmost). The sense of being of the greatest or highest degree, is found in Middle English before 1325.

Utopia or utopia n. 1551, an imaginary island enjoying a perfect social, legal, and political system; coined by Thomas More, from Greek ou not + tópos place. The sense of any perfect place is first recorded in 1613.

Although Utopia means literally "no place," it is often believed to mean "good place," as though formed from Greek eu- good + tópos place. Modern coinages such as dystopia and kakotopia (where all is bad) as opposites of utopia reinforce this belief. —Utopian or utopian adj. 1551, borrowed from New Latin Utopianus, from Utopia Utopia; for suffix see -AN. The sense of having ideal conditions, is first recorded in English in 1613. —n. 1551, borrowed from New Latin Utopianus, n., adj. The meaning of visionary idealist, is first recorded in English before 1873.

utter¹ adj. complete, total. Probably before 1200 uttre outward, exterior; developed from Old English (before 901) ūtera, ūtera outer, comparative adjective formed from ūt OUT, and corresponding to Old Frisian ūtera, uttra, Middle Low German uter, Middle Dutch utere, Old High German ūzero (modern German ausser), from Proto-Germanic ūtizon*; for suffix see -ER². The meaning of going to the utmost point, complete, total, is found in Middle English before 1420. —uttermost adj. utmost. Probably before 1382 uttermest outermost, remotest, formed from *utter*¹, adj. + -most.

utter² v. speak, say, or pronounce. Probably before 1400 ut-teren; in part borrowed from Middle Low German uteren to turn out, show, speak, from uter outer, comparative adjective formed from ūt OUT; and in part an alteration (influenced by *utter*¹) of Middle English outen to disclose (probably about 1350); later, to utter words, speak (about 1412); developed from Old English ūtian to put out, from ūt OUT. —utterance n. Probably before 1400 utterans words, speech, from utteren to speak, utter; for suffix see -ANCE.

uvula n. 1392, borrowed from Late Latin ūvula, from Latin ūvola small bunch of grapelike fruit, diminutive of ūva grape.

—uvular adj. 1843, formed in English from uvula + -ar, as if from New Latin uvularis, from Late Latin ūvula.

uxorious adj. 1598, borrowed from Latin uxōrius of or pertaining to a wife, from uxor (genitive uxōris) wife; for suffix see -OUS.

V

vacant adj. About 1300 vacant not held or occupied, empty; borrowed from Old French vacant, from Latin vacantem (nominative vacāns) empty, vacant, present participle of vacāre be empty, free, or unoccupied; for suffix see -ANT. —vacancy n. About 1580, vacancy; formed from English vacant + -cy. The state of being vacant is first recorded in 1607, and that of vacant office or post in 1693.

vacate v. 1643, borrowed from Latin vacātum, past participle of vacāre be empty, free; for suffix see -ATE¹. —vacation n. About 1395 vacacioun rest and freedom from any activity borrowed through Old French vacation, and directly from Latin vacātiōnem (nominative vacātiō) leisure, from vacāre be empty, free, or at leisure; for suffix see -ATION. —v. 1896, take a vacation; from the noun.

vaccine n. 1846, cowpox serum used in vaccinating against smallpox, developed from earlier vaccine, adj., relating to cowpox (1799); borrowed from Latin vaccīnus of or from cows (as in New Latin variola vaccinae cowpox), from vacca cow; for suffix see -INE². —vaccinate v. 1803, formed from English vaccine + -ate¹, or possibly a back formation of vaccination. —vaccination n. 1800, act or practice of vaccinating; formed from English vaccine + -ation.

vacillate v. 1597, to sway unsteadily; probably a back formation from vacillation, perhaps influenced by Middle French vaciller, from Latin vacillāre to sway; for suffix see -ATE¹. The meaning of waver, hesitate is first recorded in 1623, from the sense in vacillation (about 1400). —vacillation n. About 1400, a wavering, hesitation, uncertainty; borrowed from Latin vacillātiōnem (nominative vacillātiō) a reeling, wavering, from vacillāre sway to and from; for suffix see -ATION.

vacuity n. 1392 vacuite empty space; later, emptiness (1546); borrowed from Middle French vacuité, or directly from Latin vacuitās empty space, vacancy, freedom, from vacuus empty; see VACUUM; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of emptiness of mind, is first recorded in English in 1594.

vacuole n. 1853, borrowed from French vacuole, formed from Latin vacuus empty; see VACUUM + French -ole, diminutive suffix, from Latin -olus.

vacuous adj. 1648 (implied in vacuousness), empty of matter; borrowed from Latin vacuus empty, void, free; see VACUUM; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of showing no thought or intelligence is first found in 1848.

vacuum n. 1550, borrowing of from Latin vacuum an empty space, a void, noun use of neuter of vacuus empty, related to vacāre be empty. The meaning of an empty space without air is first recorded in 1652.

vagabond adj. 1426 vagabonde, borrowed from Middle French vagabonde, from Late Latin vagābundus wandering, strolling about, from Latin vagārī wander. —n. Probably before 1425 vagabunde, from the adjective. Middle English form vacabunde (1402) was borrowed from a variant form of Middle French vagabonde and became obsolete in English in the late 1500's.

vagary n. 1573–80, odd fancy, extravagant notion; borrowed probably as a noun use of Latin vagārī to wander, from vagus roving, wandering, rambling.

vagina n. 1682, New Latin, from Latin vāgīna sheath, scabbard. —vaginal adj. 1726, of, resembling, or serving as a sheath; formed from English vagina + -al¹. The sense of having to do with, or affecting the vagina is first recorded in 1825.

vagrant n. 1444 vagraunt, perhaps alteration (by influence of Latin vagārī wander) of Anglo-French wacrant, present participle of Old French wacer, walcrer to walk or wander, borrowed from a Germanic source (compare Old Icelandic valka wander). Middle English vagraunt may have also been influenced in form by Middle French vagant wandering, present participle of vaguer wander, from Latin vagārī see VAGARY. —adj. 1461, from the same source as the noun. —vagrancy n. 1642, formed from English vagrant, adj. + -cy.

vague adj. 1548, not definitely or precisely expressed; borrowed from Middle French vague, from Latin vagus wandering, rambling, vacillating, vague.

vain adj. Probably before 1200 (implied in veine gloire), but not found again until about 1300 in the phrase in veyn uselessly, ineffectually; borrowed from Old French vein, vain, from Latin vānus idle, empty.

The sense of having too much pride, conceited (1692) is implied in veine gloire. — vainglory n. Probably before 1200 veine gloire borrowed from Old French vaine gloire and Medieval Latin vana gloria, literally, vain glory. — vainglorious adj. About 1430 vayneglorious, formed from Middle English vaynglorie vainglory + -ous, or borrowed from Old French vaneglorios and Medieval Latin vaniglorius.

valance n. 1463 valaunce, about 1475 valance of uncertain origin; borrowed from an Anglo-French valance*, from valer go down, variant of Old French avaler or possibly borrowed from the plural of Old French avalant, from present participle of avaler go down.

vale n. Before 1325 wale; later vale (about 1400); borrowed from Old French val valley, from Latin vallem, with nominative vallis, vallēs valley.

valediction n. 1614, formed as if from Latin valedictiōnem*, from Latin valedicere bid farewell (valē, imperative of valēre be well + dicere to say); for suffix see -TION. — valedictorian n. 1759, formed from valedictory, adj. + -an. — valedictory adj. 1651, formed in English from Latin valedictum, past participle of valedicere bid farewell + English -ory. — n. 1779, from the adjective.

valence n. 1884, combining capacity of an atom measured by a unit of hydrogen (in 1869, valency); borrowed from Latin valentia strength, capacity, from valentem (nominative valēns), present participle of valēre be strong; for suffix see -ENCE.

valentine n. Before 1450 Volontyn sweetheart chosen on Saint Valentine's Day; later valentyne (about 1485); from Saint Valentine, from Late Latin Valentīnus the name of two early Italian saints. The sense of a letter or card sent to a sweetheart on Saint Valentine's Day is first recorded in 1824. — Valentine's Day, about 1380 Volantynys day.

valet n. Before 1400 valette, borrowed from Old French valet, variant of vaslet man's servant; originally, squire or young man, from Gallo-Romance vassellittus*, vassallittus young nobleman, squire, page, diminutive of Medieval Latin vassallus, from vassus servant, VASSAL; for suffix see -ET. — v. 1840, from the noun.

valiant adj. About 1303 vailaunt later valiant (before 1338); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vaillant, valiant stalwart, brave, from present participle of valoir be worthy; originally, be strong, from Latin valēre be strong, will, or worth; for suffix see -ANT.

valid adj. 1571, having force in law, legally binding; borrowed from Middle French valide, from Latin validus effective, strong, from valēre be strong. The meaning of supported by facts or authority, sound, true, is first recorded in English before 1648. — validate v. Before 1648, borrowed from Late Latin validatus, past participle of validare make strong, make valid, from Latin validus strong, valid; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. — validity n.

About 1550, legal soundness or force; borrowed from Middle French validité, or directly from Late Latin validitatem (nominative validitās) bodily strength, strength, from Latin validus strong, valid; for suffix see -ITY.

valise n. 1615, borrowed from French valise, from Italian valigia of uncertain origin.

valley n. Probably before 1300 valey, borrowed from Old French valee a valley, earlier vallée, from Vulgar Latin vallāta*, from Latin vallis, vallēs valley.

valor n. Probably before 1300 valour value or worth borrowed from Old French valour strength, value, valor, from Late Latin valōrem (nominative valor) value, worth, from Latin valēre be worth, be strong. The meaning of courage or bravery (1581) was borrowed from Italian valore, from Late Latin valōrem worth. — valorous adj. 1475 vallorous, borrowed from Middle French valeureux (valeur valor, Old French valour + Middle French -eux -ous).

value n. About 1303 valeu later value (before 1376); borrowed from Old French value worth, value, from feminine past participle of valoir be worth, from Latin valēre be strong, be well, be worth. — v. Probably before 1400 valuen estimate the value of; from the noun. The sense of think highly of, is found in Middle English in 1439. — valuable adj. Probably before 1430, formed from Middle English valuen to value + -able. — valuation n. 1529, borrowed from Middle French valuation, from valuer to value, from Old French value value, n.; for suffix see -ATION. — value judgment (1892, loan translation of German Werturteil) — valueless adj. 1595, formed from English value, n. + -less.

valve n. Before 1387, one of the halves of a folding door, leaf of a door borrowed from Latin valva (usually valvae, pl., a folding door), related to volvere to roll. The senses of a membranous fold regulating flow of body fluids (1615) and a mechanical device that works like a valve (1659) were extended in zoology to halves of a hinged shell in 1661.

valvular adj. 1797, having the form or function of a valve; formed in English from valvula a small valve (1615; borrowing of New Latin valvula, diminutive of Latin valva VALVE) + -ar.

vamoose v. 1834 vamos; later vamoose (1868); borrowed from Spanish vamos let us go, from Latin vādāmus, from vādere to go.

vamp¹ n. upper front part of a shoe or boot. Probably before 1200 vaumpe the part of hose or stockings which covers the foot borrowed from Old French avanpié (avant before + Old French pié foot). The sense of the upper front part of a shoe or boot is first recorded in English in 1654. — v. 1599 (implied in vamping), furnish with a vamp; from the noun. The sense of patch up, restore, repair (1632) compares with REVAMP in this sense.

vamp² n. woman who attracts and exploits men. Before 1911, shortened form of VAMPIRE.

vampire n. 1734, corpse supposed to come to life at night and seek nourishment by sucking the blood of sleeping persons; borrowed from French vampire and German Vampir, from an old West or South Slavic form vŭmpir, from Old Slavic opirŭ compare Serbian vampir. The sense of a person who preys ruthlessly upon others, is first recorded in 1741. —vampire bat (1790; earlier vampire, 1774) van¹ n. front part of an army or other advancing group. 1610, shortened form of VANGUARD.

van² n. covered truck or wagon. 1829, shortened form of CARAVAN.

vanadium n. 1835, New Latin, from Old Icelandic Vanadís, a name of the Scandinavian goddess Freya of love and fertility + New Latin -ium. The element was originally discovered in 1801 in a lead ore from Mexico and called erythronium because its salts become red when heated.

vandal n. 1663, person who willfully destroys beautiful or valuable things; earlier (1555) Vandal member of a Germanic tribe that invaded western Europe in the 300's and 400's, sacking Rome in the year 455; borrowed from Latin Vandalus (plural Vandali), a name of Germanic origin, and corresponding to Wandale (1387). —vandalism n. 1798, borrowed from French vandalisme, from vandale vandal, from Latin Vandalus Vandal; for suffix see -ism. —vandalize v. 1800, formed in English from vandal + -ize.

Vandyke or vandyke n. 1755, collar with a deeply cut edge; named after Anton Van Dyck; so called from a style of dress frequently depicted in his portraits. The short pointed beard, as on the subjects his paintings, is first recorded in English in 1894.

vane n. About 1395 vane device that shows wind direction variant in southern Middle English of fane developed from Old English (before 1000) fana banner, flag; cognate with Old Frisian fana piece of cloth, Old Saxon and Old High German fano (modern German Fahne flag), Gothic fana (from Proto-Germanic fanōn*).

vanguard n. Probably about 1450 vaunt garde later vandgard (1487) and vanguard (1503); borrowed from Middle French avant-garde advance guard (avant forward + garde guard).

vanilla n. 1662 vaynilla bean of the vanilla plant; borrowed from Old Spanish vaynilla later in the spelling vanilla (1673); borrowed from New Latin Vanilla the genus name, from Spanish vainilla vanilla plant, little pod, diminutive of vaina sheath, from Latin vāgīna sheath. The flavoring extract from the vanilla bean (1728) is implied as early as 1662, in use of the vanilla pod for flavoring.

vanish v. About 1303 vanishen, borrowing (with loss of initial syllable) of Old French esvaniss-, stem of esvanir, from Vulgar Latin exvānīre*, from Latin evānēscere disappear, die out (ex- out + vānēscere vanish, from vānus empty); for suffix see -ish².

vanity n. Probably about 1200 vanite borrowed from Old French vanité, from Latin vānitātem (nominative vānitās) emptiness, foolish pride, from vānus empty, vane, idle; for suffix see -ity.

vanquish v. Before 1338 venquisen, vencusen borrowed from Old French venqui, venquis, past tense and vencus, past participle of veintre conquer, from Latin vincere conquer. The late Middle English form vainquishen (1474) was borrowed from Middle French vainquiss-, present stem of vainquir conquer, from Old French vainkir, alteration of veintre conquer; for suffix see -ish². The sense of overcome, suppress (as in to vanquish fear) appeared about 1380.

vantage n. Before 1325, borrowed through Anglo-French vantage, from Old French avantage ADVANTAGE.

vapid adj. 1656, (of drinks) flat, insipid borrowed from obsolete French vapide, or directly from Latin vapidus flat, insipid; literally, that has exhaled its vapor; related to vappa stale wine, and probably to vapor vapor. The sense of dull, flat, lifeless (applied to talk, writings, etc.) is first recorded in English in 1758.

vapor n. Before 1382 vapour steam, mist; borrowed from Anglo-French vapour (in Old French vapeur), and directly from Latin vapōrem (nominative vapor) exhalation, vapor. —v. Probably about 1408 vapouren rise or cause to rise as vapor; from the noun. —vaporize v. 1634, change into smoke; later, change into vapor (1803); formed from Latin vapor, n., vapor + English -ize. —vaporous adj. full of vapor. Before 1400, borrowed perhaps from Old French vaporeux, and directly from Latin vapōrōsus full of steam or vapor, from vapor, n., vapor; for suffix see -ous. —vapory adj. 1598, formed from English vapor, n. + -y¹.

variable adj. About 1387, apt to change, fickle borrowed from Old French variable, and directly from Latin variābilis changeable, from variāre to change; for suffix see -able. —n. 1816, quantity that can vary in value; from the adjective.

variant adj. About 1380 variaunt not constant or uniform, tending to vary or change borrowed from Old French variant, and directly from Latin variantem (nominative variāns) a changing, varying, present participle of variāre to change; for suffix see -ant. —n. 1848, a different form; from the adjective. —variance n. About 1385 variaunce the fact of varying, difference, divergence borrowed from Old French variance, and directly from Latin variantia a difference, diversity, from variantem (nominative variāns), present participle; for suffix see -ance.

variation n. About 1385 variacion difference, divergence borrowed from Old French variation, and directly from Latin variatiōnem (nominative variatiō) a difference, variation, change, from variāre to change; for suffix see -ation. The sense of the fact of varying, change, is first recorded in English in 1502.

varicolored adj. 1665, of various or different colors; formed from Latin varius VARIOUS + English colored.

varicose adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin varicōsus full of dilated veins, from varix (genitive varicis) dilated vein; for suffix see -ose¹.

variegate v. 1653, give variety to, diversify; borrowed from

Late Latin variēgātus made of various sorts or colors, past participle of variēgāre diversify with different colors, from a lost adjective variēgus* (varius spotted + the root of agere to drive, make); for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of mark, spot, or streak with different colors (before 1728) is found earlier in variegated. —variegated adj. Before 1661, formed from Latin variēgātus variegated (past participle of variēgāre) + English -ed².

variety n. Before 1533, borrowed through Middle French variété, and directly from Latin varietātem (nominative varietās) difference, diversity, from varius various; for suffix -TY².

various adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed perhaps from Middle French varieux, and directly from Latin varius changing, different, diverse; for suffix see -OUS.

varlet n. 1456, servant, attendant on a knight; borrowed from Middle French varlet, variant of vaslet originally, squire or young man. The meaning of rascal, rogue, is first recorded in English before 1550.

varmint n. 1539 varment later varmint (1829); dialectal variant of VERMIN. Compare VARSITY.

varnish n. 1358 vernisshe borrowed from Old French verniz, verniz varnish, from Medieval Latin vernix, vernica odororous resin, from Late Greek verenikē, from Greek Berenikē, an ancient city in Libya. The sense of pretense, is first recorded in 1565. —v. About 1390 vernissen, borrowed from Old French vernissier, from verniz varnish, n.; or from Old French verniss, stem of vernir to varnish, from verniz varnish; for suffix see -ISH².

varsity n. 1846, university, variant of earlier versity (about 1680), shortened form of UNIVERSITY. The team representing a university, college, or school in a given sport developed from such phrases as varsity captain, varsity race, varsity team (1891). For a similar change in the vowel pronunciation, compare sergeant, varmint, and the British pronunciation of clerk.

vary v. About 1350 varien, borrowed from Old French varier, and directly from Latin variāre change, alter, make different, from varius varied, different, spotted. —varied adj. 1588, from the past participle of vary for suffix see -ED².

vascular adj. 1672–73, borrowed from New Latin vascularis of or pertaining to vessels or tubes, from Latin vāsculum, diminutive of vās vessel; for suffix see -AR.

vase n. 1563, ornamental vessel on a pillar; later, ornamental container, as for flowers (1629); borrowed from Middle French vase, from Latin vās container, vessel.

vasectomy n. 1897, formed from New Latin vas (deferens) + English -ectomy.

Vaseline n. 1874, trademark for an ointment made from petroleum; coined from German Wasser water + Greek elaion oil + English -ine¹.

vassal n. 1325, borrowed from Old French vassal, from Medieval Latin vassallus manservant, domestic, retainer, from vassus servant, from a Celtic source (compare Old Irish foss servant, Welsh gwaz young man, servant, and Breton gwaz servant, man, male). —adj. 1588, from the noun.

vast adj. 1575–85, borrowed from Middle French vaste, and directly from Latin vastus immense, extensive, huge; desolate, unoccupied, empty. Latin vastus, originally distinct from vāstus desolate, empty, must have merged early in Latin, so that English vast is related to waste, Old English wēste desolate; see WASTE.

vat n. Probably about 1200 veat tank, variant in southern Middle English of fat container; developed from Old English fæt (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian fet container, vat, Old Saxon fat, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch vat, Old High German vaz (modern German Fass barrel, vat), Old Icelandic fat, from Proto-Germanic fatan*. For a similar change of f to v, compare VIXEN.

vaudeville n. 1739, light popular song, especially one sung on the stage; borrowed from French vaudeville, alteration (influenced by ville town) of Middle French vaudevire, possibly from (chanson du) Vau de Vire (song of the) valley of Vire and first applied to the songs of Olivier Basselin, a poet of the 1400's who lived in Vire; or perhaps from Middle French (dialectal) vauder to go + vier to turn. The meaning of a theatrical entertainment interspersed with songs is first recorded in English in 1827.

vault¹ n. arched roof or ceiling. Probably before 1300 vaute, borrowed from Old French voute, vaute, vaulte arch, vaulted roof, from Vulgar Latin volta*, contraction of voluita*, noun use of feminine of voluitus*, alteration of Latin volūtus bowed, arched, past participle of volvere to turn, turn around, roll. The spelling with l is first found in late Middle English, by influence of the Latin forms, and possibly Old French vaulte. —v. 1387 vouten borrowed from Old French vouter, vauter, from voute, vaute vault¹, n.

vault² v. jump or leap over. 1538, borrowed from Middle French volter to gambol, leap, from Italian voltare, from Vulgar Latin volvitāre* to turn, leap, a frequentative form derived from Latin volvere to turn, turn around, roll. —n. 1576, from the verb.

vaunt v. Before 1425 vaunten, in part a shortened form of avaunten, and borrowed from Middle French vanter, from Late Latin vāniūtāre to boast, a frequentative form derived from Latin vānāre to utter empty words, from vānus idle, empty. —n. Probably before 1400 vaunte, shortened form of avaunt a boast (about 1380), from avaunten to boast (1303), borrowed from Old French avanter (a- to + vanter to boast).

veal n. About 1395, borrowed from Anglo-French vel, from Old French veel, veal a calf, earlier vedel, from Latin vitellus diminutive of vitulus calf.

vector n. 1704, line joining a fixed point (the sun) and a variable point (a planet); borrowed from Latin vector one who carries or conveys, carrier, from past participle stem of vehere carry, convey; for suffix see -OR². The meaning of a quantity involving direction as well as magnitude is first recorded in 1846.

veer v. 1582, borrowed from Middle French vire to turn, origin uncertain; perhaps from Vulgar Latin vīrāre* to turn, sheer off, associated with the stem vir- in viriae, pl., bracelets (also found in French environ where viron represents the sense of circle) and where the original sense is thought to be to wind around, twist. It is also possible that a relationship exists with Latin viere to bend, plait. —n. 1611, from the verb.

vegetable adj. Before 1398 vegetabil living and growing as a plant borrowed from Old French vegetable living, fit to live, and directly from Medieval Latin vegetabilis growing, flourishing, from Late Latin vegetābilis animating, enlivening, from Latin vegetāre enliven; see VEGETATE; for suffix see -ABLE. —n. 1582, any plant; from the adjective. The sense of a plant cultivated for food is not recorded in English before 1767.

vegetarian n. 1839, irregularly formed from English veget(able) + -arian, as in agrarian, trinitarian.

vegetate v. 1605, grow as plants do; probably a back formation from vegetation, and in part developed from vegetate, adj., endowed with vegetable life, growing as a plant (1574); borrowed from Late Latin vegetatum, past participle of vegetare grow, flourish, enliven, from Latin vegetāre invigorate, enliven, from vegetus vigorous, energetic, from vegēre to impart vigor, move, excite; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of live with very little action, thought, or feeling, is first recorded in English in 1740. —vegetation n. 1564, act of vegetating; borrowed from Middle French végétation, and directly from Medieval Latin vegetationem (nominative vegetatio) a quickening, action of growing, from vegetare grow, quicken; for suffix see -ATION. The sense of plant life, is first recorded in English in 1727–46, and that of dull, empty, or stagnant life, in 1797. —vegetative adj. growing as plants do. Before 1398 vegetatif, borrowed from Old French vegetatif (feminine vegetative), from Medieval Latin vegetativus growing, from vegetatum, past participle of vegetare grow, quicken; for suffix see -IVE. The sense of having very little action, thought, or feeling, is first recorded in English in 1802.

vehement adj. Probably before 1425, intense, severe; borrowed from Middle French vehement impetuous, ardent, from Latin vehementem (nominative vehemens) impetuous, carried away, perhaps from vehēmēnos* carrying oneself, rushing, lost present middle participle of vehere to carry. —vehemence n. 1402 vehemens, borrowed from Middle French vehemence vehement quality or nature, forcefulness, from Latin vehementia eagerness, strength, from vehementem impetuous; for suffix see -ENCE.

vehicle n. 1612, a medium through which a drug or medicine is administered; 1615, any means of conveying or transmitting; borrowed from French véhicule, and directly from Latin vehiculum means of transport, a vehicle, from vehere to carry. The sense of carriage, cart, or other conveyance, is first recorded in English in 1656. —vehicular adj. 1616, borrowed from Late Latin vehiculāris of or pertaining to a vehicle, from Latin vehiculum vehicle; for suffix see -AR.

veil n. Probably before 1200, head covering worn by nuns borrowed from Anglo-French and Old North French veil a headcovering; also, a sail, from Latin vēlum sail, curtain, covering (earlier vexlom*).

The sense of something that conceals or hides is first recorded in English in 1382. —v. Before 1382 veilen, from the noun. The sense of conceal or hide is first recorded in English in 1538.

vein n. Probably before 1300 veine blood vessel borrowed from Old French veine, from Latin vēna a blood vessel; also, a water course, a vein of metal, a person's natural ability or interest.

velar n. See VELUM.

Velcro n. 1960, trademark for a nylon fabric with minute hooks, used as a fastener; borrowed from French vel (ours) cro(ché) hooked velvet.

vellum n. About 1430 velym borrowed from Middle French velin parchment made from calfskin, from Old French vel, veel calf; see VEAL.

velocipede n. 1819, wheeled vehicle propelled by the feet on the ground; borrowed from French vélocipède, from Latin vēlōx (genitive vēlōcis) swift + pedem, accusative of pēs foot. In 1849–50 the word was applied to a kind of early bicycle or tricycle with pedals.

velocity n. Probably before 1425 velocite, borrowed from Latin vēlōcitās swiftness, speed, from vēlōx (genitive vēlōcis) swift, perhaps related to vehere carry; for suffix see -ITY.

velour or velours n. 1706 velours plush cushion used by hatters borrowed from French velours velvet, from Old French velour, alteration (with introduction of r) of velous, from Old Provençal velos, from Latin villōsus, adj., shaggy (in Medieval Latin, velvet), from villus shaggy hair, tuft of hair. The fabric like velvet is first recorded in English in 1858.

velum n. 1753, soft palate, New Latin, from Latin vēlum covering. —velar adj. 1876, pronounced by means of the soft palate, as the g in goose; borrowed by influence of French vélaire, from Latin vēlāris of or pertaining to a veil or covering, from vēlum covering; for suffix see -AR. An earlier sense of resembling a sail is found in 1726.

velvet n. 1327 veluett later in the spelling velvet (1351); probably borrowed from Old Provençal veluet, from Vulgar Latin vil-lūtittus*, diminutive of Vulgar Latin villūtus velvet; literally, shaggy cloth, from Latin villus shaggy hair, nap of cloth, tuft of hair, probably a dialectal variant of vellus fleece. —velveteen n. 1776, formed from English velvet + -een, variant of *-ine*¹. —velvety adj. (1752)

venal adj. 1652, that may be bought for a price; borrowed from French venal, and directly from Latin vēnālis that is for sale, from vēnum (nominative vēnus*) for sale; for suffix see -AL¹. —venality n. 1611, state of being for sale later, corruption (before 1683); borrowed from French venalité, and directly from Late Latin vēnālītās capable of being bought, from Latin vēnālis that is for sale; for suffix see -ITY.

vend v. 1622, sell, peddle; a possible back formation from vendible or vendee, modeled on Latin vendere; also borrowed from Latin vendere to sell, praise, contraction of vēnumdare offer for sale (vēnum for sale + dare give). —vendee n. 1547, probably formed from Latin vendere to sell + English -ee. —vendible adj. 1330, borrowed from Old French vendible, and directly from Latin vēndibilis that may be sold, from vendere to sell; for suffix see -IBLE. —vendor n. 1594, borrowed from late Anglo-French vendore, from vendre to vend, from Latin vendere to sell; for suffix see *-OR*². vendetta n. 1855, borrowing of Italian vendetta a feud, blood feud, from Latin vindicta revenge.

veneer n. 1702, borrowed (with loss of r in the unstressed first syllable) from German Furnier, from furnieren to cover with a veneer, inlay, from French fournir to furnish, accomplish, from Middle French fornir, furnir to FURNISH. The sense of a merely outward show is first recorded in English in 1868. —v. 1728, earlier fineer (1708); borrowed from German furnieren to cover with veneer.

venerate v. 1623, probably a back formation from veneration; also developed from venerate, adj., reverent (1592); modeled on Latin venerātus revered, past participle of venerārī to worship, revere, related to venus (genitive veneris) love, desire; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. —venerable adj. worthy of reverence. About 1410, borrowed through Old French venerable, and directly from Latin venerābilis worthy of reverence, from venerārī venerate; for suffix see -ABLE. —veneration n. About 1410 veneracioun borrowed from Middle French veneration, and directly from Latin venerātiōnem (nominative venerātiō) reverence, from venerārī venerate; for suffix see -ATION.

venereal adj. Probably before 1425 venerealle, formed from Latin venereus (from venus, genitive veneris love, sexual desire) + Middle English -alle *-al*¹.

venery n. Before 1450, borrowed from Medieval Latin veneria sexual intercourse, from Latin venus (genitive veneris) love, sexual desire; for suffix see *-Y*³.

vengeance n. Probably before 1300 vengeaunce act of avenging, revenge borrowed from Anglo-French vengeaunce, variant of Old French vengeance revenge, from vingier take revenge, from Latin vindicāre to set free, claim, avenge, VINDICATE; for suffix see -ANCE. —vengeful adj. Before 1586, formed from obsolete English venge take revenge (from Middle English venge, borrowed from Old French vingier) + -ful.

venial adj. About 1303, borrowed from Old French venial, and directly from Latin veniālis pardonable, from venia forgiveness, indulgence, pardon, related to venus love, desire; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

venison n. Probably before 1300 venisoun, borrowed from Old French venesoun meat of large game, especially the deer or boar; also, a hunt, from Latin vēnātiōnem (nominative vēnātiō) a hunt, also, game as the product of the hunt, from vēnārī to hunt, pursue.

venom n. Before 1250 venim later venom (about 1440); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French venim, variant (probably on the model of Vulgar Latin) of venin poison, from Vulgar Latin venūmen*, from Latin venenum poison, drug, potion. The sense of bitter or virulent feeling, language, etc., is found in Middle English before 1325. —venomous adj. About 1300 venimous pernicious; borrowed from Anglo-French venimus, venimous, from Old French venim venom; for suffix see -OUS. The sense of poisonous is found in Middle English before 1338, and that of virulent, embittered, about 1340.

venous adj. 1626, having veins later, of or having to do with a vein (1681); borrowed from Latin vēnōsus full of veins, from vēna VEIN; for suffix see -OUS.

vent v. Before 1382 venten emit from a confined space (implied in venting, verbal noun); probably borrowed (with loss of initial e) from Old French eventer, esventer let out, expose to the air, from Vulgar Latin exventāre* (Latin ex- out + ventus wind¹, n.). The sense of express freely, is first recorded in English in 1596. —n. 1508, act of emitting or discharging; probably borrowed (with loss of initial e) from Middle French event, esvent, from Old French eventer, esventer let out. The sense of a hole or opening, an outlet, is first recorded in 1570.

ventilate v. About 1425 ventilatten blow away; borrowed from Latin ventilātus, past participle of ventilāre to brandish, toss in the air, winnow, fan, agitate, set in motion, from ventulus a breeze, diminutive of ventus wind¹, n.; for suffix see *-ATE*¹. The sense of examine and discuss is first recorded in English in 1527 and that of to supply (a room) with fresh air, in 1743. —ventilation n. 1456, current of air, breeze; borrowed from Middle French ventilation, and directly from Latin ventilātiōnem (nominative ventilātiō) an exposing to the air, from ventilāre ventilate; for suffix see -ATION. —ventilator n. (1743) ventral adj. 1739, borrowed from French ventral, and directly from Late Latin ventrālis of or pertaining to the belly or stomach, from Latin venter (genitive ventris) belly, paunch; for suffix see *-AL*¹.

ventricle n. 1392, borrowed from Latin ventriculus stomach, ventricle, diminutive of venter (genitive ventris) belly.

ventriloquism n. 1797, formed as a descriptive noun to ventriloquist, with substitution of the suffix -ism. The word has replaced older ventriloquy. —ventriloquist n. 1656, formed from English ventriloquy + -ist. —ventriloquy n. 1584, formed from Late Latin ventriloquus ventriloquist + English *-y*³. Late Latin ventriloquus (Latin venter, genitive ventris, belly + loquī speak) was patterned on Greek engastrímýthos, literally, speaking in the belly.

venture n. Probably before 1400, fortune, luck, chance; shortened form of aventure, itself an earlier form of ADVENTURE. The sense of risky undertaking is first recorded before 1566. —v. About 1430 venteren, shortened and altered form of aventure to chance, risk (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old French aventureur, from aventure adventure.

venue n. Probably about 1300 veneue assault, attack; borrowed from Old French venue coming, from the feminine of the past participle of venir to come, from Latin venīre to come. The sense of a place where a case in law is tried is first recorded in 1531.

veracious adj. Before 1677, formed in English from Latin vērāx (genitive vērācis) truthful, from vērū true + English -ous.
—veracity n. 1623, formed from Latin vērāx (genitive vērācis) truthful + English -ity.

veranda n. 1711, borrowed from Hindi varandā, probably from Portuguese varanda, originally, long balcony or terrace, of uncertain origin, but also related to obsolete Spanish baranda railing, Catalan barana small railing or balustrade, and Old Provençal baranda defense, barricade. The ultimate origin is perhaps from Vulgar Latin barra* barrier, bar.

verb n. Before 1397 verbe, borrowed from Old French verbe part of speech that expresses action or being, and directly from Latin verbum a verb; originally, a word.

verbal adj. Probably before 1425 verbale borrowed from Middle French verbal, and directly from Latin verbālis consisting of words, relating to verbs, from verbum verb; for suffix see *-AL*¹.
—n. 1530, word derived from a verb from the adjective.
—verbalize v. 1609, to use too many words; borrowed from French verbaliser, and formed from English verbal, adj. + -ize. The meaning of express in words is first recorded in English in 1875.

verbatim adv. 1481, borrowing of Medieval Latin verbatimum word for word, from Latin verbum word. —adj. 1737, from the adverb.

verbiage n. Before 1721, borrowed from French verbiage wordiness, from verbier to chatter, from Old French verbe word, from Latin verbum word; for suffix see -AGE.

verbose adj. Before 1400 (implied in verbosely); borrowed from Latin verbōsus full of words, wordy, from verbum word; for suffix see *-OSE*¹. —verbosity n. 1542, borrowed from Middle French verbosité, or directly from Late Latin verbōsitàtem (nominative verbōsitàs) wordiness, from Latin verbōsus wordy, verbose; for suffix see -ITY.

verdant adj. 1581, green in color; borrowed from Middle French virdeant, verdoyant becoming green, present participle of Old French verdeier, verdoyer become green, from Vulgar Latin viridiāre* grow green, make green, from Latin viridis green, related to viŕe be green; for suffix see -ANT.

verdict n. 1533, alteration of Middle English verdit (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French verdit (from Old French ver true + dit, past participle of dire to speak, from Latin dīcere). Alteration of Middle English verdit to modern English verdict was influenced by Medieval Latin verdictum, verdictum a verdict; from Anglo-French.

verdigris n. 1336–37 verdegrez, alteration of earlier vertegrez (1300–01); borrowed from Old French verte grez, verte de Grece literally, green of Greece. The spelling verdigris is first recorded in English in 1789.

verdure n. Probably about 1390, borrowed from Old French verdure greenness, from verd, variant of vert green; for suffix see -URE.

verge¹ n. edge, rim, brink. 1459, border or margin of some object; borrowed from Middle French verge rod or wand of office, scope or territory dominated, from Latin virga shoot, rod, stick. The meaning of outermost edge (of an extensive area) is first found in 1593, and that of the point at which something begins or happens, brink (as in be on the verge of) in 1602. —v. 1605, provide with a border; from the noun. The meaning of lie on the border of, is first recorded in 1787.

verge² v. tend, incline. 1610, borrowed from Latin vergere to bend, turn, incline.

verify v. Before 1325 verifien (implied in verifying) prove to be true, confirm; borrowed from Old French verifier, from Medieval Latin verificare make true, from a lost adjective vērificus* (Latin vērū true + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY.
—verifiable adj. 1593, formed from English verify + -able.
—verification n. 1523, act of verifying; borrowed from Middle French verification, from Medieval Latin verificationem (nominative verificatio) a verifying, from verificare verify; for suffix see -TION.

verily adv. Before 1325 verailly, formed from Middle English verray true, real + *-ly*¹.

verisimilitude n. 1603, borrowed from obsolete French vérisimilitude, and probably directly from Latin vērīsimilitūdo likeness to truth, from vērīsimilis like truth (vērī, genitive of vērū, neuter of vērū true; see VERY + similis like, similar).

veritable adj. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French veritable true, from verité VERITY; for suffix see -ABLE. Revival of veritable was probably a borrowing of modern French véritable.

verity n. About 1375, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French verité, from Latin vērītātem (nominative vērītās) truth, truthfulness, from vērū true; for suffix see -ITY.

vermeil adj. Probably before 1400 vermayle, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vermeil bright-red; see VERMILION. —n. 1596, from the adjective. The meaning of bronze, copper, or silver coated with gilt, is first recorded in 1858.

vermiform adj. 1730, borrowed from New Latin vermiformis (Latin vermis worm + fōrma form); now usually in vermiform appendix (1778).

vermilion n. 1296 vermelyon borrowed from Old French vermeillon, from vermeil bright-red, from Late Latin vermiculus a little worm; also, the cochineal insect from which the color crimson was obtained, from Latin, larva of an insect, grub, maggot, diminutive of vermis worm. —adj. 1589, from the noun.

vermin n. pl. or sing. Probably before 1300, noxious animals borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vermin, from Vulgar Latin verminum* vermin, possibly including bothersome insects, from Latin vermis worm. The sense of creeping insects and other minute animals is found in Middle English about 1340, and that of low, obnoxious people, in 1562. —verminous adj. About 1616, like vermin, vile; borrowed from French vermineux, and directly from Latin verminosus full of worms, from vermina* maggots, related to vermis worm; for suffix see -OUS.

vermouth n. 1806, borrowed from French vermouth, vermout, from earlier German Wermuth (now Wermut) wormwood, from Middle High German wermuot, wermuote, from Old High German wermuota wormwood.

vernacular adj. 1601, formed from Latin vernāculus domestic, native (from verna home-born slave, native) + English -ar. The adjective in English is restricted to the use represented in Latin by vernācula vocābula, in reference to language. —n. Before 1706, from the adjective.

vernal adj. 1534, borrowed from Latin vērnalis of the spring, from vērnis of spring, from vēr spring; for suffix see -AL¹.

versatile adj. 1605, changeable, variable borrowed from French versatile, and directly from Latin versātilis turning, revolving, movable, capable of turning to varied subjects or tasks, from versāt-, past participle stem of versāre keep turning, be engaged in something, turn over in the mind, frequentative form of vertere to turn. The meaning of able to turn from one subject or occupation to another, many-sided, is first recorded in English in 1656. —versatility n. 1755, probably formed from English versatile + -ity, influenced by French versatilité, from versatile versatile.

verse n. Probably before 1200 vers line or section of a psalm or canticle later, line of poetry (about 1369); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vers, from Latin versus (genitive versūs) verse, line of writing, (apparently so named in allusion to plowing, as the plowman turns to make another row or furrow), from vertere to turn. The sense of a stanza is first recorded in Middle English about 1308, and the phrase in verse, about 1315. Middle English vers replaced the Old English fers (first recorded about 737), itself an early borrowing (along with Old Frisian fers, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German vers, Old High German vers, fers, and Old Icelandic vers) from Latin versus line of writing.

versed adj. Before 1610, from the past participle of now obsolete English verse to turn over (a book, subject, etc.) in study or investigation (1606); borrowed from Middle French verser to turn or revolve, as in meditation, from Latin versāre and versārī keep turning, be engaged in something, turn over in the mind; for suffix see -ED². The meaning of versed was probably influenced by Middle French versé experienced, skilled, from Latin versātus, past participle of versārī.

versicle n. Before 1380, borrowed from Latin versiculus, diminutive of versus verse.

versify v. Probably before 1387, borrowed from Old French versifier turn into verse, and directly from Latin versificāre compare verse, from a lost adjective versificus* (versus verse + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. —versification n. 1603, borrowed from Middle French versification, and directly from Latin versificātionem (nominative versificātiō), from versificāre to versify; for suffix see -ATION.

version n. 1582, a translation of a text; borrowed from Middle French version, from Medieval Latin versionem (nominative versio) a turning, from Latin vers-, past participle stem of vertere to turn; for suffix see -ION. The meaning of the particular form of a statement or description (as in her version of the story) is first recorded in English in 1788. The word is also recorded in the sense of an overturning, destruction (before 1420).

versus prep. 1447–48, borrowed from Latin versus turned toward or against, from the past participle of vertere to turn.

vertebra n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin vertebra joint or articulation of the body, joint of the spine, from vertere to turn. —vertebral adj. 1681, borrowed from New Latin vertebralis of the spine or backbone, from Latin vertebra vertebra; for suffix see -AL¹. —vertebrate adj. 1826, borrowed from Latin vertebrātus jointed, articulated, from vertebra vertebra; for suffix see -ATE¹. —n. 1826, from the same source as the adjective.

vertex n. 1570, the point opposite to the base in geometry; borrowed from Latin vertex highest point; originally, a whirling column, whirlpool, whirl, from vertere to turn. The meaning of highest point of anything, is first recorded in English in 1641.

vertical adj. 1559, of or at the vertex, directly overhead; borrowed from Middle French vertical, and directly from Late Latin verticālis overhead, from Latin vertex (genitive verticis) highest point, VERTEX; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of straight up and down, perpendicular, is first recorded in English in 1704.

vertiginous adj. 1608, of the nature of vertigo or dizziness; borrowed from French vertigineux, and directly from Latin vertiginosus suffering from dizziness, from vertigō (genitive vertiginis) VERTIGO; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of whirling, revolving, rotary, is first recorded in English in 1663.

vertigo n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin vertigō dizziness; originally, a whirling or spinning movement, from vertere to turn.

verve n. 1697, special talent in writing borrowed from French verve enthusiasm, especially pertaining to the arts, in Old French, caprice, odd humor, proverb, probably from Gallo-Romance verva*, from Latin verba whimsical words, plural of verbum word. The meaning of mental vigor, liveliness of expression, is first recorded in English in 1803, and the meaning of vigor, enthusiasm, in 1863.

very adj. About 1275 verray true, real, genuine; later, actual, sheer, as in the very air (about 1390); borrowed from Anglo-French verrai, Old French verai true, from Vulgar Latin verācus*, from Latin verāx (genitive verācis) truthful, from verus true. —adv. Before 1325 verray truly, really, genuinely; from the adjective. The meaning of greatly, extremely, is first recorded in Middle English in 1448.

Use of very as an intensive form (as in passing under our very eyes and in the very best of us), has been known since Middle English.

vesicle n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Middle French vesicule, from Latin vēsīcula, diminutive of vēsīca, vēsīca bladder, blister. —vesicular adj. 1715, borrowed from New Latin vesicularis bladderlike, from Latin vēsīcula vesicle; for suffix see -AR.

vesper n. Before 1393, the evening star borrowed from Old French vespre, and directly from Latin vesper (masculine), vespera (feminine) evening star, evening, west. The meaning of evening is first found in English in 1606. —adj. 1791, from the noun. —vespers n. pl. 1611, borrowed from Middle French vespres, from Old French, from Medieval Latin vesperae, from plural of Latin vespera evening. An earlier sense of public disputations and ceremonies preceding a university commencement is recorded in 1574.

vessel n. About 1303 vessel container borrowed from Old French vessel (masculine), from Latin vāscellum small vase or urn, also, a ship, diminutive of vāsculum, itself a diminutive of vās vessel; also borrowed from Old French vesselle (feminine), from Latin vāscella, neuter plural (taken as feminine singular) of vāscellum. The sense of a ship or boat is found in Middle English before 1325.

vest v. About 1425 westen, to put in the possession of a person (as in authority is vested in the trustees); later vesten (1464); borrowed from Middle French vestir, from Medieval Latin vestire to put into possession, to invest, from Latin vestire to clothe, from vestis garment, clothing. The meaning of invest (as in to be vested with the office of chancellor) is first recorded in 1674. —n. 1613, loose outer garment, robe, gown; borrowed from French veste, from Italian vesta, veste robe, gown, from Latin vestis garment, clothing, attire. —vested adj. 1671, clothed or dressed; later, established or settled in the hands of a person (1766); from vest, v. + *-ed*².

vestibule n. 1623 vestible a porch later, an antechamber or lobby (1730); borrowed from French vestible (now vestibule), from Latin vestibulum forecourt, entrance. The spelling vestibule (before 1751) is borrowed directly from Latin vestibulum.

vestige n. 1602, borrowed from French vestige a mark, trace, sign, from Latin vestigium footprint, trace, mark. English vestige replaced earlier vestigy, borrowed from Middle French vestigie, borrowed from Latin vestigium. —vestigial adj. 1877, formed from Latin vestigium vestige + English *-al*¹.

vestment n. Probably before 1300 vestment, borrowed from Old French vestment, alteration of Latin vestimentum clothing, clothes, from Latin vestire to clothe.

vestry n. 1388 westre later vestrye (1440); probably borrowed from Anglo-French vesterie*, alteration of Old French vestiaire, vestiarie room for vestments, from Latin vestiārium wardrobe, noun use of neuter of vestiārius of clothes, from vestis garment.

vesture n. About 1380, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vesture, from Vulgar Latin vestitūra* vestments, clothing, from vestire to clothe; for suffix see -URE.

vet¹ n. 1862, shortened form of VETERINARIAN. —v. 1891, to submit to veterinary care; from the noun. The sense of subject to careful examination, scrutinize, evaluate, is first recorded in 1904.

vet² n. 1848, shortened form of VETERAN.

vetch n. About 1384 vetche, borrowed from Old North French veche, from Latin via.

veteran n. 1509, old, experienced soldier; borrowed from Latin veterānus, from vetus (genitive veteris) old. The meaning of any ex-serviceman (not necessarily old 1798), is alluded to in the Roman army (1779). The sense of long service is first recorded in 1597. —adj. 1611, having had much experience in war; from the noun. The sense of grown old in service, experienced by long practice, is first recorded in 1728.

veterinary adj. 1791, borrowed (perhaps by influence of French vétérinaire, adj.) from Latin veterinārius of or having to do with beasts of burden; also, cattle doctor, from veterinum beast of burden, veterinus belonging to beasts of burden, perhaps derived from vetus (genitive veteris) old; possibly, experienced, or used to work as a draft animal; for suffix see -ARY. —n. 1861, from the adjective. —veterinarian n. 1646, formed (perhaps by influence of French vétérinaire, n.) from Latin veterinārius, adj. + English -an.

veto n. 1629, right to forbid something, rejection, prohibition; borrowed from Latin vetō I forbid, first person singular present indicative of vetāre to forbid. Latin vetō was used by Roman tribunes when opposed to measures of the Senate or the magistrates. —v. 1706, from the noun.

vex v. About 1415 vexen annoy, provoke; borrowed from Middle French vexer, and directly from Latin vexāre to attack, harass, trouble. —vexation n. About 1400 vexacioun, borrowed through Old French vexation, and directly from Latin vexatiōnem (nominative vexatiō) agitation, annoyance, from vexāre vex; for suffix see -ATION. —vexatious adj. 1534, formed from English vexation + -ous.

via prep. 1779, borrowing of Latin viā, ablative form of via way, road, channel, course.

viable adj. 1828–32, capable of living (applied to a newborn infant) borrowed from French viable capable of life, from vie life, from Latin vita life; for suffix see -ABLE. The sense of surviving or existing independently is first recorded in English in 1848, and that of workable, practicable, in 1955. —viability n. 1843, probably formed from English viable + -ity, on the model of French viabilité.

viaduct n. 1816, formed from Latin via road + English -duct, as in aqueduct.

vial n. About 1384 viole, variant of fyole PHIAL.

viand n. Before 1399 viaunde borrowed from Anglo-French viaunde, viande, Old French viande food, from Vulgar Latin vīvanda*, alteration of Late Latin vīvenda things for living, in Latin with the sense of be lived, neuter plural gerundive of vīvere to live.

vibrant adj. About 1550, agitated; later, vibrating (1616); borrowed from Latin vibrantem (nominative vibrans) swaying, present participle of vibrare move to and fro; for suffix see -ANT. The sense of vigorous, full of life, is first recorded in English in 1860.

vibrate v. 1616, move to and fro in a fight; later, swing to and fro, oscillate (1667); borrowed from Latin vibratus, past participle of vibrare move to and fro, set in tremulous motion, shake; see WIPE; for suffix see -ATE¹. — vibration n. 1656, borrowed from French vibration, and directly from Latin vibratiōnem (nominative vibratiō) a shaking, from vibrare to vibrate; for suffix see -ATION.

vicar n. Before 1325 wicare later vicar an earthly representative of God or Christ (specifically applied to the Pope, 1340); borrowed from Anglo-French vikere, vicare, Old French vicare, from Latin vicarius a substitute, delegate, deputy; noun use of past participle; see VICARIOUS. The person acting for a priest first recorded about 1325. — vicarage n. 1425, formed from English vicar + -age.

vicarious adj. 1637, taking the place of another, substitute; borrowed from Latin vicarius substitute, deputy, from vic-, found only in oblique cases (genitive vicis, etc.) and plural vicēs, with the meaning of turn, change, exchange, substitution; for suffix see -OUS.

The meaning of done, attained, or suffered for or in place of others is first recorded in English in 1692.

vice¹ n. evil habit or tendency. About 1300, evil or wickedness; borrowed from Old French vice, from Latin vitium defect, fault, vice (in Medieval Latin vicium). The sense of an evil habit or tendency is first recorded in Middle English about 1325, and the sense of a fault or bad habit, in 1338.

vice² prep. instead of, in the place of. 1770, borrowed from Latin vice, ablative form of vicis (genitive) a change, turn, place, substitution.

vice³ n. = vise (a device for holding things).

vice- a prefix meaning a deputy, assistant, substitute, rank next to the highest, as in vice-chairman = person who acts in the place of a chairman (1858). Middle English vice-, borrowed through Old French vice-, and directly from Late Latin vice-, from Latin vice instead of, ablative form of vicis (genitive) a turn, change, substitution.

vice-president n. 1574 vice-president one who acts as representative or deputy for a president; later Vice-President official next in rank to the President of the U.S., in the Constitution of the U.S. (1787).

viceroys n. 1524 vice-roy, borrowing of Middle French vice-roy (Old French vice- deputy + roi king).

vice versa 1601, borrowing of Latin vice versā (vice, ablative form of genitive vicis a turn, change; and versā, feminine ablative singular of versus, past participle of vertere to turn, turn about).

vicinity n. 1560, nearness in place, being close; borrowed from Middle French vicinité, and directly from Latin vicinitās of or pertaining to neighbors or a surrounding area, from vicinus neighbor, neighboring, from vicus group of houses, village, habitation; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of surrounding district, is first recorded in English in 1796.

vicious adj. About 1340 vecious of the nature of vice, wicked, immoral; later vicious (about 1374); borrowed from Anglo-French vicious, Old French vicieus, from Latin vitiōsus faulty, defective, corrupt (in Medieval Latin viciosus), from vitium fault; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of inclined to be savage or dangerous, evil-tempered, is first recorded in English in 1711, and that of full of malice or spite, bitter or severe, in 1825.

vicissitude n. 1570–76, borrowing of Middle French vicissitude, from Latin vicissitudinem (nominative vicissitudo) change, from vicissim changeably, in turn, from vicis (genitive) a turn, change; for suffix see -TUDE.

victim n. 1497, living creature killed and offered as a sacrifice to a god; borrowed from Middle French victime, and directly from Latin victima animal offered as a sacrifice, any sacrifice.

The sense of a person who is hurt, tortured, or killed by another is first recorded in English in 1660, and that of a person taken advantage of (as in the victim of a swindle), in 1781. — victimize v. 1830, make a victim of, formed from English victim + -ize.

victor n. About 1340, borrowed from Anglo-French victor, victour (Old French victour), and directly from Latin victōrem (nominative victor) a conqueror, from past participle stem of vincere to conquer; for suffix see -OR². — victorious adj. About 1390, borrowed from Anglo-French victorieux (Old French victorieux), and directly from Latin victōriōsus having many victories, from victōria victory, from victor victor; for suffix see -OUS. — victory n. About 1340, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French victorie, and directly from Latin victōria victory, from victor a conqueror, victor; for suffix see -Y³.

victual n. Usually, victuals, pl. food. 1523, spelling alteration (with c, imitating Latin victuālia food) of Middle English vitaylle (about 1303); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vitaillie, from Late Latin victuālia provisions, nourishment, food, neuter plural of victuālis of food, from Latin victus (genitive victūs) food, sustenance, from vivere to live; for suffix see -AL².

vicuna or vicuña n. 1604, borrowing of Spanish vicuña, from Quechua (Peru) wikuña.

videlicet adv. that is to say, to wit, namely (usually viz.). Before 1456, borrowing of Latin videlicet, contraction of vidēre licet it is permissible to see (vidēre to see, and licet it is allowed, third person singular present indicative of licēre be allowed). See also VIZ.

video adj. 1935, borrowed from Latin videō I see, first person singular present indicative of vidēre to see; probably influenced in its adoption into English by the pronunciation of the final syllable of radio. — n. 1935, either from the adjective in English or borrowed from Latin videō. — videocassette n. (1971) — videocassette recorder (1971, now usually VCR 1971) —videotape n. 1953, formed from English video + tape, n.

—v. to record on videotape. 1959, from the noun.

vie v. 1565, to hazard or bet, make a bid; later, contend, compete (1602); shortened form of Middle English envien contend, strive (about 1385), borrowed from Old French envier increase the stake, challenge, invite, from Latin invītāre invite.

view n. 1415–16 veue formal inspection or survey (of land); later veu observation, notice (about 1450), and view (1454); borrowed from Anglo-French veue view, variant of Old French veüe, noun use of feminine past participle of Old French veoir to see, from Latin vidēre. The act of seeing and the manner of regarding something, opinion, are first recorded in English in 1573. —v. 1525, to inspect, examine carefully; from the noun. The meaning of consider, regard, appeared 1591. —viewer n. (1415) vigil n. Probably before 1200 vigile the eve of a religious festival as an occasion for devotional watching or observance later, the watch kept on the eve of a festival (about 1395); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vigile, from Latin vigilia watch, watchfulness, wakefulness, from vigil watchful, awake, related to vigēre be lively, thrive, and vegēre to enliven. The sense of a one of the four night watches maintained by Roman soldiers was known as early as 1380.

—vigilance n. 1570, borrowed from Middle French vigilance, and possibly directly from Latin vigilantia watchfulness, from vigilantem (nominative vigilāns) wakeful, watchful, present participle of vigilāre keep watch, from vigil watchful; for suffix see -ANCE. —vigilant adj. About 1480, borrowed from Middle French vigilant, and possibly directly from Latin vigilantem; see VIGILANCE; for suffix see -ANT.

vigilante n. 1856, borrowing of Spanish vigilante, literally, watchman, from Latin vigilantem; see VIGILANCE.

vignette n. 1751, decorative design (often in the form of vine tendrils) on a page of a book; borrowing of French vignette, from Old French, diminutive of vigne vineyard, VINE; for suffix see -ETTE. The form vignette replaced vinette a trailing ornament in architecture or decorative work (before 1420) an Anglicized borrowing (with loss of g) of Old French vignette. The sense of a literary sketch, is first recorded in English in 1880, probably extended from the then very popular use of the word in photography in reference to small portraits made by blurring the edges, as if looking through vines (1853).

vigor n. Probably before 1300 vigour, borrowed from Anglo-French vigour, Old French vigor, and probably borrowed directly from Latin vigōrem (nominative vigor) liveliness, activity, force, from vigēre be lively, flourish, thrive. —vigorous adj. Probably before 1300 vigorous, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vigorous, from vigor, vigour vigor; for suffix see -OUS.

Viking or viking n. 1807 vikingr one of the Scandinavian pirates who raided the coasts of Europe from the 700's to the 900's; borrowed from Old Icelandic vīkingr (possibly with the sense of one who came out of the inlets of the sea, and formed from Old Icelandic vīk creek, inlet, bay + -ingr -ing). The modern Icelandic form is vīkingur. The spelling viking is first recorded in English in 1840 and is not found in Middle English, but came into use in modern historical writings. However, cognates of the Old Icelandic word are found in Old English wicing (as early as the 700's) and Old Frisian wīzing, wīsing, and are of so early a time that a Scandinavian origin is doubtful because in Old Icelandic vīkingr is not found before the latter part of the 900's. Thus, Old English wīcing was probably derived from wīc village, camp, from Latin vīcus village, habitation.

vile adj. Probably before 1300 vyle, vile of poor quality, very bad or inferior; later, disgusting, base (about 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vile, from Latin vīlis cheap, worthless, base, common.

vilify v. Before 1500 vilifien to lower in worth or value; borrowed from Late Latin vilificāre to make cheap or base, regard as of little value, from a lost adjective vilificus* (Latin vīlis cheap, base + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY. The meaning of slander, speak evil of, is first recorded in 1598. —vilification n. 1630, act of making vile, degradation; later, act of reviling (1653); borrowed from Medieval Latin vilificationem (nominative vilificatio) a vilifying, cheapening, from Late Latin vilificāre vilify; for suffix see -ATION.

villa n. 1611, borrowing of Italian villa, from Latin vīlla country house, farm, related to vīcus village.

village n. About 1390, borrowing of Old French village houses and other buildings in a group, usually smaller than a town, from Latin vīllāticum farmstead (with its associated buildings), noun use of neuter singular of vīllāticus having to do with a farmstead or villa, from vīlla country house, VILLA. —villager n. (1570) villain n. About 1303 vyleyn base or low-born rustic later vilaine (about 1330); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French villain, vilein, from Medieval Latin vīllānus farmhand, from Latin vīlla country house, VILLA. The extended (and now usual) sense of an unprincipled scoundrel is implied in the earliest uses of this word. —villainous adj. Probably about 1390 vilanous, borrowed from Old French vīlennus, from vīllain, vilein villain; for suffix see -OUS. —villainy n. Probably before 1200 vileinie, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French villainie, vileinie, from villain, vilein villain; for suffix see -Y. This word probably influenced the borrowing of villain, but had little to do with the early formation of villain.

ville a suffix sporadically in vogue since about 1840 (often with -s-, as in dullsville, dragsville, but also mediaville). Adapted from -ville in place names, such as Clarksville, Hicksville ultimately a borrowing from Old French ville town, from Latin vīlla VILLA.

villein n. member of a class of half-free peasants in the Middle Ages. Before 1325 vīleyn, variant of VILLAIN.

vim n. 1843, borrowed from Latin vim, accusative of vīs strength, force, power, energy.

vincible adj. 1548, borrowed from Middle French vincible, and directly from Latin vincibilis that can be easily overcome, from vincere to conquer; for suffix see -IBLE.

vindicate v. 1533, to exercise in revenge borrowed from Latin vindicatus, past participle of vindicāre to set free, lay claim to, assert, avenge; related to vindicta revenge; for suffix see -ATE¹. Latin vindicāre probably from vim dicāre to show authority, and vindicta from vim dictam ownership asserted, were both formed from vim, accusative of vīs force and the root of dicere to say. It is also possible that vindicate is a back formation from vindication. The sense of clear from suspicion, dishonor, etc., is first recorded in English before 1635. —vindication n. 1484, act of avenging borrowed from Middle French vindication, and directly from Latin vindicatōnem (nominative vindicatīō) act of claiming or avenging, from vindicāre; for suffix see -ATION.

vindictive adj. 1616, formed from Latin vindicta revenge + English -ive.

vine n. Probably before 1300 vyne, borrowed from Old French vigne, vine, from Latin vīnea vine, vineyard, from vīnum WINE. —vineyard n. About 1300 vynezord plantation of vines; formed from Middle English vyne vine + zord enclosure, yard¹.

vinegar n. Before 1325 vinegre, borrowed from Old French vinagre, vinagre (vin wine, from Latin vīnum WINE + aigre sour, sharp). —vinegary adj. 1730, formed from English vinegar + -y¹. Largely used in a figurative sense of sour or acid, it is distinct from vinegarish (1648), which is more often used in the literal sense of resembling vinegar in taste.

vintage n. Probably before 1425, the yield of grapes or wine from a vineyard; borrowed from Anglo-French vintage, alteration (influenced by Middle English viniter or Anglo-French vineter vintner) of Old French vendange yield from a vineyard (cognate with Italian vendemmia, from Vulgar Latin vindēmia*), from Latin vīndēmia a gathering of grapes, yield of grapes (vīnum wine + dēmere take off). The meaning of age or year of a particular wine is first recorded in English in 1746, and that of a being of an earlier time (as in a man of ancient vintage, 1883).

vintner n. Probably before 1410 vynteneer, about 1460 vyntnere alteration of earlier viniter (1300); borrowed from Anglo-French vineter, Old French vinetier, from Medieval Latin vinetarius a wine dealer, from Latin vīnētum vineyard, from vīnum wine; for suffix see -ER¹.

vinyl n. 1863, a univalent radical derived from ethylene formed from Latin vīnum wine + English -yl. The connection with Latin vīnum wine is through ethylene, and ethyl ordinary alcohol present in wine. The meaning of a plastic or synthetic resin made from a compound containing the vinyl radical is first recorded in 1939.

viol n. 1542 veol; 1560 viol, variant of Middle English viel (1483); borrowed from Middle French viole, vielle, from Old French, from Old Provençal viola VIOLA.

viola n. 1797, borrowing of Italian viola, from Old Provençal viola, from Medieval Latin vitula stringed instrument.

violate v. Probably before 1425 violaten to break or transgress (an oath, promise, etc.) borrowed from Latin violatus, past participle of violāre treat with violence, outrage, dishonor; perhaps related to Latin vīs violence, strength; for suffix see -ATE¹. The sense of ravish is first recorded in Middle English about 1450. —violation n. Before 1400 violacion borrowed from Old French violacion, and directly from Latin violatōnem (nominative violatīō) an injury, irreverence, from violāre to violate; for suffix see -ATION. —violator n. Probably before 1425, borrowed from Latin violātor, from violāt-, past participle stem of violāre to violate + -or -or².

violent adj. About 1340, very strong or severe; borrowed from Old French violent, from Latin violentus vehement, forcible, probably related to violāre VIOLATE. The sense of using strong force to harm or frighten, is first recorded about 1384. —violence n. About 1300, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French violence, from Latin violentia vehemence, impetuosity, from violentus vehement, forcible, violent; for suffix see -ENCE.

violet n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French violette, diminutive of viole violet, from Latin viola; for suffix see -ET.

violin n. 1579, borrowed from Italian violino, diminutive of viola VIOLA. —violinist n. About 1670, borrowed from Italian violinista, from violino violin; for suffix see -IST.

violoncello n. 1724, borrowing of Italian violoncello, diminutive of violone bass viol, augmentative form of viola VIOLA.

viper n. Probably before 1425 vipere, borrowed from Middle French vipere, from Latin vīpera viper, snake, serpent, contraction of vivipera*, remade in Late Latin vīviparus bringing forth alive (Latin vīvus alive, living + parere bring forth, bear); so called from the former belief that the viper does not lay eggs. The sense of a spiteful person, or scoundrel, is first recorded in English in 1591.

vireo n. 1834, borrowed from Latin vireō kind of bird, perhaps the greenfinch, from virēre be green.

virescent adj. 1826, borrowed from Latin virēscens (nominative virēscens) a growing green, present participle of virēscere turn green, from virēre be green; for suffix see -ESCENT.

virgin n. Probably before 1200 virgine unmarried or chaste woman borrowed from Old French virgine, from Latin virginem (nominative virgō) maiden, unwedded girl or woman; also adj. unwedded, fresh, unused; probably related to virga young shoot. —adj. Probably before 1300 virgine from the noun in English and borrowed from adjective use in Latin. The sense of unsullied, pure, is first recorded in English in the 1300's, and of new, fresh, unused, in 1590. —virginal adj. About 1412, of or characteristic of a virgin borrowed from Middle French virginal, and directly from Latin virginalis maidenly, from virgō (genitive virginis) virgin; for suffix see -AL¹. —n. small harpsichord. 1530, used in the plural to refer to a single instrument probably from the adjective, but the association is unknown. The singular is first recorded in 1570. —virginity n. About 1303 virginité, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French virginité, from Latin virginitatem (nominative virginitās) maidenhood, from virgō (genitive virginis) virgin; for suffix see -ITY.

virgule n. 1837, borrowing of French virgule, from Latin virgula punctuation mark, twig, diminutive of virga shoot, rod, stick. The form virgule replaced virgula (borrowing of Latin virgula) recorded in 1728.

virile adj. 1490, borrowed from Middle French viril, and directly from Latin virilis of a man, manly, from vir a man, a hero. The sense of vigorous, forceful, is first recorded in 1572. —virility n. 1586, period of manhood; borrowed from Middle French virilité, and possibly directly from Latin virilitatem (nominative virilitās) manhood, from virilis manly, virile; for suffix see -ITY.

virology n. 1935, formed from English vir(us) + -ology.

virtu n. 1722, excellence in an object of art; borrowed from Italian virtù excellence, from Latin virtutem (nominative virtūs) virtue.

virtual adj. Before 1398 virtual influencing by certain physical virtues or capacities; borrowed from Medieval Latin virtualis, from Latin virtūs excellence, potency, efficacy, virtue; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of being something in essence or effect, though not so formally or in name, is first recorded in English in 1654.

virtue n. Probably before 1200 vertu moral excellence; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vertu, from Latin virtutem (nominative virtūs) moral strength, manliness, valor, excellence, worth, from vir man. The meaning of superiority or excellence, unusual ability, is found in Middle English about 1384, and that of a particular power, efficacy, or inherent good quality, before 1387. The phrase by virtue of (before 1200) originally meant by the power or efficacy of. —virtuous adj. Probably before 1300 vertuous valorous, valiant; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vertuous excellent, effective, from Late Latin virtuōsus good, excellent, from Latin virtūs virtue; for suffix see -OUS. The meaning of just, righteous, appeared before 1439.

virtuoso n. 1620, scholar, connoisseur; borrowing of Italian virtuoso, noun use of adjective, skilled, learned, of exceptional worth, from Late Latin virtuōsus VIRTUOUS. The meaning of a person with great skill, as in music, is found in 1743. —virtuosity n. 1673, formed from English virtuoso + -ity.

virulent adj. 1400, borrowed from Latin virulentus poisonous, from vīrus poison; for suffix see -ENT.

virus n. 1392, venomous substance; borrowed from Latin vīrus poison, sap of plants, slimy liquid. The meaning of a poisonous substance or agent that causes an infectious disease is first recorded in 1728. —viral adj. 1948, formed from English vīrus + -al¹.

visa n. 1831, official signature or endorsement upon a passport; borrowing of French visa, from New Latin visa in charta visa paper that has been verified; literally, seen, feminine past participle of vidēre to see.

visage n. Probably before 1300, borrowed from Old French visage, from vis face, appearance, from Latin vīsus (genitive vīsus) a look, vision, from the past participle stem of vidēre to see; for suffix see -AGE.

vis-à-vis prep. 1755, borrowing of French, prepositional use of the adjective vis-à-vis face to face, from Old French vis face; see VISAGE. —adv. 1807, from the preposition.

viscera n. pl. 1651, from Latin vīscera, plural of vīscus internal organ. —visceral adj. 1575, affecting inward feelings; borrowed from Middle French viscéral, and directly from Medieval Latin visceralis internal, from Latin vīscera viscera; for suffix see -AL¹. The figurative sense disappeared from the record after 1640, and is apparently a revival of the mid-twentieth century. The literal sense is first recorded in 1794.

viscid adj. 1635, borrowed from French viscide, or directly from Late Latin viscidus sticky, clammy, from Latin viscum anything sticky, birdlime made from mistletoe, mistletoe.

viscount n. Before 1387, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French visconte (in which the s eventually ceased to be pronounced; compare modern French vicomte), from Medieval Latin vicecomes (genitive vicecomitis), formed from Late Latin vice- deputy, VICE- + Latin comes member of the imperial court, nobleman.

viscous adj. 1392, borrowed from Anglo-French viscous, and directly from Late Latin viscōsus sticky, from Latin viscum anything sticky, birdlime (see VISCID); for suffix see -OUS.

vise n. Probably before 1300 vys device like a screw or winch for bending a crossbow or catapult; borrowed from Old French vis, viz screw, nominative case to a lost oblique case vit*, from Latin vītis vine, tendril of a vine; literally, that which winds. The tool having two jaws closed by a screw is first recorded in English in 1500. —v. 1602, from the noun.

visible adj. Before 1340, borrowed from Old French visible, and directly from Latin visibilis that may be seen, from vīsus, past participle of vidēre to see; for suffix see -IBLE. —visibility n. 1581, borrowed from Middle French visibilité, or directly from Late Latin visibilitatem (nominative visibilitās) the condition of being seen, conspicuousness, from Latin visibilis visible; for suffix see -ITY.

vision n. About 1300 visioun something seen in the imagination, as a supernatural experience; borrowed from Anglo-French visioun, Old French vision, from Latin vīsiōnem (nominative vīsiō) sight, thing seen, from vīs-, past participle stem of vidēre to see; for suffix see -ION. The meaning of the sense of sight, is first recorded in English about 1491. —visionary adj. 1648, perceived in a vision; also, able to see visions (1651); formed from English vision + -ary. —n. 1702, from the adjective.

visit v. Probably before 1200 visiten come to (a person) in order to comfort or benefit; borrowed from Old French visiter, and directly from Latin visitare to go to see, come to inspect, a frequentative form of vīdere behold, visit (a person or place), from vīs-, past participle stem of vidēre to see, notice, observe, consider. The meaning of go to see a person is first recorded in English about 1250, and that of come upon, afflict, in 1424. —n. 1621, act of visiting; from the verb, and borrowed from French visite, from the verb in French. —visitation n. About 1303 visitacioun official visit to inspect; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French visitation, from Latin visitationem (nominative visitatio) a sight, appearance, from visitare to visit; for suffix see -ATION. The meaning of a coming by God to a person is first recorded about 1340. —visitor n. About 1370 visitour, borrowed from Anglo-French visitour, Old French visiteur, from visiter to visit; for suffix see -OR².

visor n. 1459 vesour, alteration of earlier viser (probably before 1300); borrowed from Anglo-French viser, in Old French visiere, from vis face; see VISAGE; for suffix see -OR². The spelling visor is first found in 1599.

vista n. 1644, borrowing of Italian vista sight, view, noun use of feminine past participle of vedere see, from Latin vidēre.

visual adj. Before 1420, coming from the eye or sight (as a beam of light); borrowed from Late Latin visuālis of sight, from Latin visus sight, from past participle of vidēre to see; for suffix see -AL¹. The meaning of relating to vision is first recorded in English in 1603. —n. 1726, ray emanating from the eye; from the adjective. The meaning of a photograph, film, or other visual display is first recorded in 1951. —visualize v. 1817 (implied in visualized), formed from English visual + -ize.

vital adj. About 1385, of or manifesting life; borrowed from Latin vitalis of or belonging to life, from vita life, related to vivere to live; for suffix see -AL¹. The sense of very necessary or important (1619), is from the meaning of essential or necessary to life (1482). —vitals n. pl. Before 1610, probably borrowed from Latin vitalia vital force, life, neuter plural of vitalis vital, and probably from the adjective in English + -s plural. —vitality n. 1592, vital force, power, or principle as manifested by living things; borrowed from Latin vitalitatem (nominative vitalitās) vital force; for suffix see -ITY.

vitamin n. 1920, alteration of vitamine (1912); formed from Latin vita life + English amine; so called because vitamins were thought to be amine derivatives.

vitiāte v. 1534, borrowed from Latin vitiātus past participle of vitiāre to vitiate, make faulty, injure, spoil, corrupt, from vitium fault; for suffix see -ATE¹. —vitiātion n. 1635, borrowed from Latin vitiātiōnem (nominative vitiātiō) violation, corruption, from vitiāre vitiate; for suffix see -ATION; also probably formed in English from vitiāte + -ation.

viticulture n. 1872, the cultivation of grapes, formed from Latin vitis vine + English culture.

vitreous adj. 1646, borrowed from Latin vitreus of glass, glassy, from vitrum glass; for suffix see -OUS.

vitriify v. 1594, borrowed from Middle French vitriifier (also found in Spanish and Portuguese vitricar, Italian vitrificare) implying a Medieval Latin vitrificare*, from Latin vitrum glass; for suffix see -FY. Modern English vitriify replaced vitricate (recorded in 1471), a form which adds weight to the possible existence of a Medieval Latin vitrificare* to vitrify. —vitrication n. 1612, borrowed from Middle French vitrication (also found in Spanish vitricación, Portuguese vitricação, Italian vittrificazione) implying a Medieval Latin vitricationem* (nominative vitricatio), from vitrificare*; for suffix see -ATION.

vitriol n. 1392, borrowed from Old French vitriol, from Medieval Latin vitriolum vitriol, from neuter of vitriolus, variant of Late Latin vitreolus of glass, from Latin vitreus of glass, glassy, from vitrum glass; so called from the glassy appearance of vitriol in certain states. The sense of bitterly severe or caustic feeling is first recorded in 1769, with reference to the corrosive properties of vitriol. —vitriolic adj. 1670, of or belonging to vitriol; borrowed from French vitriolique, or formed from English vitriol + -ic. The sense of sharp, bitterly severe, is first recorded in 1841.

vituperate v. 1542, probably a back formation from vituperation, modeled on Latin vituperātus, past participle of vituperāre blame, censure, disparage, formed from a lost adjective vituperos*, variant of vituperos having faults (vitium fault + -paros, from parāre prepare); for suffix see -ATE¹. —vituperation n. About 1449 vituperacioun act or fact of reviling; borrowed from Middle French vituperation, and directly from Latin vituperātiōnem (nominative vituperātiō) blame, censure, from vituperāre vituperate; for suffix see -ATION. —vituperative adj. (1727) viva interj., n. 1644, borrowing of Italian viva (long) live, may he or she live, third person singular present subjunctive of vivere to live, from Latin vivere to live. The word was probably reborrowed (1836) from Spanish viva, from vivir to live, from Latin vivere to live.

vivacious adj. About 1645, formed in English as an adjective to vivacity, from Latin vivāx (genitive vivācis) lively, long-lived, from vivere to live + English -ous. —vivacity n. Probably before 1425 vivacite mental acuteness; borrowed from Middle French vivacité, and possibly directly from Latin vivacitatem (nominative vivacitās) vital force, liveliness, from vivāx; for suffix see -ITY.

vivid adj. 1638, energetic, lively; borrowed from French vivide, and probably directly from Latin vividus spirited, animated, lively, from vivus alive. The meaning of brilliant, strikingly bright (said of colors) is first recorded in 1665, that of strong and distinct (as in a vivid memory of the fire) in 1690, and that of very active or intense (as in a vivid interest or imagination) in 1853.

vivify v. 1392 vivifier; borrowed from Old French vivifier, from Late Latin vivificāre make alive, from vivificus enlivening (Latin vivus alive + the root of facere to make); for suffix see -FY.

viviparous adj. 1646, borrowed from Late Latin viviparus bringing forth alive, from Latin vivus alive, living + parere bring forth, bear; for suffix see -OUS.

vivisection n. 1707, formed in English from Latin vivus alive + English (dis)section; compare obsolete English vividissection (before 1711). —vivisect v. 1859, back formation from vivisec- tion. —vivisectionist n. person who practices or defends vivisection (1879).

vixen n. About 1150 fixen; developed from Old English fyxen* (implied in fyxan), feminine of fox FOX, corresponding to Old High German fuhsin (modern German Füchs); or Middle English fixen may have developed from Old English fyxen, adj., of the fox, as in fyxen hȳd fox hide. The form vixen is first found in the late 1500's; for a similar change of f to v, compare VAT.

viz. adv. Before 1540, abbreviation of VIDELICET. The z represents the ordinary Medieval Latin symbol for the ending -et. Earlier (now obsolete) English forms of this abbreviation were vidz. and vidzt.

vizier or vizir n. 1562 vesir, borrowed from Turkish vezir, from Arabic wazīr one who bears the burden of office, viceroy, in reference to the original sense of a porter or carrier, from wazara he carried.

vocabulary n. 1532, borrowed (perhaps by influence of Middle French vocabulaire) from Medieval Latin vocabularium a list of words, from Latin vocabulum word, name, noun, from vocāre to name, call; for suffix see -ARY.

vocal adj. Before 1396, spoken, oral; borrowed from Old French vocal, and directly from Latin vōcālis sounding, sonorous, speaking (as a noun, a vowel), from vōx (genitive vōcis) voice; for suffix see -AL¹.

The meaning of having to do with the voice is attested by 1644, and the sense in phonetics of voiced, in 1688, and like a vowel, in 1589. —vocalic adj. 1814, composed mainly or entirely of vowels; formed from English vocal + -ic. The sense in phonetics of consisting of a vowel is first recorded in 1852, and that of having a vowel sound, in 1861. —vocalist n. 1834, formed from English vocal + -ist. An earlier (now obsolete) sense of speaker is found in 1613. —vocalize v. 1669, formed from English vocal + -ize. The sense in phonetics of change into a vowel (as in vocalize the r in four) is first recorded in 1844, and that of to insert vowels in, in 1845.

vocation n. Probably before 1430 vocacioun spiritual calling; borrowed from Middle French vocation, or directly from Latin vocātiōnem (nominative vocātiō), literally, a calling, from vocāre to call; for suffix see -ATION. Compare AVOCATION. The sense of one's occupation or profession (1553) was perhaps influenced by that meaning in Middle French. —vocational adj. (1652) vocative adj. About 1432 vocatif, showing the person or thing spoken to; borrowed from Middle French vocatif (feminine vocative), and directly from Latin vocātīvus (cāsus) (case of) calling, from vocātus, past participle of vocāre to call (translation of Greek klētikē ptōsis; klētikós related to calling, from klēōs called); for suffix see -IVE. —n. Before 1522, from the adjective.

vociferate v. 1599, in part borrowed from Latin, and in part, probably a back formation from vociferation, modeled on Latin vōciferātus, past participle of vōciferārī to shout, yell, from a lost adjective vōcifer* lifting one's voice (vōx, genitive vōcis VOICE + the root of ferre to carry); for suffix see -ATE¹. —vociferation

n. About 1400, borrowed from Old French vociferacion, and directly from Latin vōciferātiōnem (nominative vōciferātiō) clamor, outcry, from vōciferārī vociferate; for suffix see -ATION. —vociferous adj. About 1611, formed from Latin vōciferārī vociferate + English -ous.

vodka n. 1802, borrowed from Russian vódka (vodá water + diminutive suffix -ka).

vogue n. 1571, leading place in popularity greatest success or acceptance; borrowed from Middle French vogue fashion, success, drift, swaying motion (of a boat); literally, a rowing, from Old French voguer to row, sway, set sail, probably from Old Low German wōgōn*, variant of wagōn float, fluctuate; literally, to balance oneself.

voice n. Probably before 1300, sound made by the human mouth; borrowed from Old French voiz, vois, from Latin vōcem, accusative of vōx voice, sound, utterance, cry, call, speech, sentence, language, word, related to vocāre to call. The meaning of anything like speech or sound (as in the voice of conscience) is first recorded before 1325, that of opinion or choice (as in a voice for compromise) in 1390, and ability as a singer, in 1607. —v. Before 1438 voicen, from the noun. The meaning of utter with the vocal cords (as the sounds represented by z and v) is first recorded in 1867. —voiceless adj. 1535, having no voice; 1867, not voiced (as the sounds represented by f and p).

void adj. About 1300 voide unoccupied, vacant; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French voide (feminine voit) empty, vast, wide, hollow, waste, from Vulgar Latin vocitus*, presumably replacing Latin vōcivus, vacivus unoccupied, vacant, and thereby related to vacuus empty. —v. Probably before 1300 voiden to empty, discharge; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French voider make void or empty, from Vulgar Latin vocitare*, from vocitus* empty. —n. 1616, unfilled space in a building; before 1618, emptiness, vacancy; from the adjective.

voile n. 1889, borrowing of French voile, from Old French veile, originally veil, from Latin vēla, plural (taken as feminine singular) of vēlum covering, curtain, veil.

volatile adj. 1597, fine or light; later, evaporating rapidly (1605); borrowed from Middle French volatile, from Latin volātilis fleeting, transitory, flying, from volāt-, past participle stem of volāre to fly. The sense of readily changing, fickle, is first recorded in 1647. —volatility n. 1626, readiness to vaporize or evaporate; borrowed from New Latin volatilitas, from Latin volātilis volatile; for suffix see -ITY. —volatilize v. 1657, formed from English volatile + -ize, and probably borrowed from French volatiliser, from Middle French volatile + -iser -ize.

volcano n. 1613 vulcano; later volcano (1690); borrowed from Italian vulcano, volcano, literally, burning mountain, from Latin Vulcānus, earlier Vōlcānus Vulcan, Roman god of fire; also, fire, flames, volcano (first applied to Mt. Etna by the Romans, as the seat of Vulcan). The later borrowings from Italian replaced English volcan (1577, from French and Spanish volcan), and vulcan (1578, from Latin Vulcānus). —volcanic adj. 1774, ejected by a volcano; borrowed from French volcanique, from volcan volcano, from Italian vulcano, volcano; for suffix see -IC.

vole n. 1805 vole mouse; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Norwegian voll, perhaps vollmus* field mouse, Icelandic völlur, and Swedish vall field, from Proto-Germanic walthuz*).

volition n. 1615, borrowing of French volition, from Medieval Latin volitionem (nominative volitio) will, volition, from Latin vol-, stem (as in volō I wish) of velle to wish; for suffix see -TION. The sense of power of willing (as in drug use weakens volition) is not recorded before 1660.

volley n. 1573, the discharge of a number of guns at once; borrowed from Middle French volee flight, from Vulgar Latin volāta* (feminine), from Latin volātum, past participle of volāre to fly; for suffix see -y³. The sense of an outpouring of words, oaths, shouts, etc., is first recorded in 1590. —v. 1591, from the noun.

volt n. Before 1873, probably created by back formation from voltaic, in allusion to Alessandro Volta, who perfected a chemical action used in the electric battery. —voltage n. 1890, formed from English volt + -age. —voltaic adj. 1813, formed from volta (in allusion to Alessandro Volta) + English suffix -ic.

voluble adj. Probably before 1425, variable, moving easily; earlier volible turning (before 1382); borrowed from Old French voluble, from Latin volūbilis that turns around, rolling, flowing, fluent (of speech), from volvere to turn around, roll. The meaning of fluent, talkative, is first recorded in English in 1588. —volubility n. 1579, versatility; later, talkativeness (1596); borrowed from Middle French volubilité, and perhaps directly from Latin volūbilitatem (nominative volūbilitās) rotating motion, fluency, from volūbilis rolling, flowing, fluent.

volume n. Before 1382, roll of parchment containing writing, large book; borrowed from Old French volume, and directly from Latin volūmen (genitive volūminis) roll (as of manuscript), coil, wreath, etc., from volvere to turn around, roll.

The meaning of a book forming part of a set (1523) was borrowed from Middle French, and the sense of the bulk or size (of a book) in 1530, leading to the generalized sense of bulk, mass, quantity, in 1621, in part borrowed from French. The meaning of the amount of sound is first recorded in 1822. —voluminous adj. 1611, full of turnings and windings, writing so much as to fill volumes; borrowed from Late Latin volūminōsus full of turnings or folds, from Latin volūmen (genitive volūminis) volume; for suffix see -OUS.

voluntary adj. About 1385, borrowed from Latin voluntārius of one's free will, from voluntās will, from earlier voluntitās*, formed from the ancient accusative singular present participle velontem* of velle to wish; for suffix see -ARY.

volunteer n. About 1600, person who voluntarily enrolls for military service; borrowed from Middle French volontaire, volontaire, noun use of adjective meaning voluntary, from Latin voluntārius voluntary, of one's free will; for suffix see -EER. The meaning of one who offers his services in any capacity is first recorded in 1638. —v. 1755, to enlist as a soldier; from the noun. —adj. 1649, serving as a volunteer in an army or navy; from the noun.

voluptuous adj. About 1380, borrowed probably from Old French voluptueux, and directly from Latin voluptuōsus full of pleasure, delightful, from voluptās pleasure, delight, from volup pleasurably, from volupe*, neuter of volupis* pleasant, ultimately related to Latin velle to wish; for suffix see -OUS. —voluptuary n. Before 1610, borrowed perhaps from French voluptuaire, and directly from Medieval Latin voluptuarius, alteration of Latin voluptārius of or pertaining to pleasure, from voluptās pleasure; for suffix see -ARY.

volute n. 1696, spiral ornament on an Ionic capital; borrowed from French volute, from Italian voluta, from Latin volūta a spiral scroll; originally feminine past participle of volvere to turn around, roll. The meaning of a thing or part having a spiral form is first recorded in English in 1756. —adj. 1845, from the noun.

vomit v. 1422 vomiten, borrowed from Latin vomitāre to vomit often, frequentative form of vomere spew forth, discharge, vomit. —n. 1737, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vomite, and directly from Latin vomitūs (genitive vomitūs) vomit, a throwing up, from past participle of vomere.

voodoo n. 1850 voudou (influenced by the name of an African deity, Vandoo, 1820); borrowed from Louisiana French voudou, from a West African language (compare Ewe and Fon vodu spirit, demon, deity). The variant form vodun, was originally borrowed directly, possibly also influenced by Vandoo, from a West African language spoken in Dahomey, but was probably later reborrowed (1920) from Haitian Creole vodun, vodou.

voracity n. 1526, quality or character of being greedy, especially in eating, voraciousness; borrowed from Middle French voracité, and probably directly from Latin voracitatem (nominative voracitās) greediness, ravenousness, from vorāx (genitive vorācis) greedy, from vorāre to devour; for suffix see -ITY. The sense of a being unable to be satisfied, is first recorded in English in 1601. —voracious adj. 1635, formed in English as an adjective to voracity, from Latin vorāx (genitive vorācis) greedy + English -ous.

vortex n. 1652, borrowed from Latin vortex, variant of vertex an eddy of water, wind, or flame, whirlpool, whirlwind, from vertere to turn.

votary n. 1546, person bound by vows to a religious life; formed from Latin vōtum vow + English -ary. The sense of a person devoted to a particular pursuit or interest is first recorded in 1591.

vote n. Probably before 1300, a vow, wish; borrowed from Latin vōtum a vow, wish, promise, dedication, noun use of neuter of vōtus, past participle of vovēre to promise, dedicate. The sense of a formal expression of a wish or choice, as in accepting or rejecting a proposal, candidate, etc., is first recorded about 1460. —v. 1533 (originally Scottish), to vow (to do something); probably borrowed from Late Latin vōtāre to devote by a vow, from Latin vōtum vow, n. The meaning of cast a vote is first recorded in English in 1552. —voter n. (Before 1578)

votive adj. 1593, carrying out a vow, devout; 1597, expressive of a vow or wish; borrowed from Middle French votif (feminine votive), and directly from Latin vōtivus of or pertaining to a vow, conforming to one's wishes, from vōtum VOW; for suffix see -IVE.

vouch v. Before 1325 vochen summon into court to prove a title; later, allege, affirm (probably about 1380); borrowed from Anglo-French voucher, Old French vocher, vochier to call, summon, invoke, claim, probably from Gallo-Romance voticāre*, by metathesis (of t and c) from Latin vocitāre to call to, summon insistently, a frequentative form of Latin vocāre to call, call upon, summon. The meaning of guarantee to be true or accurate is first recorded in English in 1591. —voucher n. 1523, borrowed from Anglo-French voucher, noun use of voucher to vouch. The sense of a receipt from a business transaction is first recorded in English in 1696.

vouchsafe v. About 1303 vouchen sauf to vouch as safe (vouchen to VOUCH + sauf SAFE).

vow n. About 1300 vou, borrowed from Anglo-French and Old French vou, from Latin vōtum a vow, wish, promise, dedication, noun use of neuter of vōtus, past participle of vovēre to promise solemnly, pledge, dedicate, vow. —v. About 1303 vowen; borrowed from Old French vouer, vower make a vow, promise, from vou vow, n.

vowel n. About 1308, borrowed from Old French voel, from Latin vōcālis in littera vōcālis vowel; literally, vocal letter (referring to its voiced quality), from vōx (genitive vōcis) voice.

voyage n. Probably before 1300 viage a traveling, journey; about 1300 veyage; borrowed from Old French veiage, vayage, voiage, vaiage travel, journey, voyage, from Late Latin viaticum a journey, in Latin meaning provisions for a journey, noun use of neuter of viaticus of or for a journey, from via road, journey, travel. —v. 1475 voyagen, borrowed from Middle French voyager, from Old French voyage, n. —voyager n. 1477, borrowed from Old French voyagier (voyage + -ier -er¹), and probably formed from English voyage, v. + -er¹.

voyeur n. About 1920, borrowing of French voyeur (1898), literally, one who views or inspects, from voir to view, see, from Latin vidēre to see.

vulcanite n. 1860, formed from English Vulcan (from Latin Vulcānus) the Roman god of fire + *-ite*¹. An earlier sense, pyroxene (a mineral), is found in English in 1836.

vulcanize v. 1827, burn up, formed from English Vulcan (from Latin Vulcānus) the Roman god of fire + -ize. The meaning of treat (rubber) with sulfur and heat is first recorded in 1846. —vulcanization n. 1846, formed from vulcanize + -ation.

vulgar adj. 1391, common, ordinary; borrowed from Latin vulgāris of or pertaining to the common people, common, vulgar, from vulgus the common people multitude, crowd, throng; for suffix see -AR. The meaning of coarse, low, ill-bred, is first recorded in English in 1643 and that of commonly or customarily used, vernacular (as in Vulgar Latin) in 1483. —vulgarism n. 1644, a common expression; later, a colloquialism (1746), and the quality of being vulgar (1749); formed from English vulgar + -ism. —vulgarity n. 1579, the common people; borrowed from Middle French vulgarité, and directly from Latin vulgāritās the multitude; literally, the quality of being common, from vulgāris common, vulgar; for suffix see -ITY. The meaning of lack of good breeding, is recorded in English before 1774. —vulgarize v. 1605, act in a vulgar manner, perhaps borrowed from French vulgariser, and formed from English vulgar + -ize. The meaning of coarsen, is first recorded in English in 1756.

Vulgate n. 1609 (as an attributive use), Latin translation of the Bible made by Saint Jerome; borrowed from Medieval Latin Vulgata the Vulgate edition, from Late Latin vulgāta common, general, ordinary, popular, in vulgāta editiō popular edition, from Latin vulgāta, feminine past participle of vulgāre make common or public, from vulgus the common people; for suffix see -ATE¹.

vulnerable adj. 1605, borrowed from Late Latin vulnerābilis wounding, from Latin vulnerāre to wound, from vulnus (genitive vulneris) wound; for suffix see -ABLE. —vulnerability n. (1808) vulpine adj. 1628, borrowed from Latin vulpinus of or pertaining to a fox, from vulpēs, earlier volpēs (genitive vulpis, volpis) fox; for suffix see -INE¹.

vulture n. About 1380 voltor; also, about 1385 voltur; borrowed from Anglo-French vultur, and Old French voultour, from Latin vultur, earlier vultur.

vulva n. 1392, borrowing of Latin vulva; earlier volva womb; female sexual organ, from volvere to turn around, roll.

W

wabble v. See WOBBLE.

wacky adj. 1935, variant of whacky; probably formed from whack, n., a blow, stroke + *-y*¹.

wad n. 1540 wadde soft material for padding or stuffing; of uncertain origin and of undetermined relation to earlier Medieval Latin wadda (1380), and later Dutch watten (after 1599), German Watte (from Dutch), Swedish vadd (from English); and perhaps to earlier wadmal woolen cloth (1392); borrowed from Old Icelandic vathmál a woolen fabric of Scandinavia and Iceland, probably from vāthmāl* (vāth cloth + māl measure). —v. 1579, put a wad in (a gun or cartridge); from the noun.

waddle v. 1592, frequentative form of WADE; for suffix see -LE³. The meaning of fall heavily (probably before 1400); may not be connected with the modern use. —n. 1691, from the verb.

wade v. Before 1250 waden; developed from Old English wadan to go forward, proceed (about 725, in Beowulf), confined to poetical use, except for such instances as ofenwadan overwade, wade across (before 899), and cognate with Old Frisian wada to proceed, wade, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch waden, Old High German watan (modern German waten), Old Icelandic vadha (Swedish vada, Danish vade, Norwegian va, vade) to wade.

wafer n. 1368 waffre very thin cake or biscuit; borrowed from Anglo-French wafre, Old North French waufre, perhaps from Frankish (compare earlier Flemish wāfer, with alteration of l to r from Middle Dutch wāfel honeycomb; see WAFFLE¹); also found in Old French gaufre, gofre wafer, waffle; compare Gopher. The thin piece of bread used in the Eucharist is first recorded in 1559.

waffle¹ n. batter cake. 1744 (in wafel-frolic party at which waffles are served); borrowed from Dutch wafel waffle, from Middle Dutch wāfel, perhaps from Middle Low German wāfel waffle (though the Middle Low German form may have come from the Middle Dutch); cognate with Old High German waba honeycomb (modern German Wabe), related to weban to WEAVE.

The sense of honeycomb, found in Old French gaufre, Old High German waba, etc., is preserved in English in waffle pattern (1948), waffle piqué (1949) and other combinations referring to a weave of cloth. —waffle iron 1794, borrowed from Dutch wafelijzer, and probably from German Waffeleisen waffle iron.

waffle² v. talk foolishly. 1698, to yelp, bark, a frequentative form of obsolete waff to yelp (1610); possibly of imitative origin; for suffix see -LE³. The meaning of talk foolishly, engage in doubletalk (1701) extended to waver, vacillate as implied in waffler an unreliable person, equivocator (1803). —n. 1861, the bark of a small dog; from the verb. The meaning of foolish talk, gossip, doubletalk, is first recorded in 1888.

waft v. 1513, to escort or convoy (a ship); back formation from wafter, waughter convoy ship (1484); borrowed from Middle Dutch (or Middle Low German) wachter a guard, from wachten to guard, related to wāken rouse from sleep; see WAKE¹. The meaning of pass through the air or through space, float (1664, implied in waftage passage through air or space, before 1658), is perhaps from the noun. —n. 1607, wafting movement, puff, gust; from the verb, and probably in of a taste or flavor, especially of a foul nature, developed from wef, weffe (before 1300).

wag¹ v. move rapidly from side to side or up and down. Probably before 1200 waggen to stir, move; probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Swedish wagga fluctuate, wag, rock a cradle, also, Old Icelandic vagga, Danish vugge a cradle, and vugge rock a cradle). Also in part probably developed from Old English wagian move backwards and forwards, wag (or its root), from Proto-Germanic wagōjanan*. —n. 1589, act of wagging; from the verb.

wag² n. person fond of making jokes. Before 1553, mischievous boy; perhaps a shortening of obsolete waghalter (1570) gallows bird (person likely to swing in a noose or halter, and applied humorously to a child); formed from *wag*¹ + halter, or possibly from *wag*¹, v. with reference to moving the head in a playful or derisive manner. The meaning of a person fond of making jokes is first recorded in 1584. —waggish adj. fond of joking. 1589, formed from English *wag*² + -ish.

wage n. Before 1338, pledge, security, amount paid for services or work; later wages, pl. (1378); borrowed from Old North French wage pledge, from Frankish wadjā-* (compare Gothic wadi pledge); see WED. —v. Probably before 1200 wagian to pledge; later wagen (probably before 1300); borrowed from Old North French wagier, from wage, n. The meaning of carry on (a war, etc.) is first recorded in 1456, developing from the sense of offer as a pledge to combat (about 1430), and to give as a pledge (1376).

wager n. About 1303 waieur; later wager (about 1450); borrowed from Anglo-French wageure (compare modern French gageure a wager), from Old North French wagier to pledge; see WAGE. —v. 1602, from the noun. An earlier sense of contend for a prize is found in 1574.

waggle v. 1440 wagelen, a frequentative form of *wag*¹, v.; corresponding to Dutch waggelen to stagger, Middle Low German waggeln, and German wackeln to stagger, totter; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1885, from the verb.

wagon n. Before 1475 waggin four-wheeled vehicle for heavy loads; borrowed from Middle Dutch wagen, waghen wagon, cart; cognate with Old English wægn, wæn wagon, Old Frisian wein, Old High German wagan (modern German Wagen), and Old Icelandic vagn (Swedish vagn, Danish and Norwegian vogn). The process in development of spelling (with loss of g, found in the series hail, nail, tail and in day from Old English dæg), shows that modern English wagon would not develop from Old English, but was a later borrowing, in part, a result of soldiers' contact in the Continental wars, and through the Flemish immigrants and Dutch trade.

waif n. 1376, unclaimed property, flotsam; also, stray animal; borrowed from Anglo-French weyf, guayf lost property, corresponding to Old French gaif, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic veif something waving or flapping, veifan a moving about uncertainly, veifa to wave; see WAIVE). The meaning of a person without home or friends (1784) is found in waif and stray in 1624.

wail v. Probably before 1300 wailen cry loud and long in grief or pain; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic væla, vála to wail, related to vei WOE). The meaning of grieve bitterly is first recorded about 1385. —n. About 1300, act of wailing; from the verb.

wain n. About 1250, wagon; developed from Old English wægn, wæn (about 725, in Beowulf).

wainscot n. 1352–53, an imported oak of superior quality; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Flemish waghenscote superior quality oak wood, board used for paneling, but originally for wagon building and coachwork (waghen WAGON + scote, scot partition, crossbar). —v. 1570, from the noun, and in part borrowed from early modern Dutch or Flemish waeghenschotten. —wainscoting n. (1580) waist n. Probably 1350–75 wast middle portion of the body; possibly developed from Old English wæst*, weahst* growth, size, related to Old English waestm growth, and cognate with Old Icelandic vpætr growth, stature (Swedish växt, Norwegian and Danish vekst), Gothic wahstus growth, size, stature; all derived from the same root as Old English weaxan to grow, *WAX*².

wait v. Probably before 1200 waiten to watch, spy, lie in wait; borrowed from Old North French waitier, originally, to watch, from Frankish wahtōn* (compare Old High German wahta watch, guard, and wahhēn, wahhōn to watch, be awake; see *WAKE*¹, v.) The sense of stop doing or stay (as in wait in the shade) is first recorded in 1375, and that of attend (as in wait on) in 1509–10. —n. About 1200 waite a watching, watchman; borrowed from Old North French waite, probably from waitier to watch. Other senses of the noun developed from the verb in English. —waiter n. Before 1382, attendant, watchman; probably borrowed through Anglo-French from Old North French waitteor, from waitier to wait, and formed in Middle English from waiten to wait + -er¹.

waive v. About 1300 weiven deprive of legal protection, outlaw; about 1469 waiven give up (a legal right, claim); borrowed from Anglo-French weyver to abandon, waive, Old French weyver, guesver, guever to abandon, give back, probably from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic veifa to swing about, move to and fro, wave; cognate with Gothic biwaibjan wind around, Old High German -weiben disperse, from Proto-Germanic waibjanan*; compare WAIF). —waiver n. 1628, formed in English from waive, v. + -er¹, perhaps modeled on Anglo-French weyver, noun use of weyver to abandon, waive.

wake¹ v. rouse from sleep. A fusion of: (1) Middle English (probably about 1200) waken, developed from Old English wacan to become awake, and (2) Middle English (probably before 1200) wakien, developed from Old English wacian to be or remain awake. Both verbs are related to Old English wæccan be awake (see WATCH) and Old English weccan to cause to wake, rouse from sleep, which did not survive in English.

Cognates of Old English wacian and wæccan are found in Old Frisian wakia, waka be awake, Old Saxon wakōn, Middle Dutch wāken (modern Dutch waken), Old High German wahhēn, wahhōn (modern German wachen), Old Icelandic vaka (Swedish vaka, Norwegian vake, Danish vaage), and Gothic wakan. Cognates of Old English weccan are found in Old Saxon wekkian cause to wake up, Old High German weccen (modern German wecken), Old Icelandic vekja (Norwegian vekke, Danish vække, Swedish väcka), and Gothic uswakejan, from Proto-Germanic wak-*. —n. About 1200, partly developed from Old English -wacu (found in nihtwacu night watch), related to WATCH, and partly borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vaka vigil, eve before a feast, related to vaka be awake). See also WAKEN.

wake² n. track left behind a moving ship. Before 1500, track, trace, of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Middle Low German or Middle Dutch wake hole in the ice, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vpök hole in the ice, Norwegian våk, Swedish vak, and Danish vaage). Old Icelandic vpök is from Proto-Germanic wakwō*.

waken v. Probably about 1200 wakenen be stirred up or aroused, rouse; developed from Old English wæccnan, wæccnian to rise, spring (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Icelandic vakna (Swedish vakna, Norwegian vakne, Danish vaagne), and Gothic gawaknan to waken, from the same source as English WAKE; for suffix see -EN¹ (not to be confused with the medial n which is also a suffix of verbs with the sense of act of becoming or getting into a state).

wale n. Late Old English (1024) wale ridge, as of earth or stone; later, ridge made on flesh by a lash (before 1100), variant of walu; cognate with Low German wale weal, welt, and perhaps with Old Frisian walu- staff; see WALL. Related to WEAL². Old English walu is from Proto-Germanic walō*. The sense of streak or ridge is now often used of fabric, especially corduroy in which it is designated wide wale or narrow wale (from 1583). —v. About 1430 walen, from the noun.

walk v. Probably before 1200 walken, walkien travel on foot, move about, a fusion (before 1000) of Old English wealcan to toss, roll, and of Old English wealcian to roll up, curl, muffle up.

The abrupt change in meaning from Old English “roll” to Middle English “walk” is explained as perhaps coming from a colloquial use in Old English that was adopted in Middle English, the original meaning in Old English no longer being current in Middle English. Another source may be apparent in the sense of the cognates, that is in thickening cloth, which is done not only by rolling it, but also by treading or trampling, which has a semantic connection with “walk” and may be suggested in such a term as walker one who fulls or thickens cloth by treading (about 1050).

The Old English verbs are cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch walken to knead, press, thicken cloth (modern Dutch walken to thicken cloth), Old High German walchan (modern German walken to thicken cloth), Old Icelandic valka drag or roll about. —n. Before 1250 walke, from the verb.

wall n. Probably about 1175 walle, developed from Old English weall rampart, wall (about 725, in Beowulf); an early borrowing from Latin vallum wall, rampart, row or line of stakes, apparently a collective form of vallus stake, and cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, and Middle Dutch wal, Gothic walus stake, and Old Icelandic völur round staff. —v. About 1250 wallen, from the noun.

wallaby n. 1826, borrowed from Australian wolabā.

wallet n. About 1385–95 walet bag, knapsack; of uncertain origin. The word's form and original pronunciation (walet?) suggest an Anglo-French or Old French source. Case for carrying paper money is first recorded in 1834 in American English.

walleyed adj. Probably before 1400 wawil-eghed, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vagl-eygr having speckled eyes, from vagl speck in the eye + eygr eyed). The meaning of having one or both eyes turned away from the nose and so showing much white is first recorded in 1588.

wallop v. 1375 walopen to gallop; of uncertain origin; possibly borrowed from Old North French waloper* (compare Flemish and Middle High German walop, n. and Middle High German walopiren, v.), probably from Frankish walalaupan*, walahaupan to run well (compare Old High German wela WELL¹ and Old Low Franconian loupun, Old Saxon hlōpan to run, LEAP).

The meaning of beat soundly, thrash (1825), may be partly of imitative origin, probably influenced by the sense of boil rapidly with noisy bubbling motion (1579). —n. Before 1375 wallop horse's gallop; probably borrowed from Old North French walop, from waloper* to gallop.

wallow v. Probably before 1200 walewen roll about, flounder; developed from Old English wealwian, walwian to roll, before 899. —n. Before 1591, from the verb.

walnut n. 1358–59 walnotte; developed from Old English (about 1050) walhnutu nut of the walnut tree; literally, foreign nut (walh, wealh foreign, WELSH referring to the Celts + hnutu NUT); so called because this nut was introduced into from Gaul and Italy, distinguishing it from the native hazel nut.

Corresponding forms are found in Middle Dutch walnoot (modern Dutch walnoot), Middle Low German wallnot (modern German Walnuss), Old Icelandic valhnott (Norwegian valnøtt).

walrus n. 1728, borrowed from Dutch walrus, walros, probably an alteration (by folk etymology with influence of Dutch walvis whale, and ros horse) of a word from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rosmhvalr walrus, hrosshvalr a kind of whale, rostungur walrus).

waltz n. 1781, borrowed from German Walzer, from walzen to roll, dance, from Old High German walzan to turn, roll; see WELTER. —v. About 1794, from the noun.

wampum n. 1636, shortened form of wampumpeag (1627); borrowed from Algonquian (probably Narragansett) wanpan-piak string of white shell beads.

wan adj. Probably about 1200 won; before 1325 wane; developed from Old English wann dark, lacking luster, leaden, pale gray (about 725, in Beowulf); of uncertain origin.

wand n. Probably about 1200 wand slender stick or rod; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vǫndr rod, switch, Danish and Norwegian vånd, all cognate with Gothic wandus rod, probably from the same root as Old English windan to turn, twist, WIND²).

wander v. Before 1175 wandren; developed from Old English wandrian move about aimlessly, wander (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian wondria to wander, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wandieren, and Middle High German and modern German wandern; related to forms in l, such as Middle Dutch wandelen to wander about, change (modern Dutch, to walk), Old Saxon wandlon to change, Old High German wantalōn.

wane v. Before 1122 wanien; found in Old English wanian make or become smaller gradually, to lessen (about 725, in Beowulf); from Proto-Germanic wanōjanan*, and cognate with Old Frisian wania lessen, Old Saxon wanon, Middle Dutch waenen, wanen, Old High German wanōn, and Old Icelandic vana make less, vanask become less. —n. Probably about 1300 wane lack, shortage; later, a waning (before 1325); in part developed from the Old English noun wana shortage (before 899), and in part from the verb wanen to wane.

wangle v. 1888, originally, printer's slang in the sense of fake by manipulation; perhaps alteration of WAGGLE. —n. 1915, from the verb.

want v. Probably about 1200 wanten be lacking, be without, need; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vanta to lack, want). The meaning of desire or wish for is first recorded in English in 1706. —n. Probably about 1200, lack, deficiency; from the verb in Middle English and probably also from, or influenced by, Old Icelandic vant lack, deficiency, neuter of vanr wanting, lacking. The meaning of thing desired (as in a man of few wants) is first recorded in 1578. —wanting adj. Before 1325 wantand, formed from Middle English wanten be lacking + -and and *-ing*².

wanton adj. Before 1325 wantun undisciplined, unruly; later wantowen unchaste, lascivious, lewd (before 1376); formed from Middle English wan- not, lacking (from Old English wan wanting) + towen trained, disciplined, (from Old English togen, past participle of tēon to train, discipline, draw). The meaning of reckless of justice and humanity, merciless, is first recorded in 1513. —n. 1526, spoiled or pampered person; from the adjective. The meaning of lascivious or lewd person is first found in 1540. —v. 1582, to gambol, frolic; from the adjective.

war n. Before 1121 wyrre; later uerre (1140), and werre (probably about 1175); borrowed from Old North French werre war, from Frankish werra* (compare Old High German werra confusion, contention, strife, from Proto-Germanic wersō*, and related to werran to bring into confusion, modern German wirren confuse, bewilder). A cognate of the Old High German words is found in Old Saxon werran bring into confusion or discord. In Old English the usual translation of Latin bellum was gewin struggle, strife which (like the native form orlege hostility, strife, war; cognate with Old Saxon orlegas, Old Frisian orloch, Old High German orloge), did not survive into modern times. —v. Before 1160 uerriou, from uerre, werre war. —warfare n. 1456, a going to war; formed from English war + *fare*¹, n. —warlike adj. (about 1420) —wartime n. (before 1387) warble v. Probably about 1390 werbelen to resound, sound; borrowed from Old North French werbler to sing with trills and quavers, from Frankish werbilōn* (compare Middle Dutch wervelen to turn, whirl, Middle High German wirbel whirl, spinning top, and Old High German wirbil whirlwind). —n. About 1385 werble, borrowed from Old North French werble, related to werbler to sing with trills and quavers.

ward n. Probably before 1200 warde act of guarding, guardianship; developed from Old English weard a guarding, from Proto-Germanic wardō* or wardō*. Old English weard is cognate with Old High German warta a guarding, Middle High German warte watch, observation (modern German Warte watchtower), Middle Low German warde, related to Gothic wars alert, WARY.

The administrative division or district (originating in the sense of a place for guarding) is first recorded about 1378, and the division of a hospital, in 1749. Some of the senses in English were influenced by Old North French warde guard, from warder to guard; see WARDEN. —v. Probably before 1200 warden to guard, defend; developed from Old English weardian (before 1000); cognate with Frisian wardia to guard, watch, Old Saxon wardōn, Old High German wartēn (modern German warten look after), and Old Icelandic vardha, all derived from the same Germanic root as Old English weard, n. Some of the senses of the English verb were influenced by Old North French warder to guard; see WARDEN.

—ward a suffix meaning in the direction of, toward, forming adjectives and adverbs, as in backward = toward the back, northward = in the direction of north. Developed from Old English -weard, from Proto-Germanic -ward*, variant of werth-*; cognate with Old High German -wart, Old Icelandic -verdr, and related to Old English weorthan to become; also compare -WARDS.

warden n. Probably before 1200 wardein guardian, custodian; later, person in charge of a prison (probably about 1300); borrowed from Old North French wardēin, from Frankish warding-* (compare early Old French guardenc), from wardōn* to watch, guard (compare Old High German wartēn to watch, guard, WARD).

warder n. Probably before 1400, borrowed from Anglo-French wardere and wardour guardian, from Old North French warder to guard; see WARDEN; for suffix see *-ER*¹.

wardrobe n. About 1325, a private chamber, especially one for sleeping; later, room in which wearing apparel is kept (1387), and a person's stock of clothes (before 1400); borrowed from Old North French warderobe, variant of Old French garderobe place where garments are kept; also, a privy (warder to keep, guard + robe garment); also found in Middle English garderobe (1333–34, garder to keep, guard + robe garment).

—wards a suffix meaning in the direction of, toward, forming adverbs, as in backwards = in the direction of or toward the back. Developed from Old English -weardes, genitive singular case form with -es (neuter) of adjectives in -ward; corresponding to Dutch -waarts, German -wärts, and Gothic -wairths; see -WARD and *-S*³.

ware n. Usually, wares. Probably about 1175, developed from Old English waru (about 1000), probably with an original meaning of object of care, and hence related to wær aware, cautious, WARY. Old English waru is cognate with Old Frisian were manufactured thing, Middle Dutch were, ware (modern Dutch waar), Middle High German ware (modern German Ware), and Old Icelandic vara (Swedish vara, Norwegian and Danish ware), from Proto-Germanic warō*. —warehouse n. (1349) warlock n. wizard, male witch. Before 1400 warlag, warlau, warlo; developed from Old English wærloga (before 900) demon, traitor, scoundrel, damned soul, monster; originally, oathbreaker (wær covenant, related to wær true + -loga, agent noun related to lēogan to speak falsely, LIE¹). The modern spelling warlock is Scottish, first recorded in 1685 (also Scottish warlok, before 1585).

warm adj. Probably before 1200 warne having or giving out heat; developed from Old English wearm (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, modern Dutch, Old High German, and modern German warm warm, and Old Icelandic varmr (Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian varm), from Proto-Germanic warmaz*, earlier warmaz*. —v. Probably before 1200 warman make or become warm; developed partly from Old English wyrman make warm, and partly from Old English wearmian become warm. The Old English verbs are cognate with Old Saxon wermian to warm, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch warman, Old High German warman, wermen (modern German wärmen), Old Icelandic verma, and Gothic warmjan, all derived from the Germanic source of Old English wearm warm, adj. —warmth n. About 1175 wermthe; formed from Old English wearm warm + the suffix -thu- -th¹. The cognates, Middle Low German warmede, warmte, Middle Dutch warmte, and Middle High German wermede, suggest a Proto-Germanic warmithō*.

warn v. Probably before 1200 warnen; developed from Old English warnian to warn, take heed (before 1000), related to wær aware, cautious, WARY. Old English warnian (from Proto-Germanic warnōjanan*) is cognate with Middle Low German warnen to warn, inform, and Old High German warnōn (modern German warnen). —warning n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English warning, wearning (before 800); formed from warnian to warn + -ung -ing¹.

warp v. Probably about 1200 warpen to throw, cast; developed from Old English weorpan to throw, hit with a missile (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian werpa to throw, Old Saxon werpan, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch werpen, Old High German werpan (modern German werfen), Old Icelandic verpa, and Gothic wairpan, from Proto-Germanic werpanan*. The meaning of twist out of shape is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1400. —n. 1346, threads running lengthwise in a fabric; developed from Old English wearp (about 725); cognate with Middle Low German warf warp, Old High German warf, and Old Icelandic varp cast of a net, related to verpa to throw.

warrant n. Probably about 1200 warant protector, protection, safeguard; later, authorization, sanction, authority (before 1325); borrowed from Old North French warant (in Old French guarant, garant), from Frankish wārand* (compare Middle Low German warend, warent guarantee, warranty, Old High German wēren to authorize, warrant, Old Frisian wēria to confirm, prove, Old High German gauwārjan to verify, Gothic -wērian to ascertain, and Old High German wār true). —v. 1275, warrantien, borrowed from Old North French warrantir, from warant authorization, warrant. The meaning of guarantee (as in he warranted the quality of the produce) is first recorded in 1387. Compare GUARANTY.

warranty n. Before 1338 warantie covenant annexed to a deed; borrowed from Anglo-French and Old North French warantie, from warant WARRANT; for suffix see -y³. The meaning of a guarantee, assurance, is first recorded in English in 1555. Compare GUARANTY.

warren n. About 1378 wareine a franchise or piece of land enclosed for breeding beasts and fowls or warren (rabbits, hares, partridge, pheasant, etc.); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old North French wareinne (central Old French gareinna game park), also found in Anglo-Latin and Medieval Latin wareinna preserve for animals, possibly from Gaulish wareinna* enclosed area, built on warros* post. It is also possible the Old French forms represent a present participle of Old French warir, warer defend, keep, from a Germanic source with the root war-* to protect, guard (compare Old High German warjan, werjan protect; also in Old English warian take care, guard).

The suffix is of uncertain formation; it may represent the present participle ending of the verb either in Old French or perhaps in Germanic.

warrior n. Probably before 1300 werreyoure, borrowed from Old North French werreier a warrior, one who wages war, from werreier wage war, from werre WAR; for suffix see -OR².

wart n. Before 1325 wert; developed from Old English wearte (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian warte wart, Old Saxon warta, Middle Dutch warte, wratte (modern Dutch wrat), Old High German warza (modern German Warze), and Old Icelandic varta (Swedish vårta, Norwegian and Danish vorte), from Proto-Germanic wartō*.

wary adj. 1470, formed from Middle English (1140) war, ware alert, wise, prudent + -y¹. Middle English war, ware developed from Old English (917) wær prudent, aware, alert, wary (compare modern English AWARE, from Old English gewær, and BEWARE); cognate with Old Saxon giwar aware, Middle Dutch ghewāre, Old High German giwar (modern German gewahr), Old High German biwārōn to preserve, protect (modern German wahren, bewahren), Old Icelandic varr aware, wary (Danish and Norwegian var), and Gothic vars, from Proto-Germanic waraz*.

was v. Old English (about 950) wæs first and third person singular past indicative of wesan to be.

In Old English wesan to remain (with the stem wes-) was a distinct verb, but came to supply the past tense to the verb am, which had only a present tense, and as the needs of usage developed, all other parts of that verb were supplied by wes-, so that the two verbs supplemented each other in Old English and constituted the verb es-/wes-* (am-was) showing "existence." By the 1200's parts of am-was became obsolete, and corresponding parts of be took the place of the infinitive, participle, imperative, etc. See BE and AM.

Old English wesan is cognate with Old Frisian wesa to be (past indicative was), Old Saxon wesan (past indicative was), Middle Dutch wesen (modern Dutch wezen, past indicative was), Old High German wesan (past indicative was), modern German gewesen has been (past indicative war), Old Icelandic vera, vesa to be (past indicative var), and Gothic wisān to be, dwell, remain (past indicative was), from Proto-Germanic wesanan*. See BE.

wash v. Probably before 1200 waschen, developed from Old English (900) wascan, wæscan; cognate with Old Saxon and Old Low Franconian wascan to wash, Middle Dutch wasscen (modern Dutch wassen), Old High German waskan (modern German waschen), and Old Icelandic vaska (Swedish vaska, Danish and Norwegian vaske), from Proto-Germanic watskanan*, from the Germanic stem wat-* of WATER. Except for the sense of cleaning clothes, this verb was little used in Old English; the principal verb for washing the body, dishes, etc., was thwēan. —n. 1440 wasche land alternately covered and exposed by the sea; earlier, act or process of washing (as in a good wash, about 1050); from the verb. —washer n. 1450–1530, person who washes; 1808, machine that washes, formed from English wash, v. + -er. Development of the meaning of a flat ring for sealing joints or holding nuts (1346), perhaps a separate word has not been accounted for.

wasp n. 1373, developed from Old English (about 700) wæfs, wæps, wæsp. The forms with p (as contrasted with those in f) are probably the result of influence by Latin vespa, in English and other Germanic cognates, such as Old Saxon waspa wasp, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wespe (modern Dutch wesp), contrasted with Old High German wafsa, wefsa (modern German Wespe), Old Danish hwæfse (modern Danish hveps), Norwegian veps, kvefs, dialectal Swedish väfs. The word is believed to be ultimately derived from the source of Old English webb WEB and wefan to WEAVE. —waspish adj. 1566, irascible, spiteful; formed from English wasp + *-ish*¹.

Wasp or WASP n. white Anglo-Saxon Protestant. 1960, originally an acronym used in statistical and sociological studies of ethnic groups; formed from the initials of W(hite), A(nglo)-S(axon), P(rotestant).

wassail n. About 1140 wes heil; later wæshail salutation used when drinking to someone's health, drinking party, revelry (probably before 1200); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic wes heill be healthy, from wes, imperative of vera to be; see WAS in which the original form wes is the imperative form of wesan to be + heil healthy, see WHOLE). A similar formation appears in Old English wes hāl, but not as a salutation in drinking. —v. take part in a wassail. About 1300 wesseylen; from the noun.

waste v. Probably before 1200 wassten devastate, ravage, ruin (replacement of earlier Middle English westen); borrowed from Anglo-French and Old North French waster to spoil, ruin, alteration of Latin vastāre lay waste, from vastus empty, desolate, waste. Old North French waster was altered from Latin vastāre by influence of Frankish wöstjan* (compare Old High German wuostan lay waste). The earlier Middle English westen to lay waste, found (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 899) wēstan, from the adjective wēste, and is cognate with Old Saxon wöstian, and Old High German wuostan. The sense of spend or consume uselessly, squander, is first recorded in Middle English in 1340. —n. Probably before 1200, desert, wilderness; borrowed from Old North French wast, partly from Latin vastum (from neuter of vastus empty), and partly from waster to waste. The sense of useless spending or consumption, squandering, is first recorded in Middle English about 1300.

Middle English waste, n. is a replacement of earlier weste; from Old English wēsten, wōsten a desert, wilderness, from the adjective; cognate with Old Saxon wōstun, and Old High German wuosti a waste. —adj. About 1290, uncultivated, uninhabited, barren; borrowed from Old North French wast, from Latin vastus empty, desolate. Middle English waste, adj. replaced earlier west (about 1200); developed from Old English wēste, wōste (about 725, in Beowulf), from the stem wōst-*, related to Latin vastus empty, desolate; see WASTE, v.; cognate with Old Frisian wōste waste, desolate, Old Saxon wōsti, and Old High German wōsti, wuosti. —wasteful adj. Before 1325, formed from Middle English waste + -ful. —waster n. 1352, spendthrift, idler; borrowed from Anglo-French wastere, wastour, from waster, v., and also in Middle English, formed from waste, v. + *-er*¹. —wastrel n. 1589–90, tract of wasteland; formed from English waste, v. + -rel, as in mongrel, scurdrel. Something useless or imperfect is first recorded in 1790, and spendthrift, idler, in 1847.

watch v. About 1200 wachen, developed from Old English wæccan keep watch, be awake (about 725, in Beowulf); related to wacian be or remain awake, WAKE¹. The spelling with t began to appear in the mid-1400's. —n. Probably before 1200 wecche, developed from Old English (971) wæcce a watching, vigil, from wæccan to watch. The meaning of a small timepiece (1588) is related to that of a clock to wake up sleepers (1440). —watchman n. (about 1400) —watchword n. About 1400, password; later, motto, slogan (1738).

water n. Old English wæter (before 899), from Proto-Germanic watar*; cognate with Old Frisian weter water, Old Saxon watar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch water, Old High German wazzar (modern German Wasser), Old Icelandic vatn (Norwegian vatn, Swedish vatten, Danish vand), and Gothic watō (dative plural watnam) water. Compare WET. In Germanic, two separate nouns developed, one with r (Old English wæter, etc.) and one with n (Old Icelandic vatn, etc.) —v. Old English wæterian supply water to (before 899); from wæter, n. —watercress n. (probably before 1300) —waterfall n. Before 1500; found in Old English wætergefeal (998). —waterfowl n. (before 1325) —waterspout n. Before 1393, pipe for water; later, spinning column of water (1738). —water table 1428, sloping ledge for shedding rainfall; later, level below which the ground is saturated (1879). —watertight adj. (1387) —waterway n. 1440, channel for water; 1797, route for ships; found in Old English wæterneg. —water wheel (1408) —waterworks n. (1443) —watery adj. Old English wæterig (about 1000) full of water, formed from wæter water + -ig -y¹.

watt n. 1882, in allusion to James Watt, Scottish engineer and inventor. —wattage n. 1903, formed from English watt + -age.

wattle n. 1382 wattel, developed from Old English watol hurdle; in plural, twigs, thatching, tiles (before 899); related to wætla and wethel bandage, and cognate with Old High German wadal bandage, and with Gothic gawidan to bind, join.

The meaning of fleshy appendage below the head or neck of certain birds is first recorded in English in 1513, but its connection with the primary sense of something intertwined is obscure, suggesting the possibility that wattle in the sense of an appendage may be a different word of unknown origin. —v. 1377, construct of wattle, from the noun.

wave v. 1375 waven move back and forth; probably developed from Old English wafian to wave with the hands, fluctuate; also, waver in mind (about 1000); related to wæfre wavering, restless; see WAVER. —n. 1526, a moving swell of water; from the verb. Wave is a replacement for earlier waw a wave, probably before 1200; from Old English wagian to move to and fro (before 899; earlier, to shake, totter, before 800). The meaning of an act of waving is first recorded in 1688.

waver v. Probably about 1280 weyveren to show indecision, fluctuate, vacillate, related to Old English wæfre restless, wavering (from Proto-Germanic wæbrāz*); cognate with Middle High German and modern German wabern to waver, totter, move to and fro, and Old Icelandic vafra hover about, move unsteadily, flicker, vafi doubt, vāfa to swing, vibrate. The meaning of sway, stagger, is first recorded in Middle English probably before 1400, and that of float, flutter, in 1440. —n. 1519, from the verb.

wax¹ n. yellowish substance made by bees. Before 1325 wax; earlier wex (recorded probably before 1200); developed from Old English weax (805–10); cognate with Old Frisian wax wax, Old Saxon wahs, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch was, Old High German wahs (modern German Wachs), and Old Icelandic vax (Swedish vax, Norwegian and Danish voks), from Proto-Germanic waHsan*. The sense of any substance resembling beeswax is first recorded in English in 1799. —v. About 1378 wexen cover with wax, dress with wax; from the noun. —waxen adj. Probably about 1390, made of wax; formed from Middle English wax, n. + *-en*², replacing Old English (recorded about 1000) wexen. —waxy adj. Probably before 1425 wexy made of wax; formed from Middle English wex wax + *-y*¹.

wax² v. grow bigger or greater, increase. Probably before 1200 waxen; earlier wexen (recorded before 1123); developed from Old English weaxan to increase, grow (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian waxa to increase, grow, Old Saxon wahsan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wassen, Old High German wahsan (modern German wachsen), Old Icelandic vaxa (Swedish växa, Norwegian and Danish vokse), from Proto-Germanic waHsan*, also cognate with Gothic wahsan, and ultimately related to Old English ēcan, ēcan EKE¹ increase.

way n. Probably about 1225 way; earlier weie (probably before 1200); developed from Old English weg road, path, course of travel (before 800); cognate with Old Frisian wei way, Old Saxon weg, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weg, Old High German weg (modern German Weg), Old Icelandic vegr (Swedish väg, Norwegian veg, Danish vej), Gothic wigs (from Proto-Germanic wezaz*). The shift in spelling from -eg to -ay is a matter of spelling convention, as the same sound with the same type of spelling pattern is found in modern English weigh.

The sense of way meaning direction (as in look this way) is found before 1325; that of distance (as in a long way off) before 899; that of means (as in ways of preventing disease) in about 1175; and that of style or manner (as in wear one's hair in a new way) before 800. The plural ways timbers on which a ship is built and launched is found in 1639. —wayfaring adj. Old English wegfarende (about 1000). —wayside n. (probably before 1400) —wayward n. About 1380, shortened form of earlier aweeward turned away (probably before 1200).

-ways a suffix forming adverbs indicating direction, as in lengthways = in the direction of the length, or manner, as in anyways = in any manner. Middle English -ways, genitive case form of way; and suffix *-s*³.

we pron. Old English wē (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wi we, Old Saxon wī, wē, Middle Dutch wī (modern Dutch wij), Old High German and modern German wir, Old Icelandic vēr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish vi), and Gothic weis, from Proto-Germanic wīz*.

Use of we to denote oneself (about 725, in Beowulf), in reference to a ruler (before 899) is now also extended to editorial use and unsigned articles.

weak adj. About 1300 wayke; later weke (before 1325); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic veikr weak, Swedish vek soft, Danish veg, Norwegian veik weak, pliant). The Scandinavian forms are cognate with Old English wāc weak, pliant, soft (which did not survive beyond late Middle English), Old Saxon and Middle Low German wēk, Middle Dutch weec (modern Dutch week), and Old High German weih yielding, soft (modern German weich), from Proto-Germanic waikwaz* yield. These adjectives derive from a Germanic verb represented by Old Icelandic vīkja to move, turn, Old High German wīthan to yield, give way (modern German weichen), Middle Dutch wīken, Old Saxon wīkan, and Old English wīcan, from Proto-Germanic wīkanan* bend.

The sense of lacking authority is first recorded in 1423, that of lacking moral strength (about 1375), and that of lacking in amount, intensity, etc. (about 1400). —weaken v. Probably about 1380 waykenen; formed from Middle English wayke weak + -nen *-en*¹. The verb weak (probably 1370), from the adjective, existed alongside weaken for about 275 years before becoming obsolete in English. —weakling n. 1526, formed from English weak + -ling.

weal¹ n. well-being, prosperity, happiness. Probably before 1200 wele, developed from Old English wela wealth, welfare, well-being (before 899), from Proto-Germanic welōn*; related to wel WELL¹, adv. Old English wela is cognate with Old Saxon welo, of similar meaning.

weal² n. raised mark on the skin. 1821, alteration (influenced by wheel), of WALE.

wealth n. About 1250 welthe prosperity, riches; formed from Middle English wel well-being; see WEAL¹ + -the *-th*¹. —wealthy adj. About 1375 welthi happy, prosperous; formed from Middle English welth(e) prosperity, riches + -i *-y*¹. The meaning of rich, opulent, is first recorded before 1430.

wean v. Probably about 1200 wenen; developed from Old English (about 960) wenian to accustom. The sense of wean (a child) was ordinarily expressed in Old English by gewenian or āwenian. Old English wenian is cognate with Old Frisian wenna accustom, Old Saxon wennian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wennen, Old High German giwennen (modern German gewöhnen), Old Icelandic venja (from Proto-Germanic wan-janan*, formed from wanaz* accustomed).

weapon n. Probably about 1175 wepen; developed from Old English wæpen instrument used in fighting or defense (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wēpin weapon, Old Saxon wāpan, Middle Dutch wāpen (modern Dutch wapen), Old High German wāffan (modern German Waffe armorial bearings), Old Icelandic vāpn (Swedish vapen, Norwegian våpen, and Danish våben), and Gothic wēpna, plural, weapons, from Proto-Germanic wæpnan*.

wear v. Before 1121 weren grow (hair, beard) in a certain way; later, carry (clothes) on the body, be dressed in (probably before 1200); use up, destroy by use (about 1275); developed from Old English werian to clothe, put on (before 899). Old English werian (from Proto-Germanic wazjanan*), is cognate with Old High German werien to clothe, Old Icelandic verja to cover, keep (with r standing for s), and Gothic wasjan to clothe.

The shift of this verb from a weak conjugation (wered past tense and past participle) to a strong conjugation (wore past tense, worn past participle) took place on analogy of other strong verbs, such as bear and tear, from the 1300's on, accelerating in the 1500's; also possibly influenced by such a vestige of Old English as the past participle foreworen worn out, decayed. —n. 1464 were, from Middle English weren to wear. The sense of clothing (as in men's wear, underwear) is first recorded in 1570; that of gradual damage (in the expression wear and tear) is found in 1666.

weary adj. Probably about 1175 weri; developed from Old English wērig tired (about 725, in Beowulf), related to wōrian to wander, totter; for suffix see -Y¹. Old English wērig (from Proto-Germanic wōri-gaz*) is cognate with Old Saxon wōrig weary, Old High German uuorag drunk, and probably with Old Icelandic ōrar (plural) attacks of vertigo, confusion, madness. —v. Probably before 1200 werien to grow or make weary; developed from Old English wērigian (about 725, in Beowulf); from wērig weary, adj. —wearisome adj. About 1450 werisom, from werien to weary + -som *-some*¹.

weasel n. Before 1325 wesele; developed from Old English (before 800) weosule, wesle weasel; cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and Dutch wezel weasel, Old High German wisula (modern German Wiesel), from Proto-Germanic wisulōn*, also with Old Swedish visla (modern Swedish vessla), Norwegian vesel, and Danish vaesel, probably related (as they both have a foul musky smell) to Old Icelandic visundr BISON. —v. 1900, to deprive (a word or phrase) of its meaning; from the noun; so used because the weasel sucks out the contents of an egg, leaving the shell intact. The sense of extricate oneself (from a difficult situation) in the manner of a weasel is first recorded in 1925.

weather n. Old English weder (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian weder weather, Old Saxon wedar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weder, Old High German wetar (modern German Wetter), Old Icelandic vedhr (Swedish väder, Norwegian vær, ver, Danish veir), from Proto-Germanic wedhran*.

The spelling with th first appeared in the 1400's (though the pronunciation with th may well be much older). —v. 1440 wederen expose to the air, from weder, n. The meaning of come through safely is first recorded in 1655, and the sense of wear away by atmospheric action in 1757.

weave v. About 1200 weven; developed from Old English wefan form (a fabric) by interlacing yarns (about 899); cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weven to weave, Old High German weban (modern German weben), and Old Icelandic vefa (Swedish väva, Norwegian veve, Danish væve), from Proto-Germanic webanan*. See WEB. In Middle English the past participle weved (and later the past tense wevede) shifted in form to that of a strong verb, assuming the spellings woven, in the past participle and wove in the past tense.

The sense of combine into a whole (as in to weave a story from several incidents) comes from fabricate, contrive (1380). The sense of go by twisting and turning (as in to weave through traffic) is found in 1650. —n. 1581, something woven; from the verb. The meaning of a method or pattern of weaving is first recorded in 1888. —weaver n. Before 1387; formed from weven + *-er*¹.

web n. Old English webb woven fabric (about 725, in Beowulf), related to wefan to WEAVE. Old English webb (from Proto-Germanic wabjan*) is cognate with Old High German weppi web, and Old Icelandic vefr (Swedish väv, Norwegian vev, Danish væv). The meaning of a spider's web, cobweb, is first recorded in Middle English before 1250. The meaning of a membrane that connects the toes of an aquatic bird or other animal is first found in English in 1576; the sense of a snare or entanglement, in 1574, and that of something that is flimsy, unsubstantial, or fanciful, in 1605. —v. 1440 webben to weave; developed from Old English webbian to weave, devise, from webb, n. The meaning of join by a web is first recorded in 1774, but is known earlier in webbed, adj. (1664), and in the compound web-footed (1681).

wed v. Probably before 1200 wedden to marry; developed from Old English (before 1000) weddian to covenant or engage to do something, pledge, marry (from Proto-Germanic wadjojanan*); cognate with Old Frisian weddia to pledge, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch wedden, Middle High German and modern German wetten to pledge, wager, Old Icelandic vedhja to pledge, and Gothic gawadjōn to marry, espouse. The verb may derive from the noun in Old English, or directly from Proto-Germanic waaslashdjan* a pledge or covenant, represented by Old English wedd (as in to wedde being pawned, mortgaged; about 725, in Beowulf), Old Frisian wed, Old Saxon weddi, Middle Low German wedde pledge, wager, Old High German wetti pledge, wager (modern German Wette bet, wager), Old Icelandic vedh pledge (Swedish vad bet, wager), and Gothic wadi surety, pledge. —wedding n. Probably about 1225, ceremony of marriage; later, action of marrying, marriage (about 1250); developed from Old English (about 1000) weddung; formed from weddian to marry + -ung -ing¹. —wedding ring (about 1395) —wedlock n. Probably before 1200 wedlake, wedlac; developed from Old English (before 1100) wedlāc marriage vow (wedd pledge + -lāc, noun suffix, later changed by folk etymology through association with lock).

wedge n. Before 1250 wedg; developed from Old English (before 800) wegc a wedge; cognate with Old Saxon weggi wedge, Middle Low German wegge, Middle Dutch wegge bread roll (modern Dutch wegge), Old High German weggi, wecki wedge (dialectal German Weck bread roll), and Old Icelandic veggur wedge (modern Icelandic veggur, Norwegian vegg, Swedish vigg, Danish vægge wedge), from Proto-Germanic wazjaz*. For note on spelling see DRUDGE. —v. Probably before 1425 wegen tighten by driving in a wedge; from the noun.

Wednesday n. Probably about 1200 Wednesdai, Wodnesdei; developed from Old English (about 950) Wōdnesdæg, literally, Woden's day; corresponding to Old Frisian Wōnsdei, Wēnsdei Wednesday, Middle Low German Wōdensdach, Middle Dutch Wudensdach, Woensdach (modern Dutch Woensdag), and Old Icelandic Odinsdagr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish onsdag), a loan translation of Latin diēs Mercurii day of Mercury, the Roman God of commerce (in Vulgar Latin Mercuris diēs*, the source of French mercredi Wednesday, Spanish miércoles, etc.).

wee adj. Before 1449 wei, from earlier noun use in the sense of quantity, amount, as in a littel wei a little thing or amount (before 1325); developed from Old English wæge weight; see WEIGH. The spelling wee is first recorded in 1598, and the adjective use wee bit apparently developed as a parallel to such forms as a bit thing a little thing.

weed n. About 1200 wede; earlier wiede (probably before 1200); developed from Old English wēod grass, herb, weed (before 899); and implied earlier in uuēodhōc (before 800); see WEEDER below. Old English wēod is cognate with Old Saxon wiod weed, Middle Dutch wiet, and Old High German wiota fern, from Proto-Germanic weud-*. —v. Before 1325 weden, developed from Old English wēodian, from wēod, n. Old English wēodian is cognate with Old Saxon wiodōn to weed, and Middle Dutch wieden. —weeder n. About 1400 wedare a tool to cut weeds, found in weedhook (before 800, Old English uuēodhōc, from uuēod, wēod + hōc hook).

weeds n. pl. 1595, plural of archaic weed garment; developed from Middle English wede, weade garment (probably before 1200) and Old English wæd, wæde garment (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian wēde garment, Old Saxon wād, wādi, Old High German wāt, and Old Icelandic vādh, from Proto-Germanic zawēdjan*.

week n. Probably before 1200 wike, developed from Old English wice (878); probably originally (in Germanic) having the sense of turn or succession. Cognates of Old English wice are found in Old Frisian wike week, Old Saxon wika, Middle Dutch weke (modern Dutch week), Old High German wehha, wohha week (modern German Woche), Old Icelandic vika week (Norwegian veke, Swedish vecka), from Proto-Germanic wikōn*, associated with Old Icelandic víkja to move, turn, and Gothic wikō order, turn, Old High German wehsal change, turn (modern German Wechsel).

The development of the meaning of week, as we know it, is a purely astrological convention, borrowed by the Europeans directly from the Romans, but by substitution of Germanic divinities for those of the Romans without regard to the planets, in the Germanic speaking areas. —weekday n. 1477, day of the week other than Sunday; developed from Old English (about 900) wicdæge day of the week. —weekly adv. (1465); adj. (1489); formed from Middle English weke + *-ly*¹ (adv.) and *-ly*² (adj.).

ween v. Archaic. think, suppose, believe, expect. Probably about 1200 wenen; developed from Old English wēnan to think (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wēna to think, Old Saxon wānian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wānen to think, fancy, Old High German wānen to think (modern German wāh-nen suppose wrongly), Old Icelandic væna to hope, and Gothic wēnjan expect, hope, from Proto-Germanic wēnjanan*, formed from wēniz* expectation.

weep v. About 1300 wepen; earlier weopen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English wēpan shed tears, cry (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian wēpa to weep, Old Saxon wōpian bewail, Old High German wuofan, Old Icelandic œpa to cry, shout, Gothic wōpjan, from Proto-Germanic wōpjanan*.

weevil n. 1440 weyyl, developed from Old English (before 800) wifel beetle; cognate with Old Saxon wibil beetle, Middle Low German wevel, Old High German wibil (modern German Wibbel), from Proto-Germanic webilaz*. For the shift in vowel from Old English to Middle English compare the analogous change in BEETLE¹.

weft n. Old English (before 800) weft, wefra, from wefan to WEAVE. Old English weft, wefra is cognate with Old Icelandic veptr, of similar meaning.

weigh v. Probably before 1200 weien, wegen; developed from Old English wegan find the weight of, have weight, lift, carry (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wega to weigh, Old Saxon wegan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wegen, Old High German wegan (modern German wiegen, wāgen to weigh), Old Icelandic vega to lift, weigh (Swedish väga, Danish veje, Norwegian veie), and Gothic gawigan to move, shake, from Proto-Germanic wezanan*. See also WAY. The old sense of lift, carry, survives in weigh anchor, and indirectly in fruit weighing heavily on the bough. For development of the spelling with gh see FIGHT, the spelling with -ei- developed, by influence of the spirant gh, from the diphthong as pronounced in later Old English wegan.

weight n. Before 1123 wiht; later wizte (about 1250); weizte (before 1398); developed from Old English (before 1000) ge-wiht, from wegan, v. WEIGH. Old English gewiht is cognate with Old Frisian wicht weight, Middle Dutch wicht, ghewichte (modern Dutch wicht, gewicht), Middle High German gewiht (modern German Gewicht), and Old Icelandic vætt (Danish vegt, Norwegian vekt, Swedish vikt), from Proto-Germanic (3a)wehtiz and (3a)wehtjan.

For general development of spelling see WEIGH (except that the vowel which by pattern with night, sight, would be wight* is weight by influence of weigh, v.; and final -t is a formative of nouns from verbs in Germanic, after gh). —v. 1647, from the noun. —weighty adj. Before 1398, heavy; formed from Middle English weizte weight + -y¹.

weir n. About 1121 waere; developed from Old English (839) wer a dam, fence or enclosure, especially one for catching fish; related to werian dam up. Old English wer is cognate with Old Frisian were dam, wera defend, protect, Old Saxon werr dam, werian defend, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch were dam (modern Dutch weer), Old High German weri defense (modern German Wehr), werien, werren defend (modern German wehren), Old Icelandic ver fishing-place, verja defend, and Gothic warjan defend, from Proto-Germanic warjanan*.

The spelling with -ei- represents a shift in pronunciation with a raising of the vowel before r in early modern English.

weird adj. About 1400, having the power to control the fate of men, attributive use of earlier wierd, werd, n. fate, destiny; developed from Old English wyrd (about 725, in Beowulf) from Proto-Germanic wurdiz*. Old English wyrd is cognate with Old Saxon wurd fate, Old High German wurt, and Old Icelandic urðr, and related to Old English weorthan to become; see WORTH. For development of spelling see WEIR.

The Middle English adjective was originally used in weird sisters, the three Fates or goddesses who controlled human destiny. The meaning of odd in appearance is first recorded in 1815.

welch v. See WELSH.

welcome interj. About 1150 welcume; later wel come (1297); alteration (influenced in part by wel WELL¹, adv.) of Old English (about 890) wilcuma exclamation of kindly greeting, from earlier wilcuma, n., welcome guest (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from willa pleasure, desire, choice; see WILL² + cuma guest, related to cuman to COME; corresponding to independently formed Old High German willicomo, Middle Low German willecome. The alteration of wil- to wel- was also in part possibly influenced by a Scandinavian word (compare Old Icelandic velkominn). —v. Probably before 1200 welcumen, alteration of Old English (about 1000) wilcumian greet kindly, from wilcuma welcome guest. —adj. Old English wilcuma acceptable, freely permitted (about 725, in Beowulf); presumably from wilcuma, n., welcome guest. —n. 1525, kindly greeting; from the adjective.

weld v. 1599, alteration of WELL² to boil, rise; influenced by welled, past participle. —n. 1831, from the verb.

welfare n. About 1303, condition of being or doing well; from wel faren fare well; developed from Old English wel faran (wel WELL¹, adv. + faran get along, FARE²). The sense of social concern or provision for the well-being of children, unemployed workers, etc., is first recorded in 1904.

well¹ adv. in a satisfactory manner, satisfactory (as in everything is going well). Old English wel (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch wel well, Old High German wela, wola (modern German wohl), Old Icelandic vel (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish vel), and Gothic walla, from the same source as Old English willan to wish, WILL². —adj. (as in all was not well), Old English wel in a state of good fortune, welfare, or happiness (about 725, in Beowulf); probably from the adverb (of which many uses of the adjective may be classified as adverbs). The meaning of in good health is first recorded in 1555. —interj. (as in Well, I'm not sure), Old English wel, an introductory expletive (before 899); and (as in Well, well, here he is) wel an expression of surprise, resignation, etc. —wellborn adj. (about 950, Old English wel-boren). —well-done adj. About 1200, skillfully done; later, thoroughly cooked (1747). —well-founded adj. (1369) —well-grounded adj. (about 1369) —well-informed adj. (about 1440) —well-known adj. (about 1470) —well-made adj. (1297) —well-mannered adj. (about 1387) —well-meaning adj. (1387) —well-nigh adv. (before 1122, Old English welneah).

well² v. to spring, rise, gush. Probably before 1200 wellen; in part replacing earlier wall (Old English weallan to boil, bubble up, about 725, in Beowulf), and in part developed from Old English, before 1000: (West Saxon) wiellan, (Anglian) wellan cause to boil, from weallan to boil. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian walla to boil, Old Saxon wallan, Old High German wallan (modern German wallen), Old Icelandic vella (Swedish välla, Danish vælde, Norwegian velle). —n. Probably before 1200 welle, developed from Old English, hole dug for water, spring of water, before 830 (West Saxon) wielle, (Anglian) welle, from wiellan, wellan cause to boil. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian walla spring, Middle Dutch welle, Old High German wella wave (modern German Welle), and Old Icelandic vella boiling heat.

Welsh adj., n. Probably before 1200 Welisc, developed from Old English, 668–95: (West Saxon) Wīlisc, Wylisc, (Anglian and Kentish) Wēlisc, Wælic, from Wealh, Walh Celt, Briton, Welshman, non-Germanic foreigner, corresponding to Old High German Walh, Walah Celt, Roman, Gaulish, and Old Icelandic Valir Gauls, Frenchmen; all from a Celtic name represented also by Latin Volscae an ancient Celtic tribe in southern Gaul; for suffix see -ISH¹. The Old English noun survives in the names Wales, Cornwall, and in Walsh, Wallace; compare WALNUT. The spelling Welsh begins to appear in the early 1500's.

The English adjective Welsh corresponds to Old High German walhisc (modern German wälsch, welsch) Celtic, Gaulish, Roman, Romanic; Dutch waalsch Walloon; and Old Icelandic valsker Gaulish, French (Swedish välsk, Danish vælsk "Italian, French, southern"), from Proto-Germanic Wal-Hiskaz*. —Welsh rabbit (1725; originally, a humorous formation like Cape Cod turkey for codfish; also Welsh rarebit, 1785).

welsh or welch v. 1857 welch, 1867 welsh (racing slang) to refuse or avoid payment of money laid as a bet; of uncertain origin. — welshe n. (1860) welt n. About 1425 welte, of uncertain origin; perhaps related to Middle English welten to overturn, roll over (probably before 1400), borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic velta to roll; see WELTER). The meaning of ridge on the skin from a wound is first recorded in English in 1800. — v. 1483 welten furnish (shoes) with welts, from welte, n. The meaning of beat severely is first recorded in 1823.

welter v. Before 1325 weltren, borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German welteren to roll; cognate with Old English weltan, wæltan to roll, Old High German walzan (modern German wälzen), Old Icelandic velta (Swedish välta, Danish vælte, Norwegian velte), and Gothic waltjan, from Proto-Germanic waltjanan*. — n. 1596, confusion, upheaval; from the verb. The meaning of a confused mass (as in a welter of inconsistencies and errors) is first recorded in 1851.

welterweight n. 1832, heavyweight horseman; later, boxer or wrestler of a certain weight (1896); formed from earlier welter heavyweight horseman or boxer (1804); possibly formed from welt beat severely + -er and weight.

wen n. Old English (about 1000) wenn; cognate with Middle Low German wene a wen, wart, Middle Dutch wan, and modern Dutch wen, of uncertain origin.

wench n. About 1300 wenche girl or young woman, shortened form of wenche child (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 890) wencel, probably related to wancol unsteady, fickle, weak.

wend v. Probably before 1200 wenden, found in Old English wendan to turn, go, wend (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wenda to turn, wend, Old Saxon wendian, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wenden, Old High German wenten (modern German wenden), Old Icelandic venda (Danish and Norwegian vende, Swedish vända), and Gothic wandjan (from Proto-Germanic wandijanan*), causative verb form of windan*, found in Old English windan to turn, twist; see WIND² and WANDER.

The original forms of the past tense were wende, wended and past participle wend, but variants wente, went developed from about 1200. In certain senses went replaced the older past tenses of go, and from about 1500 was regarded as the past tense of that verb, while wend was given the new past tense form wended.

went v. past tense of go. Originally a past tense (and past participle) of WEND.

were v. form of the verb be. Developed from two different past indicative forms of Old English wesan to be: wæron, plural, and wære, second person singular, both recorded about 1000; see WAS. The second person singular form wast (formed in the 1500's from was on the analogy of be, beest) displaced the etymological were (from Old English wære); the intermediate form wert was used in literature during the 1600's and 1700's.

werewolf n. Old English (about 1000) werewulf, formed from wer man (see VIRILE) + wulf WOLF. Old English werewulf is cognate with Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weeuwulf werewolf, and Old High German werwolf (modern German Werwolf).

west adv. Old English west in or toward the west (also about 725, in Beowulf, in the compound West-Dene West Danes); also westan from the west; cognate with Old Frisian, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch west, Old Saxon and Old High German -west (in compounds), modern German west, Old Icelandic vestr (Danish and Norwegian vest, Swedish väst) from the Proto-Germanic wes-t-*. — adj. About 1375, toward the west; from the adverb. — n. Probably before 1200, from the adverb. — westerly adj. Before 1470, formed from Middle English wester, westir (probably before 1350), developed from Old English (963) westra + -lich. The adverb also appeared in 1470. — western adj. Late Old English west-erne coming from the west (about 1050); formed from west west, adv. + -erne, suffix denoting direction; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German westrōni, Old Icelandic vestrœn. — westward adv. 1297, developed from Old English (before 900) westweard (west west + -weard -ward).

wet adj. Probably before 1200, developed in part from: 1) the past participle use of the Middle English verb weten to wet, found in Old English (before 830) wētan; 2) Old English wēt moist, liquid (before 899), from Proto-Germanic wētaz*; and 3) a Scandinavian source represented by the stem wāt-* (compare Old Icelandic vātr, modern Icelandic votur, Norwegian and Swedish våt, Danish våd); cognate with Old Frisian wēt moist, liquid, related to English WATER. — v. Old English (before 830) wētan, probably from the adjective in spite of the dates, because of the wide-spread use of the adjective in the major meanings in Old English at an earlier date than the verb. — n. water, moisture. Old English (before 899) wæt; also wēta moisture; from the adjective in Old English.

wether n. Old English (about 890) wether; cognate with Old Saxon withar ram, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch weder (modern Dutch weerd), Old High German widar (modern German Widder), Old Icelandic veðr (Danish væder, Norwegian vær, Swedish vädur), and Gothic withrus lamb, from Proto-Germanic wethruz*.

wh The spelling developed during the Middle English period as a respelling of words with initial hw, usually of Old English origin, such as Middle English what (Old English hwæt) and whisperen (Old English hwisprian). Words in wh- that were borrowed into English, such as whisk and whelk, were respelled on analogy with Old English words. It is uncertain how much the spelling affected the pronunciation of any of these words and sometimes wh varies with simple h or w, as in whortleberry, hurtleberry, *whiz*¹, wiz(ard).

Early in the 1400's, words that had customarily been spelled with ho-, such as home and hot, began to appear with the spelling who-. The free-ranging influence of the digraph wh was retained in the spellings whole (for Middle English hol, Old English hāl) and whore (Middle English hore, Old English hōre), which became common about 1600; but even in the time of whack n. 1737, sharp, resounding blow; possibly of imitative origin, or from the verb. —v. 1719, probably of imitative origin.

Samuel Johnson (1755) and John Walker (1791) pronunciation of words spelled with wh, such as whole were much in dispute in educated speech. See also CH, SH, TH.

whale¹ n. fishlike mammal. Probably before 1300 whal, developed from Old English hwæl (before 899) from Proto-Germanic Hwalaz*; cognate with Old Saxon hwal whale, Middle Dutch wal, walvisc (modern Dutch walvis), Old High German wal, walfisc (modern German Wal, Walfisch), Old Icelandic hvalr, hvalfiskr (modern Icelandic hvalur, Swedish val, Danish hval, Norwegian kval, hval). Compare walrus in which the Old Icelandic and Dutch words figure by folk etymology. —v. About 1700, from the noun.

whale² v. beat, whip severely. 1790, possibly variant of WALE, v.

wharf n. 1320 warf, developed from Old English (probably after 1042) hwearf shore, bank where ships could tie up; earlier, a dam or embankment (1038), from Proto-Germanic Hwar-faz*; cognate with Middle Low German werf, warf dam, wharf.

The spelling wharf is first recorded in Middle English in 1442.

what pron., adj., adv., interj. Probably before 1200 whæt or whatt, watt (about 1200); developed from Old English hwæt (about 725, in Beowulf, except huæt, pron., before 735); cognate with Old Frisian hwet, wet, Old Saxon huat, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch wat, Old High German hwaz, waz (modern German was), Old Icelandic hvat (Swedish vad, Norwegian hva, Danish hvad), and Gothic hwa; from Proto-Germanic Hwat*. —whatever pron., adj. (before 1325) —whatsoever pron., adj. (about 1250) wheal n. 1808, probably alteration of WALE, possibly by confusion with weal welt (though not recorded before 1821), and probably also developed by association with obsolete English wheal pimple, pustule (1530), from Middle English whelle (about 1440); related to Old English hwelian to form pus, bring to a head (before 899), from hwele*.

wheat n. Probably about 1200 hwæte, developed from Old English (before 830) hwæte wheat; cognate with Old Frisian hwēte wheat, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weit, Old High German weizzi (modern German Weizen), Old Icelandic hveiti (Danish hvede, Norwegian hvete, kveite, Swedish hvete, vete), and Gothic hwaiteis; from Proto-Germanic Hwaitijaz* that which is white, from the source of Old English hwīt WHITE.

wheedle v. 1661, of uncertain origin, perhaps connected with Old English wædlian to beg; or borrowed by English soldiers during service in the German wars of the 1600's (compare German wedeln wag the tail, and so fawn, flatter, found in Danish logre wag the tail, fawn, flatter; also in Icelandic flathra wag the tail, fawn upon).

wheel n. Probably about 1200 whel, developed from Old English hwēol, hweogl (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian hwēl wheel, Middle Low German wēl, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wiel, and Old Icelandic hvēl, hjöl (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish hjul), from Proto-Germanic Hwē-Hwlan*, Hwēwulan*. The figurative sense of a moving or propelling force (as in the wheels of progress) is first recorded before 1340, from the earlier sense of the wheel of fortune or chance (before 899). —v. About 1385 whielen; probably before 1200 hweolen, from the noun. —wheelbarrow n. (about 1340) —wheelwright n. (1281) wheeze v. Before 1460 whesen, probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hvæsa to hiss, Swedish våsa, Norwegian hvese, kvese, Danish hvæse; cognate with Old English hwæst act of blowing). —n. 1834, from the verb.

whelk n. Before 1500, mollusk with a spiral shell, alteration of Middle English welke, wilke (about 1170); developed from Old English weoloc, wioloc (about 700); cognate with Middle Dutch willoc, wilc, welc whelk, modern Dutch wulk. The later spelling with wh was by analogy with words such as whale and whelp; see WH.

whelm v. Before 1325 qhelmen turn upside down, about 1350 welmen; probably an alteration (by association with helmen to cover, Old English helmian) of earlier whelven to turn, overturn, cover by something overturned (about 1275); developed from Old English (West Saxon) -hwiefan, (Mercian) -hwelfan, as in āhwelfan cover over.

whelp n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 830) hwelp whelp; cognate with Old Saxon hwelp whelp, Old High German hwelf, welf (modern German Welf), and Old Icelandic hvelpr (Swedish valp, Danish hvalp, Norwegian hvalp, kvalp). The sense of a scamp, is first recorded about 1330. —v. About 1200, from the noun.

when adv., conj., pron. Probably about 1200 whanne; later when (about 1320, in whensoever); developed from Old English hwænne, hwenne, hwonne (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian hwenne until, if, Old Saxon hwan when, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wan, wen when (modern Dutch wanneer), Old High German wanne, wenni (modern German wann when, wenn if, whenever), Gothic hwan when, how; derived from the Germanic pronominal stem Hwa-*. —whenever adv., conj. (about 1380) whence adv. Probably about 1225 whannes; also whennes; formed from whenne whence + suffix *-es -s*³. The earlier forms whanne, whenne developed from Old English hwanone (about 725, in Beowulf); related to hwænne WHEN. The spelling with -ce, first recorded in 1526, is a spelling convention for an earlier voiceless -s (in -es), as found in twice and pence.

where adv., conj. Probably about 1200 whære; developed from Old English hwær, hwar (before 830; also about 725, in Beowulf in elles hwær elsewhere); cognate with Old Frisian hwēr where, Old Saxon hwār, Middle Low German wār, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch waar, Old High German hwār, wā, Middle High German wā (modern German wo), Old High German wār (modern German warum why), Old Icelandic hvar (Swedish var, Danish hvor, Norwegian hvor, kvar), and Gothic hwar where. Old High German wār is from Proto-Germanic Hwær*, and Gothic hwar is from Proto-Germanic Hwar*. —n. About 1445, from the adverb. —whereabouts adv. Before 1415; earlier whereabout (before 1325). —n. 1795; earlier whereabout (1605). —whereby adv., conj. (about 1200) —wherefore adv., conj. (about 1200); n. reason (1590). —wherever adv., conj. (about 1450 wherever; earlier hwar æfre, 971) —wherewith adv., conj. (probably about 1200) whet v. Probably before 1200 whætten sharpen, make more acute; developed from Old English hwettan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wetten to whet, Old High German wezzen (modern German wetzen), Old Icelandic hvetja, and Gothic gahwatjan incite, from Proto-Germanic Hwatjanan. These verbs derive from an adjective represented by Old English hwæt brave, bold, Old Saxon hwat sharp, Old High German waz, and Old Icelandic hwatr bold, vigorous, from Proto-Germanic Hwataz*. —whetstone n. Old English hwetstān (about 725).

whether conj. Probably before 1200 whæther, whether, developed from Old English hwæther, hwether which of two (before 830; found also as an adverb about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hweder, hwedder which of two, whether, Old Saxon hwethar which of two, whether, Old High German hwedar, wedar which of two, whether, either (surviving in modern German weder neither), Old Icelandic hvaðarr which of two, each, whether (Swedish var each, Danish hver, Norwegian hver, kvar), and Gothic hwathar which of two; from Proto-Germanic Hwatharaz*. Compare EITHER.

whew n. Before 1250 wei; later whew (1400); developed from Old English (before 800) hwæg whey; cognate with Middle Dutch wey (modern Dutch wet) and Middle Low German hoie, from Proto-Germanic Hwaja-*.

which adj., pron. Probably before 1300 whiche; earlier hwich and whilch (both about 1200); developed from Old English hwilc (before 899); cognate with Old Saxon hwilik, Old Icelandic hvílikr (Danish and Norwegian hvílen, Swedish vilken), and Gothic hwileiks which; all from Proto-Germanic Hwīlikaz*, Hwi-* who + likan* body, form, found in Old English līc body.

Though hwilc is the surviving form through modern English which, two other principal forms existed in Middle and Old English: hwelc (before 800 from Proto-Germanic Hwālikaz*) and hwylc (871–889), developing into early Middle English hwelch* and hwūlch, which became hwech and hwūch, both disappearing in late Middle English. —whichever pron., adj. (about 1395) whiff n., v. 1591, in part perhaps an alteration of earlier weffe foul scent or odor (before 1300); also in part a formation, probably of imitative origin; and possibly connected with earlier whiffle blow in gusts or puffs (1568).

Whig n. 1657, in part perhaps a disparaging use from whigg a country bumpkin (about 1645), and a shortened form of earlier (1649) Whiggamore one of the adherents of the Presbyterian cause in western Scotland who marched on Edinburgh in 1648 to oppose the secret agreement of the Scots with Charles I against the followers of Oliver Cromwell; perhaps associated with dialectal whig to urge forward.

In 1689 the name is first recorded in reference to a member of the British political party that opposed the Tories and favored reforms and progress. During the American Revolution a Whig was a colonist who opposed the measures of the Royal Governors (1711); later the name was applied to a political opponent of Andrew Jackson, a member of the Whig party (1825). In 1854, the Whigs re-formed to become the Republican party.

while n. Before 1175, developed from Old English hwīl a space of time (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hwīle while, Old Saxon hwīl, Old High German hwīla (modern German Weile), Old Icelandic hvīla bed (Danish hvile, Swedish vila, Norwegian hvile, kvile rest), and Gothic hwīla time, while, from Proto-Germanic Hwīlō*. —conj. 1137, during the time that (now expressed by while alone, but earlier found in Middle English with the noun in the while that and Old English pā hwīle pe). —v. 1606, from the noun.

whim n. 1641, pun or play on words; shortened form of earlier whim-wham fanciful object (before 1590); of unknown origin. The meaning of a sudden notion, fancy, or idea, is first recorded in English in 1697, probably a shortened form of whimsy.

whimper v. 1513, probably of imitative origin, but compare German wimmern to whimper, moan. —n. Before 1700, fretful cry; from the verb (found in whimpering in 1522).

whimsy n. 1605, probably related to earlier whim-wham (with the ending -sy, perhaps patterned on such words as dropsy, topsy); see WHIM. —whimsical adj. 1653, formed from English whimsy + -ical.

whine v. Probably before 1300 whynen make a low cry of pain or distress; developed from Old English hwīnan to whiz or whistle through the air (also found in hwīnsian, of dogs, to whine); cognate with Old Icelandic hvīna to whiz, whistle in the air (Swedish vina, Danish and Norwegian hvīne), Old High German weiōn, hweiōn to cry, shout, wihōn to neigh, Middle High German wīhen (modern German wiehern) to neigh; ultimately of imitative origin. The meaning of complain in a feeble way, is first recorded in 1530. —n. 1633, from the verb.

whinny v. 1530, probably related to whine in the sense applied to animals of make a protracted sound or cry, neigh (probably before 1300). —n. 1823, from the verb.

whip v. Before 1250 wippen flap violently, as with the wings; later whippen to strike or beat with a whip, flog, lash (about 1386, probably developed from the earlier sense found in the noun). Middle English wippen (from Proto-Germanic wipp-anan*) is cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wippen move up and down or to and fro, swing, whip, Middle High German wipfen to leap, dance, and Old High German wipf swing; see WIPE. —n. About 1340 wippe, in part developed from wippen to flap violently, and probably in part borrowed from Middle Low German wippe, wip quick movement, leap.

whipper-snapper n. 1674, perhaps an alteration of earlier snipper-snapper (about 1590).

whippet n. Before 1610, probably formed from whip in the sense of move quickly + diminutive suffix -et; earlier in the sense of a brisk, nimble woman (1550).

whippoorwill n. 1709, coined in imitation of the bird's call.

whir or whirr v. Probably before 1400 (Scottish), fling, hurl; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Danish hvirre to whirl, whirl, and Old Icelandic hverfa to turn); probably also reinforced by association with whirl. —n. Probably before 1400 (Scottish), rush, hurry; from the verb.

whirl v. About 1300 zwirlen, about 1380 whirlen; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic hvirfla to go round, spin, related to hvirfill circle, ring, crown); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wervel bolt, hinge, whirlwind, modern Dutch wervel vertebra, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wervelen to turn, and Old High German wirbil whirlwind modern German Wirbel whirl, eddy, whirlpool. The meaning of spin around (as in the room whirled round and round) appeared about 1384. —n. 1411 whirle fly-wheel or pulley on a spindle; later, act of whirling (about 1480); from whirlen to whirl. —whirlpool n. (1529) —whirlwind n. (before 1340) whisk n. 1375 wisk, wysk quick sweeping movement; probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic visk wisp, Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish visk broom); cognate with Old English granwisc awn, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wisch wisp (modern Dutch wis), and Old High German wisc (modern German Wisch). The meaning of an implement for beating eggs, cream, etc., is first recorded in 1666. The spelling whisk is first found in 1577. —v. About 1410 wysken, borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic víska to wipe); cognate with Old English wiscian to plait, related to granwisc awn.

whisker n. Usually whiskers, pl. Before 1600, from Middle English wisker anything that whisks or sweeps (about 1425); formed from wisk, v. + *-er*¹.

whiskey n. 1715 whiskie; later, in the spelling whisky (1746) and whiskey (1753); originally Scottish usky (about 1730), usquebea (1706), usquebaugh (1703; earlier iskie bae, 1583); borrowed from Gaelic uisge beatha whisky; literally, water of life (Old Irish uisce water + bethu life). The Gaelic word is probably a loan translation of Medieval Latin aqua vitae alcohol, spirits; literally, water of life; in English aqua vitae had been recorded as applying to intoxicating drinks since before 1425.

whisper v. 1440 whysperen, developed from Old English whisprian speak very softly (about 950); cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wispelen to whisper, Old High German hwispalōn (modern German wispeln), and Old whist n. 1663, alteration of earlier whisk kind of card game (1621, but alluded to as early as 1529); perhaps so called from the act of whisking up the cards after each trick of the game is won; or associated with whist an exclamation to command silence (about 1374), used during the game; of imitative origin.

Icelandic hvískra (Swedish víska, Danish and Norwegian hviske); possibly related to Old English hwistlian to WHISTLE. —n. 1595, from the verb.

whistle v. Before 1382 whistlen, developed from Old English (about 1000) hwistlian utter a shrill sound; cognate with Old Icelandic hvísla to whisper, Middle Swedish hvisla and modern Swedish vísla to whistle, Danish hvisle to hiss, Norwegian hvisle, kvisle, and Old Icelandic hvína to whistle in the air. —n. About 1340 whistil, developed from Old English (about 950) hwistle a whistling instrument, shrill-toned pipe; related to hwistlian to whistle.

whit n. Probably before 1200 na whit no amount, found in Old English nān wiht (971), from wiht amount (before 900); originally, person, human being; see WIGHT. The meaning of an amount in Old English may have been influenced by senses in cognate words: Old Saxon wiht thing, Old High German wiht creature, being, thing, etc.

white adj. Before 1325, developed from Old English hwīt (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon hwīt white, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wit, Old High German hwīz, wīz (modern German weiss), Old Icelandic hvítr (Danish hvid, Norwegian hvit, kvit, Swedish vit), and Gothic hweits, from Proto-Germanic Hwītaz*. —n. Before 1300, developed from Old English (about 1000) hwīt fluid surrounding an egg yolk, from hwīt, adj. —v. About 1325, developed from Old English (before 1000) hwītan, from hwīt, adj. —whiten v. Before 1300, formed from Middle English white, adj. + *-en*¹.

whither adv. Probably before 1200 wider, developed from Old English (before 830) hwider; formed from Proto-Germanic Hwi-* who + -der, as in Old English hider HITHER and thider THITHER.

whitlow n. 1440, alteration of earlier whitflaw (before 1400), possibly formed from white + *flaw*¹; or borrowed in part from early modern Dutch vijt, fijt, Low German fit abscess, whitlow.

Whitsunday n. Probably before 1200 White-sune-dæie; developed from Late Old English (1067) Hwīta Sunnandæg white Sunday (hwīt white + Sunnandæg Sunday); possibly so called from the custom of having the newly baptized wear white baptismal robes on this day.

whittle v. 1552, verb use of Middle English whittel a knife (1404), variant of earlier thwittle (1390), from thwiten to cut (about 1370); developed from Old English thwītan; cognate with Old Icelandic thveita to hew, hurl, from Proto-Germanic thwītanan*; for suffix see *-LE*³.

whiz¹ or whizz v. Make or move with a humming or hissing sound. Before 1547, of imitative origin. —n. 1620, from the verb.

whiz² n. clever person, expert. 1914, probably a special use of whiz something remarkable (1908), transferred use of *whiz*¹; perhaps an alteration (by influence of *whiz*¹) of a shortened form of wizard.

who pron. About 1250 hwo; later who (about 1303); developed from Old English hwā (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hwā who (interrogative pronoun), Old Saxon hwē, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wie, Old High German hwer, wer (modern German wer), Old Icelandic hverr, Old Danish hwa (modern Danish hvo), Old Swedish hvar, and Gothic hwas, feminine hwō; from Proto-Germanic Hwas*, Hwes* (Hwez), Hwō*.

The pronoun whom developed from Old English hwām, the dative form of hwā who. The pronoun whose developed from Old English hwæs, the genitive form of hwā who. — whoever pron. (before 1225) — whomever pron. (probably before 1300) whole adj. 1420 wholle, spelling alteration of earlier hol (probably before 1200); developed from Old English hāl entire, unhurt, healthy (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian hāl, hēl whole, Old Saxon hēl, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch heel, Old High German and modern German heil, Old Icelandic heill (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish hel), and Gothic hails, from Proto-Germanic Hailaz*. For an explanation of the spelling with wh-, see WH. — n. Before 1387, from the adjective. — wholesale n. Before 1417; the sense of general (extensive, as in a wholesale reform of taxes), is first recorded in 1642. — v. (1800) — wholesome adj. (about 1200) — wholly adv. Before 1338 holy, formed from Middle English hol whole, adj. + *-ly*¹.

whom pron. See WHO.

whoop v. Probably about 1450 howopen, alteration of earlier houpen (about 1376); in part of imitative origin in English (compare the interjection), and in part possibly borrowed from Old French houper to cry out; also of imitative origin. For an explanation of the spelling with wh-, see WH. — interj. (before 1460 whop) — n. 1593, alteration of Middle English houp (about 1350), probably from the interjection. — whoopie interj. 1862, from whoop, interj. + -ee. — n. noisy, unrestrained revelry. 1928, from the interjection.

whopper n. 1785, something very large or great; formed in English as if from whop, v. + *-er*¹ (found in whopping, adj., before 1625). English whop, v. beat, overcome, is first recorded in 1575, but is of uncertain origin. Whopper in the sense of a big lie is first recorded in 1791.

whore n. 1535, spelling alteration (with replacement by wh-) of Middle English hore (probably before 1200); developed from Late Old English (before 1100) hōre prostitute, harlot (from Proto-Germanic Hōrōn*); cognate with Middle Dutch hoere (modern Dutch hoer), Old High German huora (modern German Hure), Old Icelandic hōra (Norwegian and Danish hore, Swedish hōra) adulteress, hōrr adulterer, and Gothic hōrs adulterer. — v. 1583, from the noun.

whorl n. 1440 whorhwyll, whorle flywheel or pulley on a spindle; possibly alteration of whirle WHIRL. The meaning of a circle of leaves or flowers round a stem of a plant is first recorded in 1551.

whose pron. See WHO.

why adv. About 1200 whi, developed from Old English hwī, hwī (before 899), instrumental case (showing for what purpose or by what means) of hwæt WHAT; and cognate with Old Saxon hwī why and Old Icelandic hvī why (Danish hvi, Norwegian hvi, kvi), from Proto-Germanic Hwī*. — n. cause, reason, purpose. About 1303 why, from earlier (before 1200) hwi, adv. — interj. 1519, as an expression of surprise or to call attention to a statement; from the adverb.

wick n. Probably before 1200 wueke, developed from Old English (about 1000) wōce (from a reduplicated Proto-Germanic noun weukōn*); later wicke (before 1376), perhaps developed from Old English wice*; cognate with Middle Dutch wieke wick (modern Dutch wiek), Old High German wiohha (dialectal German Wieche).

The formation with -ick, showing the shortening of the vowel, is found generally by the 1600's and replaced the older form with lengthened vowel sound inherited from Middle English.

wicked adj. Probably before 1200, formed from earlier wicke wicked, evil (1154, perhaps attributive use of Old English wicca wizard) + *-ed*¹.

wicker n. 1336 wekirr wickerwork; later wyker pliant twig, withe (before 1398), and wickir (1508); borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare dialectal Swedish vikker branch of willow, Swedish vika to bend, and Old Icelandic vikja to move, turn). — adj. 1502, from the noun.

wicket n. Probably about 1225 wiket small door or gate; borrowed from Anglo-French wiket, from Old North French (compare French guichet ticket-window), from a Germanic source (compare Old Icelandic vík nook).

wide adj. Probably 1200, found in Old English wīd (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German wīd wide, Middle Dutch wijt (modern Dutch wijd), Old High German wīt (modern German weit), and Old Icelandic viðr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vid), from Proto-Germanic widās*. — adv. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English wīde (about 725, in Beowulf); from wīd, adj. — widen v. 1607, formed from English wide, adj. + *-en*¹. — width n. 1627, formed from English wide, adj. + *-th*¹, a parallel to earlier wideness, formed on the analogy of breadth.

widow n. About 1386 wydow (also widow in verb); developed from Old English (about 830) widewe, widuwe; cognate with Old Frisian widwe widow, Old Saxon widowa, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weduwe, Old High German wituuwa, witawa (modern German Witue), and Gothic widuwo, from Proto-Germanic widewō*. — v. Before 1325 widowen; from the noun. — widower n. About 1378, formed from widow + *-er*¹. — widowhood n. About 1200 widewehod, formed from wield v. Probably about 1175 welden to rule, guide, decide, handle with skill; developed from Old English (Mercian) weldan, (West Saxon) wieldan, wealdan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian walda to rule, Old Saxon waldan, Old High German waltan (modern German walten), Old Icelandic valda (Swedish vålla, Danish and Norwegian valde to cause, occasion), and Gothic waldan to rule, from Proto-Germanic wal-t-*.

widewe widow + -hod -hood; replacing Old English wuduwanhād (before 899).

wiener n. 1904, shortened form of wienerwurst (1889); borrowing of German Wienerwurst, from Wiener of Vienna (from Wien Vienna) + Wurst sausage. — wienie n. 1911 (but found earlier in the misspelling winnies, 1867); formed by clipping wien(er) + -ie.

wife n. 1483 wife; found in Old English (before 800) wif woman, wife; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon wif woman, wife, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wijf, Old High German wīb (modern German Weib), and Old Icelandic vif (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish viv), from Proto-Germanic wīban*.

The Old English general sense of woman survives in fish-wife, midwife, and old wives' tale; the Middle English sense of the mistress of a household survives in housewife; compare WOMAN. — wifely adj. About 1386, befitting a wife; developed from Old English wiflic womanly (before 899); formed from Old English wif woman + -lic -ly³.

wig n. 1675, shortened form of PERIWIG. — v. 1826, from the noun.

wiggle v. Probably before 1200 wigelen, perhaps borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Flemish wigelen, frequentative form of wiegen to rock, from wiege cradle; cognate with Old High German wiga cradle (modern German Wiege), and Old English wegan to move; for suffix see -LE³. — n. 1894, from the verb. — wiggly adj. 1903, formed from English wiggle, v. or n. + *-y*¹.

wight n. Archaic. person. Old English wiht living being, creature (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon wiht thing, Middle Low German wicht thing, being, creature, demon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wicht little child, Old High German wiht creature, being, thing (modern German Wicht creature, being, infant), Old Icelandic vētr, vætr creature, thing, and Gothic wahts thing, from Proto-Germanic wehtiz*.

The meaning of a human being, person (probably about 1200) was widely used with the spelling wight (see FIGHT).

wigwam n. 1628, borrowed from Algonquian (probably Abnaki) wigwam a dwelling; also said to be found in such formations as wikiwam and specifically in (Ojibwa) wigiwam, (Delaware) wiquoam their house.

wild adj. Old English (before 800) wilde in the natural state, uncultivated, undomesticated; cognate with Old Frisian wilde wild, Old Saxon wildi, Middle Dutch wilde, wilt (modern Dutch wild), Old High German wildi (modern German wild), Old Icelandic villr (Danish and Swedish vild, Norwegian vill), and Gothic wiltheis, from Proto-Germanic wiltijaz*. — n. Probably before 1200, wild animal, from the adjective. The meaning of an uncultivated or desolate region is found in the wilds (1596). — adv. 1549, from the adjective. — wildcat n. (1418) — wildfire n. 1032; later, violent force or excited feeling (before 1325).

wildebeest n. 1838, borrowed from Afrikaans wildebees; literally, wild beast, plural wildebeest (from Dutch wild wild + bees beast, ox, from Middle Dutch beeste, from Old French beste beast).

wilderness n. About 1200, formed from Old English wildēoren wild, savage (wilde wild + dēor animal) + -ness.

wile n. Before 1160, developed from Late Old English wīl wile, trick; perhaps borrowed from Old North French wile*, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vēl trick, craft, fraud, and vēla defraud). — v. About 1375 wilen deceive by a wile, coax, lure; from the noun. The weakened sense of divert attention pleasantly from, pass easily or pleasantly (1796) was strongly influenced by while, v. — wily adj. Before 1325, formed from Middle English wile + *-y*¹.

will¹ v. be going to, be determined to. Before 1121 wilen; later willen (before 1225), past tense wolde, wulde would; developed from Old English willan*, wyllan (about 725, in Beowulf) to wish, desire, want (past tense wolde); cognate with Old Frisian willa to wish, desire, Old Saxon willian, wellian (past tense welda, wolda), Middle Dutch and modern Dutch willen, Old High German wellan, wellen (past wolta), modern German wollen (past wollte), Old Icelandic vilja (past vilda), Swedish vilja, Danish and Norwegian ville, and Gothic wiljan (earlier weljan*) to will (past wilda), waljan to choose.

The unusual feature of this verb is its use as a regular auxiliary of the future tense, with implications of intention or volition, and thus distinguished from shall, expressing or implying obligation or necessity; see SHALL for other distinctions. The use of will as a future auxiliary is already found in Old English (before 899). Most of the basic senses of will are found in Old English, including the meaning of choose or decide to do something (as in God willed it), found before 950, and the meaning of do often or habitually (as in she will read for hours), found before 899.

Contracted forms of the verb, especially after pronouns, began to appear in the 1500's (as in shee'll = she'll), the form with an apostrophe (I'll, he'll, it'll) occurring since the 1600's. The contraction won't for will not is first recorded in Middle English (before 1475) as wynnot, later (1584) wonnot, the form won't being first recorded in 1667. — willing adj. Before 1325, formed from Middle English willen will + *-ing*². The word is also found in Old English as an element in compounds, such as unwillende unwilling, willendliche willingly.

will² n. power to choose, choice, wish. Old English will, willā (about 725, in Beowulf), related to willan* to wish; see WILL¹; cognate with Old Frisian willā will, Old Saxon willio, Middle Dutch wille (modern Dutch wil), Old High German willō, willio (modern German Wille), Old Icelandic vili (Danish villie, Norwegian vilje, Swedish vilja), and Gothic wilja, from Proto-Germanic weljōn*. The meaning of a written document expressing a person's wishes about disposition of property after death is first recorded about 1380. —v. About 1100 willen, developed from Old English (before 830) willian, from will, willā, n. —willful adj. About 1200 (implied in Old English wilfullice willfully, before 1100).

willies n. pl. 1896, spell of nervousness; of uncertain origin.

will-o'-the-wisp n. 1661; earlier Will with the wisp (1608); formed from Will, as a shortened form of William + wisp bundle of hay or straw used as a torch.

willow n. About 1340 weluw; earlier wilwe (about 1325), also wilghe; alteration of Old English (before 750) welig; cognate with Old Frisian wilg willow, Old Saxon wilgia, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wilge (modern Dutch wilg), Middle High German wilge. The change in form to -ow probably parallel to that of bellow and fellow. —willowy adj. 1766, bordered or shaded with willows; formed from willow + *-y*¹. The meaning of like a willow, graceful, slender, is first recorded in 1791.

willy-nilly adv. 1608 wille nille, contraction of will I, nill I or will he, nill he, or will ye, nill ye; literally, with or without the will of the person concerned (compare Latin nōlēns volēns). The word nill, developed from Old English nyllan (ne no + willan* will¹).

wilt v. 1691, probably a dialectal alteration of wilk, welk to wilt, influenced by earlier welter to wilt (1645, with the ending perhaps parallel to wither, 1535). English welk was probably borrowed from Middle Dutch or Middle Low German welken to wither; cognate with Old High German inwelkēn to wilt, inwelhēn become soft. —n. 1855, from the verb.

wimp n. 1920, perhaps a clipped form from WHIMPER a fretful cry; compare earlier whimp (1549), wimp (1890) to whimper.

wimple n. Late Old English (before 1100) wimpel, wimple; cognate with Old Frisian wimpel veil, banner, Old Saxon wimpal, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wimpel, Low German wimpelen, and Old Icelandic vimpill, from Proto-Germanic wimpilaz*.

win v. Probably about 1200 winnen strive, contend; later, be victorious, prevail, win (about 1300); fusion of Old English winnan struggle for, work at (about 725, in Beowulf), and Old English gewinnan to gain or succeed by struggling, to win (971), from Proto-Germanic wenuwanan*. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Frisian winna obtain, Old Saxon winnan suffer, win, giwinnan obtain, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch winnen gain, win, Old High German winnan to rage, contend, exert oneself, also gawinnan to gain by labor or exertion (modern German gewinnen earn, gain, win), Old Icelandic vinna to work, gain, win (Swedish vinna, Norwegian vinne, Danish vinde), and Gothic gawinnan suffer. Related to WISH. —n. Probably before 1200 winne strife, conflict; also, gain, acquisition, profit (probably about 1200); fusion of Old English winn labor, strife, conflict wince v. About 1300 wincen to kick or move in impatience or pain, alteration of earlier wenchen (probably before 1200, found also in later variant winchen); borrowed from Anglo-French or Old North French wenchier*, wenchir* (in Old French guenchir to turn aside, avoid), from Frankish wenkjan* (compare Old Saxon wenkian to turn, direct, Old High German and Middle High German wenken). —n. 1612, a kick; from the verb. The meaning of a flinching, is first recorded in 1865.

(before 1000), and gewinn gain, profit (before 1000); related to winnan struggle for, and gewinnan gain, succeed. —winner n. About 1353, formed from Middle English winnen win, v. + *-er*¹.

winch n. 1295 wenche reel, roller, pulley, or other device for drawing or pulling; developed from Old English (about 1050) wince. —v. 1529, from the noun.

wind¹ n. air in motion. Old English wind (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch wind wind, Old High German wind (modern German Wind), Old Icelandic vindr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vind), and Gothic winds, from Proto-Germanic wendās*. —v. Probably before 1400 winden to follow by scent; from the noun. The meaning of tire, put out of breath, is first recorded in 1811. —windfall n. 1464, something blown down by the wind; later, unexpected acquisition or advantage (1542). —windmill n. (1297) —windstorm n. (before 1398) —windy adj. Probably about 1200 windy, developed from Old English (about 1000) windig; formed from wind, n. + -ig *-y*¹.

wind² v. move by turning and twisting. About 1175 winden, found in Old English windan to turn, twist, wind (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian winda to wind, Old Saxon windan, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch winden, Old High German wintan (modern German winden), Old Icelandic vinda (Swedish vinda, Norwegian and Danish vinde), and Gothic biwindan wind around, wrap, from Proto-Germanic wendanan*. Related to WANDER and to WEND, the causative form of *wind*².

The past tense and past participle wound (wound) developed from the earlier Middle English past tense wand, wonde and past participle wunden, wonden; coalescing, probably by confusion of use, into a common form for past tense and past participle between the 1300's and 1500's. —n. 1399, apparatus for winding, winch or windlass; borrowed from Middle Low German winde windlass, and in part from the verb in English.

windlass n. Before 1400 wynlase, probably an alteration of earlier wyndase (1293); borrowed through Anglo-French windas, and directly from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vindäss, a compound of vinda to WIND² + äss pole, beam).

window n. Probably before 1200, borrowed from a Scandinavian source; compare Old Icelandic vindauga (vindr WIND¹ + auga EYE), Norwegian and Danish vindue. The Scandinavian loanword replaced Old English ægathyrl (before 899; literally, eye-hole) and ægaduru (literally, eye-door), but the Old French or Medieval Latin borrowing fenester (found in Old High German fenster) was in concurrent use with window till the mid-1500's.

wine n. Probably before 1200 wine, developed from Old English win (about 725, in Beowulf); an early borrowing from Latin vinum wine, as are Old Frisian, Old Saxon, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch win (modern Dutch wijn), Old High German win (modern German Wein), Old Icelandic vin, Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish vin, and Gothic wein. —v. entertain with wine. About 1624, to spend in drinking wine; from the noun. The meaning of entertain with wine is first recorded in 1862. —wine cellar (1371) wing n. About 1175 wenge; later whing (probably before 1200) and winge (1390); replacement of Old English fethra, pl., wings, and borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic vængr wing of a bird, aisle, etc., Norwegian and Danish vinge, veng, Swedish vinge), of unknown origin. The meaning of either of two divisions of an army, political group, etc., is first recorded about 1400. —v. 1486, to carve (a quail or partridge), from the noun. The meaning of take flight, fly, is first recorded in 1605.

wink v. Probably before 1200 winken to close one's eyes; developed from Old English wincian to nod, wink (before 899); cognate with Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch winken to wink, stagger, Old High German winkan move sideways, stagger, nod (Middle High German and modern German winken to wave, wink), Old High German wankōn to stagger, totter, and Old Icelandic vakka to stray, wander about. Old High German winkan is from Proto-Germanic wenkanan*. The meaning of close an eye as a hint or signal is first recorded about 1100, and that of close one's eyes to a fault, irregularity, etc., about 1480. —n. About 1303, a closing of the eyes for sleep, nap; from the verb.

winkle n. 1585, shortened form of PERIWINKLE².

winnow v. Before 1382 winnewen; earlier windwen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (before 830) wind-wian, from wind air in motion, paring down, WIND¹. The sense of sort out, separate, sift (as in to winnow truth from lies) is first recorded in 1382, but may possibly occur earlier in Old English; compare the literal sense of separating refuse particles, before 830. —n. 1580, device, such as a fan, for winnowing grain; from the verb. The act of winnowing is first recorded in 1802.

wino n. 1915, formed from English wine + suffix -o, as in bucko (1833) and kiddo (1896).

winsome adj. 1677, charming, attractive, pleasing; surviving for almost 400 years apparently only in northern British dialect from Old English wynsum agreeable, pleasant (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon wunsam and Old High German wunnisam, and a compound of wynn pleasure, delight + -sum -some¹. Old English wynn is cognate with Old Saxon wunna joy, bliss, delight, Old High German wunna, wunni (modern German Wonne), from Proto-Germanic wunjō*, and Old Icelandic una be content, dwell; see WONT.

winter n. Old English, the fourth season of the year; also, a year (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian winter, Old Saxon wintar, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch winter, Old High German wintar (modern German Winter), Old Icelandic vetr (Norwegian vetr), and Gothic wintrus, from Proto-Germanic wentruz*. —v. 1382 winternen, from the noun. —wintertime n. (probably before 1387) —winttry adj. 1590, formed from English winter + *-y*¹. A corresponding form existed in Old English wintrig (winter + -ig -y¹), but the modern word appears to be a new formation.

wipe v. Probably before 1200 wipen to rub clean or dry; developed from Old English (about 960) wīpian; cognate with (but distant in semantic connection) Old High German wīfan to wind around (modern German weifen), wipf impulse, movement, weif bandage, band, head covering, Old Icelandic veipr head covering, cloth for wiping the head, and Gothic wipja wreath, and weipan to crown with a garland, from Proto-Germanic wīpanan*. —n. 1550, from the verb.

wire n. Before 1376 wyre, developed from Old English wīr metal drawn out into a thread (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English wīr, from Proto-Germanic wīraz*, is cognate with Middle Low German wīre wire, Old High German wiara finest gold, gold ornament, Old Icelandic vīra- in vīravirki filigree work. —v. Probably before 1300 wyren to adorn with (gold) wire, from the noun. The meaning of furnish with a wire is first recorded in 1435. —wiretapping n. 1904, back formation from earlier wiretapper (1893); for suffix see -ING¹. —wiry adj. 1588, made of wire, formed from English wire, n. + *-y*¹. The meaning of lean, tough, sinewy, is first recorded in 1808.

wisdom n. Old English wīsdōm (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from wīs WISE¹ + -dōm -DOM, and cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon wīsdōm, Middle Dutch wijsdom, Old and Middle High German wīstuom (modern German Weistum legal sentence, precedent), and Old Icelandic viðdóm (Swedish and Danish visdom). —wisdom teeth 1848 (but teeth of wisdom since 1668), loan translation of Latin dentēs sapientiae, after Greek sōphronistēres (used by Hippocrates); so called because they ordinarily appear after a person has reached adulthood (usually between the ages 17 and 25), from sōphrōn prudent; self-controlled.

wise¹ adj. sage, judicious. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English wīs (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German wīs wise, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wijs, Old High German wīs, wīse (modern German weise), Old Icelandic vīss (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vis), and Gothic -weis (in compounds); from Proto-Germanic wīszaz*, and related to the source of Old English witan to know, wit². —wiseacre n. 1595, partial translation of Middle Dutch wijssegger soothsayer, by association with English *wise*¹ and a probable phonetic misunderstanding of then obsolete English segger sayer, braggart (about 1440). The Middle Dutch word was perhaps altered (by association with Middle Dutch segger sayer) from Old High German wīzzago prophet, from wīzzan to know. —wise guy (1896) wise² n. way of proceeding, manner (as in no wise bad, just mischievous). Old English wise (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wis way, manner, Old Saxon wisa, Middle Low German wise, wis, Middle Dutch wize, wijs (modern Dutch wijze), Old High German wisa, wis (modern German Weise), Old Icelandic -vís manner (in qðhruvís otherwise), Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vis way, manner; ultimately from the same source as WISE¹. Compare GUISE.

-wise a suffix forming adverbs meaning: 1a in a _____ manner, as in likewise = in a like manner. b in a _____ing manner, as in slantwise = in a slanting manner. 2 in the characteristic way of a _____; like a _____, as in clockwise = in the way the hands of a clock go. 3 in the direction of the _____, as in lengthwise = in the direction of the length. 4 in the _____ respect or case, as in otherwise = in the other respect. Middle English -wise, developed from Old English -wisan, from wise way, manner; see WISE².

wish v. Before 1325 wichen to desire; earlier wusshen (probably before 1200); developed from Old English wýscan (before 899). Old English wýscan (with loss of n before spirant s) is cognate with Middle Dutch wonscen, wunscen, wenscen (modern Dutch wensen) to wish, wonsc, wunsc, wensc a wish, Middle Low German wunschen to wish, Old High German wunsken to wish, wunsc a wish (modern German wünschen, Wunsch), Old Icelandic öskja to wish (Swedish önska, Norwegian and Danish ønske), ösk a wish; from Proto-Germanic wunskijanan*. Other Germanic cognates are Gothic wēns expectation, hope, and Old English wine friend. —n. Before 1325 wiss a wishing, before 1393 wissh; from the verb. —wishful adj. 1523, wished-for, desirable; later, wishing, desirous (1593); formed from English wish, n. + -ful.

wishy-washy adj. Before 1693, feeble or poor in quality, unsubstantial, trifling, inconclusive; reduplication of washy thin, watery, with alternating vowel (found in earlier swish-swash, 1547).

wisp n. Before 1325 wispe, cognate with Norwegian and Swedish visp wisp, of unknown origin, sometimes connected with WHISK or with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wispel a measure of grain, but whether wispel contains the same word as English wisp is not certain. —wispy adj. Before 1717, formed from English wisp + *-y*¹.

wisteria or wistaria n. 1819 wisteria (apparently a misprint), New Latin; formed in allusion to Caspar Wistar, American anatomist but coined by Thomas Nuttall, English botanist.

wistful adj. 1613–16, closely attentive, intent; formed from obsolete English wist(ly) intently (before 1500, of uncertain origin) + -ful. The meaning of expectantly or yearningly eager, longing, is first recorded in 1714.

wit¹ n. mental capacity, knowledge, intellect. Old English wit, more commonly gewit (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon wit knowledge, intellect, Old High German wizzi (modern German Witz joke, witticism), Old Icelandic vit wit, knowledge (Danish vid, Norwegian viðd, vett, Swedish vett), and Gothic -witi, from Proto-Germanic witjan*; related to Old English witan to know; see WIT².

The meaning of ability to make clever remarks in an amusing way is first recorded in English in 1542, and that of a person of wit or learning, about 1470.

wit² v. Archaic. know. Before 1225 witen, developed from Old English witan to know (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wita to know, Old Saxon witan, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weten, Old High German wizzan (modern German wissen), Old Icelandic vita (Norwegian vite, Danish vide, Swedish veta), and Gothic witan, from Proto-Germanic witanan*. The Germanic words mean basically to have seen, hence to know.

The phrase to wit, with the meaning of that is to say, namely, is first recorded in 1577, from the earlier expression that is to wit, with the same meaning (1340), probably a loan translation of Anglo-French cestasavoir.

witch n. About 1250 wiche, developed from Old English wicca female magician, sorceress (about 1000), feminine of wicca sorcerer, wizard (about 890). These words are related to, and probably derivatives of, Old English wiccian to practice witchcraft, itself related to Old English wigle divination, wiglian to divine, and wig idol, all cognate with Old Frisian wigla sorcery, witchcraft, and probably with Middle Low German and Middle High German: wicken, wikken to bewitch, divine, Old High German wih, wih holy, Old Icelandic vē temple, and Gothic weihs holy. The form with t is a spelling convention of modern English, reflecting pronunciation. —v. Before 1200 wichen; developed from Old English (about 1000) wiccian practice witchcraft. —witchcraft n. Probably before 1200 wicheckraft, developed from Old English (about 1000) wiccecraft (wicce witch, n. + craft craft). —witchery n. 1546, formed from English witch, n. + -ery. —witch hunt 1885 (implied in witch hunting, 1640), the hunting out and persecuting persons suspected of witchcraft; later, the action of persecuting persons who hold unacceptable views or engage in unacceptable practices (1938).

witch hazel (1541) wyche hasill, probably from Old English wice wych-elm + haesel any of a group of bushes of the pine family. The North American bush from which a soothing lotion is made (1671), is so called from application of the name of the European plant to a new plant found by the colonists.

with prep. Old English with against, opposite, toward (about 725, in Beowulf); related to wither against; cognate with Old Frisian with, wither against, with, Old Saxon with, withar, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch weder again, Old High German widar against, back, again (modern German wider), Old Icelandic viðr, viðr against, with (Swedish vid, Norwegian and Danish ved), and Gothic withra against.

The basic senses of this preposition in the earliest periods were those of opposition ("against") and of motion in proximity ("towards, away, alongside," still found in such compounds as withdraw and withstand). Later, a significant change in the sense development took place in Middle English with assimilation of senses denoting association, combination, and union, which in Old English were carried by mid. This development in the meaning of with resulted partly from influence of Old Icelandic vidh (found also in Old Frisian, and in Old Saxon) and may have been further enlarged by association with Latin cum with (as in pugnāre cum . . . to fight with). —within prep., adv. Old English withinnan (about 1000); formed from with toward + innan in. —without prep., adv. About 1290 withoute; alteration of Old English withūtan (before 899); formed from with toward + ūtan from without, ūt OUT.

with- a prefix meaning: 1 away, back, as in withdraw = to draw back. 2 against, opposing, as in withstand = to stand against. 3 along with, alongside, toward, as in without, within. Middle English and Old English with-, related to WITH, prep.

withdraw v. Probably before 1200 withdrawen; formed from with away + drawen to draw, probably by influence of, or a loan translation of, Latin retrahere to retract (compare German zurückziehen, a probable loan translation from Latin). —withdrawal n. 1824, formed from withdraw + -al. The meaning of discontinuation of the use of an addictive drug is first recorded in 1897.

with n. tough, flexible twig, as of a willow. Old English withthe (about 1000); cognate with Old High German wid, widi twisted cord, Old Icelandic vidh willow twig, vidhir willow; see WITHY.

with v. 1535, alteration of Middle English wydderen dry up, shrivel (probably about 1380), apparently a differentiated or special use of wederen to expose to the weather; see WEATHER.

withers n. pl. 1580, probably formed from the obsolete or dialectal English (and Old English) wither against, contrary, opposite; see WITH + the plural suffix -s; possibly so called because the withers are the parts that the animal opposes to its load.

withhold v. Probably before 1200 withholden hold back; formed from with- back, away + holden to hold; probably by influence of, or a loan translation of, Latin retinēre to withhold (compare German zurückhalten, a probable loan translation from Latin).

withstand v. About 1200 withstanden stand against, resist, oppose; developed from Old English withstandan (before 899); formed from with- against + standan to stand; cognate with Old Frisian withstonda and Old Icelandic viðstanda, all perhaps influenced by, or loan translations of, Latin resistere to resist (compare also German widerstehen, a probable loan translation from Latin).

withy n. Probably before 1200 withi willow; developed from Old English (961) withig; cognate with Old High German wida willow (modern German Weide), Old Icelandic vidhir (Swedish vide, Norwegian vidje, vie, Danish vidje), and Gothic wida in kunawida chain.

witness n. Old English witnes attestation of a fact, event, etc., from personal knowledge, testimony, evidence, one who testifies; originally, knowledge, wit (about 950); formed from wit + -nes -ness. —v. Probably about 1300 witnessen bear witness to, testify to; from the noun.

witting adj. About 1378, intentional; formed from *wit*², know + *-ing*¹. —wittingly adv. 1535, formed from witting + *-ly*¹; replacing Middle English witandly (before 1340); formed from witand, present participle of witen to know, *wit*² + *-ly*¹.

witty adj. About 1340, developed from Old English wittig wise, clever (about 725, in Beowulf); formed from wit intellect; + -ig -y¹; cognate with Old High German wizzig wise, clever (modern German witzig witty), and Old Icelandic vitugr wise.

wive v. Probably before 1200 wiuen marry a woman; developed from Old English wīfian (before 899), from wīf woman, WIFE.

wizard n. sorcerer. Probably before 1425 wysard wise man, sage; formed from Middle English wys, wise WISE¹ + -ard. The meaning of one supposed to have magic power (about 1550) is found with the spelling wizard in 1601. —wizardry n. 1583 wisardrie, formed from earlier English wisard wizard + -rie -ry.

wizen v. Before 1450 wisenen; developed from Old English (before 893) wisnian, weosnian; cognate with Old High German wesanēn to dry up, shrivel, wither (modern German verwesen to decay), Old Icelandic visna (Swedish vissna, Norwegian and Danish visne).

wobble v. 1657 (implied in wabbling); probably borrowed from Low German wabbeln to wobble; cognate with Middle High German wablen to waver, Old Icelandic vafla hover about, totter, related to vafra move unsteadily; see WAVER. The spelling wobble is first recorded in the 1850's. —n. 1699 wabble, from the verb. —wobbly adj. 1851–61 wabbly; 1871 wobbly; formed from English wabble, wobble, v. + *-y*¹.

woe interj. Probably before 1200 wo, wa, developed from Old English wā (about 725, in Beowulf). The word is a common exclamation of lament developed in many languages, and Old English wā corresponds to Old Frisian, Old Saxon, and Middle Low German wē woe, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wee, Old High German and Middle High German wē (modern German weh), Old Icelandic vei, væ (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ve), Gothic wai. —n. Probably about 1175 wo; developed from the interjection in Old English. —woebegone adj. Probably about 1300, in (he, she) is wo bigon. Originally me is wo bigon woe has beset me (Middle English wo + begon, past participle of begon to beset, happen to, Old English begān, from be- + gān go). —woeful adj. Before 1325 uaful full of woe, from wa woe, n. + -ful.

wold n. About 1220 wolde open country; developed from Old English: (Anglian) wald, (West Saxon) weald forest, wooded upland (786); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon wald forest, Old High German wald forest, wilderness, Old Icelandic völfr untillied field, plain (Swedish vall pasture, Norwegian voll grassy plain), from Proto-Germanic walthuz*.

The sense development from forested upland to rolling country follows the historical deforestation of Britain. The word survives in place names associated with rolling country, such as Cotswold and Stow-on-the-Wold.

wolf n. Probably before 1300 wolf, developed from Old English (about 750) wulf, cognate with Old Frisian wolf, Old woman n. About 1250 woman; earlier wumman (probably before 1200); developed from Old English (about 1000) wimman, plural wimmen, alteration (by assimilation of f to m) of wifman, plural wifmen (before 766), a compound of wif woman, wife + man human being.

Saxon wulf, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wolf, Old High German wolf (modern German Wolf), feminine wulpa, Old Icelandic ulfr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ulv), and Gothic wulfs, from Proto-Germanic wulfaz*. —v. 1862, eat like a wolf, devour; from the noun. —wolfish adj. 1570, formed from wolf, n. + *-ish*¹, replacing wolvish, formed in Middle English (about 1430) from wolv-, inflectional stem of wolf + *-ish*¹.

wolverine n. 1619, alteration of wolvering (1574), of uncertain origin; possibly from wolv-, inflectional stem of wolf (as in the plural wolves) + *-ing*¹; or perhaps from wolver one who behaves like a wolf, ravenous or savage animal (1593).

The formation is peculiar to English, and not found before 766 in Old English, the more ancient word being wif wife. From about 1400 woman and women became the regular spellings for the singular and plural (corresponding to man and men). —womanhood n. About 1385, state or condition of being a woman, formed from English woman + -hood. —womanly adj. Probably before 1200 wummonlich like a woman, formed from Middle English woman + -lich -ly². The sense of having qualities traditionally admired in women is first recorded about 1385. —women's liberation (1966) —women's rights (1840 woman's rights; 1850 women's rights; with an isolated example in 1632) womb n. Probably about 1175 wombe; developed from Old English wamb, womb belly, uterus (before 830); cognate with Old Frisian wambe, wamme belly, Middle Dutch wamme (modern Dutch wam), Old High German wamba (modern German Wamme in animals), Old Icelandic vomb (Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish vom), and Gothic wamba belly, from Proto-Germanic wambā*.

wombat n. 1798, borrowed from an aboriginal Australian source.

wonder n. Before 1100; later wonder (about 1300); developed from Old English wundor marvelous thing, marvel (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon wundar wonder, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wonder, Old High German wuntar (modern German Wunder), and Old Icelandic undr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish under), from Proto-Germanic wundran*. —v. Probably before 1200 wundren, developed from Old English (before 899) wundrian; related to wundor, n., and cognate with Old High German wuntarōn to wonder, and Old Icelandic undra. —wonderful adj. Before 1100 wunderful full of wonder, marvelous; formed from Middle English wunder, n. + -ful. —wondrous adj. Before 1500, wonderful; alteration of Middle English wonders, adj., by substitution of suffix -ous, patterned after marvelous. Middle English wonders, adj., wonderful (before 1325), was originally the genitive of wonder, n., and was probably influenced by a Scandinavian source (compare Middle Swedish unders, genitive of under wonder).

wont adj. Before 1325 wont, wunt; earlier iwoned (probably about 1175); from the past participle of wonen, wunen to dwell, be accustomed; developed from Old English wunian (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian wonia, wunia to dwell, be accustomed, Old Saxon wunon, wonon, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wonen, Old High German wonen (modern German wohnen to dwell), Old Icelandic una to dwell, be content, and Gothic -wunan be content, from Proto-Germanic wun-*; related to Old English winnan, gewinnan to WIN. —v. accustom. 1440 wonten, wunten, probably from wont, wunt, past participle of wonen, wunen be accustomed. —n. Before 1400, custom, habit; from the adjective. The noun disappeared from use during the 1700's but reappeared in the 1800's. —wonted adj. Before 1413, accustomed; extension of wont, past participle of wonen; for suffix see *-ED*². The word was probably reinforced by later formation from wont, v. and n. + *-ed*².

won't contraction of will not; see WILL¹.

woo v. Probably before 1200 wowen, developed from Late Old English wōgian (before 1050, earlier in woer, about 1000), of uncertain origin (possibly related to wōh, wōg- bent or inclined, as in affection; found in Gothic -wāhs bent, in the compound unwāhs not crooked, blameless), from Proto-Germanic wanHaz*.

wood n. Probably about 1225 wode, developed from Old English wudu (about 725, in Beowulf); earlier widu tree, trees collectively, the substance of which trees are made (probably before 700); cognate with Old High German witu wood, and Old Icelandic viðr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish ved), from Proto-Germanic widuz*. —v. 1538, surround with trees; from the noun. The meaning of supply with wood, especially for fuel, is first recorded in 1628. —woodbine n. Before 1387 wodebinde, developed from Old English (before 850) wudubinde a climbing plant (wudu wood + binde wreath). —woodcock n. Old English wuducoc (about 1050); formed from wudu wood + coc COCK¹. —woodland n. Old English (869) wudulond (wudu wood + lond LAND). —woodpecker n. (1530) —woodsman n. (1688, largely replacing woodman, about 1410) —woods adj. 1860, formed from woods, pl. + *-y*¹. —woodwind n. (1876) —woody adj. 1375, wooded; later, made of wood (before 1540), like or forming wood (1578); formed from Middle English wode + *-y*¹.

woodchuck n. 1674, alteration (influenced by wood) of Algonquian (Cree) otcheke or (Ojibwa) otchig, the name of the marten, transferred to the groundhog.

woof n. 1540 wofe, alteration of oof (1382); developed from Old English (before 800) ōwef (ō- on + wefan to WEAVE). Middle English oof became woof partly by association with warp, as in warp and woof.

wool n. About 1300 wolle, developed from Old English (before 800) wull; cognate with Old Frisian wolle, ulle wool, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wolle, wulle (modern Dutch wol), Old High German wolla (modern German Wolle), Old Icelandic ull (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ull), and Gothic wulla, from Proto-Germanic wulnō*.

—woolen adj. Probably before 1300 wollen; developed from Late Old English (1046) wullen (wull wool + *-en*²). —woolly adj. (1578) woozy adj. 1897, muddled or dazed, as with drink; a variant of oozy muddy, or an alteration of boozy (1719, showing the effects of intoxication, formed from booze alcoholic liquor + *-y*¹).

word n. Old English word speech, talk, utterance, word (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon word word, Middle Dutch wort (modern Dutch woord), Old High German wort (modern German Wort), Old Icelandic ordh (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish ord), and Gothic waúrd, from Proto-Germanic wurđan*. The meaning of promise (as in keep one's word) is first recorded in Old English, in 971. —v. Probably before 1200 worden utter words, speak; from the noun. The meaning of put into words is first recorded in 1613.

—wording n. choice of words, phrasing. 1649, in Milton's Eikonoklastes; formed from English word, v. + *-ing*¹. —wordy adj. Before 1382 wordi; developed from Late Old English wordig verbose (about 1100); formed from word, n. + -ig *-y*¹.

work n. Probably before 1200 work, developed from Old English weorc, work something done, deed, action, proceeding, business (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon werk work, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch werk, Old High German werc, werah (modern German Werk), Old Icelandic verk (Swedish and Norwegian verk, Danish værk), from Proto-Germanic werken*. —v. Before 1250 werken; later worken (about 1300, past tense wroghte, past participle wroght); developed from a fusion of: 1) Old English wyrkan (about 725, in Beowulf, with past tense worhte, past participle geworht); cognate with Old Saxon workian to work, Old High German wurchen, Old Icelandic yrkja, and Gothic waúrkjan, from Proto-Germanic wurkijanan*. 2) Old English (Mercian) wircan; cognate with Old Frisian werkia, werka to work, Old Saxon wirkian, -werkon, Old High German wirchen, werchon (modern German wirken to work, operate, function), and Old Icelandic verka, formed relatively late from the Proto-Germanic noun werken*.

The modern English verb form work instead of worth*, was the result of influence of the noun work, with possible Scandinavian influence.

The new past tense and past participle worked, became established in the 1400's, replacing wrought, now archaic, except in senses that denote fashioning or decorating with the hand or an implement. —workaday adj. 1554, developed from werkedei working day, workday (probably before 1200); formed from werk work + dei day. —workday n. About 1430; earlier, with three syllables, werkedei; see WORKADAY. —worker n. (about 1340) —workhouse n. Old English (before 1100) weorchūs workshop (weorc work + hūs house). The sense of a place where the poor or petty criminals are lodged appears in 1652. —workman n. Old English weorcman, implied in weorcmen (before 899). —workmanship n. Before 1325, formed from Middle English werkmon workman + -ship.

workaholic n. 1968, coined on the analogy of alcoholic, from work + connective -a- + (alco)holic.

world n. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English woruld, worold human existence, the affairs of life (about 725, in Beowulf); also, the human race, mankind (about 750); and the earth (before 900).

The word is peculiar to Germanic with cognates in Old Frisian warld, wrald, Old Saxon werold, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wereld, Old High German weralt, worolt (modern German Welt), and Old Icelandic verld (Swedish värld, Danish and Norwegian verden); the original Germanic word meaning literally "age of man," made up of wer-* man (Old English wer) + ald-* age (Old English ild age, related to eald, ald OLD). —worldly adj. Probably before 1200 worldlich, developed from Old English (before 900) worldlic (world world + -lic *-ly*²).

worm n. Probably before 1300 worme, developed from Late Old English (about 1000) wurm, variant of earlier wyrm serpent, dragon, worm (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic wurmiz*; cognate with Old Frisian wirm serpent, worm, Old Saxon wurm, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch worm, Old High German wurm (modern German Wurm), Old Icelandic ormr (Danish orm worm, Norwegian and Swedish orm snake) (from Proto-Germanic wurmaz*), and Gothic waúrms. —v. 1564–78 clear out worms; from the noun. The meaning of creep or crawl like a worm is first recorded in 1610 and to worm out, to extract (information, etc.), in 1715. —worm-eaten adj. (1398) —wormy adj. (about 1450) wormwood n. Before 1400 wormuod, alteration by folk etymology (as if from worm + wood, partly because of its use as a worm medicine) of earlier wormod, wermod (before 1382); developed from Old English (before 800) wermod wormwood; cognate with Old Saxon wermoda wormwood, Middle Low German wermod, wermodē, Dutch wormoet, and Old High German wermuota (modern German Wermut); the ultimate etymology is unknown. Related to VERMOUTH.

worry v. Probably before 1350 worien to strangle, choke, alteration of earlier werien, wirien (before 1325); developed from Old English wyrkan to strangle (before 800), from Proto-Germanic wurzijanan*; cognate with Old Saxon wurgil rope, Middle Dutch worghen, wurghen to strangle (Dutch worgen, wurgen), Old High German wurgen (modern German würgen), Old Icelandic virgill rope. The sense of annoy, bother, vex (1671) developed from that of harass by rough or severe treatment, assail (before 1553). —n. 1804, troubled state of mind; from the verb. —worrisome adj. 1845, formed from worry, n. or v. + *-some*¹.

worse adj. 1340 worse more bad or ill, less well, alteration of earlier werse, wurse (probably before 1200); developed from Old English wiersa, wyrsa (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wirra, werra more evil or bad, worse, Old Saxon wirs, wirsa, Old High German wirsiro, Old Icelandic verri (Danish and Norwegian værre, Swedish värre), and Gothic waírs. These words derive from a Proto-Germanic comparative form whose suffix -izan-* was added to a root wers-*, also found in Old Saxon and Old High German werran bring into confusion or discord; see WAR. —adv. Probably before 1200 wers more badly; developed from Old English (before 900) wyrs, wiers; related to wyrsa, wiersa, adj., and cognate with Old High German wirs worse, Old Icelandic verr, and Gothic waírs. —n. Before 1137 werse, developed from Old English wyrsa, adj. —worsen v. Probably before 1200 wursnen; formed from Middle English wurse worse + -nen -en¹.

worship n. Probably about 1200 wurrschipe condition of being worthy, distinction, honor, renown; later worschipe (before 1338); developed from Old English (Anglian) worthscip, wurthscip (about 950), and (West Saxon) weorthscipe (before 900); formed from Old English weorth WORTH + -scipe -SHIP. The meaning of respect or honor shown to a person or thing is first recorded in Old English (about 1000) and that of reverence or veneration paid to a being regarded as supernatural or divine before 1325. —v. Before 1390 worschipen, alteration of earlier wurthsupen (probably before 1200); from the noun. —worshipful adj. Before 1300, honorable; formed from Middle English worschipe worship + -ful.

worst adj. About 1300 worste most badly, alteration of earlier wurste (probably before 1200), wurst (probably about 1175); developed from Old English wyrresta (before 899); cognate with Old Frisian werste, Old Saxon wirsista, Old High German wirsisto, and Old Icelandic verstr (Norwegian verst, Swedish värst, Danish værst). These words derive from a Proto-Germanic comparative form with the root wers-* (see WORSE) and the suffix -istaz* (see -EST). —adv. Probably before 1200 werst, wurst; developed from Old English wyrst, wierst (before 900), superlative of wyrs, wiers, adv., worse. —n. About 1385 worste, from the adjective. —v. 1602, to make worse, impair, damage, inflict loss upon; from the adjective.

worsted n. About 1387 worstede, alteration of earlier Worthstede (1296; later Worsted, now Worstead), a town in northeastern England, where worsted was originally made.

wort¹ n. plant, herb, or root. About 1300 wort, alteration of earlier wurt (probably before 1200); developed from Old English wyrt (before 830); cognate with Old Saxon wurt root, herb, plant, Old High German wurz, wurzala (modern German Wurzel root), Old Icelandic urt herb (Norwegian urt, Swedish ört), and Gothic waúrts root, from Proto-Germanic wurtiz*.

wort² n. liquid made from malt. Before 1325, developed from Old English (about 1000) wyrt; related to wyrt herb, plant, WORT¹. Old English wyrt is cognate with Old Saxon wurtia spice, and Middle High German würze spice, brewer's wort (modern German Würze).

worth adj. Probably before 1200 wurth; later worth (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 695) weorth equal in value to (something); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon werth worth, worthy, Middle Dutch wert, weert (modern Dutch waard), Old High German werd (modern German wert), Old Icelandic verðr (Danish værd, Swedish vård, Norwegian verd), and Gothic waírths, from Proto-Germanic werthaz*. —n. Probably before 1200 wurth; later worth (before 1325); developed from Old English (before 830) weorth monetary value, price; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon werth, Old High German werd (modern German Wert worth, value), Old Icelandic verðr, and Gothic waírth; from noun use of the adjective. —worthless adj. 1588, (of things) having no intrinsic value; formed from English worth, n. + -less. The sense of lacking merit, contemptible, despicable, is first found in 1591. —worthwhile adj. (1884, implied in worthwhileness) —worthy adj. Probably about 1250 wurthi having worth, good, excellent; formed from Middle English wurth, n., worth + *-y*¹. —n. Probably about 1390, person of merit; from the adjective.

wot v. Before 1325, know; developed from Old English wāt, first and third person singular present indicative of witan to know, WIT², and cognate with Gothic wait, from Proto-Germanic wait*.

would v. About 1380 wulde, wolde, developed from Old English wolde, past tense of willan to WILL¹. Old English wolde, from wilde*, was altered under influence of sceolde. —would-be adj. wishing or pretending to be (1300).

wound n. About 1300 wounde, developed from Old English wund hurt, injury (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wunde wound, Old Saxon wunda, Middle Dutch wonde (modern Dutch wond), Old High German wunta, wunda (modern German Wunde), and Old Icelandic und. —v. About 1300 wounden, developed from Old English (about 760) wundian to inflict a wound on by means of a weapon; from the noun; cognate with Old Frisian wundia to wound, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch wonden, Old High German wuntōn, Middle High German wunden (modern German verwunden), Old Icelandic unda, and Gothic gawundōn.

wow interj. Before 1500, Scottish, of imitative origin. —n. 1920, an unqualified success, hit; from the interjection. —v. 1924, overwhelm with delight or amazement; from the interjection.

wrack n. About 1390 wrak wrecked ship; probably borrowed from Middle Dutch wrak wreck; cognate with Old English wræc misery, punishment, wrecan to punish, drive out; see WREAK. The meaning of damage, disaster, destruction (in wrack and ruin) appeared probably about 1408.

wraith n. 1513, ghost; Scottish; of uncertain origin.

wrangle v. Probably before 1387; cognate with Low German wrangeln to dispute, related to Middle Low German wrangen to struggle, wrestle, and wringen to WRING. —n. 1547, from the verb. —wrangler n. About 1515, person who wrangles; formed from English wrangle + *-er*¹. The sense of a person in charge of horses or cattle, herder, is first recorded in 1888.

wrap v. About 1320 wrappen to swathe, envelop, enfold, of uncertain origin. —n. About 1412 wrappe a wrapper or covering; from the verb. —wrapper n. About 1460 wrappere, formed from Middle English wrappen to wrap + -ere -er¹.

wrath n. Before 1200 wraththe; later wrath (before 1300); developed from Old English wræththu (about 950), derived from wreak v. Probably before 1200 wreken avenge; developed from Old English wrecan to drive, drive out, punish, avenge (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian wreka to punish, avenge, Old Saxon wrekan, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch wreken, Old High German rehhan (modern German rächen), Old Icelandic reka (earlier wreka) to drive, push, avenge, and Gothic wrikan persecute, from Proto-Germanic wrekanan*.

wrāth angry; see WROTH. —wrathful adj. Before 1300, formed from Middle English wrath + -ful.

The meaning of inflict or cause damage, destruction, etc. (1817), developed from the sense of inflict or take vengeance (about 1489).

wreath n. Probably before 1350 wrethe twisted or wreathed band; developed from Old English (about 1000) wriþa (from Proto-Germanic wriþōn*), related to wriþan to twist, WRITHE. The meaning of ring or garland of flowers is first recorded in 1563. —wreath v. 1530, in part a back formation from wrethen, past participle of wriþe to twist or turn, and in part from wreath, n.

wreck n. 1228 wrek goods cast ashore after a shipwreck, flotsam; borrowed through Anglo-French wrec, from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rek wreck, flotsam, from older wrek*, related to reka to drive, push; see WREAK).

The meaning of a shipwreck is first recorded in 1463, and that of a wrecked ship, before 1500. —v. Before 1400 wrekken to cast ashore; from the noun. The meaning of destroy, ruin, is first recorded in 1510. —wreckage n. 1837, formed from English wreck, v. + -age.

wren n. Old English (before 1100) wrenna; earlier (with metathesis of e and n) werna (before 800); of uncertain origin, but probably cognate with Old High German rentilo wren, and Icelandic rindill.

wrench v. Probably before 1200 wrenchen, developed from Old English (about 1050) wrencan to twist; cognate with Old High German and modern German renken to twist (from Proto-Germanic wrānkijanan*). —n. violent twist or twisting pull. About 1460, apparently from the verb. A tool with jaws for turning is first recorded in 1794.

wrest v. Probably before 1200 wresten, developed from Old English (before 1000) wræstan to twist, wrench (from Proto-Germanic wraistijanan*); related to wrist WRIST, and Dutch gewricht joint. Old English wræstan is cognate with Old Icelandic reista to wring, wrest. —n. Before 1325, from the verb.

wrestle v. Before 1250 wrestlen, developed from Old English wræstlian (implied about 890 in wræstlung a contention); frequentative form of wræstan to WREST; for suffix compare -LE³. —n. 1593, from the verb.

wretch n. Probably before 1200 wrecche, developed from Old English wrecca wretch, stranger, exile (about 725, in Beowulf); related to wrecan to drive out, punish; see WREAK. Old English wrecca is cognate with Old Saxon wrekkio exile, and Old High German recho, reckio (modern German Recke warrior, hero), from Proto-Germanic wrekkjōn*. The spelling with t (from the 1400's) is a spelling convention. —wretched adj. Probably before 1200 wrecchede; from Middle English wrecche wretch + -ede -ed².

wriggle v. Before 1398 wrigglen; cognate with Middle Low German wriggelen to wriggle, West Frisian wriggelje, dialectal Norwegian rigla, and perhaps related to Old English wrigian to turn, incline, go forward; see WRY; for suffix see -LE³. —n. 1709, from the verb.

wright n. (now usually in combinations), as in wheelwright, playwright. Before 1200 wrihte; later wright (before 1325); developed from Old English (about 950) wryhta, variant of earlier wyrhta (perhaps before 695), from wyrcan to WORK. Old English wyrhta (from Proto-Germanic wurHtijōn*) is cognate with Old Frisian wrichta and Old High German wurhto worker.

wring v. About 1300 wringen (past tense wrang or wrong, past participle wrung); developed from Old English (before 899) wringan press, strain, wring (past tense wrang, past participle wrunge); cognate with Old Frisian wringa* to wring, Old Saxon -wringan in ūturingan, Middle Low German wringen, Middle Dutch wringhen (modern Dutch wringen), and Old High German ringen struggle, wrestle, wrest, wring (modern German ringen to wrestle), from Proto-Germanic wrenzanan*. Related to WRANGLE. —n. Before 1425, from the verb. —wringer n. Before 1300, extortioner; formed from Middle English wringen + *-er*¹. The device for squeezing water from clothes is first recorded in 1799.

wrinkle n. 1392 wrynkle ridge, fold; probably developed from the stem of Old English gewrinclod wrinkled, crooked, winding, past participle of gewrinclian to wind, crease, formed from ge- perfective prefix + -wrinclian to wind (from Proto-Germanic wreng-*), related to wrencan to twist, WRENCH; for suffix see -LE³. The meaning of a clever expedient or trick, innovation, is first recorded in 1731–38. —v. Probably about 1425 wrynclen, from the noun.

wrist n. Old English (probably before 940) wrist; cognate with Old Frisian wrist, wirst wrist, Middle Dutch and Middle Low German wrist, Middle High German rist wrist, ankle (modern German Rist instep, wrist), and Old Icelandic rist instep (Norwegian rist), from Proto-Germanic wristiz*; related to Old English wræstan to turn, twist; see WREST.

writ n. Old English (before 900) writ something written, piece of writing (corresponding to Proto-Germanic writa-*), from the past participle stem of writan to WRITE. The meaning of a legal document or instrument is first recorded before 1121.

write v. About 1100 writen; developed from Old English writan to score, outline, draw the figure of (about 725, in Beowulf); later, to set down in writing (832); cognate with Old Frisian writa to write, Old Saxon writan to tear, scratch, write, Old High German rizan to tear, draw (modern German reissen to tear), Old Icelandic rita to score, write (Swedish rita, Norwegian rite draw, scratch), from Proto-Germanic writanan* tear, scratch, and cognate with Gothic writs stroke, letter. —writer n. Old English writere (before 899); formed from writan write + -ere -er¹. writhe v. Probably before 1200 writen, developed from Old English (about 1000) wriþan to twist or bend; earlier, to bind or fetter (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old High German ridan to turn, twist, Old Icelandic riðha (Swedish vrida, Danish vride), from Proto-Germanic wriþanan*. Related to WREATH, WRATH, WROTH. —n. About 1350, from the verb.

wrong adj. Probably before 1200 wrang twisted, crooked, wry; later wrong (before 1250), and before 1325 in the sense of not right, bad, immoral, unjust; borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic rangr; earlier wrangr* crooked, wry, wrong, Danish and Norwegian wrang, Swedish vrång); cognate with Middle Dutch wrangh, wranc acid, tart, Middle Low German wrange sour, bitter, from Proto-Germanic wranǵaz*.

The adjective use is not recorded in Old English (except supposedly in a document in 944). Though probably borrowed from Scandinavian, earlier noun use probably influenced development of the adjective, possibly at first in attributive constructions. —adv. Probably about 1200 wrang, wrong; from the adjective. —n. Probably about 1175 wronge that which is wrong; developed from Late Old English (1067) wrange a wrongful act; later, that which is unjust or improper (before 1100); perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source; see the adjective. —v. Before 1338 wrangen do wrong to; later wrongen (before 1393); from the adjective. —wrongdoer n. (about 1385) —wrongful adj. (about 1311) wroth adj. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English wrāth (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic wraithaz*; cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon wrēth angry, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch wrēt (Dutch wreed cruel), Old High German reid twisted, and Old Icelandic reidhr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish vred); from the same stem as that of the past tense of Old English wriþan to twist, WRITHE. Related to WRATH.

wrought adj. About 1250 wroght, from past participle of Middle English werken, worken to WORK.

wry adj. 1523, twisted (as in to make a wry face); adjective use of Middle English wrien to turn, swerve; developed from Old English (before 899) wrigian to turn, bend, move, go; cognate with Old Frisian wrigia to bow, bend, stoop, Middle Low German wrich twisted, cranky. The meaning of ironic, somewhat twisted (as in wry humor) is first recorded before 1586.

—wry-necked adj. 1596, having a wry or crooked neck; later, afflicted with a stiff neck (1586, in wryneck).

X

X, x n. 1660, unknown quantity; from French; later, in the XYZ Affair in which French emissaries designated as X, Y, and Z negotiated with the United States government (1797).

xenon n. 1898, borrowed from Greek xénōn, neuter of xénos strange.

xenophobia n. 1919 (in 1909 xenophoby); formed from Greek xénos stranger, n. (strange, foreign, adj.) + -phóbīa fear, -PHOBIA. —xenophobic adj. (1912) xerography n. 1948, formed from Greek xēros dry + English suffix -graphy, as in photography. —xerographic adj. 1948, formed on the model of English xerography, from xero- + -graphic.

xerophyte n. 1897, borrowed from French xérophYTE, formed from Greek xēros dry + French -phyte plant, -PHYTE.

Xerox n. 1952, trademark for a xerographic process of photocopying and a machine for photocopying; formed in English from Greek xēros dry, with substitution of -x for -s. —xerox v. 1966, from the noun.

—-xion a suffix used especially in British English for many words leveled in American English to the ending -ction, such as connexion (American English connection) and inflexion (American English inflection). In British English use of -xion is modeled on the Latin original, as in inflexiō (genitive inflexiōnis), while use of the -ction, as in convection, inspection follows the model of Latin in -ctiō (genitive -ctiōnis), and inspectiō (genitive inspectiōnis). Fluxion is a survival of one of the two Latin variants (fluxiō and fluctiō), and complexion, while true to its original form in Latin complexiō is reinforced by English complex. See -TION and -SION.

Xmas n. 1551, formed from X, an abbreviation for Christ (from the Greek letter X chi, representing the first letter of Greek Christós Christ) + (Christ)mas.

X ray n. 1896, partial translation of obsolete German X-Strahlen (X, in the sense of unknown + Strahlen, plural of Strahl ray, beam). The German word was coined in 1895 by Wilhelm Roentgen. —X-ray v. 1899, from X ray.

xylem n. 1875, borrowing of German Xylem, from Greek xýlon wood + -em, as in phloem.

xylophone n. 1866, formed from Greek xýlon wood + English -phone sound.

Y

y Modern English yard, yarn, yarow, etc., developed from Old English words with initial g. In Old English the graphic symbol g (often transcribed as ȝ or some variant of that symbol and known as yogh, especially in Middle English) stood both for our g in got and finger (fingār) and for ȝ in yet (sometimes now transcribed as g). Later in early Middle English the so-called continental form g was used (and reinforced by the French scribes) for the sounds represented by g and also by dg in edge (a complex sound that had already developed in Late Old English or early Middle English, often transcribed with the symbol ȝ for native words). Gradually this symbol took the form of ȝ, representing our sound of y in year, and from the 1200's on this symbol was by degrees, wholly or partially, replaced by y or gh. The sound represented by yogh in words such as knight, night died out in the 1700's, but was also earlier represented by g in Old English and mostly by ȝ in Middle English.

-y¹ a suffix of wide application, forming adjectives from nouns, with the meaning of full of or having (as in bumpy, salty, cloudy), characterized by (as in funny, winty, icy), somewhat (as in chilly), resembling or suggesting (as in sugary); also forming adjectives with the meaning of inclined to (as in curly, sleepy, squeaky, sticky); and occasionally added to other adjectives without a change in meaning (as in stilly, vasty). Middle English -y, developed from Old English -ig; cognate with Gothic -igs, Old Icelandic -igr, and Old High German -ig. See also -EY.

-y² a suffix forming pet names and diminutives, as in Billy, Tommy, daddy, pussy, also informal alterations such as nighty and the plural undies; frequently written -ie (see -IE, also -EY). Middle English -ie, -y, is first recorded (as -ie) in Scottish.

-y³ a suffix forming nouns of condition or quality from adjectives or other nouns (as in victory, jealousy); or nouns showing activity, occupation, place of work, as in carpentry, chandlery, laundry; or with a collective meaning as in soldiery, stationery. Middle English -ie, -ye was usually borrowed through Old French -ie, from Latin -ia. In some words, this -y can denote a single instance or act, as in perjury, remedy, subsidy; this is through Middle English -ie, Anglo-French -ie, from Latin -ium. See also -ACY, -CY, -ERY, -RY (and others), in which -y³ forms the last part of a compound suffix.

-y⁴ a suffix surviving in words such as army, assembly, delivery, deputy; in Middle English it is -e or -ee, borrowed through yacht n. 1557 yeaghe (in Norway yeaghes); 1565 yaucht (in Norway yaucht) a light, fast-sailing ship; probably borrowed from earlier Norwegian jagt (now jakt), from Middle Low German jacht, shortened form of jachtschip, jageschip, literally, ship for chasing (jacht, jage chase, from jagen to chase, hunt, from Old High German jagōn + schip SHIP); Old High German jagōn is from Proto-Germanic jaǵōjanan*. — v. to sail or race in a yacht. 1836, from the noun.

Anglo-French and Old French -é, -ée perfect participle suffix, from Latin -ātum and -āta. Compare -ATE¹.

yak n. 1795, borrowed (with conventional Roman letters) from Tibetan yag.

yam n. 1697 yam; earlier in various spellings adapted from foreign languages (inany, nname 1588; iniamo 1598; igname 1600; inhame 1640); borrowed from earlier Portuguese inhame or Spanish igname, from a West African language (compare Fulani nyami to eat, Twi anyinam species of yam). In American English, the word is possibly a direct borrowing from a West African language, as is probably the case in Caribbean English (Jamaican), in which nyams exists for "yam" after earlier application in various forms nyam to eat, ninyam food, forms; or a form which probably contributed to American use (compare Gullah jambi a reddish sweet potato).

yammer v. 1481 yameren to lament, whine, whimper; probably in part borrowed from Middle Dutch jammeren and possibly an alteration of Middle English yeoumeren to mourn, complain (probably before 1200); developed from Old English geōmrian to lament (about 725, in Beowulf), from geōmor sorrowful; cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German jāmar sorrowful, Middle Low German jamer, jammer sorrow, woe, Middle Dutch jāmer, jammer, and Old Frisian jōmerlik wretched, miserable.

yank v. 1822 (Scottish), of uncertain origin. — n. 1885, sudden pull or tug; earlier, sudden blow, cuff (1818); of uncertain origin.

Yankee n. a nickname, as applied in early quotations: Yankey Duch (1683), Captain Yankey (1684), John Williams, Yankey (1687), also used (1758) as a term of contempt and later as a general term for a native of New England (1765). What the earliest associations were is undecipherable, but the word almost certainly came from the Dutch, whether ultimately from the Flemings is questionable; the name may have been an alteration of Dutch Jan Kees, dialectal variant of Jan Kaas, literally, John Cheese, a nickname for Dutchmen used by Flemings.

yap n. 1603, a yelping dog; probably of imitative origin. The meaning of a snappish bark, yelp, is first recorded in 1826, from the verb. —v. 1668 (implied in yapping), probably of imitative origin similar to that of the noun.

yard¹ n. piece of ground around a house. Before 1325, developed from Old English geard enclosure, garden, court, house, yard (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon gard enclosure, field, house, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch gaard garden, Old High German gart circle, ring, Old Icelandic gardihr yard, court (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish gård), and Gothic gards house, from Proto-Germanic yardaz*. Corresponding related forms are found in Old Frisian garda garden, Old Saxon gardo, Old High German garto (Middle High German garte, modern German Garten) garden, and Gothic garda enclosure. Related to GARDEN. —v. enclose in a yard. 1758, from the noun.

yard² n. measure of length. About 1385 yerd, developed from Old English (Old Mercian) gerd, (West Saxon) gierd rod, stick, measure of length (about 725); cognate with Old Frisian ierde rod, Old Saxon gerdia, Old High German gertia switch, twig (modern German Gerte), from Proto-Germanic jazdijō*. The spelling yard is first recorded in Middle English (probably before 1439). —yardstick n. (1816) yarn n. Before 1325, developed from Old English (about 1000) gearn spun fiber; cognate with Middle Low German garn yarn, Middle Dutch gaern (modern Dutch garen), Old High German garn (modern German Garn), and Old Icelandic garn (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish garn) yarn (from Proto-Germanic jarnan*). —v. tell stories. 1812, from the noun.

yarrow n. 1373 yarowe, developed from Old English (before 800) gearwe; cognate with Middle Dutch garwe, gerwe (modern Dutch gerwe) yarrow, and Old High German garwa, garawa (modern German Garbe), perhaps from Proto-Germanic janwō*.

yaw n. 1546, movement from a straight course; perhaps borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic jaga and Old Danish jæge to drive, chase, Swedish jaga, Norwegian and Danish jage). In the sense of chase, the Scandinavian word probably came from Middle Low German jagen; see YACHT. —v. 1584, probably from the noun.

yawl n. 1670 yall, yale; borrowed from Dutch jol a skiff (found in Middle Dutch jolleken, diminutive form, also Danish jolle and Swedish julle skiff, yawl), from Middle Low German jolle (also found in Low German); of uncertain origin.

yawn v. Probably before 1300 yanen open the mouth wide, gape; later, to yawn from sleepiness, fatigue, etc. (about 1430); alteration of earlier yenen (about 1300), yonen (probably before 1300), which developed from Old English (before 830) ginian, gionian, geonian open the mouth wide, gape (from Proto-Germanic jin-*), and related to gīnan to yawn; cognate with Old Saxon ginōn to yawn, Middle Dutch ghēnen (modern Dutch geeuwen), Old High German ginēn, geinōn (modern German gähnen), and Old Icelandic gīna.

The Middle English forms yenen and yonen were altered to yanen probably by influence of the synonymous Middle English word ganen, which became obsolete in the 1500's. Middle English ganen developed from Old English gānian (from Proto-Germanic gain-*), which is related to Old English gīnan to yawn, and ginian to gape. The spelling yawn (1549), may have been a dialectal development of Middle English yanen(n). —n. 1602, gaping opening; from the verb. The meaning of a yawning is first recorded in 1697.

yaws n. pl. 1679, probably borrowed from Carib yaya, the native name for the disease.

yclept or ycleped adj. Archaic. called, named. Probably before 1300 ycleped; developed from Old English (about 950) geclīpod named, past participle of geclīpan, gecleopian to speak, call (ge- with, together + clīpan, cleopian call out, cry out).

ye¹ pron. pl. Archaic. you. About 1150, developed from Old English gē, the nominative plural of thū THOU (about 725, in Beowulf). Old English gē was an alteration (by influence of the first person plural pronoun wē we) of an earlier form represented by Gothic jūs you (plural). Similarly modified forms are seen in other Germanic languages: Old Frisian gī ye, Old Saxon gī, ge, Middle Dutch gi, ge (modern Dutch gij), Old High German ir, by influence of wir we (modern German ihr), Old Icelandic ēr, by influence of vēr we, and Old Swedish ir (Swedish and Danish I).

ye² an old way of writing the definite article the. Before 1568, graphic alteration of þ, the form in which the was written in Old and Middle English. Printers in the 1500's, who often did not have the runic consonant letter þ (called "thorn") in their fonts, substituted y for it, but this was not intended to be read with the sound associated with y. In modern times ye is frequently used as part of quaintly archaic names of stores, shops, etc.

yea adv. yes. Before 1325 yai, yaa; developed from Old English (West Saxon) gēa, (Anglian) gē so, yes (about 900), an affirmative word found in corresponding forms throughout the Germanic languages, including Old Frisian jē yes, Old Saxon jā, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and modern Dutch ja, Old High German jā (modern German ja), Old Icelandic jā (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish ja), Gothic ja, jai. Compare YES. The spelling yeah is not recorded before 1905. —n. 1228 ya, affirmative statement; from the adverb. The meaning of an affirmative vote or voter is first recorded in 1657.

yea v. Before 1387 iyenen, give birth to (a lamb or kid); developed from Old English geēanian* (ge- with, together + ēanian to yearn). Old English ēanian (from Proto-Germanic azwnōjanan*) is cognate with dialectal Dutch oonen to yearn. —yealing n. 1637, lamb or kid; formed from English yea + -ling.

year n. Before 1325 yeir, yeire, developed from Old English (900–30) gēar year; cognate with Old Frisian gēr year, Old yearn v. Before 1325 yeren, developed from Old English (Mercian) geornan, (West Saxon) giernan to yearn (before 899), from Proto-Germanic jernjanan*. These Old English forms are related to Old English georn eager, desirous, (from Proto-Germanic jernaz*) which is cognate with Old Saxon and Old High German gern eager, willing (modern German gern gladly), Old High German gerōn to desire (modern German begehren), Old Icelandic giarn eager, willing, girma to desire, and Gothic -gairns (as in faihu-gairns money-desiring, covetous), wish. The Germanic forms are all from Proto-Germanic zer-*.

Saxon jār, Middle Dutch jaer (modern Dutch jaar), Old High German jār (modern German Jahr), Old Icelandic ár (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish år), and Gothic jēr, from Proto-Germanic jæran*. —yearling n. 1465; formed from Middle English yeir + -ling. —adj. one year old. 1528; from the noun. —yearly adj. Probably before 1400 yerely; developed from Old English (before 800) gēarlic every year, once a year, year by year; formed from gēar year + -lic -ly².

yeast n. About 1430 yest froth of fermenting beer; developed from Late Old English (about 1000) gist yeast; cognate with Middle Low German gest dregs, dirt, Middle Dutch ghist yeast (modern Dutch gist), Middle High German jest foam (modern German Gischt), Old High German jesan, gesan to ferment (modern German gären), and Old Icelandic jöstr yeast (Swedish jäst). —yeasty adj. 1598, swelling, frothy; formed from English yeast + *-y*¹.

yell v. Probably about 1200 yellen to cry out loud, shout; developed from Old English (Mercian) gellan, (West Saxon) giellan (before 1000); cognate with Middle Low German gellen, gillen to yell, Middle Dutch ghellen (modern Dutch gillen), Old High German gellan (modern German gellen), and Old Icelandic gjalla (Norwegian gjalle, Danish gjalde resound, ring). The Germanic forms are from Proto-Germanic jelnanan*, an extended form of the root found in Old English galan to sing, modern English -gale in nightingale, Old Icelandic -gal in hana-gal cockcrow, and Old Saxon, Middle Dutch, and Old High German galm outcry. —n. About 1375, (Scottish); from Middle English yellen to yell.

yellow adj. About 1380–85 yelowe, yelwe, developed from Old English geolu, geolwe (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Saxon gelo yellow, Middle Dutch ghēle (modern Dutch geel), Old High German gelo (modern German gelb), and Old Icelandic gulr (Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish gul), from Proto-Germanic zelwaz*. —n. About 1390 yellow, from the adjective. —yellowish adj. 1379, formed from Middle English yellow yellow + *-ish*¹.

yelp v. Probably before 1200 yelpen to boast; developed from Old English (Anglian) gelpan, (West Saxon) gielpen to boast (about 725, in Beowulf), from Proto-Germanic zelpanan*. The Old English forms are cognate with Old Saxon galpōn to cry aloud, boast, Old High German gelp outcry, revelry, Old Icelandic gjalpa to yelp, gjalp boasting, and related to Old English gielp pride, boasting. The meaning of make a quick, sharp bark or cry (1553) is probably from the noun. —n. Probably about 1200 yelp a boasting; developed from Old English gielp pride, boasting (about 725, in Beowulf). The meaning of a quick, sharp bark or cry is first recorded in 1500–20.

yen¹ n. unit of money in Japan. 1875, borrowed from Japanese yen, from Chinese yüan round, round object, circle, dollar.

yen² n. sharp desire or hunger. 1906, earlier yin intense craving for opium (1876); probably borrowed from Chinese (Cantonese) yan craving. —v. 1919, from the noun.

yeoman n. Probably before 1300 yoman high-ranking servant or attendant; of uncertain origin; perhaps a contraction of youngman person in early manhood (1052, also found in Old English iunge men, 963–84); later, a servant or attendant (before 1376); or English gingra (modern English younger, n.) follower, disciple, vassal (before 899); a form developed from Old English gēaman*, geāman; borrowed from Old Frisian gāman villager, and paralleling the sense in Middle English of a commoner or countryman who cultivates his own land (before 1387). The connection between the Old Frisian and possible Old English forms is reinforced by comparing the first element of Old English gēaman* with the second element of Sūthri-gēa Southern district. Old English -gēa district, village, is thus cognate with Old Frisian gā, gē, Old Saxon gā, gō, Old High German gewi, gouwi (modern German Gau), and Gothic gawi region, district, from Proto-Germanic zaujan*.

The sense of a petty officer in the navy in charge of supplies appeared in 1669. The phrase yeoman's service, meaning good, efficient service, is first found in 1602.

yep adv. 1897, alteration of yes; possibly by influence of earlier NOPE, or formed by parallel process of closing the lips emphatically.

-yer a variant form of -IER after a vowel or w, as in lawyer, sawyer.

yes adv. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (before 899) gise, gese so be it!, probably formed from gēa, gē so, see YEA + sī be it!, a form used as the third person singular imperative of bēon to BE. —n. 1712, from the adverb.

yesterday adv. About 1250 yisterdai, developed from Old English (about 950) geostran dæg, a compound of geostran yesterday (about 725, in Beowulf) and dæg DAY, parallel to Gothic gis-tradagis tomorrow. Old English geostran is cognate with Middle Low German gister yesterday, Middle Dutch ghisteren (modern Dutch gister, gisteren), Old High German gestaron, gestren (modern German gestern), from Proto-Germanic gestra-*. —n. Before 1300 yisterdai; developed from Old English geostran dæg. —yesteryear n. 1870, loan translation of French antan (from Vulgar Latin anteannum* the year before).

yet adv. Probably before 1200, developed from Old English (about 1000) gēt, gieta till now, thus far; earlier, at last, ultimately (before 899); and besides, also (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian ieta, eta, ita yet. —conj. Before 1200, nevertheless, though, but; from the adverb.

yeti n. 1937, legendary apelike creature of the Himalayas, also known as abominable snowman; borrowed from Tibetan yeh-teh small manlike animal.

yew n. Before 1325 ew, about 1450 yew; developed from Old English (before 800) īw, ēow yew; cognate with Middle Low German and Middle Dutch īwe, īewe yew (modern Dutch ijf, influenced by French if), Old High German īwa (modern German Eibe), and Old Icelandic īr yew or bow, from Proto-Germanic īwa-*, īwō.

Yiddish n. 1875, borrowed from Yiddish yidish, from Middle High German jüdisch Jewish, from jude Jew, from Old High German judo, from Latin Jūdaeus JEW; for suffix see -ISH¹.

yield v. Before 1325 yelden, yeilden to pay, repay, return, produce, surrender; developed from Old English (Anglian) geldan to pay, (West Saxon) gielðan (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian gelda be worth, be valid, concern, Old Saxon geldan, Middle Dutch ghelden (modern Dutch gelden), Old High German geltan (modern German gelten), Old Icelandic gjalda (Norwegian gjelde, Swedish gälda, Danish gælde), and Gothic -gildan (in compounds forigildan, usgildan to compensate), from Proto-Germanic zeldanan*. —n. Before 1121 yild payment; developed from Old English gielð, from gielðan to pay. Old English gielð is cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon geld payment, Middle Low German and Middle Dutch gelt (modern Dutch geld money), Old High German gelt (modern German Geld money), Old Icelandic gjald, and Gothic gild tax. The action of yielding or producing, production, produce, is first recorded in Middle English about 1450.

yip v. 1903, possibly from dialectal English yip to cheep like a bird (before 1825), from Middle English yippen (1440); of imitative origin. —n. 1911, from the verb.

—yl a suffix used in chemistry in naming radicals acting like a simple element, as in ethyl, propyl. Borrowed from French -yle, in benzoyl (1832), from Greek hylē wood, material, matter.

yodel v. 1827, borrowed from German jodeln, from dialectal German jo an exclamation of joy; of imitative origin. —n. 1849, from the verb.

yoga n. 1820, system of Hindu philosophy that seeks union with the Supreme Spirit; borrowed from Hindi yoga, from Sanskrit yōga-s, literally, union, yoking. —yogi n. 1619, person who practices yoga; borrowed from Hindi yogī, from Sanskrit, from yōga-s yoga.

yogurt n. 1625 yoghurd; later yogourt (1687); borrowed from Turkish yogurt (with g unpronounced so that the English word constitutes a kind of spelling pronunciation).

yoke n. About 1325 yock, about 1340 yoke; developed from Old English (before 899) geoc yoke, (figurative) heavy burden, oppression, servitude; earlier geoht a pair of draft animals (688–95); cognate with Old Saxon juk yoke, Middle Dutch joc, juc (modern Dutch juk), Old High German joh (modern German Joch), Old Icelandic ok (Swedish ok, Norwegian åk, Danish åg), and Gothic juk, from Proto-Germanic jukan*. —v. Probably before 1200 yeoken, about 1400 yoken; developed from Old English geocian (before 1000), from geoc yoke, n.

yokel n. 1812, origin uncertain (perhaps borrowed from dialectal German Jokel disparaging name for a farmer; originally, diminutive of Jakob; compare Rube in English).

yolk n. Before 1325 yelke; later yolke (before 1398); developed from Old English (before 1000) geolca, geoloca, geoleca yolk; literally, the yellow part, from geolu YELLOW.

yon adj., pron. yonder. About 1325, developed from Old English (before 899) geon, adj., that (over there), perhaps from Proto-Germanic jenaz*; cognate with Old Frisian gēna, iēna that (over there), Old High German enēr, jenēr (modern German jener), Old Icelandic enn, inn the (definite article), Gothic jains that (perhaps from Proto-Germanic jainaz*). —adv. About 1475, shortened form of yonder and of yond (before 1122; developed from Old English, before 899, geond; see YONDER).

yonder adv. within sight, but not near, that over there. Before 1325, extended form of earlier yond, developed from Old English (before 899) geond, adv. and prep., beyond, yonder; cognate with Middle Low German gint, genten beyond, Dutch ginds, and Gothic jaind, jainar yonder, there, related to jains that; see YON.

yore n. (in the phrase of yore), of long ago, in the past, formerly. Probably about 1350, from earlier yore, adv., of old, long ago (about 1250); developed from a variant geāra of Old English gēara, adv., of yore (about 725, in Beowulf); originally, in the meaning “of years,” genitive plural of gēar YEAR.

you pron. pl. or sing. Before 1325 yow, developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) ēow, the dative and accusative form of gē YE¹. Old English ēow (from Proto-West Germanic iuwiz*) is cognate with Old Frisian iuwe, iue you (dative and accusative of gī ye), Old Saxon iu, Middle Dutch and modern Dutch u, and Old High German iu (dative of ir ye). A parallel formation is found in Old Icelandic ydhr (dative and accusative of ēr ye), and Gothic izwis (dative and accusative of jūs ye). Between 1300 and 1400 you began to replace the nominative form ye, and became established before 1700. During the 1300's you also appeared as a substitute for the singular nominative thou, being originally used as a sign of respect in addressing a superior, but later used in speaking to an equal, and ultimately as the general form of address. Compare THOU.

young adj. Before 1325 yong, developed from Old English geong youthful, young (about 725, in Beowulf); cognate with Old Frisian and Old Saxon jung young, Middle Dutch jonc (modern Dutch jong), Old High German junc, jung (modern German jung), Old Icelandic ungr (Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish ung), and Gothic jungs, from Proto-Germanic jūnǵas*, earlier juwunās*. —youngster n. 1589, formed from English young, adj. + -ster.

your adj. Probably before 1300, developed from Old English (about 725, in Beowulf) ēower, the genitive form of gē YE¹, and cognate with Old Frisian iuwer your, Old Saxon iuwar, iwar, Old High German iuwēr (modern German euer), Old Icelandic ydhar, ydhar, and Gothic izvar; derived from the Germanic base represented by Old English ēow YOU. —yours pron. Before 1325, from the adjective; formed from English your + -s, as in hers, ours, theirs. — yourself pron. Before 1325. The plural yourselves is first recorded in 1523, providing an unambiguous form for the plural use.

youth n. Probably about 1150 youhthe; developed from Old English geoguth youth (about 725, in Beowulf); related to geong YOUNG, and cognate with Old Frisian jogethe youth, Old Saxon juguth, Middle Dutch joghet, jöghet (modern Dutch jeugd), and Old High German jugund (modern German Jugend).

The formation is analyzed as young + *-th*¹ (actually found in youngth, 1303), from Old English geong(u) + *-th*¹. Old English geoguth, iuguth, earlier iugūth*, is from Proto-West Germanic jugūnthiz*, altered by influence of dūzunthiz* ability (Old English duguth) from Proto-Germanic juwūnthiz*. — youthful adj. 1561, of youth or the young, juvenile; formed from English youth + -ful.

yowl v. to howl. Probably about 1200 yuhelen; later youlen (before 1382); probably of imitative origin. — n. About 1450 yowle; from the verb.

yo-yo n. 1915, probably borrowed from a language of the Philippines. Apparently an earlier name for the toy was bandalore (1824), but it was from American contact in the Philippines that first commercial development was established. The figurative sense of fluctuating or vacillating is first recorded in 1960, from the earlier sense of up-and-down movement (1932).

ytterbium n. 1879, New Latin, from Ytterby, a town in Sweden where the element was discovered, + -ium.

yttrium n. 1822, New Latin, from earlier yttria (1800, a heavy white powder, the oxide of yttrium) + -ium.

yucca n. 1664, New Latin Jucca genus name of the plant, from Spanish yuca, of uncertain origin.

Yule or yule n. Probably about 1200 yole; later yoole (probably about 1450); developed from Old English geōl, geōla Christmas day or Christmastide (before 899); probably borrowed from a Scandinavian source (compare Old Icelandic jöl, pl., a heathen feast lasting twelve days; later in the meaning of Christmas, Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish jul Christmas). An Old English (Anglian) giuli the name of December and January (726) corresponds to Old Icelandic ýlir the Yule month (middle of November to middle of December), and Gothic jiuleis, in fruma jiuleis November. — yuletide n. (about 1475) yuppie n. 1984, formed from the initial letters of y(oung) u(rban) p(rofessional) + suffix -ie; influenced by yippie a politically active hippie (1968); formed from the initials of Y(outh) I(nternational) P(arty) + -ie, after hippie.

Z

zany n. 1588, borrowed from Middle French zani, from dialectal Italian (Venetian) zanni, familiar variant of Giovanni John, a stock character in Italian farce. — adj. ridiculous. 1616, from the noun.

zap v. 1942, kill, hit; a word suggestive of the destructive force of a ray gun, as used in the comic strip “Buck Rogers” or of a blow delivered by a heavy club, as in the comic strip “B.C.” Later meanings include to move fast (1968) and to erase electronically (1982).

zeal n. Before 1382 zeel, zele; borrowed (probably with influence of earlier zealot) from Old French zel, and directly from Latin zēlus zeal, from Greek zēlos jealousy, fervor, zeal. — zealot n. Before 1325 zelote member of a militant Jewish sect which fiercely resisted the Romans in Palestine; borrowed from Late Latin zēlōtēs, from Greek zēlōtēs a zealot, from zēlōn be zealous, from zēlos zeal, earlier and dialectal zēlos. — zealous adj. 1526, full of zeal; borrowed from Medieval zebra n. 1600, borrowing of Italian zebra, and perhaps reinforced by Spanish zebra, zebro (now cebra), found also in Portuguese as zevra and zevro, originally in the sense of a wild ass; uncertain origin.

Latin zelosus full of zeal, from Latin zēlus zeal; for suffix see -OUS.

Zen n. 1727 Sen; later Zen (1834); borrowed from Japanese zen, and perhaps from Chinese chán, from Sanskrit dhyāna-m meditation, thought, sense.

zenith n. Before 1387 cinit; later senith (1391); borrowed from Old French cenit, cenith, and directly from Medieval Latin cenit, possibly cenith, zenith, from Arabic, transliterated as samt in samt ar-rās zenith; literally, the way over the head. Compare AZIMUTH, which retained the m found in the transliteration from Arabic.

The spelling zenith is first recorded in English in 1549 and the sense of highest point or state, acme, 1610.

zephyr n. 1369 Zephrus (personification of the west wind); found also in Old English (about 1000) as zeffenus; borrowed from Latin zephyrus, from Greek zēphyrōs the west wind, probably related to zōphos the west, the dark region, darkness, gloom. The spelling zephyr is first recorded in English in 1598. The meaning of a mild breeze is first recorded about 1610.

zeppelin n. 1900, borrowing of German Zeppelin, shortened form of earlier Zeppelinschiff (Zeppelin ship) and Zeppelinkreuzer (Zeppelin cruiser), in allusion to Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin, who perfected this type of airship.

zero n. 1604, borrowed from French zéro, and directly from Italian zero, alteration of Medieval Latin zephirum, from Arabic, transliterated as ṣifr empty, null, cipher, translating Sanskrit śūnya-m empty place, desert, naught, a cipher, neuter of śūnyā-s empty. Arabic numerals are written from left to right (contrary to the practice of Arabic writing) by influence of the Indian origins of our number system. —adj. 1810, from the noun. —v. 1913, to adjust (an instrument or device) to zero point, take aim on a target; now especially in the phrase zero in on (1950, from earlier zero in, 1944); from the noun.

zest n. 1674, orange or lemon peel; borrowed from French zeste, of uncertain origin. The sense of something that adds flavor or relish is first recorded in English in 1709; and that of keen enjoyment, in 1791. —v. 1704, from the noun in the sense of add flavoring to that add a piquant quality to is first recorded in English in 1737.

zigzag n. 1712, borrowing of French zigzag, from German Zickzack, possibly a reduplication of Zacke tooth, prong. First found in English in reference to the laying out of garden paths. —adv. About 1730, from the noun. —v. 1777, from the noun.

zilch n. 1966, nil, zero; earlier, meaningless speech, gibberish (1960); and found in Mr. Zilch an indefinite nickname (1931); possibly from association with earlier *zip*² and nil.

zinc n. 1651 zinke; 1813 zinc; borrowed from German Zink, related to Zinke, Zinken prong, point, from Old High German zinko; perhaps so called from the form zinc assumes after cooling. The spelling with -c was influenced by French zinc. —v. 1841, from the noun.

zinnia n. 1767, formed in allusion to Johann Gottfried Zinn, German botanist.

Zion n. Old English (about 1000) Sion; borrowed from Late Latin Siōn, from Greek Seōn, from Hebrew šīyyōn, originally, a hill. —Zionism n. 1896, movement to establish a Jewish national state in Palestine; formed from English Zion + -ism. —Zionist n. 1896, formed from English Zion + -ist.

zip¹ v. move rapidly. 1852, imitative of the sound of an object passing rapidly through the air or of a fabric being torn. —n. 1875, from the verb or of imitative origin similar to that of the verb. The sense of energy, force, impetus, is first recorded in 1900. —zippy adj. 1904, formed from English zip, n. or v. + *-y*¹.

zip² n. zero, nothing (often referring to a score in sports). About 1900, a mark or grade of zero (used among students); of uncertain origin.

zip³ v. to fasten or unfasten with a zipper. 1932, back formation from zipper. —zipper n. 1925, probably formed from English *zip*¹, v. + *-er*¹, a trademark Zipper, registered in 1925 for a kind of boot with such a closing, apparently not specifically for the fastener.

zip code 1963, from ZIP, acronym for Z(one) I(mprovement) P(lan), the United States Postal Service system of numerical coding by zones for mail sorting.

zircon n. 1797, earlier jargon, circon (1794); probably borrowed from French zircon, jargon, and German Zirkon, from Arabic zaraqūn, from Persian zargūn; literally, golden, from zar gold, from Avestan zari- gold-colored.

zirconium n. 1808, New Latin; formed from zircon + -ium.

zither n. 1850, borrowing of German Zither, from Latin cithara, from Greek kithará lyrelike instrument; apparently a modification (known among the Tyrolese in the Austrian Alps) of the cithara, an ancient lyre of seven to eleven strings.

zo- the form of zoo- before vowels, as in Paleozoic.

zodiac n. 1391 zodiak, borrowed from Old French zodiaque, and probably directly from Latin zōdiacus the zodiac, of the zodiac, from Greek zōidiakós the zodiac, of the zodiac, of the figures (in reference to the zōidiakós kýklos circle of figures that make up the zodiacal signs), from zōidion zodiacal sign; originally, sculptured figure (of an animal), diminutive of zōion animal, living being. —zodiacal adj. (1576) zombie n. 1871, borrowed from a Bantu language of West Africa; compare Kikongo, Kimbundu, and Tshiluba nzambi god, Kikongo zumbi fetish. The sense of a stupefied, stupid, or lethargic person, is first recorded in 1946.

zone n. 1393–94, any of the five great divisions (torrid zone, frigid zone, etc.) of the earth's surface; borrowed from Latin zōna geographic belt, celestial zone or band, from Greek zōnē (earlier zōsnā*), originally, girdle, belt, from zōnnýnai to gird. The meaning of any region or area set off from adjacent regions is first recorded in 1822. —v. 1705 (implied in zoned), from the noun. —zonal adj. 1867, borrowed from Late Latin zōnalis of a zone, from Latin zōna zone; for suffix see *-al*¹. —zoning n. 1820, division into particular times or areas.

zoo n. About 1847, shortened form of the Zoological in Zoological Gardens of the London Zoological Society, established in 1828, to house the Society's collection of wild animals.

zoo- a combining form meaning animal, living being, as in zoology, zooplankton. Borrowed from later Greek zōo-, from Greek zōio, combining form of zōion animal.

zoology n. 1669, borrowed from New Latin zoologia science and study of animals, from modern Greek zōiologia, originally, science of pharmaceuticals derived from animals (Greek zōion animal + -logia -logy). —zoological adj. 1807, formed from zoom v. 1886, travel or move with a humming or buzzing sound; later, move speedily along (1924), often with an abrupt upward movement as by aircraft (1918, from the noun); imitative of the sound. The sense of moving quickly closer to something as an aircraft does when zooming down or up, is first recorded in 1918. —n. 1917, act of zooming; from the verb. The use in photography as in zoom lens (1936), developed from zooming in an aircraft, and is first recorded in 1934.

English zoology + -ical. —zoologist n. 1663, formed from New Latin zoologia zoology + English -ist.

zounds interj. 1600, reduction of obsolete God's wounds!, an oath. A similar formation is found in zooks (1634, shortened form of God's sokings 1577). While God's sokings is obsolete (the meaning of sokings is not even known today), its modern form Gadzooks (1694) was familiar up into the 1930's and 1940's.

zucchetto n. 1853, borrowed from Italian zucchetta cap, small gourd, from zucca gourd, head, of uncertain origin.

zucchini n. 1929 succini; 1945 zuchini; borrowed from Italian, plural of zucchini, diminutive of zucca squash, gourd.

zwieback n. 1894, borrowing of German Zwieback biscuit, from zwie-, combining form of zwei two + backen to bake; loan translation of Italian biscotto biscuit. A similar formation in English is found in twice-baked potatoes.

zygote n. 1891, cell formed by the union of two gametes; borrowed from Greek zygōtós yoked, from zygōn to yoke, from zygón yoke.

zymurgy n. 1868, branch of chemistry dealing with fermentation; formed in English from Greek zýmē leaven + -ourgā a working, from érgon work.

GLOSSARY OF LANGUAGE NAMES AND LINGUISTIC TERMS

This glossary is a selected list of language names and linguistic terms that appear in the body of the Dictionary. The definitions identify a language or a language process in the context of a given etymology.

ablative a case in Latin and some other inflected languages which expresses the source or place of an action or the instrument or means with which it is carried out.

ablaut a systematic vowel alternation occurring in the root of words, especially in Indo-European languages, usually with corresponding variation of meaning, as in English ring, rang, rung. Also called GRADATION.

Abnaki the Algonquian language of a North American Indian people that lived mostly in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and eastern Canada.

absolute 1 (of a verb) used without an expressed object, as give in the sentence Please give generously. 2 (of an adjective or pronoun) having its noun understood, as younger in the sentence Older pupils should help the younger, and ours in His house is larger than ours.

abstracted (of a form) taken from all or part of an older form but used in a different or broader range of contexts, as -aholic (abstracted immediately from workaholic but ultimately from alcoholic), -athon (abstracted from marathon), mini- (abstracted from miniature), and -burger (abstracted from hamburger).

accent 1 = stress. 2 a designation of vowel stress, as in Spanish, vowel quality, as in French, or vowel quantity, as in Hungarian. 3a a distinctive regional or national way of pronouncing a given language, as in an Irish accent. b a foreign accent, as in to have an accent. 4 the phonetic features of a language influencing a learner's second language, as in a French or Russian accent.

accusative a grammatical case used as the direct object of the verb, as the subject of an infinitive, or as the object of a preposition to indicate the goal of action or motion toward.

acronym a word formed from the first letters or syllables of other words, as laser, quasar, radar, and scuba.

active showing the subject of a verb as acting. Example: The verb broke in He broke the dish is in the active voice. Compare passive.

Afar A Cushitic language spoken in Ethiopia.

affix a prefix, suffix, or infix.

Afghan = Pashto.

Afrikaans a Germanic language of South Africa, developed from the Dutch of the colonists who settled there in the 1600's, formerly called South African Dutch.

Afro-Asiatic a language family of northern Africa, extending into Saudi Arabia, Syria, and Iraq. Branches of Afro-Asiatic include Semitic, Berber, Cushitic, and Egyptian.

Akan a Kwa language spoken in Ghana and other parts of western Africa.

Akkadian the eastern division of the Semitic languages, spoken in ancient Mesopotamia, and including Babylonian and Assyrian.

Albanian the Indo-European language of Albania, not closely related to other Indo-European languages. It has two dialects, Geg and Tosk, and a large number of loanwords from Latin, Greek, Slavic, and Turkish.

Aleut the language of a people inhabiting the Aleutian Islands and the Alaska Peninsula, distantly related to Eskimo, and a branch of the Eskimo-Aleut language family.

Algonquian or Algonkian the most widespread family of North American Indian languages, including Abnaki, Cheyenne, Micmac, and Ojibwa.

Altaic a language family of the Turkic, Mongolian, and Tungusic groups, spoken over most of Asia, and often combined with Uralic to form a hypothetical Ural-Altaic family.

alteration a change in the form of a word or phrase, usually as a result of the influence of a phonetically or semantically similar word. Example: English crayfish is an alteration (influenced by fish) of Middle English crevis, borrowed from Middle French crevice.

American English the form of English spoken and written in the United States.

American Spanish the group of Spanish dialects spoken in South America, Central America, and some islands of the West Indies (Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic).

Amharic a Semitic language of the Ethiopic branch; the official and literary language of Ethiopia since the 1300's.

analogy the process by which words or grammatical forms are made to conform to similar words or forms or to some regular pattern in the language. Analogy has led to the regularization of inflectional endings (such as -ed for the past and past participle of verbs) in English. New words are often formed by analogy, as sexism and sexist on the model of racism and racist.

Anatolian an Indo-European language or group of languages spoken in ancient Anatolia, including Hittite.

Anglian the Old English dialect of the Angles, originally spoken in Mercia and Northumbria.

Anglicize to make into English in form or pronunciation, as covet, buffoon, and jail, originally French words. —Anglicization. See also NATURALIZE.

Anglo-French the dialect of French introduced into England mainly by the Normans (French-speaking descendants of Scandinavians who settled in France in the 800's) following their conquest of England in 1066. Anglo-French was used chiefly by the governing classes through the 1300's. Also called ANGLONORMAN and NORMAN-FRENCH.

Anglo-Indian a dialect of British English spoken in India, containing many words taken directly from the languages of India, especially Hindi.

Anglo-Latin the form of Medieval Latin used in England during the Middle English period.

Anglo-Norman = Anglo-French.

Anglo-Saxon = Old English.

Annamese = Vietnamese.

aorist a verbal aspect in Greek and some other inflected languages showing that an action took place in the past without indicating whether the act was completed, repeated, or continued.

Apache the Athapaskan language of a native American people living in the southwestern United States.

aphesis the loss of a short, unaccented vowel at the beginning of a word, as in possum for opossum. Aphesis is a specialized variety of a more general phonetic process, apheresis, which is the omission of one or more sounds or words from the beginning of an utterance, as in 'em for them and most for almost ("most all of 'em are here"). —aphetic having to do with or resulting from apheresis. Compare APOCOPE, SYNCOPHE.

apocope the loss of a sound or syllable at the end of a word, as in the pronunciation of old as (ôl) or child as (chîl). Compare SYNCOPHE.

Arabic the Semitic language of the Arabs, now spoken chiefly in the Arabian Peninsula, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, Egypt, and North Africa.

Aramaic a Semitic language or group of dialects dominant in the Near East from the 300's B.C. through the 500's A.D. Aramaic includes Syriac and was the language spoken in Palestine at the time of Christ. It is still spoken in parts of Iraq, Iran, and Syria.

Arawakan a family of South American Indian languages, including the Arawak language, now found in parts of northern South America (Colombia, Venezuela, Guyana, Brazil), but formerly spoken in the West Indies and a part of southern Florida.

Armenian the Indo-European language of Armenia and parts of Georgia, Azerbaijan, and Iran, not closely related to any of the other Indo-European languages.

aspect a category of verb forms which express action or state as beginning, ending, continuing, or repeating, rather than indicating time, as do tense forms. See, for example, AORIST, FREQUENTATIVE, INCEPTIVE, PERFECTIVE.

assimilation a change in a speech sound making it like a similar sound nearby. Example: The Latin prefix ad- becomes ab- before b by assimilation of the d to the following consonant, as in abbreviāre (ad- + breviāre shorten). Compare DISSIMILATION.

Assyrian the ancient Semitic language of Assyria.

Athapaskan or Athapaskan a family of North American Indian languages extending from Alaska and Canada to Mexico, and including Navaho and Apache.

Attic the ancient Greek dialect of Attica, whose capital was Athens. Attic became the literary language of Greece.

attributive placed immediately before a noun and serving as a modifier. Highway in the phrase highway patrol is an attributive noun.

augmentative a form of a word expressing largeness or bigness, usually by the addition of a suffix. Example: Italian trombone (the musical instrument) is in origin an augmentative of tromba trumpet.

Australian a collective name for the aboriginal languages of Australia, especially Aranda (or Arunta) and Worora, having no known relationship to other languages.

Australian English the form of English spoken and written in Australia.

Austronesian a probable linguistic family of the Pacific, comprising the Indonesian, Polynesian, Melanesian, and Micronesian languages. Also called MALAYO-POLYNESIAN.

Avestan the Iranian language in which the Avesta, the sacred book of the Zoroastrian religion, is written, closely related to Old Persian.

Aymara a group of South American Indian languages of Bolivia and Peru, related to Quechua.

back formation a new word formed by analogy from an older word on the mistaken assumption that the older word is a derivative of the new word, as in escalate formed from escalator, burgle from burglar, typewrite from typewriter, and kudo from kudos. Compare CLIPPED FORM and APOCOPE.

Baltic the Indo-European ancestor of the languages of the eastern Baltic region, including Lithuanian, Latvian, or Lettish, and Old Prussian (now extinct).

Bantu a major branch of the Niger-Congo language family, consisting of languages found through most of Africa south of the Equator, including Swahili, Mbundu, Sotho, Setswana, Xhosa, and Zulu.

base = root.

Basque the language of the Basques, an ancient people inhabiting the western Pyrenees, in southern France and northern Spain. Basque is not related to any other known language. Also called EUSKARA or EUSKERA.

Belarusian = Belorussian.

Belorussian the Slavic language of Belarus. Also spelled BYELORUSSIAN.

Berber a Hamitic language spoken in North Africa, especially in Morocco and Algeria. Berber still has some words of Latin origin traced to the period of Roman domination of North Africa.

blend 1 a word made by combining elements of two words, often by fusion of a letter or syllable they have in common. Examples: chortle, a blend of chuckle and snort; motel, a blend of motor and hotel; smog, a blend of smoke and fog. Compare fusion. 2 a combination of consonant sounds represented by two or more letters, as bl in blend. Compare DIGRAPH, DIPHTHONG.

borrow to take (a word, phrase, meaning, etc.) from another language, as basis from Latin basis, bassoon from French basson, and bas-relief from Italian basso-rilievo. Compare DEVELOP, ANGLICIZE, NATURALIZE. —borrowing a word taken from another language. Borrowings may retain their original form (adoption) and retain their foreign spelling (as coup d'état) or retain only part of their original form (adaptation or derivation) and take on the characteristics of a native English word (as cab, cabbage, coleslaw, etc.). Also called LOAN WORD. Another form of borrowing is a translation of a foreign term into the borrowing language (as English superman translating German übermensch). Also called LOAN TRANSLATION.

bound form or morpheme a form which never occurs alone but always as part of a larger unit. Example: The word activation has three bound forms in it — activate-ion, activ-ate, and act-ive. Compare FREE FORM.

Breton the language of Brittany, a Celtic language closely related to Welsh and Cornish, and the only Celtic language now spoken on the European continent.

British English the form of English spoken and written in Great Britain, and to some extent imitated in India, South Africa, and certain other former British colonies.

Brythonic a division of the Celtic languages comprising Welsh, Cornish, and Breton.

Bulgarian the Slavic language of Bulgaria.

Burmese the Tibeto-Burman language of Burma (Myanmar).

Bushman a Khoisan language spoken in Botswana, South-west Africa (Namibia), and parts of South Africa.

Byelorussian = BELORUSSIAN.

calque = LOAN TRANSLATION.

Canadian English the form of English spoken and written by English-speaking Canadians.

Canadian French the form of French spoken and written by French-speaking Canadians. English influence is evident not only in borrowed words but also in loan translation; note the use of bienvenu "welcome" as the answer to merci "thanks" instead of standard French de rien "don't mention it."

Cantonese the dialect of Chinese spoken in the city of Canton (Guangzhou) and the southeastern province of Kwangtung (Guangdong), of which Canton is the capital.

Carib a family of South American Indian languages found in northern South America (Colombia, Venezuela, Guyana, Suriname, and Brazil), in Honduras and Belize, and to a lesser extent the West Indies.

case one of the forms of a noun, pronoun, or adjective used to indicate its relation to other words, usually by the addition of inflectional endings. Latin has six case endings, seven if the locative is considered separately (nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, ablative, and vocative), Greek has five, German four, Old English four and Modern English only the possessive, except for some pronouns, which have three case forms (such as nominative he, objective him, and possessive his).

Castilian = Spanish.

Catalan the Romance language of Catalonia, a region in northeastern Spain, closely related to Provençal. Catalan is also spoken in the Balearic Islands, the area around Perpignan in France, in Andorra, and in the Sardinian city of Alghero.

Caucasian a family of languages spoken in the region of the Caucasus Mountains, between the Black and Caspian seas.

causative a word or form indicating that the subject causes performance of an action. Examples: The prefix en- in enrich is a causative. English lay, v., is the causative of lie, v., to recline.

Celtic a branch of Indo-European that includes Irish, Gaelic, Welsh, Breton, and Manx, and is usually divided into Brythonic and Goidelic.

Cherokee the Iroquoian language of an American Indian people now living mostly in Oklahoma and North Carolina, but originally throughout the southern Appalachians.

Cheyenne the Algonquian language of an American Indian people now living mostly in Oklahoma and Montana, but originally in Minnesota.

Chinese the language of China, comprising a large group of dialects (Cantonese, Fukienese, Hakka, etc.) of which the Beijing dialect, Mandarin, is regarded as standard.

Chinook 1 the language of a North American Indian people living along the Columbia River in the Pacific Northwest. 2 = Chinook jargon.

Chinook jargon a pidgin language based on Chinook and Nootka, with additional English and French elements, used in trading in the Pacific Northwest.

click a speech sound consisting of a stop produced by a sucking action of the tongue against the gums, used especially in the Khoisan languages of southern Africa.

clipped form or word a form or word shortened by dropping syllables, as in quote from quotation, bus from omnibus, deli from delicatessen. Compare BACK FORMATION and APOCOPE.

cognate related by common origin; descended from the same original language, root, or source. English mother, German Mutter, and Dutch moeder are cognate because they are all descended from Proto-Germanic mōdēr*.

coinage an invented word or phrase, usually created for a specific purpose. Jabberwocky and chortle were two of Lewis Carroll's coinages. Compare nonce word. —coined (of a word or phrase) made up or invented for a specific purpose. Nylon was coined by the Du Pont Company.

collocation a group of words commonly used together, as little girl, prevail upon, have a good time. Compare IDIOM.

colloquialism a word, phrase, or other expression used in common, everyday, familiar talk.

combining form a form of a word which is used to combine with other words or other combining forms to make new words, such as astro-, hydro-, multi-, paleo-, semi-, and the like.

comparative the second degree of comparison of an adjective or adverb. Examples: Better is the comparative of good, less or lesser is the comparative of little. Compare POSITIVE, SUPERLATIVE.

compound two or more words combined to form a new word or term with a different meaning. Examples: playground, bookkeeper, high school, post office, go-between, nevertheless, on-again off-again.

conjugation a systematic arrangement of the forms of a verb. Latin verbs, for example, are grouped in four conjugations according to the ending of the infinitive: 1) -āre, 2) -ēre, 3) -ere, and 4) -īre.

contraction 1 a shortened form of a word or words, as English can't or I've, and French des (instead of de les). 2 the process of forming a contraction.

Coptic a Hamitic language developed from ancient Egyptian. The use of Coptic is now confined to rituals of the Coptic Church.

Cornish a Celtic language spoken by the people of Cornwall, England, until the late 1700's.

creole a standard native language or primary language of a community, formed from a mixture of elements from several other languages with which there is intensive contact. A creole was originally a pidgin, often characterized by vocabulary of one language (as French or Portuguese) with simplified morphology and with the structure influenced by other languages (as for example African languages in the case of Haitian Creole and of Cape Verdean). Compare PIDGIN. —creolization the process by which a creole is created out of a pidgin or a mixture of languages in contact.

Creole 1 a dialect of French spoken in southern Louisiana. 2 = Haitian Creole.

Crimean Gothic Germanic language spoken in the Crimea into the 1500's, known from a small group of words and phrases recorded in Constantinople in 1560.

Croatian the form of Serbo-Croatian spoken by Croats and written in the Roman alphabet.

Cushitic a group of Hamitic languages of Ethiopia and eastern Africa, including Somali and Afar.

Czech the West Slavic language of the Czechs, spoken in the Czech Republic.

Danish the Scandinavian language of Denmark.

dative a case in Latin and other inflected languages, showing the indirect object of the verb or preposition. The dative function in English is indicated by word order (as in show him the painting) or a prepositional phrase (as in show the painting to him).

declension the system in inflected languages for giving different forms or endings to nouns, pronouns, or adjectives to show their case, gender, and number.

derive to originate or form a word, especially by adding a prefix or suffix to another word. —derivative a word formed by adding a prefix or suffix to another word. Unkindly is a derivative of unkind; kindly is a derivative of kind.

develop (of a word or form) to be formed from earlier words or elements of the same language or evolve through internal changes from an earlier stage of the language, as a Middle English word from an Old English word. Words which develop within a language are often said to be inherited, as opposed to words borrowed from another language, which often become naturalized.

dialect a distinctive form or variety of a language, usually one spoken in a particular geographical area and differing in some way from the standard or literary form (itself a dialect) of the language. Scottish is a dialect of English. Creole is a dialect of French.

digraph a combination of two letters used to represent a single speech sound (phoneme). Ch in chin, sh in shop, th in with, and ea in eat are digraphs. Compare DIPHTHONG, BLEND.

diminutive a form of a word used to express smallness, usually by the addition of a suffix. Examples: Droplet is a diminutive of drop. Latin capreolus wild goat, roebuck, is a diminutive of caprea wild she-goat.

diphthong a vowel sound (phoneme) made up of two vowel sounds pronounced within a syllable, as the sound of English ou in house, oi in noise, and i in ice. Compare DIGRAPH, BLEND. —diphthongize to change (a vowel or vowels) into a diphthong. The Middle English phoneme /ū/ diphthongized to /ou/ in house.

disassimilation a change in a speech sound in a word making it less like a similar sound in the same word. Example: Latin peregrinus became pelegrin(o) in some of the Romance languages by disassimilation of the first r to l. Compare ASSIMILATION.

Dravidian a family of languages found in southern India, Sri Lanka, and Pakistan, including Tamil and Telugu.

dual a number category indicating two persons or things, used in addition to the singular and plural in certain languages, such as Greek, Old Slavic, and Sanskrit. In grammatical systems having a dual, the plural applies to three or more.

Dutch the West Germanic language of the Netherlands, descended from the Low German dialects of Franks and Saxons.

echoic = imitative.

Egyptian the Hamitic language of the ancient Egyptians. Coptic developed from it.

ending a letter or letters attached to a word or stem to change its meaning, to indicate its grammatical relationship to other words, or to Anglicize a foreign ending in a borrowed word. The adverbial suffix *-ly*¹, the plural inflection *-s*¹, and the Anglicization *-ish*² are common endings in English.

English the West Germanic language of England, including Old English (before 1100), Middle English (about 1100–1475 or 1500), and Modern English (from about 1475 or 1500). Modern English is also spoken in Australia, Canada, India, Ireland, New Zealand, the Republic of South Africa, the United States, and many other countries.

eponym a person from whose name a nation, people, place, or institution derives its name. Examples: Colombia from Colombus, Judea from Judah, Smithsonian from James Smithson, Rhodesia from Cecil Rhodes. —eponymous giving one's name to a nation, people, place, or institution.

Eskimo the language of a people living in Greenland, northern Canada, Alaska, and eastern Siberia, distantly related to Aleut, and a branch of the Eskimo-Aleut family. The name Inuit or Innu is now preferred.

Eskimo-Aleut a family of languages spoken in the most northerly areas of North America, from Greenland to Alaska and into Siberia, along the Arctic coast.

Estonian the Finno-Ugric language of Estonia, closely related to Finnish.

Ethiopic a branch of Semitic that includes Amharic.

Etruscan the language of an ancient people who inhabited Etruria (modern Tuscany) in central Italy and developed a flourishing civilization from about 600 B.C. to 100 B.C. Etruscan influenced Latin, though its origin and relationship to other languages is obscure.

etymon the form of a word from which another or other forms have developed. Example: the immediate etymon of English azure is Old French azur; the ultimate etymon is Persian lāzward.

euphemism a mild or indirect word or expression used as a substitute for one thought to be too direct, harsh, unpleasant, or offensive. Example: Gosh! for God! Compare taboo.

Euskara or Euskera = Basque.

Ewe a Kwa language of western Africa, spoken in Ghana and Togo.

eye dialect a written form suggesting dialectal or nonstandard speech, as wanna for want to, and should of for should have.

Faeroese or Faroese the Scandinavian language of the Faeroe Islands, situated between Norway and Iceland.

family a group of related languages developed from a common language; language family. Some of the largest families of languages are the Indo-European, Afro-Asiatic, Austronesian, Niger-Congo, and Sino-Tibetan.

Farsi = Persian.

Finnish the Finno-Ugric language of Finland.

Finno-Ugric a family of languages of eastern Europe and western Asia that includes Finnish, Estonian, Lapp, and Hungarian.

Flemish the West Germanic language of the people of Flanders, a form of Low German closely related to Dutch.

folk etymology the alteration of an unfamiliar word to make it sound like a familiar one, thus distorting or obscuring its real etymology. Examples: Sparrow-grass, alteration of asparagus; female, alteration of Old French femelle on the analogy of male. Also called POPULAR ETYMOLOGY.

form any of the ways in which a word or morpheme is spelled, pronounced, or inflected.

formative a sound, syllable, or bound morpheme used to form words. Prefixes and suffixes are formatives.

Franconian the West German dialect or dialects spoken by the Franks who lived along the Rhine.

Frankish the West Germanic language spoken in northern Gaul in the 400's and 500's. Many French words derive from Frankish.

free form or morpheme a form which can be used alone as a word with a distinct meaning or meanings. Example: The compound applet has two free forms, apple and cart; the derivative boosterism has one free form, boost, and two bound forms, boost-er-ism.

French the Romance language of France, including Old French (to 1350 or 1400), Middle French (to 1600), and Modern French (from about 1600).

frequentative (a verbal aspect) expressing habitual or repeated action, as English verbs in -le³ (such as babble and giggle) and -er⁴ (as clatter and jabber).

Frisian the West Germanic language of Friesland, in the northern Netherlands, and some nearby islands on the North Sea. Frisian is closely related to English.

Fulani a West Atlantic language spoken widely in western Africa, especially in northern Nigeria.

function the way in which a word or phrase is used in a sentence, whether as a noun or verb, adjective or adverb, and so on.

functional shift a change in the function of a word or phrase without a change in form, as from one part of speech to another. The nouns author, chair, and elbow became verbs by functional shift.

function word a word that expresses the function or grammatical relationship of the words in a sentence. Prepositions, articles, conjunctions, and auxiliary verbs are function words.

fusion the blending or combining of two sounds or words so that the new sound or word often has a part common to the combined elements.

Gaelic the Celtic language of the Highlands of Scotland. Also called Scottish Gaelic. Compare IRISH.

Gallo-Romance a Romance language of largely hypothetical forms, thought to be developed from Vulgar Latin and spoken in France from about 600 to 900 A.D.

Gaulish The Celtic language of the ancient Gauls. Many Latin and Old French words came from Gaulish.

gender a grammatical division of nouns, pronouns, adjectives, and articles into certain classes such as masculine and feminine (French, Hebrew), masculine, feminine, and neuter (Old English, German), animate and inanimate (American Indian languages). Gender may be shown by the form of the article (el, la in Spanish, der, die, das in German) or by the form of the noun and adjective (Hebrew, Latin, Russian). In modern English, gender is based chiefly on sex differentiation and indicated by the meaning of words (man/woman, niece/nephew, hen/rooster) and certain noun endings (-ess and -or, -us and -a, as in actor/actress, alumnus/alumna), except in pronouns, where the distinction is between he/him/his, she/her, and it.

genitive a grammatical case used to show possession, source, or origin. In Modern English, the genitive relationship is shown in nouns by the ending 's as well as by the preposition of and in pronouns by the genitive forms my, mine, her, hers, etc.; in Latin words, where the full form of the stem is obscured by the nominative, the genitive form is frequently given, as in rēx (genitive rēgis) king.

German the West Germanic language of Germany, Austria, and parts of Switzerland, especially High German.

Germanic a branch of Indo-European customarily divided into East Germanic (Gothic), North Germanic (the Scandinavian languages), and West Germanic (English, Frisian, Dutch, German).

gerund 1 a verb form in English ending in -ing and used as a noun, as in Dancing and acting are fine arts. 2 a Latin verbal noun ending in -andum or -endum, used only in the singular number and in four cases (genitive, dative, accusative, and ablative).

gerundive (in Latin and certain other languages) a word functioning as an adjective but having characteristics of a verb; a verbal adjective. Unlike the gerund in Latin, a gerundive is used with both numbers and in all cases. Example: cōficiendās for accomplishing (or to accomplish).

gloss a word or words inserted into a text to explain or translate a difficult or foreign word or phrase.

Goidelic a division of the Celtic languages comprising Irish, Gaelic, and Manx.

Gothic the east Germanic language of the Goths who settled mainly in eastern and southern Europe and, with the Vandals, invaded the Roman Empire from about 200 to 400 A.D. The Gothic language essentially died out in Europe in the 1500's.

gradation = ablaut.

grade a change in the vowel in an ablaut series to show a change in function or meaning, as in the principal parts of English strong verbs, such as ring, rang, rung, and ride, rode, ridden.

grapheme the smallest significant unit of a written language; any form of a letter or combination of letters that represents a speech sound. Compare PHONEME, MORPHEME.

Great Vowel Shift a series of sound shifts which occurred in certain vowels during the late Middle English period to about 1600, resulting in the development of the Modern English vowel system. The two highest Middle English vowels, (ē), (ū), became diphthongs (ī) and (ou) respectively, while the long vowels shifted upwards: Middle English (ā) became (ē), (ä) became (ā), and (ō) became (ū).

Greek the Hellenic language of Greece, or a particular dialect or form of it, especially Attic. Classical Greek was the language until about 300 A.D., Late Greek until about 700 A.D., Medieval Greek until about 1500 A.D., and Modern Greek began to develop about 1500. The Greek of the New Testament represents a later stage of the language than that of the Classical writers.

Grimm's Law a phonetic law describing the systematic sound shift of certain Indo-European consonants that occurred in the Germanic languages: Indo-European bh, dh, gh became Germanic b, d, g; Indo-European p, t, k became Germanic f, th, h; Indo-European b, d, g became Germanic p, t, k. Compare Verner's law.

Guarani a South American Indian language spoken mainly in Paraguay and constituting the southern branch of Tupi-Guarani.

Gujarati an Indic language spoken mainly in the state of Gujarat, western India.

Gullah a dialect of English spoken by blacks living along the coast of South Carolina, Georgia, some offshore islands, and northeastern Florida, containing elements from African languages.

Gypsy = Romany.

Haitian Creole the dialect of French, with many structural elements from African languages, spoken in Haiti.

Hamitic the branch of Afro-Asiatic comprising ancient Egyptian, Berber, and Cushitic.

Hawaiian the Polynesian language of Hawaii.

Hebrew the ancient Semitic language of the Jews, a modern form of which is spoken in Israel.

Hellenic the branch of Indo-European that includes the various dialects of Greek.

High German the West Germanic dialect or dialects of central and southern Germany, from which the literary and official language of modern Germany developed.

Hindi an Indic language of northern India that is a literary and official language of the Republic of India. It is closely related to Urdu.

Hittite the Indo-European (Anatolian) language of the Hittites, an ancient people of Asia Minor and Syria whose civilization dates from about 1900 B.C. to about 1200 B.C.

homograph one of two or more words having the same spelling but a difference in meaning and origin, as bow (bou) bend, bow (bō).

homonym 1 one of two or more words having the same pronunciation but a difference in meaning and origin, as mail letters, male masculine. 2 = homograph.

homophone one of two or more words having the same pronunciation but a difference in meaning and sometimes in spelling, as eight and ate.

Hottentot a Khoisan language spoken mainly in Southwest Africa (Namibia).

Hungarian the Finno-Ugric language of Hungary. Also called MAGYAR.

hypercorrection = overcorrection.

Ibo a Kwa language spoken chiefly in Nigeria.

Icelandic the Scandinavian language of Iceland.

imitative imitating or suggesting a sound. Words like babble, bump, buzz, clash, dash, flick, bobolink, pewee, and pewit are imitative or of imitative origin. Also called echoic and onomatopoeic.

imperative a verbal mood which expresses a command, request, warning, prohibition, etc. In English, a verb in the imperative mood has the form of the infinitive (Go! Look out! Let's begin. God bless you.), but in some languages it has a present, past, and future tense.

inceptive or inchoative a verbal aspect expressing the beginning of an action.

Indic the branch of Indo-European that includes Prakrit, Pali, and Sanskrit and its descendants, among which are Hindi, Urdu, Gujarati, and Marathi.

indicative a verbal mood which expresses a statement of fact or simple declaration, such as "I am leaving" or "It rained all night."

Indo-European the assumed prehistoric language family from which many of the languages spoken in India, western Asia, and Europe are derived. Branches of Indo-European include Indic, Iranian, Baltic, Slavic, Germanic, Italic, Hellenic, and Celtic. Such independent languages as Albanian, Armenian, Tocharian, and Hittite also belong to the Indo-European family. Also called PROTO-INDO-EUROPEAN.

Indo-Iranian a division of Indo-European comprising the Indic and Iranian branches.

Indonesian 1 a branch of Austronesian, including Malay, Indonesian, Tagalog, and Malagasy. 2 the official language of Indonesia, based chiefly on Malay with elements from other related languages of the area.

infinitive a form of the verb not inflected for person or number. In English, the infinitive form may or may not be preceded by to and can function as a noun (To swim across the lake is his goal), adjective (They had money to burn), or adverb (He went home to rest). In some languages, such as Hungarian, the infinitive has a personal ending which expresses person and number.

infix an element inserted within a word to change its meaning or to make another word. Example: In Tagalog, -um- and -in- are infixes.

inflected (of a form, word, or language) showing or characterized by inflection. —inflection 1 the addition of an ending or suffix to the stem of a word to show gender, number, case, person, tense, mood, voice, or comparison. 2 the inflected form of a word.

inherited. See DEVELOP.

instrumental a grammatical case that indicates the instrument or means by which something is done. Example: Russian stolom by means of the table, from stol table.

intensive a word, prefix, or other morpheme that gives force or emphasis to the meaning of a word. Example: The prefix re- in repine and replenish is an intensive.

intrusive a speech sound that develops between syllables or words, generally for easier pronunciation. Example: The d in English thunder is an intrusive, since in Old English the word was thunor.

Inuit or Innu = Eskimo.

Iranian the branch of Indo-European that includes Persian, Old Persian, and Avestan, Pashto, and Kurdish.

Irish the Celtic language of Ireland. Also called Irish Gaelic.

Iroquoian a North American Indian language family including such languages as Cherokee, Mohawk, and Oneida.

irregular (of a word) not inflected in the usual way. Examples: sing and lie (recline) are verbs with the irregular conjugations sang, sung and lay, lain; goose and man are nouns with the irregular plural forms geese and men.

Italian the Romance language of Italy and one of the official languages of Switzerland. Modern literary Italian is essentially Tuscan, one of many dialects of Italy. However, the development of the Florentine dialect in comparatively recent times has led some to characterize Italian as the Tuscan spoken by the Romans (lingua toscana in bocca romana).

Italic a branch of Indo-European including Latin and other ancient dialects of Italy, such as Oscan and Umbrian.

Japanese the language of Japan, having no definite relationship to any other language, written in a syllabic script, generally refashioned from Chinese characters (either kana and katakana or hiragana).

Javanese the Malayo-Polynesian language of Java.

juncture the way in which sounds and sound sequences are joined together in the stream of speech, often not corresponding with the conventional division between words. Examples: not at all, pronounced (no'tətôl'); nitrate (nī'trât) and night rate (nīt'rât'). Juncture has been responsible for such misdivisions as an apron (for a napron), an adder (for a nadder), and a newt (for an ewt).

Kentish the Old English dialect spoken originally by the Jutes who settled in the kingdom of Kent.

Khmer the Mon-Khmer language of Cambodia.

Khoisan a group of languages of southern Africa, including Bushman and Hottentot, characterized by the use of click consonants.

Kikuyu a Bantu language of Kenya.

Kirghiz the Turkic language of a Mongolian people living in the western part of central Asia.

Korean the language of Korea, having no definite relationship to any other language.

Kpelle the Mande language of Liberia.

Kurdish an Iranian language spoken mainly in Turkey, Iran, Iraq, and Syria.

Kwa a branch of Niger-Congo, spoken along the coast of the Gulf of Guinea, including the Ivory Coast and extending into Nigeria. Kwa includes Akan, Ewe, Ibo, Twi, and Yoruba.

Kwakwaka'wakw the Wakashan language of an Indian people of the northern Pacific coast.

language family = family.

langue language as a social or conventional system or code used by a speech community, as distinguished from parole (individual speech).

Langue d'Oc, Langue d'Oïl. See PROVENÇAL.

Lao or Laotian the Sino-Tibetan language of Laos.

Lapp or Lappish the Finno-Ugric language of Lapland, a region in northern Norway, Sweden, Finland, and northwestern Russia.

Late Greek the Greek language from about 300 to 700 A.D.

Late Latin the Latin language from about 300 to 700 A.D.

Latin the Italic language of the ancient Romans and the ancestor of the Romance languages. See also OLD LATIN, LATE LATIN, MEDIEVAL LATIN, NEW LATIN, VULGAR LATIN. The Latin translation of the Bible, known as the Vulgate, represents a later stage of Latin than that of the Classical writers.

Latvian the Baltic language of Latvia. Also called LETTISH.

learned borrowing 1 a Latin word or form borrowed by a Romance language, usually with slight phonetic alteration, as distinguished from a borrowing that has undergone changes in form according to the system of phonetic change in the borrowing language, or an inherited word or form. Learned borrowings come either from actual literary remains of Classical Latin or from the Latin of the learned classes of the middle ages (Medieval Latin). 2 the process by which such words were borrowed into French and other Romance languages.

Lettish = Latvian.

lingua franca a language used as a medium of communication by people speaking different languages. Medieval Latin was a lingua franca. Swahili is the lingua franca of eastern Africa. Compare CREOLE, PIDGIN.

Lithuanian the Baltic language of Lithuania.

loan translation a word or phrase that is a literal translation of a foreign expression. Examples: English superman is a loan translation of German Übermensch. Marriage of convenience is a loan translation of French mariage de convenance. Also called CALQUE.

loan word = borrowing.

locative a grammatical case used to indicate location, as in Latin domi at home, Rōmae at Rome.

Low German the German dialect or group of dialects of northern Germany, often called Plattdeutsch, distinguished from High German.

Magyar = Hungarian.

Mahratti = Marathi.

Malagasy the Indonesian language of Madagascar.

Malay the Indonesian language of the Malay Peninsula and nearby islands.

Malayo-Polynesian = Austronesian.

Malinke a Mande language spoken in Senegal, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Mali, and Ivory Coast.

Maltese the Semitic language of Malta, developed from Arabic with an admixture of Romance elements.

Mandarin the dialect of Chinese regarded as standard, based on the pronunciation of Beijing.

Mande or Mandingo a branch of Niger-Congo including several languages widely used in western Africa, such as Malinke and Kpelle.

Manx the Celtic language spoken on the Isle of Man until recently.

Maori the Polynesian language of the native inhabitants of New Zealand.

Marathi an Indic language spoken chiefly in western India. Also spelled MAHRATTI.

Mayan or Maya a language family descended from the language of the ancient Maya people, consisting of a number of languages spoken in Mexico and Central America, especially Guatemala and Belize.

Mbundu the Bantu language of Angola, comprising Umbundu, spoken in the southern part of Angola, and Kimbundu, spoken in the north.

Medieval Greek the Greek language during the Middle Ages, from about 700 A.D. to about 1500.

Medieval Latin the Latin language, especially of European intellectuals during the Middle Ages, from about 700 A.D. to about 1500. During this period (perhaps by 900) Latin ceased to be anyone's mother tongue in the countries where the Romance languages developed. The syntax and meanings of Medieval Latin were often much closer to modern languages (from which Medieval Latin borrowed liberally) than Classical Latin. Compare ANGLO-LATIN.

Melanesian a branch of Austronesian that includes the languages of Melanesia (the Solomon Islands, Fiji, New Caledonia, Vanuatu, etc.).

Mercian the Old English dialect originally spoken by the Angles in the kingdom of Mercia in central England.

metathesis the transposition of sounds or letters in a word, especially one in which a vowel and a consonant exchange position, as in English bird from Old English bridd, ask from Old English ācs(ian), burn from Middle English bren(nen). The process is seen in modern speech in "aks" for ask.

Mexican Spanish the dialect of Spanish spoken and written in Mexico.

Micmac the Algonquian language of an American Indian people living in the Maritime Provinces of Canada.

Micronesian the branch of Austronesian that includes the languages of Micronesia (Guam, Kiribati, Nauru, etc.).

Middle Dutch the Dutch language from about 1100 to 1500.

Middle English the English language from about 1100 to 1475 or 1500. During the Middle English period there were extensive changes in pronunciation and many of the grammatical distinctions that had begun to disappear in late Old English became obsolete. The word stock was completely altered by the introduction of words borrowed from French that replaced Old English formations.

Middle Flemish the Flemish language from about 1100 to 1500.

Middle French the French language from about 1350 or 1400 to 1600.

Middle High German the High German language spoken in central and southern Germany from about 1100 to 1450 or 1500.

Middle Indic = Prakrit.

Middle Irish the Irish language from about 900 to about 1400.

Middle Low German the Low German language spoken in Germany from about 1100 to 1450 or 1500.

Middle Welsh the Welsh language from about 1150 to about 1500.

misdivision a mistaken or incorrect division of a word, as an adder instead of a nadder, a nickname for Middle English an eke name, etc. See juncture. The process is found in French lingot (a contraction of the theoretical form le ingot) from English ingot.

Miskito American Indian language spoken on the eastern coast of Nicaragua and Honduras.

Modern Dutch the Dutch language from about 1500 to the present.

Modern English the English language from about 1475 or 1500 to the present. It is sometimes divided into Early Modern English (1500–1700) and Late Modern English (1700 to the present).

Modern French the French language from about 1600 to the present.

Modern German the German language from about 1450 or 1500 to the present, developed from High German and distinguished from Platdeutsch.

Modern Greek the Greek language from about 1500 to the present.

Mon the Mon-Khmer language of a people living in southeastern Burma (Myanmar), not culturally related to the native Burmese.

Mongolian 1 the Altaic language of Mongolia. 2 a branch of Altaic that includes the language of Mongolia and several closely related languages or dialects spoken in Russia and in northwestern China.

Mon-Khmer a language family of southeastern Asia that includes Khmer (Cambodian), Mon (spoken in Burma or Myanmar), and several other languages spoken in parts of China, India, Burma (Myanmar), and Vietnam.

mood the form of a verb which indicates the manner in which the act or state expressed by the verb is performed. See, for example, INDICATIVE, IMPERATIVE, SUBJUNCTIVE.

morpheme a minimal meaningful form in a language. Morphemes may be words, affixes, or endings that show inflection. Examples: The word books has two morphemes, book and -s (book is a free morpheme, -s is a bound morpheme since it cannot occur as a separate word). Compare PHONEME.

Munda a group of languages spoken in scattered areas of northern and central India, of unknown relations but predating Indo-European and sometimes linked with Mon-Khmer.

Muskogean a North American Indian language family originally of the southeastern United States, including the languages of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole.

Nahuatl the Uto-Aztecan language spoken by the Aztecs, Toltecs, and other American Indian peoples of central Mexico and parts of Central America, and their descendants. It is the chief Indian language of Mexico.

native (of a word, etc.) not a borrowing, but belonging to or developed from the earliest known elements of a language.

naturalize to adapt (a borrowed word, phrase, etc.), so that it conforms to the spelling patterns or phonetic system of the borrowing language; to integrate into the language.

Navaho or Navajo the Athapaskan language of an American Indian people living in New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah.

neologism a newly formed or borrowed word, phrase, or meaning, usually not yet widely used.

Nepali the Indic language of Nepal, also spoken in the Indian states of West Bengal and Assam, and in Bhutan and Sikkim.

New Latin the Latin language after 1500, containing words formed from Greek, Latin, and other elements. New Latin is used in supplying new words to the sciences, especially biology and medicine.

New Zealand English the form of English spoken and written in New Zealand.

Niger-Congo the major language family in Africa, including Bantu, Kwa, and many other West African languages.

nominative a grammatical case showing a noun or adjective as the subject of a sentence. The nominative is usually a primary form, without any inflection indicating syntactical relationship. The modern English pronouns I, he, she, we, they, and who are in the nominative case. Compare OBLIQUE.

nonce word a word coined specifically for an occasion, and often recorded in a single occurrence, as Coleridge's use of mammonolatry worship of money, formed by analogy with idolatry.

nonstandard not conforming to the currently accepted pronunciation, grammar, or vocabulary of a language.

Nootka the Wakashan language of an American Indian people living on Vancouver Island and in northwestern Washington.

Norman-French = Anglo-French.

Northumbrian the Old English dialect spoken originally by the Angles in the kingdom of Northumbria.

Norwegian the Scandinavian language of Norway. There are two standard languages in Norway: Bokmål, or Dano-

Norwegian, formerly called Riksmål "state language," the language that developed from Danish and replaced Old Norse, and Nynorsk "New Norwegian," earlier known as Landsmål "country language" that developed from the various dialects spoken in Norway. The two forms are gradually being introduced as a combined form called Sammorsk.

objective a grammatical case showing the direct object of a verb or the object of a preposition. A direct object is found in "The boy threw the ball." An indirect object is found in "The boy threw the ball to me."

oblique of or in any grammatical case except the nominative and vocative. Oblique cases include the accusative, dative, genitive, ablative, etc. In Old French, the oblique case combined the function of all the non-nominative cases, so that Old French had only two cases, nominative and oblique. The Greek grammarians assumed that the nominative was the original form and that other cases had developed or "fallen away" from the nominative, thus becoming the oblique cases.

Occitan. See PROVENÇAL.

Ojibwa the Algonquian language of an American Indian people living in the area around Lake Superior.

Old Church Slavic or Old Church Slavonic = Old Slavic.

Old Dutch the Dutch language before 1100.

Old English the West Germanic language of the English people before 1100. It included four principal dialects: Mercian, Northumbrian, West Saxon, and Kentish. Mercian and Northumbrian are often grouped together as Anglian. Old English differed from Middle English and Modern English in some fundamental ways in that it had many inflections, four grammatical cases, seven groups of strong verbs, and grammatical gender. In Old English thousands of words were derivatives or compounds that had been elaborated to provide equivalents for the scientific and philosophical concepts found in Latin. Most of these were replaced or swept away in Middle English times. Also called ANGLO-SAXON.

Old Flemish the Flemish language before 1100.

Old French the French language from about 800 A.D. to about 1350 or 1400. Old French literature had a great influence in medieval Europe.

Old Frisian the Frisian language before 1500. Old Frisian texts date from the middle of the 1200's.

Old High German the form of the German language used in southern Germany before 1100. Modern standard German is descended from Old High German.

Old Icelandic the Icelandic language before 1500. Because it is extensively recorded in notable literary works such as the sagas of the Vikings, Old Icelandic is sometimes referred to as the literary language of the North.

Old Irish the Irish language before 1200.

Old Latin the Latin language before the 100's B.C.

Old Low German the form of the German language found in northern Germany and the Netherlands before 1100.

Old Norse Old Icelandic and Old Norwegian collectively, especially as representing the North Germanic language of the Scandinavians before the 1300's.

Old North French the dialect of northern France before the 1500's, especially that of coastal Normandy and Picardy.

Old Norwegian the Norwegian language before the 1500's.

Old Persian the ancient Iranian language, recorded in cuneiform inscriptions.

Old Provençal the form of Provençal before the 1500's, widely known as one of the principal languages used by the troubadours. Old Provençal literature had a great influence in neighboring areas of northern France, Italy and Catalonia.

Old Prussian an extinct Baltic language preserved in records of the 1400's and 1500's.

Old Saxon the form of Old Low German spoken by Low German tribes in northwestern Germany before 1100.

Old Slavic a South Slavic language preserved in Eastern Orthodox religious texts of the 800's and 900's A.D., still used in some Orthodox Churches; also called OLD CHURCH SLAVIC, and OLD CHURCH SLAVONIC.

Old Spanish the Spanish language before the 1500's.

onomatopoeic = imitative.

Oscan the ancient Italic language of Campania, a region in southern Italy, closely related to Umbrian and more distantly to Latin.

overcorrection a change in pronunciation or grammar mistakenly introduced by a person in an effort to avoid supposedly "incorrect" forms of speech. The sentences I feel badly, Be there at 8 sharply, and the phrase between you and I are examples. Also called HYPERCORRECTION.

palatalization the pronunciation of a consonant with the front or middle of the tongue near or touching the hard palate, as in pronouncing the initial vowel sound of Tuesday with a y-sound at the beginning. Palatalization explains the development of [ch] in Italian cento from [k] in Latin centum hundred.

Pali an Indic language found in the sacred writings of Buddhism and still existing as a literary language in Sri Lanka, Burma (Myanmar), and Thailand.

Panjabi an Indic language of the Punjab region of northwestern India that is the major language of the Sikh religion. Also spelled PUNJABI.

paradigm the set of all the inflectional forms of a word or class of words. Examples: run, runs, ran, runner, running; walk, walks, walked, walking; dog, dog's, dogs, dogs', dogged, dogging, etc.

parole language as spoken and understood by an individual; individual speech, as distinguished from langue (language as a system or code).

partial translation a borrowed word or phrase, part of which is translated into the borrowing language. Examples: Feldspar is a partial translation of German Feldspath; songfest is a partial translation of German Sängerfest.

participle a verb form that has both the character of a verb and of an adjective. Examples: The present participle walking functions as an adjective in a walking encyclopedia. The past participle broken functions as an adjective in a broken promise.

Pashto the Iranian language of Afghanistan and of the Pathan tribes of Pakistan. Also called AFGHAN.

passive showing the subject of a verb as acted upon. Example: the verb was broken in The dish was broken by him is in the passive voice. Compare ACTIVE.

pattern the manner in which the phonemes, morphemes, etc., of a language are arranged or fall into certain classes, groups, or units according to their regularities of form or function. Nouns, verbs, adjectives, etc., are classified by pattern.

pejorative (a word or phrase) having or showing a worsening of meaning, often disparaging, depreciating, or derogatory. English words that acquired pejorative meanings are knave, boor, and silly.

Pennsylvania Dutch = Pennsylvania German.

Pennsylvania German a dialect of High German with an admixture of English, spoken in southeastern Pennsylvania by descendants of immigrants from southern Germany and Switzerland. Also known as PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH, as a holdover of the German use deutsch meaning "German," transformed to the known English word Dutch.

perfective a verbal aspect in some languages, such as ancient Greek, that expresses completion of action, whether in the past, present, or future.

Persian the Iranian language of Persia. Though an Indo-European language, Persian makes use of the Arabic alphabet. Also called FARSI.

Phoenician the ancient Semitic language of Phoenicia, an ancient kingdom in the eastern Mediterranean. The unknown language of Carthage was probably related to Phoenician.

phoneme one of the distinctive sounds in a language that is the smallest meaningful unit of speech, such as the /p/ in pit and the /b/ in bit. Phonemes are comprised of slight variations called allophones, such as the p of ship and the p of pin. Compare MORPHEME.

phonetic having to do with or representing the sounds of speech.

phonetic law a statement that explains a sound shift or other regular phonetic change in a language or group of languages. Grimm's law is an example of a phonetic law.

Phrygian the Indo-European language of Phrygia, an ancient country in central and northwestern Asia Minor.

pidgin a language with a reduced grammar and vocabulary, used as a trade or communications jargon between people not having a common language. Pidgins often become the native and sole language of a group, at which time they are known as CREOLES.

Pidgin English any of several varieties of English having a simplified grammatical structure and often a mixed vocabulary, used in western Africa, Australia, Melanesia, and formerly in China, as a language of trade or communication between natives and foreigners. PIDGIN is also found in reference to a simplified form of French and in West African Pidgin and bêche-de-mer, a bartering language of the South Pacific.

Pilipino the official language of the Philippines, based on Tagalog. Since there is no (f) in Tagalog, Spanish Filipino became Pilipino.

Piman a branch of Uto-Aztecan that includes several languages spoken in southern Arizona and northern Mexico.

pitch the highness or lowness of a sound or tone, important in the study of intonation patterns and juncture.

Plattdeutsch the speech of northern Germany, now often considered a nonstandard dialect, and distinguished from Modern German; modern spoken Low German.

Polabian a West Slavic language formerly spoken in the basin of the Elbe River and on the Baltic coast of northern Germany; extinct since the mid-1700's.

Polish the West Slavic language of Poland.

Polynesian a branch of Austronesian that includes the languages of Polynesia, such as Hawaiian, Tahitian, Samoan, and Maori.

popular etymology = folk etymology.

portmanteau word = blend.

Portuguese the Romance language of Portugal. It is the chief language of Brazil, and also known in such former Portuguese colonies as Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde, Timor and Goa (in India). A variety of Portuguese called Galician (or Gallego) is spoken in northwestern Spain; in medieval times Galician was an important literary language.

positive the basic form of an adjective or adverb as distinct from the comparative and superlative. Example: positive quick, comparative quicker, superlative quickest.

possessive a grammatical case indicating possession or origin, generally equivalent to the genitive.

Prakrit any of the Indic languages or dialects spoken in ancient and medieval times in northern and central India, exclusive of Sanskrit. Also called MIDDLE INDIC.

prefix a syllable or syllables put at the beginning of a word to change its meaning or to make another word, as pre- in prefabricate and un- in unlike. Compare INFIX, SUFFIX.

preterit a tense form that expresses occurrence in the past; past tense.

privative a prefix, suffix, or other word element expressing deprivation, denial, or absence of something. The prefixes *a-*⁴ as used in amoral, atonal, and un- as in unnatural, undone are privative.

proper name the name of a particular person, place, or thing, written in English with an initial capital letter.

Proto-Germanic the hypothetical language that was the ancestor of the Germanic languages. Branches of Proto-Germanic include Scandinavian (or North Germanic), West Germanic, and Gothic (or East Germanic).

Proto-Indo-European = Indo-European.

Provençal the Romance language of Provence, a region in southeastern France bordering on the Mediterranean. Provençal is also used as a synonym of Occitan or Langue d'Oc to designate the various Romance dialects of southern France, as distinguished from Langue d'Oïl of northern France (Oc and Oïl being the word for "yes" in the two parts of France).

Punjabi = Panjabi.

quantity the length of a sound or syllable in speech, conventionally differentiated by long, as in the long e of see, and short, as in the short e of let.

Quechua a South American Indian language spoken in Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, Argentina, and Chile. It was once the language of the Inca Empire.

reconstruction 1 the process of reconstructing or re-forming (a word or other part of a prehistoric language) by comparing shared features of recorded languages that presumably descended from the hypothetical language. 2 a reconstructed form, usually indicated by an asterisk (*). All Proto-Germanic forms are reconstructions.

reduced form a word formed by shortening of a full or longer form, as can't from cannot, and flu from influenza. Also called CONTRACTION.

reduction 1 the process of forming a contraction or reduced form. 2 = reduced form.

reduplication repetition of a syllable or the initial part of a syllable. In English, words like chit-chat and razzle-dazzle are reduplications.

reflex a word or form corresponding to and usually derived from another comparable form. Example: Italian assenza is a reflex of Latin absentia; -enza is the Italian reflex of the Latin suffix -entia.

reflexive a pronoun that refers back to the subject, or a verb that implies action by the subject on itself.

replacement 1 the deliberate alteration of a word or form to make it conform to its earliest or classical form, as in the Middle French period, when many old, regularly derived or inherited words of the language were refashioned to conform with their Classical Latin or Late Latin forms. The process of replacement continued in English with the Latinization of borrowed French words (see, for example, words in ad-, such as advance) even after the practice waned in French. 2 a word or form altered in this way.

Rhaeto-Romanic or Rhaeto-Romansh a group of Romance dialects spoken in the Rhaetian Alps of Switzerland and adjoining regions of the Tyrol and northern Italy.

rhotacism the use or substitution of [r] in place of some other speech sound, especially s [z]. The difference in such related pairs as English was and were, lose and forlorn is the result of rhotacism. Rhotacism also occurs in the substitution of [r] for [l] in Portuguese (compare branco for Spanish blanco white) and in the Japanese pronunciation of foreign words with [l] (compare Buraziru Brazil).

rhyming slang a type of slang in which a word is replaced by a phrase which rhymes with it, as "hit or miss" for kiss, "bread and honey" for money, etc.

Romance the group of European languages that developed from Vulgar Latin. French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Romanian, Provençal, Rhaeto-Romanic, and Catalan are Romance languages. See also GALLO-ROMANCE.

Romanian or Rumanian the Romance language of Romania. A variety of Romanian known as Moldavian is spoken in Moldavia.

Romany the Indic language of the Romany (Gypsy) people, containing loanwords from Persian, Greek, Armenian, and other languages.

root 1 = stem. 2 a reconstructed form, as in Proto-Germanic, from which words with similar structure or meaning in cognate languages are thought to have developed. Also called base.

Russian the East Slavic language of Russia, the most widely used Slavic language.

Samoan a Polynesian language spoken in Western Samoa (an island country) and American Samoa.

Samoyed a branch of Uralic comprising several languages of northern Siberia and northeastern Russia.

Sanskrit the ancient sacred and literary language of India, important in the study of Indo-European. Its introduction to Western scholars in the late 1700's led to the development of modern comparative linguistics.

Scandinavian the historical and modern North Germanic languages of Denmark, Iceland, Norway, Sweden, and the Faeroe Islands, such as Old Danish and modern Danish, Old Icelandic and modern Icelandic, etc.

Scottish a dialect of British English spoken in Scotland, especially in the Lowlands.

Scottish Gaelic = Gaelic.

Semitic the branch of Afro-Asiatic comprising Hebrew, Arabic, Aramaic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Phoenician, and Assyrian.

Serbian the form of Serbo-Croatian spoken by Serbs and written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

Serbo-Croatian a South Slavic language spoken by the Serbs and Croats.

Setswana the Bantu language of Botswana, in southern Africa, closely related to Sotho.

shortening = clipped form.

Sindhi an Indic language spoken in southern Pakistan and northwestern India.

Singhalese or Sinhalese the Indic language of Sri Lanka.

Sino-Tibetan a linguistic family that includes Chinese, Tibeto-Burman, Thai, and Lao.

Siouan a North American Indian language family of the northern Midwest, including the languages of the Sioux, Crow, Omaha, and Osage.

Slavic a branch of Indo-European customarily divided into West Slavic (Polish, Czech, Slovak, Wendish, and the extinct Polabian), East Slavic (Russian, Ukrainian), and South Slavic (Bulgarian, Serbo-Croatian, and Slovene).

Slovak the West Slavic language of Slovakia.

Slovene the South Slavic language of Slovenia, closely related to Serbo-Croatian.

Somali the Cushitic language of Somalia.

Sotho the Bantu language of Lesotho and the western border of Natal, closely related to Setswana.

sound shift a systematic change in the sounds of a language or a group of languages at a particular time, such as the GREAT VOWEL SHIFT in English.

Spanish the Romance language of Spain, and the language of most Latin-American countries. Originally the language of spelling pronunciation a pronunciation influenced by the written form of a word, as the pronunciation of comptroller as (kəmpt'rō'lər) and often as (of'tən).

Castile the term CASTILIAN has become synonymous with Spanish.

stem the part of a word to which inflectional and other endings or prefixes are added and in which changes occur. Examples: In English run is the stem of running and runner; want is the stem of unwanted. The stem of Sanskrit bhārati he bears, bhāratha you bear, and bhāranti they bear, is bhāra-.

stress a greater force or emphasis given to a sound, syllable, or word. Also called ACCENT.

strong verb a verb inflected for tense by a vowel change within the stem rather than by adding inflectional endings. Examples: rise, rose, risen; ring, rang, rung. Compare WEAK VERB.

subjunctive a verbal mood which expresses a wish or a state or act as possible, conditional, hypothetical, or dependent, rather than as actual.

Sudanic a family of languages of northern Africa that are not related either to the Bantu or Hamitic languages. Sudanic languages are spoken chiefly in Sudan, Chad, Kenya, and Uganda.

suffix a syllable or syllables put at the end of a word to change its meaning, make another word, or indicate person, number, tense, or grammatical relationship to other words. Compare INFIX, PREFIX.

Sumerian a non-Semitic language of ancient Sumer (a region in the lower part of Mesopotamia), recorded in cuneiform inscriptions.

superlative the third and highest degree of comparison of an adjective or adverb. Examples: Best is the superlative of good, least is the superlative of little. Compare POSITIVE, COMPARATIVE.

suppletive serving as a substitute for a form missing from a set of inflected forms. Examples: the past tense went is a suppletive form in the paradigm go, went, gone. Latin lātus is a suppletive past participle of the verb ferre to carry.

Swahili the Bantu language of eastern Africa that is the official language of Tanzania and Kenya, also spoken in Zaire, Uganda, Rwanda, and Burundi. Swahili has borrowed many Arabic and other foreign words.

Swedish the Scandinavian language of Sweden and part of Finland, where it is the second official language.

syncope the loss of a weakly stressed sound or syllable from the middle of a word, as in ne'er for never. Compare APOCOPE, APHESIS.

Syriac the ancient Semitic language of Syria, a dialect of Aramaic.

taboo avoidance of the use of a particular word (taboo word) regarded as extremely offensive to good taste or morality, often leading to the word's replacement by a euphemism.

Tagalog the Indonesian language of the Philippines. Pilipino, the official language of the Philippines, is a form of Tagalog.

Tahitian the Polynesian language of Tahiti.

Tai a branch of Sino-Tibetan that includes Lao, Thai, and several other languages spoken in Burma (Myanmar), China, and Vietnam.

Tamil a Dravidian language spoken in southern India, Sri Lanka, Singapore, and Malaysia.

Tatar or Tartar a Turkic language, spoken in the Volga region of European Russia and in western Siberia.

Telugu a Dravidian language spoken in southeastern India.

Temne the Niger-Congo language of Sierra Leone.

tense the form of a verb that shows the time of the action expressed by the verb. English has present, past, and future; present perfect, past perfect, and future perfect.

Thai the Sino-Tibetan language of Thailand.

thematic vowel a vowel occurring between the root and the inflectional ending of a word in Latin, Greek, and some other Indo-European languages.

Tibetan the Sino-Tibetan language of Tibet, closely related to Burmese.

Tibeto-Burman or Tibeto-Burmese a branch of Sino-Tibetan that includes Tibetan, Burmese, and a large number of unwritten languages of southeastern Asia.

tone a speech sound of definite pitch and character, used in tone languages to distinguish words that are otherwise pronounced identically. Chinese has four tones: high level, rising, low, and falling.

transcription a representation of speech by means of phonetic or phonemic symbols.

transliteration the representation of the letters, ideograms, or other symbols of one writing system by equivalents in another. Rendering Arabic or Greek characters in approximately phonetically equivalent Roman letters is an example of transliteration.

Tshiluba a Bantu language used widely in Zaire as a lingua franca.

Tungusic a branch of Altaic including several languages spoken in central and eastern Siberia and in northwestern China. It includes Manchu, the now almost extinct literary language of the Manchu Dynasty.

Tupi a South American Indian language spoken in the Amazon Valley of Brazil. Tupi constitutes the northern branch of Tupi-Guarani.

Tupi-Guarani an American Indian language family of central South America, found especially along the lower Amazon. Tupi is the principal language of the northern branch of the Amazon and Guarani of the southern branch.

Turkic a branch of the Altaic language family spoken in Turkey and south central Asia. Turkic includes such languages as Turkish, Tatar, Kirghiz, Uzbek, and Yakut.

Turkish the Turkic language of Turkey.

Twí the Kwa language of Ghana.

Ugric a division of Finno-Ugric that includes Hungarian and Vogul.

Ukrainian the East Slavic language of Ukraine.

Umbrian the ancient Italic language of Umbria, a region in central Italy, closely related to Oscan and more distantly to Latin.

umlaut a change in a vowel sound in the Germanic languages because of the influence of another vowel in the following syllable. Umlaut is responsible for such pairs in English as man-men, foot-feet, gold-gild, in which the vowels of men, feet, and gild are caused by vowels which have since disappeared; e.g. fōti (fōeti) feet became (fāt) and then (fēt) through the Great Vowel Shift.

unvoiced uttered without vibration of the vocal chords, as the s in sit, the f in fit and the th in thin; voiceless. Compare voiced.

Ural-Altaic a hypothetical language family comprising the Altaic and Uralic families, based chiefly on grammatical (not lexical) correspondences.

Uralic a language family consisting of the Finno-Ugric and Samoyed languages.

Urdu an Indic language, originally a dialect of Hindi, that is the official language of Pakistan. Urdu uses Persian and Arabic loanwords and the Arabic alphabet.

Uto-Aztecan an American Indian language family of the southwestern United States that includes Piman and Nahuatl.

Uzbek a Turkic language of central Asia.

verbal a verb form functioning as: a noun, as in to paint (infinitive) is enjoyable; Painting (gerund) is an enjoyable pastime; or an adjective, as in a painting class.

vernacular 1 a native or indigenous language; the language used by the people of a certain country or place. 2 the everyday and informal language of a speech community, as distinguished from its literary or formal language.

Verner's Law a phonetic law explaining certain apparent exceptions to Grimm's law: Proto-Germanic voiceless sounds such as f, th, and s became voiced v, þ, z when in voiced surroundings, unless the original Indo-European stress was on the immediately preceding syllable.

Vietnamese the language of Vietnam, having no certain affiliation with any other language. Also called ANNAMENSE.

vocalism 1 the vowel system of a language or dialect. 2 the range of vowels in a particular context. 3 a vocal sound or articulation.

vocalization 1 the voicing of a previously unvoiced sound. 2 the changing of a consonant into a vowel. As l is a consonant close in quality to a vowel, it is frequently affected (for example in Italian piazza from Latin platea, or French sauter from Latin saltāre to jump).

vocative a case in Latin and some other inflected languages, indicating the person or thing being spoken to, as in Latin Et tū, Brūte? You too, Brutus?

Vogul a Ugric language of western Siberia.

voice a verb form that shows whether its subject is active or passive. In English, the passive voice is made with the past participle and some form of the verb be, as in was asked, were caught. In Greek and some other languages a middle voice, typically passive in form but active in meaning, expresses reflexive action that affects the subject. Example: Greek phainesthai I show myself, is middle voice to phainein to show.

voiced uttered with vibration of the vocal chords, as any vowel or such consonants as b, d, m, and g. Compare UN-VOICED.

voiceless = unvoiced.

vowel gradation = ablaut.

Vulgar Latin the spoken or popular form of Latin used throughout the later period of the ancient Roman Empire, and the main source of French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and other Romance languages. Gallo-Romance is considered a development of Vulgar Latin.

Wakashan an American Indian language family of the north-west United States and British Columbia, including Nootka and Kwakiutl.

Walloon a French dialect of Belgium spoken by the Walloons, a group of people living chiefly in the southern and southeastern parts of Belgium and adjacent regions in France.

weak verb a verb inflected by the addition of regular endings to the stem, rather than by vowel change. In English, weak verbs form the past tense and past participle by the addition of -d, -ed, or -t, as in dive/dived, work/worked, dream/dreamt. Compare STRONG VERB.

Welsh the Celtic language of Wales.

Wendish a West Slavic language spoken in Lusatia, a region in southeastern Germany. The language has two distinct dialects, Upper Wendish (influenced by Czech) and Lower Wendish (influenced by Polish).

West Atlantic a branch of Niger-Congo that includes Fulani and other West African languages.

West Germanic the division of Germanic consisting chiefly of English, Frisian, Dutch, and German.

West Saxon the Old English dialect originally of the Saxons living in the kingdom of Wessex south of the Thames and westward from Surrey and Sussex. Most of the Old English manuscripts existing today are written in West Saxon.

word element a combining form, prefix, suffix, or other element that by addition to a word changes the meaning or use of the word.

Xhosa the Bantu language of a people living mainly in the Transkei, east of Cape Province, in South Africa. Xhosa is closely related to Zulu.

Yakut a Turkic language of eastern Siberia.

Yiddish a West Germanic language spoken mainly by Jews of eastern and central Europe and their descendants. Yiddish, developed from one or more dialects of Middle High German, contains many Hebrew and Slavic words and some Romance words.

Yoruba a Kwa language of Nigeria.

Zulu the Bantu language of a people of southeastern Africa, living chiefly in Natal. Compare XHOSA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL WORKS

- Avis, Walter S. A Dictionary of Canadianisms on Historical Principles. Toronto, 1967.
- Bartholomae, Christian. Altiranisches Wörterbuch. Berlin, 1961.
- Battisti, Carlo and Giovanni Alessio. Dizionario Etimologico Italiano. Florence, 1948–57.
- Baxter, J.H. and Charles Johnson. Medieval Latin Word-List. London, 1934. Revised Edition by Ronald E. Latham. Oxford, 1965.
- Bense, J.F. A Dictionary of the Low-Dutch Element in the English Vocabulary. The Hague, 1939.
- Berrey, Lester V. and Melvin Van Den Bark. The American Thesaurus of Slang. New York, 1942.
- Bloch, Oscar and Walther von Wartburg. Dictionnaire Étymologique de la Langue Française. Second Edition, Paris, 1950.
- Boisacq, Émile. Dictionnaire Étymologique de la Langue Grecque. Fourth Edition, Heidelberg, 1950.
- Bosworth, Joseph and T. Northcote Toller. An Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. London, 1882–98. Supplement, 1921.
- Branford, Jean. A Dictionary of South African English. Oxford, 1978.
- Brugmann, Karl. Kurze Vergleichende Grammatik der Indogermanischen Sprachen. Berlin and Leipzig, 1933.
- Burchfield, Robert W. A Supplement to the Oxford English Dictionary (OEDS). Volume I (A–G), Oxford 1972; Volume II (H–N), 1976; Volume III (O–Scz), 1982; Volume IV (Se–Z), 1986.
- Cassidy, Frederic G. Dictionary of American Regional English, Volume I (A–C). Cambridge, England, 1985; Volume II (D–H), 1991.
- and R.B. Le Page. Dictionary of Jamaican English. Cambridge, England, 1967.
- Collinder, Björn. Fenno-Ugric Vocabulary. Stockholm, 1955.
- Corominas, Juan. Diccionario Crítico Etimológico de la Lengua Castellana (4 Volumes). Bern, 1954.
- Craigie, William A. and James R. Hulbert. A Dictionary of American English on Historical Principles (4 Volumes). Chicago, 1938–44.
- Dauzat, Alter. Dictionnaire Étymologique de la Langue Française. Seventh Edition, 1938.
- , Jean Dubois and Henri Mitterand. Nouveau Dictionnaire Étymologique. Paris, 1964.
- Delbridge, Arthur. The Macquarie Dictionary. St. Leonards, New South Wales, 1981.
- De Vries, Jan. Altnordisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch. Second Edition, Leiden, 1962.
- Ernout, Alfred and Antoine Meillet. Dictionnaire Étymologique de la Langue Latine. Fourth Edition, Paris, 1959.
- Farmer, J.S. and W.E. Henley. Slang and its Analogues (7 Volumes), 1890–1904. Reprint Edition, 1970.
- Fennell, C. A. M. The Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases. Cambridge, England, 1892.
- Frisk, Hjalmar. Griechisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch (3 Volumes). 1955–72.
- Gamillscheg, Ernest. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Französischen Sprache. Heidelberg, 1928.
- Glare, P. G. W. Oxford Latin Dictionary. Oxford, 1968–82.
- Godefroy, F. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne langue française. Paris, 1880–92.
- , J. Bonnard and A. Salmon. Lexique de l'ancien français. Paris, 1901.
- Gold, Robert, S. A Jazz Lexicon. New York, 1964.
- Grant, William and David D. Murison. The Scottish National Dictionary (11 Volumes). Edinburgh, 1929–76.
- Holthausen, Ferdinand. Altenglisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch. Second Edition, Heidelberg, 1963.
- Altfriesisches Wörterbuch. Heidelberg, 1925.
- Altsächsisches Elementarbuch. Heidelberg, 1921.
- Gotisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch. Heidelberg, 1934.
- Wörterbuch des Altwestnordischen. Göttingen, 1948.
- Hofmann, J.B. Etymologisches Wörterbuch des Griechischen. München, 1950.
- Karg-Gasterstädt, Elisabeth and Theodor Frings. Althochdeutsches Wörterbuch. Berlin, 1952 (completed through Fe- in 1979).
- Kent, Roland G. Old Persian. New Haven, 1950.
- Kluge, Friedrich and Walther Mitzka. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Deutschen Sprache. Nineteenth Edition, Berlin, 1963.
- Kurath, Hans, Sherman Kuhn, and Robert E. Lewis. Middle English Dictionary (MED). Ann Arbor, 1954 (completed through Set in 1987).
- Lewis, Charlton T. and Charles Short. Harper's Latin Dictionary. New York, 1907.
- Liddell, Henry George and Robert Scott. A Greek-English Lexicon (2 Volumes). Ninth Edition, 1940. Reprinted, 1948.
- Little, William, H.W. Fowler, and Jessie Coulson. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary. Third Edition, Oxford, 1973.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lokotsch, Karl. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Europäischen Wörter Orientalischen Ursprungs. Heidelberg, 1927.
- Lübben, August. Mittelniederdeutsches Handwörterbuch. Norden and Leipzig, 1888.
- Mathews, Mitford M. A Dictionary of Americanisms on Historical Principles. Chicago, 1951.
- Matsuda, Yutaka. Cross-Over Languages: English and Japanese (I), Japanese and English (II). Nishinomiya, Japan, 1986.
- Mayrhofer, Manfred. Kurzgefasstes Etymologisches Wörterbuch des Altindischen (Concise Etymological Sanskrit Dictionary). Heidelberg, 1956–76.
- Meyer-Lübke, Wilhelm. Romanisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch. Third Edition, Heidelberg, 1935.
- Migliorini, Bruno and Aldo Duro. Prontuario Etimologico della Lingua Italiana. Torino, 1949.
- Morris, Edward E. A Dictionary of Austral English. Sydney, 1898 (reprint, 1972).
- Murray, James A. H., et al. The Oxford English Dictionary (OED). Thirteen Volumes (with Supplement and Bibliography). Oxford, 1933.
- Partridge, Eric. A Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English. Fifth Edition, New York, 1961.
- Prinz, Otto and Johannes Schneider. Mittelateinisches Wörterbuch. München, 1959 (completed through Comp- in 1976).
- Prokosch, Edward. A Comparative Germanic Grammar. Philadelphia, 1939.
- Quemada, Bernard. Datations et Documents Lexicographiques. Matériaux pour l'histoire du vocabulaire française, Paris, 1959.
- Robert, Paul. Dictionnaire Alphabétique & Analogique de la Langue Française. Paris, 1978.
- Senn, Alfred. Middle High German. New York, 1937.
- Sophocles, E. A. Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods (2 Volumes). Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1887.
- Souter, Alexander. A Glossary of Later Latin to 600 A.D. Oxford, 1949.
- Streitberg, Wilhelm. Gotisches Elementarbuch. Heidelberg, 1920.
- Sturtevant, Edgar H. A Hittite Glossary. Second Edition, Philadelphia, 1936. Supplement, 1939.
- Tobler, Adolf and Erhard Lommatzsch. Altfranzösisches Wörterbuch (4 Volumes). Berlin, 1925.
- Van Wijk, N. Franck's Etymologisch Woordenboek der Nederlandsche Taal. 'S-Gravenhage, 1912–49. Supplement by C.B. Haering, 1936.
- Vasmer, Max. Russisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch (3 Volumes). 1953–58.
- Von Wartburg, Walther. Französisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch (FEW). Tübingen, 1948–Basel, 1973. Edited by Otto Jänicke, 1973–77, and Carl Theodor Gossen until 1983.
- Walde Alois. Lateinisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch (3 Volumes). Third Revised Edition by J.B. Hofmann, Heidelberg, 1938–56.
- Wentworth, Harold. American Dialect Dictionary. New York, 1944.
- and Stuart Berg Flexner. Dictionary of American Slang. New York, 1960. Supplement, 1967.
- Whitney, William Dwight. The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia (10 Volumes). New York, 1889. Supplement (Volumes 11 and 12, 1909–10), edited by Benjamin E. Smith.

OTHER ENGLISH

ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARIES

- Klein, Ernest. A Comprehensive Etymological Dictionary of the English Language (2 Volumes). Amsterdam, 1966.
- Onions, C. T. The Oxford Dictionary of English Etymology. Oxford, 1966.
- Skeat, Walter W. An Etymological Dictionary of the English Language. Oxford, 1879–82. Revised Edition, 1909.
- Weekley, Ernest. An Etymological Dictionary of Modern English. (2 Volumes). London, 1921. Reprint (2 Volumes), New York, 1967.

OTHER REFERENCE BOOKS AND TEXTBOOKS FREQUENTLY CONSULTED

- Baugh, Albert C. A History of the English Language. Second Edition, New York, 1963.
- Bloomfield, Leonard. Language. New York, 1933.
- Hockett, Charles F. A Course in Modern Linguistics. New York, 1958.
- Hoenigswald, Henry M. Language Change and Linguistic Reconstruction. Chicago, 1960.
- Pyles, Thomas and John Algeo. The Origins and Development of the English Language. Third Edition. New York, 1982.
- Sturtevant, E.H. Linguistic Change: an introduction to the historical study of language. Chicago, 1917.
- Wyld, Henry Cecil. A Short History of English. Third Edition. New York, 1927.